Memorial services were held at Sunset Hill cemetery, Littleton, in honor of one of the Methodist Protestant ministers, Rev. Mr. Fiskel. On the coming Sunday, May 14 at 4:00 o'clock memorial services will be conducted at Roanoke Rapids cemetery in honor of another deceased minister, Rev. Mr. O'Brien.

Love's Grove, Friendship - Love's Grove Charge, Rev. Earl A. Cook, Pastor.—Our Sunday school is the best that it has been in several years. Our superintendent is putting forth very special efforts to make it a success and he has had good cooperation from his members.

At this time I want to give a short report of the Fifteenth District Rally which was held at Roberta Church on Sunday, April 30, at 3:00 and 7:30 o'clock. At 3:00 o'clock the churches in the district were represented by a fifteen minute program from the primary and elementary departments of the schools, both in song and verse. We thank those who took part and those who helped to make the program possible. Your cooperative spirit was very fine.

The churches in the district were represented in number as follows: Albermarle 20, Concord 38, Friendship 9, Kannapolis 4, Love's Grove 13, Mill Grove 8, Pine Bluff 6, Porter 0, and Roberta 42.

The main feature of the 7:30 o'clock service was a talk by Mrs. J. S. Nesbitt, a returned missionary from Korea. The audience was held spell bound as she told of the conditions in the foreign land.

Let us have a little more thought for our missionaries and try to do our part in helping them to bring the word of Christ to those who do not know Him. Let us be thankful for our religious freedom and share it with others.

Midway, Haw River Charge, Dr. C. W. Bates, Pastor.—This is the third week our pastor has been in Kansas City attending the Uniting Conference. He is being missed very much, however we are trying to carry on the work as best we can. Last Sunday Mr. Moffet from Greensboro had charge of the devotion in Sunday school. We enjoyed his talk, and were also glad to have him teach the senior class. There were 119 present at Sunday school last Sunday.

We appreciate the cooperative spirit in our Sunday school work, and are proud of our record. The Sunday school gave a program Easter Sunday night, and will give a Mother's Day program next Sunday just after Sunday school.

The Auxiliary meets each first Sunday just after Sunday school with a good attendance and is doing a good work.

Miss Pattie Bartee and Miss Helen Wilson are home after having finished their year's work as teachers.

Howard Apple, of Atlanta, spent a few days with his friends last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Butler, Jack and Hilda Butler of Greensboro worshiped with us last Sunday.

Canaan Ladies' Aid Society, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—Our society is moving along nicely. We have done right much in securing funds for our church in the last year.

As I have not given any reports on the last two meetings will give it together.

Our April meeting was held with Mrs. Grant Reece, all members present except two, and there were three visitors. This was a very interesting meeting. The program was on the Resurrection. Mrs. Leroy Miller and Era Zimmerman were appointed as delegates for the Branch meeting at High Point.

The May meeting was held at Mrs. J. D. Smith. This also was a very impressive meeting. This program was on "Mother." Several poems were read and a song "Plant a Flower on Mother's Grave." The program was enjoyed very much both in memory of our mothers who have gone on and in honor of those that are still with us.

Rev. Mr. Williams gave a short talk on the Branch meeting, and there were reports from others who attended the meeting. We are always glad to have Mr. Williams with us. As this is the end of another year's work it was at this time we reorganized, electing new officers in our circle. This was not hard to do as the old board was practically all re-elected.

I would like to say here that I think we should take our hats off to Mrs. J. D. Smith as president of our Aid Society. She has served this place since our Ladie's Aid was first organized in May, 1932.

We appreciate her greatly, both in spiritual and social affairs. As we start on our new year we are hoping to do greater things for our Master in the future.

We have had right much sickness in our community, but are glad to know that all are improving. Our society has made 324 calls in April and May. We are praying that health will be restored to those who are sick.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. A. L. Berrier is back home after being in the Winston hospital for appendicitis. She is recovering nicely.

"May righteousness still abound that we might win a loving crown."

Liberty, Aubert M. Smith, Pastor.—Church work is moving on in a very satisfactory way. The attendance and interest are encouraging.

A very impressive Easter program was given.

The vested choir, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. J. H. Reitzle, rendered selected anthems for the Liberty commencement. Rev. Tom A. Sykes, Friends minister of High Point delivered the baccalaureate sermon. The members from this church in the graduating class this year were: Wayne Isley and Paul Brewer Deaton. Our pastor gave the invocation.

Mrs. J. B. York entertained the Auxiliary at the home of her daughter in honor of Mrs. Colon Brady, who is to leave soon to make her home in Rural Hall. We are losing a very substantial Auxiliary member.

Our Sunday school will observe Mother's Day Sunday. Our sympathy is extended to our superintendent, Mr. R. L. Elkins, whose mother so recently passed away.

The writer's mother, Mrs. W. C. Shepard, who has been quite ill for several weeks will observe her 84th birthday, next Monday, May 15th. My father, in his 90th year, remains very feeble.

Let us not forget to pray for each other.

Littleton Charge, Corinth Church, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment at this church Sunday morning. He delivered a splendid message. Our congregation was real good but we wish more could have been there and heard this fine sermon.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely.

The annual memorial service will be held at this church the first Sunday morning in June at 11:00 o'clock.

A memorial service will be held at Rev. J. B. O'Briant's grave in Roanoke Rapids cemetery the second Sunday afternoon at 4:00 o'clock. Rev. Mr. O'Briant was pastor of this church for several years.

Two of our Sunday school pupils, Sarah Brewer and Claude Warren, Jr., graduated from Aurelian Springs High school last week.

Rev. Mr. Broome and family were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Morris Sunday.

Miss Edith Carter from our church and Mr. Churchill Brown from Vaughan were married in Emporia, Va., Sunday, May 7th. We wish for this young couple much happiness as they journey through life together.

MRS. B. F. MORRIS, Reporter.

Liberty Hill Church, Anderson Charge, T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointments Sunday. The morning and evening services were based on the second chapter of Galatians, and were very interesting. The C. E. society held its regular Sunday meeting, using as the subject, "What Should a Church Member Do?" This was very interestingly discussed.

Dr. Johnson will also be with us on the fifth Sunday of this month to preach to us at morning and evening services.

A singing school, which began a week ago, is being conducted here. The class is held each Saturday night at 7:30.

The pupils that attended the Bible school recently received their certificates on Sunday evening.

Mrs. A. A. Foster and Mrs. George Hamby are sick. We wish for them a speedy recovery.

The prayer meeting Wednesday night will be conducted by a young minister, Rev. Jock Greene. We hope a large crowd will be present. The Saturday night prayer meeting will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Johnson.

The Willing Workers class will meet May 2 at the home of Mrs. R. T. Bennett. The program will be for mothers; therefore, all the mothers have a special invitation to attend.

Mother's Day! What a great day that is! Let us all remember to give our mothers flowers while they live, and not wait until they are dead.

First Methodist Church, High Point, N. C.—Our pastor, Mr. J. C. Madison, returned last Friday night from Kansas City, where he attended the Uniting Conference. He reported on his trip at the regular meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary Monday afternoon and seemed very much impressed with the events taking place out there. An unusually good meeting of the Auxiliary was held Monday. Broadus Leonard, Jr., twelve years hold, had charge of the devotionals. After Mr. Madison's report, a group of children from Mrs. Walter Kirkman's kindergarten gave several songs and recitations that were greatly enjoyed.

On Sunday night, May 21, a Methodist rally will be held at Wesley Memorial Church, with all Methodist churches of High Point cooperating. A combined choir, under the direction of Mr. John Briggs will render several special selections. Dr. Lynn Hough, dean of Drew Theological Seminary, will be the speaker. This service promises to be a very inspirational and informative meeting.

Friday evening of this week the Junior church is giving a tea in the church basement honoring the mothers of the church. Miss Myrtle Davis, in charge of the Junior church, has planned another elaborate program and much interest is being shown by the children. A large attendance is expected.

Last week the Philathea class had one of its best meetings of the year at Mrs. Leonard Honeycutts. Miss Mamie Ellis had charge of the devotionals, using "Nature" as her theme. A. C. Lovelace, Jr., director of our church choir, sang several selections, and Mrs. Hubert Lane Barrier played several numbers. Miss Myrtle Davis reported on the recent Baracca-Philathea convention held in Goldsboro, and Mr. E. Z. Jones, a member of the staff at the local radio station, spoke very interestingly to the group. The Philathea class, taught by Mr. S. S. Coe, continues to grow and the attendance at their regular monthly meeting was unusually good.

Fortunately we know of no serious illness among our members, though there have been several cases of measles among the children. None of the cases have been very severe, however.

MRS. ROBERT DAVIS, Reporter.

"WESTWARD HO!" BUT NOT FOR GOLD

Perhaps I should have headed this letter, "Eastward Ho," but we have not started east yet, though we are thinking of being on the homeward way, for today, Saturday, April 29, we are entering Yellowstone Park.

Our last letter was written from Hollywood, California, in the home of our son. The impressions one gets from that country is, that there is not the interest in things religious that we find in the east. Numbers and numbers of little towns and villages through which we passed, if there was a church anywhere we did not see it. It seems to me that there is still missionary work that needs to be done as in the days gone by.

Of course to one passing through hurriedly, there is not much chance to get the best impression, for you only come in contact in most cases with those who are there for what they can get out of it, and they get the impression that you are simply going through to see all you can, and they propose to most cases to make you pay for it. Perhaps most tourists have not made the best impression for good, though they may be religious people at home. Well do I remember the expressions of disappointment from many of the people in Palestine and in other countries that we visited, that we did not buy wine and other strnog drink like the folks that were there before us. I know I am on dangerous ground here, for many people do not like to be checked up on their behavior abroad. But if there is any argument against what I have said about this, I have plenty of material. But we all know that there are some who are religious at home, while others only wish to make an impression when away from home.

After spending a week in Hollywood our son journeyed with us to the country of the big trees. This is one of the places of interest to the visitor in California of unusual interest. After spending some time here taking picture and looking upon these giants of the forest, we began our journey onward. Sam came with us for a distance of seven hundred and twenty-five miles. We spent only a little time in San Francisco; like most cities, it is just one more. The Fair is mammoth. There are so many things there to show the progress that we are making, that to the visitor whose time is limited, it is almost bewildering to undertake to see it. One just has to pick out what he wants to see and find it, for unless you have plenty of time, and I might say money too, which we do not have, you just cannot see it all in a short time.

As fate would have it, we spent one night in Reno, Nevada, and one in Salt Lake City, both places because of their main business do not appeal to me. We saw that courthouse in the first place where so many find release, as they think, from the troubles that beset them, only in most cases to find more. I got the impression that many of the citizens there do not like to discuss what takes place, while others seem to glory in it. Guess the latter are the one that help to keep the business going, or rather reap their fortunes from the unfortunate.

We heard part of a speil in Salt Lake City, at the Mormon Temple, for only as one man said, here in Idaho, where we are stopping for the night, you have to be a good Brighamite to get in. No one is allowed in here. Guess this is the place where the prophets get their inspiration for keeping up the propaganda of telling about Joseph Smith who received all those so-called wonderful revelations about how one should be batized, etc. I could hardly keep still as I heard this guide talk about how John Baptist came and told Jo how to be baptized. There is much of this that is interesting, but will defer further notes on this for another letter, perhaps.

CONFERENCE COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Luth. "I have to come extra early to get here ahead of the boys and girls. They have most of the responsibility for arranging the room and carrying out the department activities. There's always something that someone wants to do early."

As she sat down to wait until the opening of the assembly period, Mrs. Tilton was thinking over her experiences of the morning. "There must be some way of making our church school rooms more attractive," she thought. "Even though we don't have many rooms, and not very much money, we should be able to apply the same principles to our situation that these teachers have to theirs. I believe that I shall tell Mr. Turner I'll try to work out some plans to make our church school more interesting."—Edith B. Ruby, in "Elementary Teacher," April, 1939.

We Salute the Methodist Church

On the evening of the tenth day of May, about 8:30 o'clock, there was formed in Kansas City, Missouri, The Methodist Church. A Church with its far-flung lines of philanthropic and missionary activities; its mission stations in thirty countries of the world manned by 1,275 missionaries with 16,500 native workers. A Church having 82 hospitals with 5,300 nurses where in 1937 263,000 patients went for rest and healing. A Church with 140 schools and colleges where 105,000 youth like John Wesley sat at the feet of their teachers seeking the better way of life. A Methodist Church which in 1937 received into its membership, upon confession of faith, 262,750 persons, making a grand total of 7,741,300. A Church with a membership which contributed that same year for ministerial support and for the benevolences of the Church the sum of $75,202,000 or $10.18 per capita.

It was upon this manner that the task of completing the organization of this great church was completed; the delegates were assembled in the Municipal Auditorium, when Bishop John M. Moore read the six articles of The Declarations of Union which concluded as follows: "The Methodist Church is the ecclesiastical and lawful successor of the three uniting churches, and through which the three Churches as one united Church shall continue to live and have their existence, continue their institutions, and hold and enjoy their property, exercise and perform their several trusts under and in accord with the Plan of Union and Discipline of the United Church; and such trusts or corporate bodies as exist in the constituent churches shall be continued as long as legally necessary." To this every delegate standing with uplifted hand said, "We do so declare." And then in concert, Bishops and delegates said, "To the Methodist Church thus established we do solemnly declare our allegiance, and upon all its life and service we do reverently invoke the blessings of Almighty God. Amen." Then Bishop Frank Smith led the prayer consecrating the Church, concluding with the following words: "Having part among the people of God and the Church universal in the inheritance of the Apostles and prophets, fathers and teachers, martyrs and evangelists; we give thanks unto the Father who has made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Compassed about by so great cloud of witnesses, we do here and now consecrate the Methodist Church to the worship of God and the establishment of His Kingdom among men everywhere, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

Then a choir with more than a hundred voices sang the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's Messiah. The congregation of ten thousand people rose to their feet as was sung, "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, Hallelujah."

The spiritual impact was profound. The great congregation standing with bowed heads as the word "hallelujah" was taken up by the sopranos, the altos, the tenors, and the basses; each group emphasizing the word in beautiful harmony, cleansing the heart of every impulse but of praise and adoration of our God. And then was brought into our consciousness the full realization of the dream of men like Thomas H. Lewis that all Methodist peoples should be united in their efforts to extend the Kingdom of God upon earth. "The Methodist are one people."

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

The Uniting Conference

As is well known to most of our people the Uniting Conference at Kansas City closed on Wednesday night of last week in one of the most impressive services I ever expect to see this side the Pearly Gates. When the nine hundred delegates stood with uplifted hand pledging allegience to the Methodist Church and the choir of five hundred voice struck up the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's Messiah and the ten thousand people in the balconies stood as one man it was a sight never to be expected again in this world. Well, we have to come down from the mountain top into the valleys below to do our work there.

And Now For The Final Stretch

While the three denominations are officially untied we are given until the end of this Conference year to finish up our work and to go into the new conference. It is possible that the Conference year will be shortened slightly but this announcement will be made in due time. The plan is for each of the former conferences to have a short session and to adjourn and to go in and organize a new conference. Those who stop and think for a moment will realize that there is much for us to do before we end our final year. The fact that we put so much emphasis upon the World Service the first half of the year caused us to neglect many other things, so that we find ourselves considerably behind with Annual Conference Expenses, The College Assessment and possibly some other things. The months of May and June are set aside for Church Extension and of course half of May has passed. I am asking that we put forth every effort to catch up with these delayed assessments so we can get on schedule again.

Election of Delegates

I am now calling attention to the fact that we are to elect delegates to the next annual conference just as we usually do. These delegates will not only sit in our final session but will sit in the new conference when it is organized. In view of this fact it is important that people be elected who can go and who can represent the people. This matter of a delegate from every charge is one of the things which we carry into the new church as distinctly Methodist Protestant. For this has been the practice all the time with us. Let us now prove to the rest of the household of faith that our people really appreciate this part of our government.

District Conferences

Now that the District Conference is to remain a permanent fixture in the new church it seems to me to be important that our people use every opportunity to acquaint themselves with the workings of such bodies by attending these whenever convenient, not as official members but simply as visitors this year. Next year we shall be in better position to take our places in the conference if we get acquainted with them this year. I am sure that District Superintendents will be glad to have our people visit their conferences. In fact, some have told me that they expected to invite our ministers to sit in.

Many Things To Be Interpreted

Already I have been asked questions concerning the requirements in the new church and especially about the requirements for candidates for the ministry which I cannot answer now. The Uniting Conference was so comprehensive that no one person could keep up with all the legislation passed. A good deal of this will be interpreted for us. When the new Disciplines come out that will throw light on a good many things. In the meantime I am asking our young men in the course of study to go right on as formerly until they are otherwise advised. A good deal of the new legislation passed cannot be used for a year or two anyway.

The Quarter Has Ended

This is to give notice that this quarter of the conference year ended with Monday, May 15th. Those making up their quarterly reports may include everything up to that date. Report blanks will be mailed out as early as possible for the quarterly report. Being away attending the Uniting Conference has delayed this part of my work. But if the statistics are kept close at hand it will be easy to fill out the reports when received.

June 4th Peace Sunday

Our good brother, L. L. Wren of Siler City has called my attention to a resolution adopted by our conference in 1934 setting aside the first Sunday in June of each year as a day on which ministers are to preach on the glories of peace and the horrors of war. Surely there has not been a time in quite awhile when this subject is brought to our attention more vividly than at the present. In this time when all the nations of the earth are arming to the teeth surely it behooves the Church to do everything it can in order that war may be banished and that peace may reign on the earth. To this end I am calling on all of our ministers to make the best possible use of the day, Sunday, June 4th.

In Memory of Our Honored Dead

Early in the conference year a committee was appointed to call the attention of our people to the importance of honoring the memory of our deceased ministers on a Sunday near Memorial Day. Since this is Appreciation Year surely there is no more fitting way to express our appreciation to those who have made possible what we are and have than to go to the cemeteries where our ministers are buried and have a brief service at the grave and place some flowers thereon. Having conducted similar services for the past two years I know the value of it and I also know that this could be observed almost everywhere. Either the Sunday before or the Sunday following the national memorial day will be a good time to do this. Brethren, please do not fall to do this. Let the laymen help in every possible way.

Appointments

Sunday, June 5th, Spencer in Dedicatory Services.

Sunday, June 18th, Friendship Church, Fallston Charge in dedicatory services.

METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD

Official Organ of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church

Established 1894 By Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D.D.

Rev. R. M. Andrews, Editor and Business Manager

VOLUME XLV GREENSBORO, N. C., MAY 18, 1939 NUMBER 27

"Methodists are one people." Last week eighty-two per cent of the Methodist peoples of this country were united under one banner; are now known by one name, The Methodist Church.

In all of the fifteen days of the Uniting Conference we never heard anyone regret that unification was progressing so rapidly and in such a friendly manner.

Many were the expressions made by pastors in our former M. E. Church, South, of their pleasure that we could now plan and work together in one Church. It is indeed a great day of opportunity that has come to us.

The editor greatly appreciates the assistance Brother J. E. Carroll gave Mrs. Andrews in keeping the Herald running on a normal program. We here and now say, Thank you. We enjoyed every session of that mighty conference that we attended. It far surpassed all former conferences and conventions we had the pleasure to attend. Many of the programs greatly enriched our life.

It is suggested that the Piedmont Ministers attend the District Conference held in the First Methodist Church, Asheboro, next Monday instead of holding their regular meeting in Grace Church on the same date. All former M. P. ministers are invited to be present at this District meeting by District Superintendent Hayes. 9:30 a. m. is the time for this conference to begin.

Local Mergers

This Methodism is no fabrication of ambitious, selfish ecclesiastics. It is rather the flowing together of great streams going out to the same seas. When separations lose their motives, meaning and value, union becomes a normal movement and act. This is just as true in local communities as with the denominational bodies. Union of the three denominations puts all local churches under the same family but it does not require any local mergers. These are left entirely to the will, judgment and action of the membership of the local churches involved. When the Plan of Union was first submitted to the three Churches the Joint Commission warned against the quick amalgamation of churches and societies that are geographical neighbors. That warning this Uniting Conference may well repeat and re-enforce. Some local unions will become desirable and even necessary, but they should not be made in haste nor urged from merely economic considerations. Great loyalties and holy sentiments cluster about many altars and they should be respected. Sacred memories attach to the very aisles. These should not be sacrificed without due consideration. The economic argument, the saving of money, standing alone, may be regarded with suspicion. The sale of a place of worship to a body of irregular religionists only increase the problem of division in any community. Two wholesome Methodist Churches are apt to do more for Christ than one if the other is sacrificed upon a strange altar. When local unions are made, the congregations should keep in mind the ministers who are serving them. What will become of them? Their interests should be regarded and protected and their families should have care when mergers are being planned. This Conference should lift all mergers above the plane of financial selfishness to high places of Christian motive and service.—From the Episcopal Address to the Uniting Conference.

What About Local Mergers?

Now that we are all Methodists the question asked, what shall happen to the churches in communities where there are two or more Methodist Churches and one can take care of the situation? As an answer to this question we are giving below a paragraph from the Episcopal Address delivered by Bishop John M. Moore at the Uniting Conference. This we believe will set at rest any who are disturbed by the situation. There will be no pressure brought to bear upon two congregations to unite into one; the people are to unite when they are ready to unite. Nor can there be brought pressure upon any congregation to remain separate from another Methodist Church if the conditions are desirable for union as coming from the Bishops of the Church. In short the entire matter of local mergers is in the hands of the local congregations.

The Herald Goes On

We believe many of our subscribers have waited to know what is to become of the Herald the rest of this year; we expect to keep it going to all who subscribe to it. It is the opinion of the editor that it will discontinue when the conferences shall merge; but not before. We shall greatly need the Herald to inform our people about what has happened in the merged. We shall still keep our Children's Home, High Point College; and the Woman's Work of the state will continue as it is, likewise all our conference budgets, pastors' claims, etc., must go on. The Herald has been our medium by which we have publicised these programs and projects. One dollar will continue your subscription until the conferences merge, and you will get the worth of your money by the visits of the Herald from now until that date. We expect arrangements to be worked out by which all unexpired subscriptions to the Herald shall be completed by the North Carolina Christian Advocate. At present we are not prepared to make any statement as to this matter, but we assure our readers that if they renew for an entire year, sending us two dollars, now, they will not lose anything by the transaction.

We hope that every pastor and HERALD agent will send in the full amount of the subsidy apportioned their pastoral charge; send it soon as possible. Then explain to all subscribers whose subscriptions are expiring that one dollar will keep the HERALD coming to them until the annual conference meets. Please send in all subscriptions as rapidly as you can.

WITH THE POETS

Elizabeth Vera Idol

THE BARREL-ORGAN

By ALFRED NOYES

The English poets, Alfred Noyes and John Masefield, published their first volumes of poetry within the same year and continued to publish subsequent volumes almost simultaneously for almost a decade. During these years readers and critics, as well, believed that another pair of wrtiers had arisen to follow the same curious coincidence that has occasionally occurred in the world of writers—that of two stars of the same magnitude running their courses at the same time. Noyes and Masefield, however, drew apart. Masefield continued to write and to grow in importance until now he holds the coveted position of poet-laureate of England, but Noyes has produced no new book of poetry since 1905. What he wrote does not belong to the new poetry; he even attacked many of the new forms of verse and defended the superiority of the older forms, but he has written a kind of poetry that is popular with many classes of people. Untermeyer says: "His gift lies in the almost personal bond established between the poet and his public. People have so good a time reading his vivacious lines because Noyes had so good a time writing them."

Many of his poems will not live, but he will always be remembered for the melody of Sherwood, the gallop of The Highwayman, the lilt of The Barrel-Organ, and a few other ballads.

The rime and rhythmic beat of The Barrel-Organ sets our feet to tapping out the time and our bodies to swaying in accompaniment to its swing. It catches the monodic repetition of the hand-organ as it pauses under the window and plays over and over its meager round of tunes:

"There's a barrel-organ caroling across a golden street
In the City as the sun sinks low;
And the music's not immortal, but the world has made it sweet
And fulfilled it with the sunset glow:
And it pulses through the pleasures of the city and the pain
That surround the singing organ like a large eternal light;
And they've given it a glory and a part to play again
In the Symphony that rules the day and night."

How its music sets us to remembering "human joys and wonders and regrets"! What a medley of tunes the player assembles, ranging from the popular songs of the dance-hall and the carnivals of today, back into the grand music of the past, the operas:

"And there La Traviata sighs
Another sadder song;
And there Il Trovatore cries
A tale of deeper wrong:"

But the recurrent melody carries us away from the prosaic, the commonplace, of London streets down to that paradise of nature lovers, not far away, Kew Gardens, where trees, flowers, and birds make us forget all the sadness and gloom of life to wander hand in hand with love in the summertime of life:

"Go down to Kew in lilac-time, in lilac-time, in lilac-time;
Go down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)
And you shall wander hand in hand with love in summer's wonderland;
Go down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)"

All this and much more fill our hearts as the troubadour plays again:

"And in all the gaudy busses there are scores of weary feet Marking time, sweet time, with a dull mechanic beat"

What are they thinking, these people, as he grinds out Verdi's A che la morte?

"There's a thief, perhaps, that listens with a face of frozen stone
In the City as the sun sinks low;
There's a portly man of business with a balance of his own,
There's a clerk and there's a butcher of a soft reposeful tone,
And they're all of them returning to the heavens they have known:
They are crammed and jammed in busses and—they're each of them alone
In the land where the dead dreams go.

There's a laborer that listens to the voices of the dead
In the City as the sun sinks low;
And his hand begins to tremble and his face is rather red
As he sees a loafer watching him and—there he turns his head
And stares into the sunset where his April love is fled,
For he hears her softly singing and his lonely soul is led Through the land where the dead dreams go . . ."

Still the barrel-organ is caroling across a golden street singing its love song:

"My own love, my true love, is coming home today"

or a street cry

"Buy a bunch of violets for the lady,
And tell her she's your own true love."

More insistent still, however, and over and over sounds the invitation, luring us away from all that baffles and perplexes, as it plays on until the last notes of the refrain die away in the distance:

"Come down to Kew in lilac-time, in lilac-time, in lilac-time;
Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!
And you shall wander hand in hand with Love in summer's wonderland,
Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)"

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. W. H. Yokeley

BEVERAGE ALCOHOL AND THE HOME

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, May 21

By Rev. O. L. Easter

Lesson Text—Jeremiah 35:5-10; Ephesians 5:15-21; 6:1-4.

Golden Text—Drink no wine nor strong drink, then, nor thy sons with thee. Leviticus 10:9.

Since Paul's day with its brave preaching of the Christian way of life many great social evils have come to be more or less abolished from among human society. It is a thrilling study to trace the gradual uplift of social conditions as effected by Christian attitudes. Think a moment of the social status of womanhood before the influence of Christianity upon the peoples of the world. Under the loving care of Christ's attitude womanhood has come a long way in two centuries—the distance between the old slave auction block and our present institution of Mother's Day. Thus we could show the gradual improvement of attitudes towards childhood, brotherhood, and many other phases of human life, and this observation is the chief joy and inspiration for the Christians of today. But with all this we must readily admit that the full Kingdom of God on earth has not come yet. Paul's words in our lesson text are of pertinent importance still:

"Look, therefore carefully how ye walk, not as unwise, but as wise; . . . because the days are evil. . . . Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot, but filled with the Spirit." Ephesians 5:15-18.

Of all the tenacious problems of sin with which the forces of righteousness have elected to wrestle this one with intoxication of men has been perhaps the most stubborn. Of course, after years and years of courageous battle against this social evil we can claim some change in mental attitude towards the problem; at least in the more Christian groups. As in the case here of Paul he had to meet the problem of intoxication not only upon a social basis but also upon theological grounds, for we hear him in our text exhorting the Ephesians to "be not drunken with wine but be filled with the Spirit." Back of this statement lies the fact of certain groups, religious groups, who used intoxication as a means of communication with the divine. As pagan as that seems to us it was a real problem to be met by Paul's preaching. Thus in our theological field this part of the evil has been abolished by pure doctrines of Christian teaching.

Sadly enough, however, the crux of this evil did not rest there, but rather in the social aspect which remains with us even today. It seems that at the present writing that no progress within our country can be claimed and that with the coming of modern mechanical devices that its social dangers are greater than ever in our human history. Of course we turn our minds back just a few years and proudly remember our Eighteenth Amendment only to look at the present and have that—hope shattered. Instead of the mighty voice of our great government speaking in unison with the voice of church, school, and home against this dangerous foe of democracy and human welfare, about all that can be heard today is a trembling voice in a pulpit or classroom or home here or there weakly saying to our youth: "Look carefully how you walk . . . because the days are evil."

Let God and them be praised for these few remaining voices in the wilderness, but before we take undue refuge in them let us take notice of the sea of voices which are more or less drowning out these others from the itching ears of a waiting youth. Every available voice of modern use is being used by the liquor traffic to sell its product. The radio, newspapers, magazines, movies, all are urging their constituents to buy and drink alcoholic liquors. The most alarming aspect of this whole fact is that all of these are so effectively breaking through the age-old protection of the home. Where children were once kept at home and barred by the law from the lure of liquor in the saloon, now the voice of advertisement (which is so effective that firms pay thousands of dollars for one spoken word) can hurl its liquor urge into millions of homes throughout America and home is powerless against this intrusion as yet. If that is true of the home which has been the bulwark all these centuries against this subtle evil, then what must be the condition elsewhere.

With the national control of the liquor problem so disconcerted and undermined the home is perhaps the greatest point of attack upon this evil. If our churches can produce strong Christian parents who like Jonadab will command their sons, saying, "Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons forever . . ." then it will have a fighting voice to match the strong voices of this evil. Let the church place a strong lifting arm under the homes within the shadow of its steeple and lift these homes above the dangers of the social level; that at least within them there shall be a safe haven for the youth of our land. Many are the homes which need this elevation. Like the robin's nest in the low hanging orchards, the parent birds build their nest too low and the baby birds become the prey of the hungry cat. Let the voice of the Christian prophets say to such homes, "You are building your nests too low."

LIFE'S BLIND ALLEYS

As youth stands at the beginning of the highway of life, he sees a long stretch of road, clear and wide, leading to the full realization of his ambitions and to unalloyed happiness. Of course, he has his petty troubles, which sometimes loom large, but he is so full of enthusiasm and hope that he is inclined to attach little or no importance to ephemeral worries. But life moves on apace and grows more complicated. Burdens increase, problems multiply, and hindering circumstances begin to emerge. The youth soon discovers that the broad highway is flanked on each side with narrow lanes and alleyways, some of them at least seemingly with no outlets. Conditions over which he may or may not have control force him on occasion to turn either to the right or to the left from the main road to meet unforeseen responsibilities or to readjust himself to sudden changes in his situation. Once off the highway in one of these narrow lanes, the young man—or the young woman, as the case may be—sometimes discovers to his surprise and consternation that there seems to be no way out. He is caught in a blind alley.

Blind alleys! Here is a youth ambitious to go to college, to fit himself for one of the professions. Suddenly death takes a hand. Father and mother are called away, leaving a group of brothers and sisters who must be supported. What to do? The young man is forced to earn a living for the family. He secures work in a mill—temporarily. But the years come and go, and we see him, as a gray-haired man, still standing by his lathe. The hopes of youth have vanished. He is in a blind alley.

Here is a young woman. She too paints a glowing picture of the future in her imagination. Husband, home, children, are in it. One day she catches a cold, it develops into a persistent cough, and then—tuberculosis. The dream vanishes. In a blind alley, she awaits death.

What of this successful business man who has toiled hard all his life and is looking forward to a happy old age of retirement in the bosom of his family? Crash! comes a money panic. He is undone, and now he walks hopelessly toward the dead wall in his blind alley.

For all of us, the hopes of the years have a way of eluding us as we grow older, and life becomes, oh, so different from what we anticipated in the days of morning sunshine.

What are we to do about our frustrations? There are two ways of meeting them. For one thing, we may settle down in our blind alley and bitterly accept our fate like a dumb, driven animal. But there is another way. We may face the setbacks and disappointments of life with an unbroken will, with enduring patience, with constructive plans under the limitations that we are forced to accept, with chastened hope and persistent good cheer.

Why not plant a garden in the blind alley, train a flowering vine over the dead wall? Why not make out of this graveyard of our hopes a beauty spot toward which the weary travelers on the main road may look and drink in new courage for their long and wearisome journey?

Or why not, by the use of all our powers of body, mind, and soul, find a means not of breaking down the dead end of the alley but of working our way back again to the main highway? Said a famous Swiss philosopher, "No trouble lasts for more than three days." His saying is, of course, an exaggeration, but it serves to point out the fact that difficulties do have a way of clearing up if we give them time, provided we work while we want. By no means infrequently, blind-alley days have proved a godsend to the disappointed traveler. The realizations fo his early hopes have finally come, but in a different and better form than he dreamed their outcome in the flush of his youth. By no means infrequently also, when a man has faced his frustrations with courage and a patient spirit, a miracle has been wrought within his own heart. His faith in God and man has been increased, his spiritual power has grown, his character has been strengthened.

What is life for? Let us look "not down but up! to uses of a cup"; for He, God, fixed us "mid this dance of plastic circumstance," and "this Present" is indeed "machinery just meant to give" our souls their "bent." Browning's Potter's wheel in Rabbi Ben Ezra is the answer. Life with all its frustrations, disappointments, troubles, burdens, is intended to bring out in us the strength and beauty of our inherent godlikeness. Stress and strain may, of course, work in an exactly contrary direction if a man or woman allow adverse experiences to create an inner bitterness, but the eternal God of Love has to run this risk in dealing with free souls.

Life does press hard. Our hurts are real, our disappointments tragic. But we may be assured that every soul is of infinite worth to the loving Heavenly Father, and if we are to take the gospel teaching at face value, He pours out the fullest measure of His affection and concern, not upon those whose lives pursue their even tenor, but upon those frustrated souls who, baffled by adverse circumstances and conditions and lost in hopelessness and despiar, pace back and forth in their blind alleys. The more we need Him, the more He pours forth His love upon us.—Zion's Herald.

WE MUST HAVE THE BIBLE

By HUGH THOMSON KERR

We must have the Bible. There are some things we can get along without. If we must, we can get along without the telephone or the radio or the automobile. It would be interesting to sit down and make a list of the things we could get along without. One of the world's greatest men once said that he liked to look into the shop windows and note the things he could do without. There are many people in the world today who must of necessity do without many things to which they have been accustomed. There is one thing every one of us must have.

We must have bread.

We must have bread for our hungry bodies.

We must have bread for our hungry souls.

"It is," said Ruskin, "the curse of every evil nation and evil creature to eat and not be satisfied. The words of blessing are that they shall eat and be satisfied."

We must have bread. The Bible is bread.

The Bible ministers to hungry bodies. It is the guide book for all who minister to the hungry, the needy, the unemployed, the underprivileged in this and other lands. "The Word had breath, and wrought with human hands." The Bible will allow no one to carry an easy conscience when men and women and little children need bread. The Bible issues the mandate, "Give ye them to eat." It demands an answer to the question, "If a brother or sister be naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled; and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body; what doth it profit?" It passes judgment according to the rule, "I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink." The Bible is the great textbook for all social service. As you enter the foyer of a great municipal hospital, you look into the picture of the good Samaritan, and underneath you find the inscription, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." We must have the Bible, if the bodies of sick and hungry and needy folks are to have bread; for God makes use of human hands and human hearts when he distributes bread.

The Bible ministers to hungry hearts. We remember what Jesus said, and we know what he means. "Men shall not live by bread alone." We need more than wheat and corn and coal. We must have bread to satify our hungry hearts. The world is full of weary feet. They must find rest. The world is full of folk who carry about with them disappointing hopes and broken purposes. They must have courage. The world is full of aged people and ambitious youth. They must have peace and aspiring gladness. The world is full of sinners. They must have a Saviour. We can get along without the newspaper and the magazine and the latest book; but we must have the Bible.

The chamber of commerce must have it.
The court of justice must have it.
The hall of legislature must have it.
The college and school must have it.
The office and factory must have it.
The home must have it.
Every man, woman, and child must have it.

It is said Alexander slept with Homer's "Iliad" under his pillow; for even the great conqueror needed something more than words and soldiers. He needed vision. We need something more than gold and silver. We need hope and courage. We need light and guidance. We need security. We need a Saviour. The world wants an adviser, an administrator, a philosopher, an economist. The world needs a Saviour. If we are to find a Saviour, we must have the Bible. It was the President of the United States who said, "I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day." Certainly. We are sorry for the man who misses his daily bread. We are more than sorry for the man who starves his soul.

We must have the Bible.

FAIRY TALES COME TRUE

By JOE FULKERSON

I once shared offices with a chap who had two sons in school. At the time of which I speak, one boy was studying algebra. Every day his dad would stop work for an hour while he boned up on the algebra lesson his son would have the next day. The boy always came to his dad for assistance, and dad was too proud to let the boy know that he liked algebra about as well as His Satanic Mayesty is supposed to like holy water.

I used to laugh at my friend, but this was before I had a youngster of my own. Just as he had to revive his mathematics, I have had to revive my interest in the familiarity with juvenile literature. I have had to renew my acquaintance with Jack of the Beanstalk, Jack the Giant Killer, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, Robinson Crusoe and all the Hans Christian Anderson fairy tale people.

In reading aloud these books with my young daughter on my knee, I have discovered something about all the juvenile literature which has lived. The authors wrote with their tongues in their cheeks. They all poked fun at grown folks while they amused the childer.n Gulliver's Travels, Alice in Wonderland an half a dozen other stories are well worth re-reading by any grown person who likes delicate sarcasm.

All of which is leading up to the fact that I have spent the past week reading Charles Kingsley's Tom the Water Baby to Betty Jo. There are parts of that story which are well worth any grownup's thought.

Particularly was I interested in those folks whom Kingsley called the Doasyoulikes. They were a people who lived in the Land of Readymade at the foot of Happygolucky Mountain, where the succulent flapdoodle grew wild.

They loved music, but found it too much work to beat the drums, to blow saxophones or play fiddles, and dancing was such hard work that they abandoned it entirely. So they sat on ant hills all day and played jew's-harps, and when the ants bit them, just moved over to another ant hill to be bitten again.

They sat under the flapdoodle trees and let the flapdoodle drop into their mouths, and if any little pigs ran around already roasted and begging to be eaten, as was the custom in that country, they waited until the pigs ran close enough for them to reach out and take a bite.

They needed no weapons and no tools, for everything was ready-made to their hands, so they did not have to use their wits or their strength. But one day Happygolucky Mountain erupted (it was a volcano) and one third of the Doasyoulikes were blown up and another third were smothered in the ashes, but the remaining third stayed where they were, believing the mountain would never blow up again.

All the flapdoodle trees were killed by the volcano; they had eaten all the roast pigs, which, being roasted, could not reproduce themselves, and they had forgotten how to plant and reap and how to take care of pigs. They had even forgotten how to make jew's-harps. So they lived miserably on roots and nuts and had to climb trees to escape their enemies.

A dozen generations later they had had to grow hair on their bodies to protect them from the cold, and as their teeth were chattering most of the time, they forgot how to talk. Pneumonia and tuberculosis reduced their number until they finally came down to one survivor, who was mistaken for an ape by a hunter and was shot, because he had forgotten how to talk and could not explain to the hunter that he was a man.

All very silly, isn't it?

Or is it?

Doasyoulikes. Never in the history of civilization have we heard so much of personal liberty, of self-determination and of as many different opinions of where and how we should go. Never have we been as far from a definite line of morals or government or thought as we are today. Our whole civilization is degenerating into Doasyoulikes.

The Land of Readymade. Our opinions are ready made by chain newspapers filled with propaganda. Our food is ready-made and housewives live by the can opener instead of by the cookbook. Our clothes are ready-made and our laundry is ready-made. We, too, are living in the Land of Readymade.

Happygolucky Mountain. Between Fascists, Nazis, Leftists, Rightists and half a dozen other groups trying to undermine our form of government; with all Europe seething with wars and rumors of wars, we are indeed living in Happygolucky Mountain, a volcano ready to blow up one third of us, smother another third with ashes, and leave the rest of us in a land where sustenace is well nigh impossible.

Flapdoodle. Go to any political meeting and listen to the candidates for office; watch any investigation of graft and corruption; think of the speeches made in parliament and congress—flapdoodle, all of it. High sounding phrases used to conceal selfish laws to favor this or that interest or organization.

Jew's-harps. No longer do we teach our children to play the piano or the violin. No longer do we give them lessons in singing. The radio is our jew's-harp. No longer do our children study dancing seriously. That is too much work. Between the Big Apple and the Shag, our dancing has become the individual expression of the savage in us.

Enough of the comparison. Your own thought will complete the parallel. Your own imagination will fill in the blanks I have left. Was Kingsley a writer of fairy stories to amuse children, or a prophet whose prophecies are about to come true?

SPECIAL CALL

A number of pastors, or S. S. superintendents will mail us cards this week giving us the name and address of the chairman of the committee for local churches, as per letter sent out last week, and also published on page ten of last week's HERALD. We thank you.

Will we receive yours? If not, please get a post card an send us the information at once. We cannot wait long.

Our experience teaches us that some always answer such requests, and that some do not. We wish, and we need your direction in this; but if we do not get it soon we will have to assume that the Children's Home secretary in your local church, or churches, is the chairman of committee which is to be set up for Children's Home Day. We thank you for your cooperation.

We are doing our best to plan a fine program, and we are especially anxious to have a good representation present from every church in the Conference. We will be looking for you with your picnic baskets at 10:00 o'clock on June 22nd. Thank you.

A. G. DIXON, Supt.

Bessemer City Church, Shelby-Caroleen Charge, Rev. H. D. Garmon, Pastor.—There has been no report from our church for some time however, we've been carrying on for our Master just the same. There has been an increase in Sunday school attendance, also in the church attendance. Our pastor has filled his appointments bringing insiring messages to suit the needs of our people.

We have just closed a two-weeks' revival meeting in which our pastor did the preaching. The Lord blessed abundantly with the saving of souls and the revival of many church members. We are proud of the fine work our young pastor is doing. We also appreciate the fine cooperative spirit shown by the other churches in our city during our revival meeting. We request the prayers of all our friends that our work will continue to grow and prosper in the Master's name.

Community Church, Thomasville, N. C.—The report from the Community Methodist Church has not been coming as much lately as it should. There have been measles and other sickness in the church and with this and the excitement of the wedding we have not spent as much time as we should on our reports.

On Sunday afternoon, April 29th, the Christian Endeavor of the church entertained in honor of Miss Nell Meyers and Mr. Lewis Johnson. Devotionals were in charge of Miss Sybil Bost, after which Miss Audrey Leonard read a poem. During the program, Mrs. Susan Finch sang a lovely solo, which was very fitting for the occasion. She was accompanied at the piano by Miss Suzana Mathews. Mr. Wayne Surratt, president of the Christian Endeavor, presented the honoree with crystal in her selected pattern. Delicious refreshments were enjoyed by those present.

The Community Church was proud of the fact that we entirely paid up our Appreciation Year and our World Service budget before our pastor was sent to the Uniting Conference in Kansas City. I know that he went with a better heart knowing that the members of the church were working together for the good of the church.

The first thing that Mr. Auman did on his return was to perform the marriage ceremony for Miss Nell Meyers and Mr. Lewis Johnson. They were married at the church on Saturday following the return of Rev. Mr. Auman. The church was decorated very pretty. It was a beautiful wedding and one of the happiest that I have ever seen. After the wedding, a reception was held at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Jake Sechrist, on Elliot Drive.

On Friday evening, May 5th, the Young Men's Baraca class entertained the Young Ladies' Class of the church with a weiner roast. The weiner roaost was held at a very appropriate place, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Bartley, which is on the outskirts of town. Everyone enjoyed the outing very much.

Mrs. John Perry is out after being ill for so long and her many friends are glad to welcome her back into active life.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Crutchfield announce the birth of a daughter, Imogene Gay. Both mother and daughter are getting along nicely.

Master Bobby is confined with the measles and although he has been feeling quite badly he is much better now.

Piney Grove Church, Siler City Charge, Rev. A. M. Smith, Pastor.—Since this is my first report for this year I shall try to give a report of all the important happenings at our church for the past several months. First I want to say that we are very, very happy to have Mr. Smith with us for another year.

I am very sorry to report that we did not have a Christmas program this past year, so we got busy and got a little more interest stirred up and the children and young people gave an Easter program which was very good. Our pastor has filled all of his appointments and he always brings us a good message. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, and our attendance is extra good. Delegates from our church attended the Albright, Matthews, Hadley and Hickory Mt. Township Interdenominational Sunday School Convention at Silk Hope the fifth Sunday in April. Mr. Smith gave the morning address using as his subject "The Life of the Church." He sure made a fine address.

We are making plans now for Homecoming and memorial services at our church on May 28. Everyone is invited to come and spend the day and enjoy the program.

Communion services were held at our church Sunday, May 7. We ask the prayers of all the Christian people that Piney Grove will live and continue to grow.

Davidson Charge, W. H. Neese, Pastor.—The Lineberry Auxiliary met with Mrs. W. C. Wood. In the absence of the president the vice-president, Mrs. Vernon Hall presided.

The program as outlined in the Guide Book was carried out. Those taking part were Mesdames Vernon Hall, W. C. Wood, Van B. Wood, Garvin Elliott, J. C. Taylor, W. H. Neese, and Miss Pallie Brown Wood. Mrs. W. C. Wood and Miss Pallie Brown Wood sang a duet.

Due to sickness several of the members were absent. The usual business was transacted. The society decided to send the church paper three months to Misses Mary Ann and Abigail Coggins.

At the conclusion of the program a contest was held with Mrs. Garvin Elliott as the lucky winner.

The hostess was assisted by Misses Pallie Brown Wood and Myrl Lax who served delivious refreshments . The June meeting will meet with Miss Bruce Smith.

Several of our number are sick at this writing. Mr. J. B. Cook of Allegheeny church is a patient in the Stanley Journal Hospital at Albemarle, Mrs. Lizzie Crandford of Chapel Hill is ill at the home of her son, Cassie Cagle. Mrs. J. P. Elliott has been right sick for several days but is improving. Mrs. Margaret Frank, the mother of Rev. J. W. Frank, who is a missionary in Japan, had the misfortune to a fall about three weeks ago and is confined to her bed. "Grandma Frank" as she is known to her many friends was 90 years old last December. She lives with W. A. Frank, another son, a daughter Mrs. B. K. Taylor is helping care for her aged mother. For all these good people we wish a speedy recovery.

On next Sunday, May 21st, a Circuit Rally will be held at Chapel Hill Church. A special feature of the afternoon program will be an address on the Woman's Work by Mrs. James T. Bowman of Thomasville. The rally will be an all day affair. Everyone is invited.

The people are still remembering the parsonage family with good things to eat, for which we are thankful.

First M. P. Church, Danville, Va., Rev. G. L. Reynolds, Pastor.—We had an increase of one over last year's attendance at Sunday school, last Sunday. If that one will just keep coming and bring another, then we'll win them one by one, and grow until we really do have a big school. The Christian Endeavor Society had charge of devotional service, rendering a fine Mother's Day program, with Miss Elizabeth Thomas leading. Miss Ora Whisenant gave a very enjoyable talk about Mothers, and Mr. G. H. Sides sang a Mother's Day solo.

Our pastor, Mr. G. L. Reynolds, certainly did preach a grand sermon last Sunday at the morning service. He also related the history of Mother's Day, and quoted several poems along with the sermon.

Congratulations to our former pastor and wife, Mr .and Mrs. C. P. Morris, on the birth of their son, Phillip Jerome. We wish for him an inheritance of the best of qualities, including a sweet disposition like his mother's, a profession like his father's, and an appetite like his mother's, in order that the chess pies will hold out at the picnics this summer. We really do wish him the best that life has to offer, and although our congratulations to the parents come late, they are full of the biggest and best wishes for them and the son.

The Christian Endeavor Society entertained mothers of the members of the society last Saturday night, at a party, at the home of Ryland Stephens (or the mothers entertained them). We had a mother hen leading her daughter by means of clucking, a mother duck quacking to her duckling, a mother cow mooing to her calf, and a father horse neighing to his pony. All of you members and mothers also, who missed this party, missed a lot of fun, and if you don't believe it, just ask Mr. G. H. Sides, who helped the thousand-legged worm hop around the room.

We were glad to see Miss Catherine Forbes back at Sunday school last Sunday, and recovered from her recent illness. We've been missing her, and also Miss Electa Jarvis, an appendicitis operative at Memorial Hospital. We're looking forward to having her back with us before long, and are praying that God will lay His healing hand upon her and make her completely well.

Friendship Church, Shiloh Charge, Rev. C. E. Ridge, Pastor.—For services Sunday we had a Mother's Day program.

At the parsonage Saturday, Mr. Harry Hartley and Miss Sarah Rice were quietly married by the pastor. We were glad to have them worship with us Sunday. The groom is our efficient secretary. We wish them happiness.

Mr. Howard Shoaf is visiting in Baltimore.

Our Woman's Auxiliary will meet with Mrs. Harper Shoaf on Monday night. Among our recreations in it are the Polly-Anna Sisters from whom many were remembered on Mother's Day.

In our congregation were two sets of twins. Mr. and Mrs. Otis Phillips who have two beautiful twin maidens and Mr. and Mrs. Elmer MacMahan who also have pretty twin girls. We hope they will come often.

For our hut we have a large new stove with a big water tank, and, also, new screens for which we are glad.

Several of our Sunday school children have measles but are better.

We feel the greatness and sublimity of being a part of the great Methodist Church. The Conference in Kansas City which we followed closely, must have been made up of the most truly consecrated people on the globe to have done their colossal work in so short a length of time. We hope to follow their plans fervently in all humility.

Bellemont Church, Rev. J. R. Anderson, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment the fourth Sunday morning bringing us another helpful and inspiring message. Mr. Walter Cates, our choir director, sang a beautiful solo which was very much appreciated and enjoyed by all. The Holy Communion service was held with a good number taking part in this service.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely with our attendance increasing. We had 180 present Sunday. Measles and flu have kept several away.

The Auxiliary met at the hut for the April meeting. Plans are being made to get the ladies to become more interested in the work. Mrs. Paul Lowder has invited the ladies to meet in her home for the May meeting.

Many are attending the mid-week prayer services. These services are being held at the Baptist Church each Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock with the exception of the fourth Sunday. Rev. Wayne Curtis is the new pastor.

Two of our members were in the graduation class at E. H. Holt high school. They were Misses Ruth Fogleman and Madeline Moser. We wish for them much success in life.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Coble, and son, Herman, Jr., of Leaksville, visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Coble Sunday.

On Saturday before Easter Mr. Coy Rich and Miss Edith Iseley were united in marriage. Mrs. Rich is a member of the Friendship Church while Mr. Rich is one of our own members. We wish for these young people much happiness and success.

We visited Mr. Isaac Sharpe, one of our older members, last week. He has been a patient at Duke Hospital for the past six week but is hoping to be home very soon.

Class No. 9 is planning a mother-daughter banquet for Saturday evening.

The Bellemont Memorial service will be held the next fourth Sunday. The program has not been announced.

Mrs. Gurney Holt, who has been sick for sometime is improving.

We have lost several members of church and Sunday school this year. They are: Mrs. Monroe Holt, Mrs. Mary Shoffner, Dewitt Holt, Mr. Heenan Hawks and Oscar Bowman. May God comfort their families in their bereavement.

MRS. CLAY W. HOLT, Reporter.

West End, Thomasville, O. C. Loy, Pastor.—On Sunday morning, May 14, Class No. 9 of our Sunday school presented an interesting Mother's Day play at the close of Sunday school. The stage was very attractively decorated. A trellis of daisies and fern, pots of lillies and baskets of roses were arranged to form a flower garden scene with an arch of white flowers and fern over the entrance.

At the 11 o'clock service the pastor, Mr. Loy, preached a special Mother's Day sermon. The church was well filled with people for both of these services.

But the most important event of the morning was the marriage of Miss Lillian Binkley to Mr. Wade Suggs at the close of the services, in the presence of the congregation. Mrs. Suggs is president of the Senior C. E. society and the present teacher of Class No. 9. We extend to them our very best wishes for a happy future.

Our pastor, Mr. Morgan, filled his regular appointment with us Sunday afternoon. He brought to us a splendid sermon.

Our Sunday school seems to be improving in attendance. We are glad to have some of our members back who have been on the sick list. Many of our members are still away with measles. We wish for them a speedy recovery.

The Christian Endeavor will hold its regular meeting Sunday night, May 28, at 8:00 o'clock with Carolyn Taylor as leader. The topic for discussion will be "What Should a Church Member Do?" We hope that the attendance will increase over the last meeting.

The Woman's Auxiliary will meet Saturday afternoon, May 13, at 2:30 o'clock, in the church.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Whitley and daughter Darnell accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Morgan and daughter Juanita attended the rally held at Enfield, N. C., Sunday, April 30.

We are glad to report that the parsonage is complete enough for Mr. Morgan to be living in it.

Sapling Ridge Church, Alamance Charge, Rev. George R. Brown, Pastor.—Our work seems to be moving along very nicely. There is a gradual increase in our Sunday school. We hope that it shall continue. Rev. Oscar Lindley preached at the morning service the first Sunday morning in the absence of our pastor. He brought us a wonderful message.

The Woman's Auxiliary under the leadership of Mrs. T. M. Clark has begun its work for the new year. Good interest and good attendance are being shown at each meeting. The last meeting was held with Mrs. J. L. Self. Our next meeting will be held Saturday afternoon, May 20, with Mrs. M. H. Woody. We feel like our Auxiliary is doing a good work. We want the prayers of all the people that we may carry on the Master's work in the right way.

We are sorry to report that Mr. A. G. Campbell has not got able to attend church yet, and also Mrs. A. V. Ferguson who has been a shut-in for years. But they still have our prayers.

Miss Annie V. Self has been sick for some time and unable to attend church, but am glad that she is improving.

Pray that each may be found working to carry on the work of our Lord when we shall be called in death. Pray for us that we may win more souls for the Master.

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Fourth Sunday evening Brother Broome filled his regular appointment.

Fifth Sunday morning before going in class we were very much inspired with the solo Mr. and Mrs. Willie Grey Mitchell's little girl, Margaret Ann, sang who is not old enough to go to school. We were also glad to have to worship with us Rev. and Mrs. Leo Pittard. After Sunday school Mr. Pittard said he was going to play a game to show the children how Christianity worked. It wasn't only for the children. It will help everyone to see and know how it works. We owe much credit to him. We hope they will soon be back to Mr. Pittard's own home church. We love them very much.

Sunday morning at the 11:00 o'clock servive Brother Broome preached a Mother's Day sermon which seemed to impress everyone under his voice. The children sang a song and the choir two.

Sunday evening several members attended the memroial service at Mr. J. B. O'Briant's grave. One of our former pastors, a man whom we held in high esteem.

The Ladies' Aid and Auxiliary of the other churches on this charge will meet at

The reporter will take the blame of reporting of different ones in the hospital of last month and for leaving out Mrs. Walter Groome for we love her and think of her as Miss Alvaroda Faison.

Rankin Memorial Church, Rev. Edw. Suits, Pastor.—Although the reporter hasn't been on the job lately, we are not asleep at Rankin Memorial. We are still working and at present are raising money to finish the halls in the church. Our pastor has been bringing some very interesting messages lately and our attendance is unusually good. We were very glad to have Dr. Pritchard with us last Sunday morning, and he brought us a good sermon on the subject, "The Power and Influence of the Church." He also gave us some highlights on the Uniting Conference. On Sunday evening the Christian Endeavor, assited by some members of the church, gave a Mother's Day program. The main feature of the program was a pageant entitled "So He Made Mothers," which was well received. We are planning to observe Children's Day some time in June.

The Philathea class has been assisting with the work of the primary department in the Sunday school. They have had some tables made and are ordering some material to help teach the small children.

There is still some sickness among our church members. Mrs. M. H. Griffith is critically ill now. We hope she will soon be better.

Tabernacle Charge.—It has been so long since a report came from this charge that I feel like I might have to look back over other reports to see how to write one; but, on second thought, I could not say that our pastor has been "preaching such sweet and helpful sermons." I could say that "our silence is no indication of inactivity" and that the "work is moving along as usual" or "as well as could be expected."

The activities of the year on this charge have been encouraging. Interest and attendance have been as good as any time during the present pastorate. Our greatest accomplishments have possibly been the material improvements at Tabernacle. I realize it is a little late to talk about it but our first project of the conference year was the installation of a heating system. Heretofore our church had been partially heated (particularly in extreme cold weather) by stoves. We installed two pipeless furnaces. This equipment was a memorial gift by E. T. and W, C, Coble in memory of their parents. We might say, incidentally, that this equipment becomes the memorial of one of the donors, as W. C. Coble has passed to his eternal reward since that time. The church did the most of the installing, especially the digging of the basement which was done by the men of the church. Our next improvement was the building of a choir loft and chancel rail. This work was done as memorial gifts by Mrs. E. T. Coble in memory of her foster father, Mr. J. E. Hanner, and by Mr. P. A. Hardin in memory of his wife, Mrs. Ella Mae Harris-Hardin. To complete our work of improvement, the Woman's Auxiliary has had a new carpet laid. They had been working and saving for this for some time, and, we say modestly, they did a good job. These improvements have all added to the beauty and comfort of our church.

We were happy that we were able to do our share in raising the Appreciation Year apportionment, and the Delegates' Expense to the Uniting Conference. Both of our churches are honor roll churches in this respect. At Tabernacle we did it by means of an every-member canvass. Solicitors acted in the community and a circular letter went out to the non-resident members. Any of those non-resident members who read this who responded to our appeal, we wish to take this opportunity to say thank you.

On next Sunday, May 21, we will observe our annual memorial services at Tabernacle. Rev. L. B. Hayes, district superintendent of the Greensboro District of the Methodist Church, will be the morning speaker. Grover H. Jones, City Attorney of High Point, will be the afternoon speaker. We extend an invitation to all former pastors, members and friends to come and worship with us on this day.

Roberta Charge, Rev. H. W. Bell, Pastor, May 15.—Mother's Day was observed Sunday morning. The mothers had charge of the devotion and also occupied the choir and did the singing, which was enjoyed by the young folks. The pastor's subject was "Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages." The two oldest mothers present were Mrs. Jerry Penneger and Mrs. J. W. Stowe. They are something like 80 years old.

The Ladies' Aid is raising money to put in new floor and carpet the church; the men to cover the church.

Denton, Central Church, Rev. George L. Curry, Pastor.—Last Sunday morning at the Sunday school hour, 9:45, the members of Central Methodist church observed Mother's Day in a very impressive service.

The choir opened the service by singing "Love Divine," followed by the scripture, which was read by Mrs. Ruth Hoover, and prayer by Mrs. Moses Sexton. The choir very beautifully sang "Mother's Prayers Have Followed Me." Mr. Paul Hamilton sang a solo, within keeping of the memory of the day, "Mother Macree."

A group of young girls then sang "Mother" in a very pleasing manner. The toast to the living mothers was given by Mrs. Arthur Lanier, after which she presented a corsage of red roses to Mrs. Savannah Sexton, who in turn accepted them in behalf of the living mothers. Mrs. Roy Morris and Miss Marjorie Cranford sang a duet, "Songs My Mother Sang," after which Miss Edna Morris gave the toast to the deceased mothers, and presented a corsage of white roses to Mrs. Grayson Lomax, who in turn accepted them in memory of the mothers who have passed to their reward. This was followed by the closing song, "My Mother's Prayers," and the benediction.

This was the most impressive Mother's Day program ever presented by the church here, and the members of Auxiliary Circle No. 1, who had the program in charge, are to be congratulated in presenting such a splendid service.

MARVIN SEXTON.

West End, Greensboro, Dr. R. M. Andrews, Pastor.—Several able speakers have filled the pulpit for us in the absence of Dr. Andrews, among them being Rev. W. F. Ashburn, Rev. E. A. Lambe, and Rev. Tommy Strickland, all presenting forceful gospel messages.

Our pastor was welcomed back Sunday, May 14, and gave us a very interesting and enlightening account of the highlights of the Uniting Conference.

Miss Thelma Morrison of Greensboro College presented a monologue, "The Uncrowned Queen" on Sunday evening. This was a dramatization of the life of Frances Willard, famous for her work in temperance and the rights of women. She wore the dress of the 1800 era and talked in a most engaging manner to a very attentive audience.

The Intermediate department will present an "Amateur Hour" on Friday evening at the church. Several interesting items are listed on the program, and the offering will go in a building fund.

Miss Ruby Armistead of the Florida Methodist church was welcomed into membership with us on April 23.

For those of our number who are ill we wish for them a speedy recovery.

MILDRED STAPLETON, Reporter.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—Our pastor, Rev. T. M. Johnson, filled his regular appointments Sunday bringing very helpful messages.

We are indeed sorry to report that several in our community are sick. There has been lots of flu around and several of our members have been confined to their beds. We ask the prayers of all Christians for them that they may have a speedy recovery.

Our Sunday school is still holding up fine with the splendid help of Mr. J. P. Waddell, who is our superintendent. Although it was a cool rainy day Sunday we had a grand total there Sunday.

Rev. T. M. Johnson was the dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. McClimon Sunday.

The contest which the Girls' Class has been having will end the fourth Sunday of this month. I think there has been splendid work done since the contest started in January. Several new members have been added and a great number of visitors come each Sunday. We ask the prayers of all for our class and its work.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Compton and son were the weekend guests of Mr .and Mrs. W. M. Compton and family.

Miss Clara Burnette and B. B. Burnette of Abner Creek were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. League Davis.

We were indeed glad to have Mr. Stout and sons of Greenville, S. C. to come and worship with us Sunday.

The children of Mrs. Jerry M. Burnette gave her a surprise Mother's Day dinner. She received several nice gifts from her children.

We were indeed glad to see Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McClimon, B. A. McClimon, and B. B. McClimon arrive safely back home Sunday after a long trip to Dallas, Texas, for a stay of eight days to visit relatives. They reported to have visited different places and towns sightseeing and reported a splendid trip while away.

Were indeed glad to have Authur Nalley from Fairview Church in our community this weekend.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Bennette visited Mrs. Ashmore Bennette, whom all the children was having a Mother's day dinner for her.

MRS. JOHN D. McCLIMON, Reporter.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Charge.—Our pastor, Rev. Robert Short, brought us a helpful message the first Sunday in May. A very large congregation was present, and there is much more interest shown in our church work, financially and spiritually, than at any time last year. We have a very good Sunday school under the leadership of Miss Jessie Osborne, and good attendance; also good offerings. Comparing our church work in every way, it is over and above the average of last year. We feel there has been much good accomplished at Zoar in the last four years; but we feel that we owe it to our good pastor, Rev. Robert Short. Although his task has been heavy, — he has five churches to serve.—and we pray that God may be with him and that he may go forward and do greater things in the future than in the past.

LILLIE.

Lawndale, Cleveland Charge, Rev. T. G. Madison, Pastor.—On Easter Sunday night Revs. Madison and Goforth held a joint service. Rev. Mr. Madison conducted the devotional, and Rev. Mr. Goforth brought the message of the hour, which was very impressive. Mr. John Neal, who was gloriously saved during the meeting, took the church vows and the ordinance of baptism by immersion. Rev. Mr. Madison heard the vows and Rev. Mr. Goforth baptized Mr. Neal. This was a very impressive service.

The Woman's Auxiliary met during the month of April with Mrs. Ruth Clonninger as hostess. Mrs. Eskridge as usual conducted the devotional. Mrs. Madison, the president, presided. The meeting was very interesting. During the business session an invitation for the meeting May 16 was given by Mrs. Grover Eskridge.

Our pastor was permitted to attend the Uniting Conference in Kansas City.

Last Sunday night, May 14, the Woman's Auxiliary installed its officers for the year, with a very impressive candlelight service, after which our pastor, Rev. T. G. Madison, brought a very inspiring message.

Mrs. Tom Richards is very sick at this writing. Mrs. Peeler was indisposed last week with septic sore throat.

PASS IT ALONG

Happiness don't cost a heap,
But it's something you can't keep;
If within your heart's a song,
You can hold it just so long;
But don't try to keep it there—
It was made for all to share,
And it don't belong to you—
God wants us to have it, too!

If you're thinking kindly things,
Little thoughts, with angel-wings,
Turn them loose, and let them fly
At us people passing by;
Give them to us with a smile;
Let us keep them for awhile,
Then we'll turn them back to you,
And some others with them, too!

Misers they can hoard their gold,
And it's something they can hold,
Without hurting you, or me;
If they want it—let them be;
But no one can happy live
If they get—and never give;
So when God showers gifts on you,
He wants us to have them, too!

A CALL TO YOUTH

You whose hearts possess a dream
You whose vision still is true,
Will you follow still the gleam?
Will you build the world anew?
Futile is the reign of hate,
Fated is the rule of gold;
On your deeds great issues wait,
Let your hearts with love be bold.
Vain are all the tools of war,
Vain the boastings of success;
These the dreams you battle for:
Faith and truth and righteousness.
Let who will despise your youth,
Let them trail your words in dust;
You shall conquer, with the truth;
In your visions be your trust.
You whose hearts possess a dream,
God is God; His Word is true;
Follow still the luring gleam
Till the word is built anew.

"WESTWARD HO," BUT NOT FOR GOLD

Leaving Salt Lake City we found almost every mile of the way interesting. Snake River was an interesting stream because of its course. The people along its banks spoke of it as crawling through certain sections. This was the last stream we saw before entering Yellowstone Park from the West Gate. We were told that all the ways through this great place of interest were not open but that there would be enough to interest us for the one day that we had to give to it.

So many things have been written and so many have seen the many natural wonders there that perhaps for this scribe to undertake to describe them would be superflous. Of course we went to see Old Faithful, the geyser that thousands have gazed upon in the years gone by. We waited to see the periodic eruption. We have a good movie of this and we could but stand and gaze with wonder, and after it was over to think of how nature works in such was in many instances as to cause those who stop to think of the Creator, who has given us so much to enjoy.

"The Falls" is a place that reminds me of Niagara, though not as big, it has all the natural beauty surrounding it, even the rainbow, that causes you to be glad that the effort was made to get near, for it is necessary to go down four hundred and ninety-three steps to get the best view. Some of our party got sick in making the ascent, but this writer has climbed over and up so many difficulties that he held his equilibrium all right.

We saw the main points of interest in our miles of travel through the Park, and one of the things we enjoyed was looking at the great banks of snow, in many cases as high as our heads, where it had been cut through by the great snow plows that were opening the roads. The sun was as hot, it seemed to me as a July sun at home, for it was hard to keep from getting blistered. When we left we had to drive about two hundred miles out of the way to get on our road toward Denver. But we felt well repaid for doing this for what we had seen. There were only two gates that were not blocked with snow to that extent that no entrance or exit could be made. So we made a curcuitous route through the North Gate into Montana and started on our way indirectly, eastward.

Sunday morning we attended service in a Methodist church in Laurel, Montana, and heard a splendid sermon by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Chappell. We went in just as the services began and he told me afterward that he had his suspicions that I was a minister. The people were very cordial, and made one feel at home to be among such friendly people.

We have noticed in all the churches where we have been that there was a pronounced interest in the Uniting Conference, as prayers were made for guidance there and the expressions of interest were encouraging. On the church bulletins mention was made in a way that showed that Methodist people generally are very much concerned about this.

We are expecting to attend the Uniting Conference in Kansas City tonight, as we are in three hundred miles of it at this writing, but shall not undertake to write about that as there will be so much given by those who have an opportunity to get it all together.

We had a pleasant night in Denver, visiting old friend and members. Anyone who knows anything about Fountain Place, Burlington, knows H. M. Scott. Well, he has two sons in Denver, Edgar and Porter. The former has been a policeman there for about fifteen years, and the latter went there some three years ago and has an important position with the telephone company. He has a dandy home and his good wife Mary, was so nice to us that it was restful to stop where we knew some one. That was the first time since leaving our boys in California. Mary was secretary of the Auxiliary at Fountain Place while we served there, so she and Mrs. Bethea had a good time talking of old times together.

We are expecting to stop at Pine Ridge before reaching home.

DO YOU KNOW—

That liquor and smoke money would buy average drinking family a home in ten years.

A thrifty abstemious family could purchase a new home every ten years with the amount an "average" drinking family spends for liquor and tobacco in the same period. The "average" drinking, smoking family in the middle income bracket spends up to $40 or $50 per month for liquor and smokes. These are a few of the startling conclusions reached in a survey of liquir costs just completed by the National Voice of Los Angeles.

"Many drinking families say they cannot afford to own a home," says the survey, "yet what they spend for intoxicants and tobacco would completely pay for a comfortable home in ten years or less.

"There is a strange contrast between FHA (Federal Housing Administration) and OJB (Old John Barleycorn). Never was it easier for a family to acquire a home, thanks to the way the government is operating the FHA. Never was it easier for a family to lose a home, thanks to the way the government is managing OJB.

Hope

Always somewhere in the world it is midnight. The shadows are as deep as death. Where darkness is, fear reigns. Even so, it is also true that, as it is written on a sundial on a pier at Brighton, England, "'Tis always morning somewhere in the world." This hopeful suggestion is worthy of our remembrance. As we look at some parts of our world, they are as unpromising as darkness and as ominous as the grave. Violence and tyranny seem invincible. Sin and moral chaos appear to rule for the time being. Just as surely, however, there are parts of our world where the opposite is quite true. These are full of promise and radiant with hopeful outlook. These are the morning places, where the sun is shining and the denizens of the darkness are driven to their lairs. Fear and terror cannot thrive there. The radiance of hope turns devastation into gardens, dries the tears of grief and replaces them with the happy smile of expectant faith, dispels the quaking fears of evil, and inspires the courage of the conqueror. God is not dead, and rebellious man lives and reigns only a brief span. It is always morning somewhere, and it is going to be morning everywhere, some day. The days of sin and pain cannot always last. "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning."

—Watchman-Examiner.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Dr. George R. Brown Honored

When any one of our ministers or laymen is honored in a special way I am sure it brings pleasure to all the rest of us. While at the Uniting Conference two honors came to Dr. George R. Brown of Liberty, N. C., the pastor of the Alamance charge. The first honor came to Dr. Brown when former Governor Alf M. Landon of Kansas invited Dr. Brown to come to his home at Topeka, seventy miles from the site of the conference for Sunday dinner. Governor Landon was chairman of the committee on Publishing Interests and Dr. Brown was vice-chairman, hence the invitation.

The second honor came to the same gentleman when he was elected to the Judicial Council of the new Methodist Church. The Bishops of the Church nominated certain persons to be voted on by the conference. Dr. Brown and Dr. A. J. Allen of the Pittsburgh conference were the two nominated from the Methodist Protestant Church and when the election was held Dr. Brown won on the second ballot. This election was by the entire conference of nine hundred delegates. This Judicial Council is made up of four members from the M. E. Church, four from the M. E. Church South and one from the Methodist Protestant Church. It is really the Supreme Court of the new Church.

A Sunday Morning At Rankin Memorial

Sunday morning, May 14th was spent with the Rankin Memorial Church in High Point, Rev. Edward Suits, pastor. This church was formerly known as the English Street church. When the congregation lost its building on English street due to financial reverses, a few years ago those who remained loyal to the organization bought a lot and built a nice brick building a few blocks from the old location. Brother Suits has been the pastor ever since the new building was started and has been its guiding star. He and the people have worked hard and have undergone great sacrifices in order to have the nice new building. While the auditorium has been finished for a couple of years or more some of the Sunday school rooms have been finished just recently. Work is still going on in finishing up some of the halls to the rear of the pulpit. This building makes a nice appearance from the outside as well as the inside. It is in a residential district of the city and there is no other Methodist Church in that vicinity. It is expected that this church will serve a considerable section of this fast growing city.

The Sunday I was there was known as Mother's Day and the congregation was said to be off somewhat due to the fact that several of the members had gone away to visit their mothers. But those who were there were very attentive and seemed to appreciate the service very much. Both the pastor and people have cause for rejoicing in the achievements which have been wrought here. I trust that this church may continue to prosper.

My plans were changed on Friday of last week. I found myself able to accept an invitation to the Circuit Rally on the Davidson Charge at Chapel Hill Church which I had previously turned down. On arriving found a fine group in Sunday school. Pastor Neese had arranged a very fine program for the day. All the churches on the charge were asked to add some contributions to the program. Special music added much to the inspiration of the occasion. Others who took part on the program were at their best. This is Brother Neese's first year on this charge, and seems to be making a fine beginning on the work.

For some reason Community Church, Thomasville, failed to be reported some weeks ago as having paid World Service and Delegates' Expenses in full. Sorry for this error.

PLAN OF YOUTH WORK FOR THE LOCAL CHURCH

The three directors of youth work of the former churches uniting got together and worked out a compromise plan which finally became the legislation for the new church after adoption by the Uniting Conference at Kansas City. If you study both plans, either one of which may be used in the local church, there is nothing to prohibit, under Plan II, there being a Christian Endeavor Society or an Epworth League. To understand the background of this legislation, one must keep in mind that the former three churches each used a definite type of organization. For example, the Methodist Protestant Church sponsored Christian Endeavor, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Epworth League, and the Methodist Church, South, the unified plan which is outlined in Plan I. The legislation follows:

Each (youth) department shall organize in accordance with one or the other of the two following plans (to be outlined by the General Board of Christian Education) as may be determined by the membership concerned and the Church Board of Christian Education.

"(a) Plan I. Where a unified organization is desired, one organization, with one set of officers and one program planning Department Council, shall be responsible for carrying on all the activities of the department as outlined in Section 2, above.

(b) Plan II. Where two or more correlated organizations are desired they may be provided within the department to carry on activities outlined in Section 2, above. Each may have its own officers, program committees, and separate memberships. Suitable representatives from each organization within the department shall meet together as a Department Council monthly or as often as necessary to give such supervision over the programs of the organizations concerned as will avoid duplications and omissions and meet the total needs of the age group concerned. The Department Council shall represent the entire department in matters which concern that age group of the local church."

A Message In Verse

THE DAY AND ITS WORK

"To each man is given a day and his work for the day,
Once, and no more, he is given to travel the way;
And woe if he flees from the task, whatever the odds,
For there is appointed to him on the scroll of the gods.
There is waiting a work where only his hands can avail;
And so, if he fails, a chord in the music must fail.
He may laugh to the sky; he may lay for an hour in the sun,
But he dare not go hence till the labor appointed is done."

Rev. and Mrs. Eugene A. Lamb are rejoicing over the birth of a daughter, Winifred Loureta. Both mother and daughter are getting on splendidly.

You can have the M. P. Herald until the first of November for one dollar. Let us have your renewal at once. Pastor, Herald agent, please send us a long list of new subscribers on this proposition.

The date for Western North Carolina annual conference, as released, is October 19th at West Market Street Church, Greensboro. The date of the former M. P. Conference was referred by the Board of Bishops to Bishop Straughn who will hold it. It is now expected to meet October the 18th and hold a one day session. The North Carolina conference of the former M. E. Church, South, is scheduled to meet at Fayetteville, November the 9th.

Several pastors of the former M. P. Church attended the District Conference of the Methodist Church in First Church, Asheboro, last Monday. There was a fine attendance of pastors and delegates, and District Superintendent Hayes dispatched business with the skill and rapidity of one ''born to rule.'' Pastor Powell and his members proved themselves most thoughtful and gracious hosts; a most bountiful lunch was served in the dining rooms of the Church and the educational building of the Church. It was good to be there.

"Forgetting Those Things Which Are Behind"

There come certain things into the life of an individual which he or she can live more happily and do the tasks of life better if they are forgotten. St. Paul spoke of things which he had suffered, things of which he had gloried achievements in scholarship, and an ancestry of which any loyal Jew might well boast. But for the sake of pressing forward and obtaining the prize set before him as a follower of Jesus Christ he would forget them.

Has not the time come with us former members of the Methodist Protestant Church that we start working the forgetting section of our brain in order that we may the more fully appreciate the large heritage which recently has become ours as members of the Methodist Church?

Let us forget the division which gave the M. P. Church its existence; forget the difference which divided us, the organizational set-up which made us unique, in order that we may more completely rally our forces and employ our resources in the service of Jesus Christ in this larger Methodism in which we now find ourselves. Our losses in the new set-up are pitiably small in comparison with our gains. Our denominational fellowship has been so greatly enlarged; our liberties have not been restricted, nor is there laid upon us financial burdens we are unable to bear. Our creed is unaltered, we attend the same churches as formerly and have the same privilege of choosing the pastor who shall minister to our spiritual needs as of yore. We bid adieu to nothing, we face no new issues of which we are afraid. The Methodist are one people. Let us thank God and take courage.

The Benefits of Group Life

One fact not always appreciated is that much of our best training for life comes from group contacts. The books one reads in seclusion, the experiences one has in the cloisture, must be translated into the affairs of life; must enter the stream of human progress, through group contact. ''The man of affairs'' and the ''book worm'' are the antipdial types which comes under our consideration here. One with friends in wide areas of progress, the other with tomes of the sages in memory but kept inside his own mind. Or the Christian missionary like Dr. Livingston, translating the gospel of Jesus Christ in terms of a varied service, and the ancient ''pillar dweller'' who kept his vigils through heat and cold away from the ''gadding throng.''

The Church is a place where youth, all youth, should receive training for life. Here the relationships are more uniformly Christian, the attitudes more nearly Christ-like. Here the meaning of the word of God finds a richer, fuller interpretation through the words and acts of the believer. The practice of prayer in the congregation, the participation in the worship service, the assumption of responsibility for the group; these have a developing, steadying influence on all who experience them which is not found elsewhere.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

PAUL THINKS IN WORLD TERMS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, May 28

Lesson Text—Romans 1:1-17.

Golden Text—I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Romans 1:16.

Every modern recipient of Christianity can well thank the God of Providence that one little, frail-bodied Christian of many centuries ago was able to think in world terms in his efforts as an Apostle of Jesus Christ. One of the greatest problems that faces civilization today is produced by the fact that men high and low in leadership of nation just will not allow their people to think in world terms. If nations could be led to admit, as did Paul, that they are ''debtor both of the Greek and to the Barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish,'' then would they begin to think through gratitude in world terms concerning their common problems. How can any Christian nation thoroughly despise the scattered Jewish people when they remember that they are debtors to that race for their religious heritage? America has only to read its early history of the settlement of its great wilderness stretches by human elements of almost every race and clan to forever know that she is debtor to ''Greek and Barbarian.'' Thus all nations are debtors to each other but the crying need of the hour is for admission to this fact and payment made in reciprocal brotherhood which the world so sorely needs.

As in no other element of world life, there is found in the nature and message of Christianity the highest possibility of real world thinking. If to be Christian means obedience to Christ then the parting command of Jesus must be obeyed, which if obeyed will mean action that will demand our thinking in world terms. The same central ''go'' of Christ gospel which caused St. Paul to long to go to dangerous Rome until he went is still throbbing within the heart of genuine Christianity today. Although there seems to be a clearage of nations today as acute as the world has seen, yet in the name of Christ men are thinking in world terms as never before seen in the history of mankind. Great ecumentical world conferences are being held attended by not only all races of men but nearly all sects of religious bodies. Above all the nationalistic voices of the rules of nation's the Christian church is succeeding wonderously in raising up a host of hearts in every land who are obeying the nobler marching orders of God Himself. The late Duke of Wellington once met a young clergyman, who being aware of Welllington's former residence in the East and his familiarity with the ignorance and tenacity of the Hindoos in support of their false religion, gravely proposed the following question: ''Does not Your Grace think it almost useless and extravagant to preach the gospel to the Hindoos?'' The Duke immediately rejoined, ''That is not your business. Your business is to obey your marching orders,—'Preach the gospel to every creature.' '' Thus as a good soldier of Christ even if our inherent prejudices caused us to want to halt, our faith and allegiance to our Great Commander would lead us to exclaim in the words of Tennyson's Charge of the Light Brigade.

''Ours not to make reply,
Ours not to reason why,
Ours but to do and die . . .''

As true as that should be with us, it would still not be enough to accomplish this great task of taking Christ to the world. Such blind allegiance would never reveal the Savour. Christ knew this and said to us: ''I call you not servants, but friends, for the servant knoweth not what his master doeth.'' No, like Paul we must sincerely feel a tie of love for even the foreigner or stranger if we are to really import any spiritual gifts to them. ''That is,'' says Paul, ''that I with you may be comforted in you, each of us by the other's faith, both yours and mine.'' Professor Curtis in a lecture on President Lincoln said that men had two ears, and often a different anthem was sung in each. The reformer has one ear opened toward God and he hears by that alone and goes forward. The politician has only one ear open, and that to man, and he marches to that alone. The statesman has one ear open to God, and the other to man, and when he hears the same anthem in both ears he goes forward. Let us pray in a time like this for a rising host of world statesmen like Paul who are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ and who, like Whitefield, are willing to forget all else about men before them but their immortality and their misery.

''He who can part from country and from kin,
And scorn delights, and tread the thorny way,
A heavenly crown through trial and pain to win,—
He who, reviled, can tender love repay.

''And, buffeted, for bitter foes can pray,—
He who upspringing at his Captain's call,
Fights the good fight, and when at last the day
Of fiery trial comes, can nobly fall,—
Such were a saint, or more; and such the Holy Paul.''

DEVOTIONAL ADDRESS TO UNITING CONFERENCE BY BISHOP G. BROMLEY OXNAM

"He Came Too Soon, This Christ"

In his play, ''The Wingless Victory,'' Maxwell Anderson has written a tragedy that strangely enough may be called beautiful. It is phrased in the strong, simple English of Elizabethan days, and speaks of the terrible nemesis that forever pursues intolerance. The scene is laid in Salem, Massachusetts, about the year 1800. Nathaniel McQueston and his wife, Oparre, are the central characters. He is a sea-captain, who left Salem in poverty to return in wealth. Oparre is a Malay princess, who has saved his life. They return with their two children, to meet the bitter rebuff of racial prejudice; a rebuff in this instance made the more bitter by the covetous spirit of the self-righteous who envied his possessions.

Oparre, once a worshipper of the tribal gods of revenge and blood, is drawn to the gentle, kindly Christ. She seeks to win the love of her husband's people; but they are cruel in their intolerance, even though, in pleading declaration, they hear her say, ''Still carrying in my heart the secret Christ by whom you live, I answer, I am your friend.'' But she warns them, ''Dark as your words have been, dark as your looks at me, evil as you may think you are, your evil is as the play of children to the world we two have left behind.'' But they will have none of her, nor her children. They would ruin her husband. At last she speaks to her husband's brother, a clergyman, whose prejudice is the more terrible because of the very passion of religion: ''Sir, if this winter coast is tarnished by our footsteps in the snow, as I fear it might be; if the Christ you worship gives sanctuary only to his own lest they be polluted, say this at once, and we shall rouse the children, and be away. I came only with a hope.''

The Passion of a Broken Heart

They have their way with her, and in a moment of awful trial, her husband falters, broken by the overwhelming pressure of the community. Knowing that she must leave, and leave alone save for her children and a faithful servant, she repudiates the Christ, rejects all; turns once again to gods of earth and blood. She boards the ship, resolved to die and to take her little ones with her. She speaks of ''unwanted babes'' and of the ''drink of darness.'' Taking the poison, with broken heart we hear her say, ''We shall sleep and turn to nameless ground.'' Awaiting the end, she kneels to utter a prayer, her last. It is addressed to the gods she knew.

> ''The earth rolls toward the dark, and men begin to sleep. God of the children, god of the lesser children of the earth, the black, the unclean, the vengeful, you are mine now as when I was a child. He came too soon, this Christ of peace. Men are not ready yet. Another hundred thousand years they must drink your portion of tears and blood . . .''

''He came too soon, this Christ. Men are not ready yet. Another hundred thousand years . . .'' ''He came too soon.''

Paul, the apostle, believed Christ had come in the fullness of time. Oparre, the Malay princess, thought he had come too soon. A court, charged with decision, might conclude that the evidence justifies the contention of Oparre rather than of Paul.

It is written that the common people heard Him gladly; but He was despised and rejected. The long-awaited Messiah had come too soon. Barabbas was released. Jesus was crucified. It was not the recitation of a line from a predestined drama. It was the crucifixion of a poor Galilean, who had come too soon. Surely the Garden of Gethsemane was more than a pre-determined scene from the pen of the Eternal Playwright.

The Unspoken Thoughts of Christ

Did the broken-hearted young Christ, who would have the cup pass from Him, who feared the Father had forsaken Him, believe He had come too soon? There was so much more he desired to tell them; but He said, ''Ye cannot bear it now.''

''When Jesus came to Golgotha
They hanged Him on a tree
They drove great nails through hand and feet,
And made a Calvary;
They crowned Him with a crown of thorns,
Red were His wounds and deep,
For those were crued and cruel days
And human flesh was cheap.''

—G. A. Studdert-Kennedy
(Indifference)

He had come too soon!

Oparre might well call upon the court to note the many centuries of struggle, unfortunately not yet concluded, wherein man lived the fighting way of life. The warrior was king. There are those who yet believe that strength comes through struggle. They insist that man is ruled by an inner urge to survive. They argue that nature is red in tooth and claw and if man would survive he must be fit, physically fit. They tell us this is the fundamental reality beneath the thin veneer which man hyprocitically calls civilization. Did Christ come too soon? Is our biological heritage too strong? Is this talk of the strong bearing the burdens of the weak, of laying down a life for a friend, of finding life in losing it, the demand of a poor dreamer? Are we fated to struggle on, until at last, the groups that have survived because they have learned to cooperate in fighting against their environment, develop enough of this cooperative spirit to realize at last that mutual aid must be carried into all the activities of men? Oparre would not be alone in that court room. Regardless of the millions who bow before cross or crucifix, there are many millions more who argue, ''This Christ came too soon.'' His teachings, we are told, are but the evanescent pictures of perfectionist ethics projected upon a silver screen.

They insist that the Christ who came too soon must be taught the futility of the distant ideal.

Too Soon for the Christ Way of Life

A Chinese Christian said, "You cannot teach men to love their enemies in the twinkling of an eye." It is still an eye for an eye. The fighting way of life carries on; and grows more brutal in the very refinement of the money-making way of life. Here the financier is king. Sidney Lanier, poet of the South, tells us that "Trade is war grown miserly."

You came too soon, Galilean, too soon to talk of the second mile, the cloak, the cup of cold water—to son to tell of houses builded on the sand, of new barns, and Mammon—too soon for Matthew and Zaccheus, for broken alabaster and forgiven sins. Puritanical codes justify flinging the first and the last stone. Too soon to behold Mary of the streets becoming Mary of the saints! We are still in the fighting way of life, the money-making way of life, it is argued. Jesus dreamed of a personality-making way of life, in which the suffering servant would be king. But we are forced, Oparre might say, to be awake to the realities, the realities of the fighting way of life, of the money-making way of life. Were this poor Malay princess addressing the court, with what overwhelming argument might she build her case? She would repeat it, "Your Christ came too soon, I say. Look if you will to the Eternal City. Was it not upon a rock your church was built? Is it not called Saint Peter's Church? Did not the man Paul, who was so sure that Jesus came in the fullness of time, did he not lie in prison there? Did he not die there? I know that he wrote:

I may speak with the tongues of men and angels, but I have no love,
I am a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal;
I am prophesy, fathom all mysteries and secret lore,
I may have such absolute faith that I can move hills from their place,
  But if I have no love,
  I count for nothing;
I may distribute all I possess in charity;
I may give up my body to be burnt,
  But if I have no love,
  I make nothing of it.
Love is very patient, very kind. Love knows no jealousy; love makes no parade, gives itself no airs, is never rude, never selfish, never irritated, never resentful, love is never glad when others go wrong, love is gladdened by goodness, always slow to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient. Love never disappears. . . .
Thus "faith and hope and love last on, these three," but the greatest of all is love.

Another Who Came Too Soon

But he, like his Lord, came too soon. The ancient Roman was ready for the Christ of Empire. He could envision the Empire that was to be, the Holy Roman Empire. The Roman conqueror could understand killing in the name of the very cross upon which Jesus had been killed—"By this sign conquer." No, he was not too soon for the empire builders, this Empire Christ. But the Christ of Love, the peasant who had no place to lay His head, He came too soon. They were ready, these mediaeval theologians, for the Christ of Dogma. With what delight did they create the formula to explain Him! Actually, they buried Him in another tomb. They bound Him with creedal graveclothes. He was not too soon, this Christ of Councils. But the Christ who declared, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," this Jesus who knew the truth would make us free, He came too soon. And so today, in the Eternal City, the city of Peter's Church and Paul's Christ, we hear a new Caesar who fears not the usable Christ of Empire, nor the dead Christ of Dogma. Mussolini speaks in his March twenty-sixth speech and says:

> We wish to hear no more about brotherhood . . . because relationships between states are relations of force and these relations of force are the determining elements of their policy.
> We must arm. The watchward is this: More cannon, more ships, more airplanes, at whatever cost, with whatever means, even if it should mean wiping out all that is called civil life. When one is strong one is dear to one's friends and feared by one's enemies. Since prehistoric times one shout has come down on the waves of the centuries and the series of generations: 'Woe to the weak!'

There it is: "Woe to the weak!" Oparre might point out the leaders of Left and Right, the dictator leaders, who profane the very name leader. They are not leaders, but drivers, "You came too soon, Jesus."

Other Woes, Other Leaders

It is Mussolini who cries, "Woe to the weak!" The woes that Jesus uttered were directed to Scribes and Pharisees. Were they uttered too soon? "You are all brothers . . . for One is your Heavenly Father." Moffatt translates the next verse: "One is your leader, even the Christ." Not Benito Mussolini, not the Fuehrer—Adolph Hitler! One is your leader, even Christ. You came too soon, Christ; we have other leaders. He who would be greatest among you must become the servant of all. It is to laugh. Whoever humbles himself will be uplifted—absurd! And is there not a danger in the Church itself? Some Churchmen have become so enamored with the very idea of the Church that they regard the Church as an end in itself rather than as a means to create the Kingdom. Will we say He came too soon, with His insistence upon finding life by losing it? When He scathingly denounced the Pharisees, did He not refer to swearing by the sanctuary, the altar, the gift? Did He not talk of tithes of mint and anise and commin? Is there not danger that we, too, may forget the weightier matters of the law? We do well to remember that He said, "Woe to you, you irreligious Scribes and Pharisees!" Let us note that word irreligious and be sure that the idea of church does not become a tomb for the prophets.

Methodism is one, we say. What do we mean? Are we to mimic the upper room, to receive the bread and wine, to content ourselves with a form? Are we to stand a few moments later in the open court, denying Him thrice? Is it to be the form of Communion and the fact of denial? Is the denial to be found in the mental reservation, "He came too soon, this Christ. Men are not ready yet. Another hundred thousand years . . .?" Or is Methodism to be one in declaring, "Now is the accepted time"? Not "Now is the appointed time," but "Now is the accepted time." We Methodists, who have emphasized the place of decision in the Christian life, ought to be the very first to declare "Not in another hundred thousand years, but now." The church that nominally accepts Jesus, but virtually rejects Him, is no church.

Now Is the Time for Brotherhood

Now is the time to cease postponing the idea of brotherhood. Now is the time to take it and enthrone it. Let us not associate the idea of holy love with altar alone, but relate it to mill and mine and market. Let us take the idea of a Father of all mankind and translate that idea into instruments that make for a brotherly world. Let us have done once and for all with the atheism that lies in pagan statements bandied about by nominal Christians who declare, "Self-interest is the only sufficient motive to drive men to real achievement"; "moral right must bow to economic necessity"; "war is inevitable." Now is the accepted time. Christ did not come too soon. We came to Christ too late.

It was not the daughters of the Confederacy—no, it was the Daughters of the American Revolution—who refused Marian Anderson the right to sing in Constitution Hall. Let us forget that and turn rather to the expression of an Americanism worthy of the founders of this Republic—I refer to the concert given there upon the steps of the Lincoln Memorial Easter Sunday. I saw men and women of the South, distinguished leaders of this nation, among the great who had come to pay tribute to a voice. I saw them sitting there while she sang, "America," "My Country 'tis of Thee, Sweet Land of Liberty." And then we heard "Ave Maria—Hail Mary!" A black girl—Hail Mary, a Jewish girl. Send that message across the sea, and let them know One is our leader, even Christ.

In this Uniting Conference, may I not say the heavy economic burden carried by the South has been due in large measure to the economic privilege of the industrial North? We cannot have a protected industrial North and an unprotected agricultural South and talk of the United States of America and of brotherhood. I am trying to suggest without entering debatable territory at all that now is the accepted time. Let us realize that the dictatorships across the sea are to be destroyed finally by the rebellion of peoples, who see in another land a people who have used their political liberty to bring economic justice to every child of the nation. Let us not walk about in self-righteousness until we ourselves have revealed a love that cannot rest with millions underprivileged and thousands overprivileged. Let us be at our own tasks, our holy tasks. Let us have done with postponing Christ. Let us accept Him indeed.

Mobilizing Moral Might

If there has been a touch of bitterness in any word I have uttered, as I have referred indirectly to tyrannies across the sea, I am sorry. It was unintended. May we not behold in a suggestion that has come to us from David Lawrence a power that is yet to be used by those who accept Jesus. He calls upon us to consider the use of moral force as the world confronts the mobilization of physical force. "What would happen," asks Mr. Lawrence, "if our people, recognizing our own sinning, would nevertheless pause at noon each day to pray, honestly pray for the peoples who suffer tyranny, pray even for the tyrant, not that we tolerate his tyranny, but that he would save him from his sins. Then, in the act of prayer, we should call upon God to forgive us because, when we had the power and the privilege of cooperating with growing democracies, we put down upon these youthful democracies burdens grievous to be born. If in that prayer we could dedicate ourselves to the recordering of this world upon a just basis, what might happen?" I do not know but I do know that now is the time. Paul himself called upon us to make love a real thing.

Is Methodism to call out, "He came too soon, this Christ of peace. Men are not ready yet. Another hundred thousand years . . .?" I think not. I think we are going to say, "Now is the accepted time."

"Let us remember Jesus:
Who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor and dwelt among us.
Who was content to be subject to his parents, the child of a poor man's home.
Who lived for nearly thirty years the common life, earning his living with his own hands and declining to humble tasks.
Whom the common people heard gladly, for he understood their ways.
May this mind be in us that was in Jesus Christ.

"Let us remember Jesus:
Who was mighty in deed, healing the sick and the disordered, using for others the powers he would not invoke for himself.
Who refused to force men's allegiance.
Who was Master and Lord to his disciples, yet was among them as their companion and as one who served.
Whose meat was to do the will of the Father who sent him.
May this mind be in us that was in Jesus Christ.

"Let us remember Jesus:
Who loved men, yet retired from them to pray, rose a great while before day, watched through a night, stayed in the wilderness, went up into a mountain, sought a garden.
Who, when he would help a tempted disciple, prayed for him.
Who prayed for the forgiveness of those who rejected him, and for the perfecting of those who received him.
Who observed good customs, but defied conventions which did not serve the purposes of God.
Who hated sin because he knew the cost of pride and selfishness, of cruelty and impurity, to man, and still more to his Father in heaven.
May this mind be in us that was in Jesus Christ.

"Let us remember Jesus:
Who believed in men to the last and never despaired of them.
Who through all disappointment never lost heart.
Who disregarded his own comfort and convenience, and thought first of others' needs, and though he suffered long, was always kind.
Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, and when he suffered, threatened not.
Who humbled himself and carried obedience to the point of death, even death on the cross, and endured faithful to the end.
May this mind be in us that was in Jesus Christ.

"O CHRIST, our only Saviour, so come to dwell in us that we may go forth with the light of thy hope in our eyes, and with thy faith and love in our hearts. Amen."—The Daily Christian Advocate.

THE BIRTH OF METHODISM

Described by John Wesley in these words:

In 1729, two young men reading the Bible saw they could not be saved without holiness, followed after it, and incited others so to do. In 1737, they saw that holiness comes by faith. They saw likewise that men are justified before they are sanctified; but still holiness was their point. God then thrust them out, utterly against their will, to raise a holy people.

In the latter end of the year 1739, eight or ten persons came to me in London, who appeared to be deeply convinced of sin, and earnestly groaning for redemption. They desired (as did two or three more the next day) that I would spend some time with them in prayer, and advise them how to flee from the wrath to come, which they saw continually hanging over their heads.

That we might have more time for this great work I appointed a day when they might all come together, which, from thenceforth, they did every week, namely, on Thursday in the evening. To these, and as many more as desired to join them (for their number increased daily), I gave those advices from time to time, which I judged most needful to them, and we always concluded our meeting with prayer suited to their several necessities.

This was the rise of the United Society, first in London and then in other places. Such a society is no other than a company of men having the form and seeking the power of godliness, united in order to pray together, to receive the word of exhortation, and to watch over one another in love; that they may help each other to work out their own salvation.

In that same spirit 8,000,000 Methodists in one family now pledge themselves "to watch over one another in love." What hath God wrought—and how wonderfully!

This is a work of the Holy Spirit. Man has not the lips or the pen even to describe it, but in response to an official request, the writer undertakes to give glimpses of Methodist progress toward reunion.—Harry E. Woolever In Daily Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN USE OF MONEY

"The directions which God has given us, touching the use of our work substance, may be comprised in the following particulars. If you desire to be a faithful and a wise steward, out of that portion of your Lord's goods which He has for the present lodged in your hands, but with the right of resuming whenever it pleases Him, first, provide things needful for yourself, food to eat, raiment to put on, whatever nature moderately requires for preserving the body in health and strength. Secondly, provide these for your wife, your children, your servants, or any others who pertain to your household. If, when this is done, there be an overplus left, then 'do good to them that are of the household of faith.' If there be an overplus still, 'as you have opportunity, do good unto all men.' In so doing you give all you can; nay, in a sound sense, all you have: for all that is laid out in this manner is really given to God. You 'render unto God the things that are God's,' not only by what you give to the poor, but also by that which you expend in providing things needful for yourself and your household."—John Wesley: "Sermon on the Use of Money."

THE PRACTICE OF PRAYER

John Wesley cultivated the practice of prayer. He urged method in devotion. He described a Methodist as one to whom prayer was a habit. "Not that he is always in the house of prayer; though he neglects no opportunity of being there. Neither is he always on his knees, although he often is, or on his face before the Lord, his God. Nor is he always crying aloud to God, or calling upon Him in Words; for many times 'the Spirit maketh intercession for him with groans that cannot be uttered.' But at all times the language of his heart is this: 'Thou brightness of the eternal glory, unto Thee is my heart, though without voice, and my silence speaketh unto Thee.' And this is true prayer and this alone. His heart is ever lifted up to God, at all times and in all places. In retirement, or company, in leisure, business, conversation, his heart is ever with the Lord. He walks with God continually, having the loving eye of his mind still fixed upon Him."—John Wesley, "Works."

MEMORIAL SERVICES

Memorial services will be held for the Methodist Protestant ministers, whose bodies are buried in Pine Hill Cemetery, on June the 4th at 3:00 p. m. We invite ministers and their people of nearby churches to be with us on this occasion.

As far as the writer knows Brother T. A. Williams and Brother R. S. Troxler are the only two buried in the Burlington Cemetery. If there are others, the writer would appreciate that information.

FRED W. PASCHALL.

WITH THE POETS

Elizabeth Vera Idol

MICHAEL

By William Wordsworth

Michael, a pastoral idyll in blank verse, stands as one of the greatest poems of this type in all literature. The plot was suggested by two incidents from actual life: the disloyalty of the dissolute son of an old couple of whom the poet had heard; and the laborious erection of a stone sheepfold by an aged shepherd who had, many years before, owned the house at Townend, Grasmere, in which Wordsworth lived. And of course many objects long familiar to the poet's own eyes are woven in. The two incidents are brought together in a plain actualistic fashion, but develop into deeply imaginative fiction turning upon a single character creation, that of an aged shepherd, and the tragedy of his shattered hopes.

One critic has said: "It is truly Wordsworthian in its avoidance of literary devices and melodramatic straining after effect, yet the pathos is maintained by a nameless grace, the sincerity of the style, the patriarchial directness of manner, and the restraint and dignity with which the deep emotions involved are treated." It is like a story from the Bible.

The story begins by describing the steep mountain that rises from the tumultuous brook of Greenhead Ghyll, including, in true Wordsworthian fashion, the sights and sounds to be found among the hills. But the starting point of the poem is " . . . one object which you might pass by,

Might see and notice not. Beside the brook
Appears a straggling heap of unhewn stones!"

There dwelt here a shepherd, stout of heart, strong of body, and keen of mind, Michael by name, who had lived to his eightieth year here close to the heart of nature, seeing her every mood and learning the lessons she taught:

"Hence had he learned the meaning of all winds,"
". . . he had been alone
Amid the heart of many thousand mists."
"Those fields, those hills—what could they less?
had laid
Strong hold on his affections."

His helpmate was old, too though twenty years younger than he, and was as industrious and thrifty as her husband, so

"That they were as a proverb in the vale
For endless industry."

The son, Luke, born when Michael had begun to feel that he was old, was the center of all his father's thoughts and aims, and his constant companion.

"Exceeding was the love he bare to him,
His heart and his heart's joy!"

He had shared the mother's care of him in babyhood, and as he "put on boy's attire" he had taken him often with him to the hills to the "Clipping Tree," teaching him the tenderness necessary in caring for sheep. So the years went by until he ". . . carried in his cheek

Two steady roses that were five years old";

then he was ten; daily he went with his father and the familiar objects loved before became dearer because they were shared. At eighteen

"He was his comfort and his daily hope."

But the shadow of disaster crept near. Years before Michael had been bound in surety for his brother's son, and now, through a series of misfortunes Michael was called upon to pay the bond. It would take more than half his substance and the farm which he had looked forward to passing on to his son.

Finally he evolved a scheme. Luke should go to a distant prosperous kinsman and repair the loss. Dreams of other boys who had left the farm to become rich and famous won the mother's consent, and she set about the simple tasks of preparation for her son's departure.

The father's advice to his son and the laying of the cornerstone of the Sheepfold are told in unforgettable lines.

". . . Lay now the corner-stone,
As I requested; and hereafter, Luke,
When thou are gone away, should evil men
Be they companions, think of me, my son,
And of this moment; hither turn thy thoughts,
And God will strengthen thee."

For many months all was well; the son prospered; loving letters came home! and the Shepherd went about his work confident and cheerful, and when he could find time he took his way to the valley to work at the Sheepfold.

Thus far the story has progressed slowly and leisurely. Swiftly now the tragedy falls. In language comparable in dignity, simplicity, and restraint to the Biblical account of the Prodigal Son the story of Luke's fall is told:

". . . Meantime Luke began
To slacken in his duty; and at length
He in the dissolute city gave himself
To evil courses; ignominy and shame
Fell on him, so that he was driven at last
To seek a hiding place beyond the seas."

What of Michael?

"There is a comfort in the strength of love;
'Twill make a thing endurable, which else
Would overset the brain, or break the heart."

The old man lived on for year and carried on his tasks as always. But deep pity filled the hearts of all his fellow countrymen for his shattered hopes. And in lines that contain the very essence of poetry, the simplicity that evokes great imagination, Wordsworth shows the broken heart of Michael:

"... and 'tis believed by all
That many and many a day he thither went,
And never lifted up a single stone."

The story ends in the present as it began, but the tragedy lies between:

"... and the remains
Of the unfinished Sheepfold may be seen
Beside the boisterous brook of Greenhead Ghyll."

MODERN NICODEMUSES

By J. G. Butler

Nicodemus was a ruler of the Pharisees, so important a man that he dared not risk publicly meeting Jesus. He came to Him by night and said, "Master, thou are a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him."

Was Jesus flattered by Nicodemus' coming? Do we think to flatter Jesus in the same way, saying with our lips that Jesus is a teacher sent from God because of the miracles He has performed? But Jesus did not feel Himself flattered by the condescension of this man, who was ashamed to let it be known that he came to Jesus. Immediately the Master challenged him, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

We, like Nicodemus, come to Jesus attracted by physical miracles that may or may not have been performed. Jesus made such miracles secondary—He pushed them aside for the much greater miracle, the changed human heart.

It is ever thus. Camp-followers of the kingdom point to Jesus and say, "See the miracles that He wrought." But Jesus always soft-pedaled prestidigitation. He refused to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple; He refused to make stones bread. He was always saying, "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."

We do not know Nicodemus' verbal answer to Jesus' challenge. But we do know his real answer, for he fades out into the dark after that interview, never to be heard from again. We know he chose the cautious, conventional, and commonplace. He refused to change his mind. He refused to repent—even though the kingdom of God was at hand. He conformed to custom, and remained a ruler of the Pharisees to the end of his days.

Later on in Jesus' conversation, He tells Nicodemus: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell when it cometh, and whither it goeth." But it goes out over the world. And so is he that is born of the Spirit. There is no limit to the possibilities of a twice-born life. When the miracle of God's kingdom is worked in human hearts, a group of five thousand people may be taught by the example of a little boy sharing his barley loaves and fishes so that all might be fed. But all the hungry did not die two thousand years ago.

Let one person be on fire with the kingdom, let him see the limitless possibilities of God's will being done here on earth, and he can change a whole cesspool of corruption. In the long ago, Abraham bargained with God to save Sodom, if ten righteous men could be found, because he knew the power for righteousness of just one honest person. Today, Jesus Christ calls us to be born anew. He demands loyalty, not for a day, but eternally.

Christians have much to witness if they will save themselves and the world from sin and war. We literally must be born anew in our spirit and thought. In our discouragement and disillusionment, we say that this is a post-Munich world, we must deal with madmen, force is our only solution. We fervently hope that someone may shoot Hitler and Mussolini before it is too late. But we have always lived in a world of force. And while Hitler still lives, there is an old man living in Doorn who twenty-five years ago was thought to hold the key to our ills. We used force to unseat the Kaiser. We conquered Germany. We were victorious! We sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind. Why is it that we say the principles of Christ's kingdom, of love to enemies, and justice, and brotherhood, no longer obtain today? Do we expect anything different this time, if we "win" a war?

If we are to take Jesus Christ seriously, it means we must practice the precepts He gave us. His life is meaningless if we don't. You say the Sermon on the Mount is meant for the heavenly kingdom. But why? Are there any enemies to love in heaven? Are there any false prophets there? Shall we need to forgive seventy times seven there? Shall we have to go to the second mile there? Shall we be persecuted for righteousness' sake there? No. The teaching of Jesus Christ is meaningless unless we pray with our lives, "Thy kingdom done on earth, Thy will be done on earth."

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Shall we be born again?

NOTICE TO MINISTERS' WIVES

This is to remind you that it is not long until the Pastors' School at High Point College, and we hope to have a large attendance of both pastors and their wives for the entire week. This school begins Monday, June, 5th and closes Saturday, June 10th. Those of us that attended last year enjoyed both school and fellowship, and we trust the attendance will be larger this year. Make your plans to be there. On Wednesday, June 7th the Ministers' Wives Association will have a meeting beginning at 10:30. A program is being prepared. The morning program will be inspirational. After lunch a business session will be held. Those not being here for the week are requested to come for this meeting on June 7th.

MISSIONARY COLUMN

MRS. J. ELWOOD CARROLL, Editor
222 N. Edgeworth St.
Greensboro, N. C.

Since Methodists are "all one" now, I thought perhaps we would like to become familiar with the work of Methodist Missions, as a whole. The following article tells us a little about what is being done in Africa.—Editor.

THE METHODIST MISSION IN AFRICA

By W. G. CRAM

(From "The Church School" Magazine)

Africa is the second largest of the continents. It is the setting of an ancient civilization. Much of Bible history had its origin in Africa. Since the beginning of the modern missionary movement Africa has been the objective of the Protestant and Catholic churches of the world in the opening of missions, for the building of churches, and the preaching of the gospel. The efforts of all Christian missions have been rewarded with unprecedented success. Some of the great missions of the world are to be found in Africa.

In the heart of this continent lies the Belgian Congo. It is so called because it is the colony of Belgium. The Colonial Government is directed by a Governor General appointed by the King. This colony is one of the richest sections of Africa. It has within its borders the famous Congo River with its many tributaries which is one of the great water systems of the world. It is rich in copper, diamonds, tin, and precious metals. In many sections it is extremely fertile.

The inhabitants of the Congo number approximately 10 million and are of Bantu origin. They respond readily to the appeals and messages of the Christian gospel. Bishop Lambuth established in the Belgian Congo among the Batatela tribe in 1914 a mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was guided in the selection of this tribe and in the formulation of the policies and plans of the new enterprise by the leaders of the Southern Presbyterian mission which had been established in the Katanga-Kasai area south of the Batatela territory in 1890.

After an exploratory trip of 40 days, accompanied by J. W. Gilbert, a Negro who at the time was a professor in Paine College and a member of the Colored Methodist Church, Bishop Lambuth came upon the village of Wembo Nyama, the seat of Chief Wembo Nyama's area of supervision. After many "palavers" the missionaries who accompanied Bishop Lambuth were granted concessions, and they laid the foundation for the church and began building the institutions.

It has been 22 years since this enterprise was undertaken. A survey and review of the progress of the work and its success during that period furnishes one of the great stories of Christian missions to be found in the annals of Methodist missionary evangelism.

Among the first things done by the missionaries was that of mastering the strange and difficult language and then of inventing for it symbols that put the language in permanent form. With this knowledge of the language they have built an educational, healing, and evangelistic program that has borne fruit abundantly.

The Batatela are hardy despite the ravages of disease. They show remarkable endurance and manifest degrees of intelligence and leadership. The best estimate we can make of the population of the tribe is about 350,000. The men do the heavy work, such as clearing the forests and spading the ground, while the women care for the planted crops. Very little lameness and few deformities are noticeable among them. Tuberculosis is beginning to make deadly inroads upon the life of the people. Sleeping-sickness still persists, though the Belgian government sanitary agents are waging a strenuous warfare against it. Elephantiasis, malaria, mossy-foot, philaria, yaws, and tropical ulcers take a yearly toll that must be very great. It is estimated that at least two per cent of the people are lepers. That gives a total of 5,000 lepers in the whole tribe.

The missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have established their work in four stations: first, in Wembo Nyama, the one opened by Bishop Lambuth; later, at Minga and Tunda; and in 1935 at Lodja. Minga is the first station one reaches on coming from Lusambo, the capital of the province. Wembo Nyama is in the south central portion of the tribe. Tunda is across the Lomami River near the Cape-to-Cairo railroad and in the territoyr where two languages are spoken, the Otelela and the Kingwana. Lodja is located in the northern part of the tribe. This is the city in which Bishop Lambuth wished to establish work on the opening of the mission in 1914. Because of dense forests and marshes and roadways through swamps, this plan of Bishop Lambuth's had to wait until the summer of 1935.

At each of these stations a definite and consistent plan of missionary objectives has been carried out successfully. The lands on which these stations are built were given to the mission by concession from the Colonial government. Each station has its residences for missionaries, its boys' schools, and its dormitory for the girls, called "the fence," hospital, church, and industrial plant. At Minga and Tunda there are separate colonies for the treatment and care of the lepers located a few kilometers from the main station.

In the prosecution of their work the missionaries have not been content to copy plans and methods of other missions. On their own account they have done some genuine pioneering which has stood the test of usefulness and adaptability. In fact, they were the first to provide specific treatment for the lepers. The work of our missionaries has been regarded by the Colonial government as the pioneer in this field.

In 1936 a leper colony was opened in Tunda through the support of the Colonial government and the American Mission to the Lepers. Already over 300 patients have been colonized in this center.

Another pioneering movement on the part of the missionaries was the establishment of "nurseries" in connection with the hospitals. This came about through the effort of missionaries to save motherless babies who were left to die because no African mother would care for a child who was not her own. By the trial-and-error method the missionaries finally hit upon the plan of the "nursery" in connection with the hospital. After the "nurseries" were established the problem of feeding many of these babies arose. As a result of the study of this problem the famous peanut milk formula was discovered, and by the use of it babies about to die were made to live. This is one of the prize achievements of our missionaries; it is being widely adopted by other missions having work in the Congo.

During the period that the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have been in the Congo the language of the people has been studied and the results have been carefully tabulated. An Otelela-English dictionary has practically been completed. Also the missionaries have worked on the translation of the Bible. The Old Testament has not yet been completed, but the New Testament has been finished, and has just come from the presses of the American Bible Society. It will soon be distributed widely among this tribe.

Church-school literature is printed quarterly in the mission printing press located at Wembo Nyama, as is also a quarterly paper. A hymnal and study books for the schools are printed and published from the same press. In Wembo Nyama there is a Bible training school in which the preachers of the region are given a chance to take study courses in the Bible and other related subjects, fitting them for the work of evangelization and the care of the churches. There is also a normal school at Wembo Nyama which follows government regulations and provides standard curricula.

The work of the missionaries is not confined to the stations only. The missionaries, men and women, form itinerating parties and make trips to the surrounding villages where they build churches and establish schools and win many converts to Christ.

In the northern part of the tribe the evangelistic work has been unusually effective during the past four years where many new churches have been opened with larger groups of believers who have genuinely espoused the Christian religion. On the whole this mission in Africa is most fruitful and is big with the possibilities of an enlarged movement for the revival and salvation of the people.

ATTENTION—SECRETARIES OF BENEVOLENCES

Dear Secretary:

Your auxiliary has now for your benevolent work, its first call to service since the Branch meeting: that is to rally to the plans for the Children's Home Day on June 22. Dr. Dixon has told us of this in previous articles in the Herald.

You have been of assistance in every appeal previously made, and we do greatly appreciate your loyalty. We know you will do your best now.

Only a month off and we meet at the Children's Home for the annual anniversary occasion. We are hoping for a record-breaking crowd, and the best offering ever. Last year our Graham ladies brought the largest gift. They had a lovely plan which made them over $82. How about writing them for their plan?

We are hereby asking every Secretary of Benevolences of each auxiliary of the Branch to begin now to collect the birthday gifts from each member of your church, Sunday school, and auxiliary. We suggest a "Birthday Book, From ——— Church." Get each person's name for the book who contributes, and present it to Dr. Dixon with the cash offerings. Dr. Dixon is offering a picture of the present Children's Home family to one in each of four groups of churches whose book shows the largest amount in that particular group. See his article in the Herald for May 25th (this issue).

June 22nd will soon be here, so let's work fast. Everybody plan to be there. It will be a great day. A splendid program is being arranged. Of course you will fill your big basket with good things for the picnic dinner, as usual.

May we be very much in earnest about getting the signatures and offerings from all the membership. Urge your people to be there to visit with the children and have a big day.

MRS. J. M. STONE,
Secretary of Benevolences,
N. C. Branch.

CHILDREN'S HOME DAY JUNE 22

Our Dear Friends:

Children's Home Day is coming within a month. Please begin planning for it at once. We are writing committees where they have been appointed. But in other local churches we are asking Children's Home Secretaries, Sunday school superintendents, and pastors to act as our committee, or to appoint a committee at once, with the Children's Home Secretary as chairman. Please arrange for those to serve who are vitally interested in the Home.

The time is short, and quick work must be done if the Home is to receive a good offering for June 22.

1. Work up a good interest and get at least one automobile load of people to come from your church to the Home for that day. Bishop Clare Purcell and Bishop James H. Straughn have both promised to be present and speak that day, so we are anxious for our people to be here in large numbers.

2. Work the suggested plan in your church and Sunday school so that all your people will have a chance to contribute. Set a worthy goal and keep working until you reach that goal.

3. Buy a small notebook, as suggested in the plan, and jot down the names of all contributors. We shall be glad to keep the little books in our files. Try to get each one to give as much as one penny for each year of his age. If one does not care to tell his age, then $1.00 will excuse him. We shall be glad for large gifts, but we are asking for a large number of small gifts.

4. Publish the meeting well in all the communities you serve, and help us to get a large attendance of Methodists and their friends present.

5. The program will be given in the gymnasium at High Point College, beginning at 10 o'clock a.m., June 22, and the picnic dinner will be served in the grove at the Children's Home at about 12:30 noon. No program in the afternoon.

6. We have a splendid picture of the entire Children's Home family, which was made in May, 1939, and we will gladly present one of these pictures to the chairman of the committee in each of four groups of churches as follows:

1. The church with over 200 members which raises the largest amount.
2. The church with a membership between 100 and 200 which raises the largest amount.
3. The church with a membership between 50 and 100 which raises the largest amount.
4. The church with fewer than 50 members which raises the largest amount.

We will place tables in the grove for the picnic dinner, and look to you as usual to supply the food. We shall be looking for you in goodly numbers.

Yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

OUR PLAN FOR CHILDREN'S HOME DAY OFFERING

For June 22, 1939

Some simple plan closely followed always brings better results than no plan at all. So follow this plan as closely as you can, or present a better one to your people:

1. Hold a meeting in your church at some convenient hour in the interest of your Children's Home, and get some one who is familiar with the work of the Home to make a short address, a young people's program, or an ice cream supper.
2. Have your committee purchase a small notebook in which to record the names of all those who contribute. Let the committee, with as many helpers as they may select, canvass the entire membership and get an offering of as much as a penny per year for the years of his or her life; or $1.00 instead.
3. Be sure to keep a record of all contributors. If one does not desire the name used, then just write "A Friend." These little notebooks with the names of contributors will be kept in our files.
4. Without a good birthday offering and good regular monthly offerings from now until conference meets, we will be left in debt for current expenses when we merge into Methodist Union at the approaching annual conference. So please help to avoid that.
5. Get your offerings together in good time to get them into a check, or at least into one envelope, carefully marked, and put it into our Joash Chest upon your arrival.

We, with our 118 children, are depending upon you. We thank you for your cooperation.

A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

THE VALUE OF SYMPATHY

Ask God to increase your powers of sympathy: to give you more quickness and depth of sympathy in little things as well as great. Opportunities of doing a kindness are often lost from mere want of thought. Half a dozen lines of kindness may bring sunshine into the whole day of some sick person. Think of the pleasure you might give to some one who is much shut up and who has fewer pleasures than you have by sharing with her some little comfort or enjoyment that you have learned to look upon as a necessary of life—the pleasure drive, the new book, flowers from the country, and so forth. Try to put yourself in another's place. Ask, "What should I like myself if I were hard worked, or sick, or lonely?" Cultivate the habit of sympathy.—Maritime Baptist.

Children's Home Day June 22

Plans for Children's Home Day and Home Coming Day are working out well. We have the promise that both Bishop Clare Purcell and Bishop James H. Straughn will be present and make addresses. And Dr. G. I. Humphreys, president of High Point College has granted us the use of the college gymnasium for the program.

June 22nd is the day, and the program will begin in the college gymnasium at 10:00 o'clock a. m. We will place tables on the campus at the Children's Home for a picnic dinner at 12:30 and will look to you to bring baskets of food for the dinner. We hope for a great gathering of Methodists that day. Be sure to plan to come, and get your friends to come.

Glen Raven Charge, Rev. Joseph Coble, Pastor.—The union evangelistic services of the Haw River Methodist churches began Wednesday, May 24, and will continue until June 4. A special memorial service and home-coming day will be observed Sunday, May 28, with services at 11 o'clock. Memorial service will be held at 2 o'clock, conducted by the young people; services at 7:30 will be conducted by Rev. Fred W. Paschall. Everyone is expected to come and bring lunch and observe memorial and home-coming day at Haw River, May 28. The two Methodist churches are holding their meeting together at the M. P. church, with Dr. Fred Paschall of Burlington conducting the services. The two churches from May 22 to June 2 are conducting a Bible school each morning. Almost 100 scholars have been enrolled. This meeting is being held at the M. E. church, South.

The Glen Raven church will entertain the Alamance County Christian Endeavor Union Friday evening. They have been quite busy preparing a program and refreshments for this occasion. A large crowd is expected to attend this quarterly event.

Fairview church presented an excellent Mother's Day program directed by Miss Arlene Loy. The Woman's Auxiliary has been making plans to paint the church.

Worthville Church, Rev. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.—There were 102 at Sunday school yesterday although there could and should have been many more. It just seems some people try to get along without attending church. We only wish they had heard each one of Mr. Isley's sermons. .

Our revival began on Friday night, the 12th, and closed the 19th, with Rev. C. G. Isley doing the preaching. We had a good meeting with four conversions. We regret that all of the people in our village could not hear the wonderful sermons he brouht and that some are still unsaved. We hope Mr. Isley comes back again

We were indeed glad to have several of the members of Mt. Lebanon attend the revival and appreciate the special singing they did.

Mrs. Lizzie Fields moved her membership from Bonlee Church back to Worthville, her home church when a young girl. We welcome her. She is one of our best co-workers in the church.

Orange Charge, May 22.—It was a pleasure for this pastor to follow the proceedings of the Uniting Conference through the medium of the Daily Christian Advocate. I am sure we have all been inspired by this great accomplishment in Christian unity, and that we shall go forth to labor in the Methodist Church with new zeal and enthusiasm.

We were all very pleasntly surprised Sunday to have with us at Efland Rev. and Mrs. B. M. Williams and son, Currie, of Wendell. Mr. Williams served as pastor of this charge for 13 years, and he and his family are held in the highest esteem by all the people. They will always find a warm welcome at this parsonage and at all the churches and homes on the charge. We hope that they can come back soon and visit the other churches and other homes.

Some improvements have been made recently at the parsonage. Through a cooperative arrangement a pump has been installed to supply water for the parsonage, and Mr. Clyde Pratt's home which is being built on the adjoining lot. Likewise, through a co-operative arrangement with Mr. Pratt and Mr. Aubrey Graham, a sewer system has been installed to serve the three homes . The ladies' auxiliaries of Efland and Hebron are financing a hot water system which has also been installed. A complete set of fixtures has been placed in the bathroom and a drain-board sink in the kitchen. All the churches are participating in financing the project. Pledges and contributions covering most of the cost have already been made.

At this point we would like to acknowledge with grateful appreciation those who have helped to make these improvements possible; Mr. Claude A. Bivins for supervising the project, giving his time, money, materials, and driving his car about considerably looking after the details; Mr. Dudley Thompson for directing part of the work; Mr. Herbert Riley for doing the plumbing; Mr. James Cutchfield for free labor; and all those who made a contribution or assisted in any way. The pastor and his wife are thoroughly enjoying these conveniences, and they will serve the pastors of this charge for years and years to come.

We are at the beginning of the season of special days and big dinners. Union Grove leads off the first Sunday in June with a Children's Day service at 11 o'clock and a memorial and home-coming service in the afternoon. Rev. Roland Stubbins, a former pastor and a former member, will be the afternoon speaker. The second Sunday in June will be Children's Day at Chestnut Ridge, with dinner on the grounds. The fourth Sunday in June will be Children's Day, memorial day, and home-coming at Hebron. As a special feature of the program there will be a memorial service for the deceased M. P. ministers, W. C. Kennett and W. D. Fogleman. Speakers will be announced later. The second Sunday in July will be memorial day and home-coming at Chestnut Ridge. Dr. J. D. Williams will be one of the speakers, and the other will be announced later. All former pastors, members and friends are invited to attend these special occasions.

Our revival season and Vacation Church schools get underway begining the second Sunday night in June. At that time Rev. T. J. Whitehead of Henderson First church will begin a revival with us at Efland. There will be services each evening at 8 o'clock for a period of ten days or two weeks. Mr. Whitehead will also direct a Vacation Church school each morning for the period of the Shiloh, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—Our memorial service was observed Sunday, May 14, at the morning service. Our pastor preached a good sermon, after which the congregation met at the cemetery, where a hymn, "Meet Me There," was sung by the choir, and a few remarks by Rev. T. F. McCulloch, followed by a prayer. Dinner was served picnic style on the grounds. At the afternoon services some interesting remarks were made by Rev. T. F. McCulloch and Rev. W. F. Ashburn, and a very interesting and inspiring message on Mother's Day by Rev. J. W. Braxton. At the close of the services, relatives and friends and ministers present met at the graveside of Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, former minister, where a brief burial service was held. Rev. T. F. McCulloch and Rev. W. F. Ashburn spoke of their acquaintance with Rev. Mr. Ledbetter. Three songs by the choir, a few remarks by the pastor, followed by prayer.

MRS. EUGENE BROWN, Reporter.

First Methodist Church, High Point.—This is our first report since our name has been changed. As real Methodists now, I feel this report would be of little value if it were not devoted to the meeting held in our city Sunday night when all of the Methodists of High Point joined together for a union meeting to celebrate the union of all Methodist churches in the nation.

Several pages of The Enterprise, the High Point daily paper, were devoted to the program, the ministers, and the organizations around High Point that had become a part of Methodism.

Dr. E. H. Blackard, pastor of Wesley Memorial Methodist church, presided. Music was rendered by the combined choirs of the churches and the A Cappella choir of High Point College. Dr. G. I. Humphreys delivered the statement of union, and Dr. L. B. Haynes, district superintendent, led the declaration of allegiance to the Methodist Church. Other ministers taking part were Rev. J. Clay Madison, of the First church, and Rev. N. C. Williams, of Main Street church.

The principal address was delivered by Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, dean of Drew Theological Seminary in New Jersey. He held the large congregation spellbound as he discussed the great merge that has so recently taken place.

The sponsors of the program were the following Methodist and former Methodist Protestant churches: Archdale, Calvary, First, Highland, Lebanon, Main Street, Oak View, Mount Vernon, Rankin Memorial, Trinity, Ward Street, Welch Memorial, and Wesley Memorial. The Negro Methodist churches participated in their own churches by means of radio, joining in the responsive readings and pledge of allegiance.

The service made a lasting impression upon all those who attended and we agree with the Enterprise when it said it was one of the most significant meetings of its kind ever held in High Point.

MRS. ROBERT DAVIS, Reporter.

Vickery Church, Guilford Charge, Rev. Joel B. Trodon, Pastor.—Although we have failed to report, we have been busy. Recently, the Woman's Auxiliary painted the new benches and also the floor of our church. We have bought a new piano for the church.

Last Sunday night, the Christian Endeavor society gave a special Mother's Day program to a large audience. There was special music by the Vickery girls' quartet, Nannie Blanche and Emily Kirkman, and a duet by Lois and Fleta Mae Hohn. The program was good and enjoyed by everyone.

I am proud to say that our Sunday school is growing. We are taking in new members. We have had 150 and over for several Sundays. Our pastor is preaching good sermons and they are enjoyed by all.

Our Children's Day will be the second Sunday in June. We are looking forward to a good time.

FLETA MAE HOHN, Reporter.

Community Church, Thomasville.—It was a great experience, not soon to be forgotten, having had the pleasure of attending the Uniting Conference at Kansas City. No one, I hardly think, could have attended without sharing the feeling, which apparently was in the hearts of all present, that a new day had come for Methodism in America. My sincere hope and prayer is that we will not have any occasion to reverse this feeling. That your prayer and my prayer shared greatly in the spirit of the conference is our high privilege to believe. God bless the new Methodist Church, and help every former M. P. to arise to the challenge which is placed on our doorstep.

I could not have shared in this great conference had it not been for the magnanimity of our people here at Community in financing the trip for me. They have been most gracious to me and in return they deserve the very best service I can render.

Rev. J. T. Bowman, pastor of First church, preached for me in my absence, for which I am very grateful. The people reported a splendid message and a good service.

We are planning for Children's Day service, and Mesdames C. R. Reed, E. C. Brandon, Joe Boyles, Jr., Thos. L. Einstein, and J. Clyde Auman have been placed on a committee to prepare the program.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Crutchfield, a daughter, Imogene Gay Crutchfield. Congratulations and a long and helpful life for little Imogene Gay.

As Mrs. Einstein reported last week, Community raised all of her World Service apportionment and also the delegates' expense. Now we hope to get behind the annual conference budget. We must not cripple the work of our annual conference in this the closing year of our history.

J. CLYDE AUMAN.

Mt. Zion Church, Pinnacle-Mt. Zion Charge, Rev. J. D. Morris, Pastor.—We are realizing it is spring, due to the beautiful weather; it makes us eager to make ourselves useful and try to prove our love to God in some way for His great mercy.

The annual home-coming and memorial day was observed at our church Sunday. There were many there who were glad to greet the warm handshakes. The program for the day was: Sunday school at 10 o'clock, preaching at 11 o'clock. Dinner was served on the grounds in picnic style. During the evening there were duets by the Wall sisters of Greensboro and the Ashburn children of Pilot church. The Scott sisters of Yadkin, Carolina Rangers of Pilot church, and Calavary of Mt. Airy, sang some very beautiful quartets for the evening. The church was greatly overfilled for the afternoon. We are hoping for another day of joy like this next year.

Everyone was glad to have back with us

"WESTWARD HO!" BUT NOT FOR GOLD

The few hours spent in Kansas City were profitable to our company. We got in to the lower floor the night we were there, for there were many seats vacant, as quite a number of delegates were out and that gave us an opportunity to see the workings from the delegates point of view. Of course next morning we had to take a seat in the gallery, and but for the people we would have thought of the great building as we had thought of the deserts we had passed over, because of its vastness.

We had the privilege of hearing Dr. John W. Hawley in a masterful missionary address, and Bishop Broomfield, in the morning devotions. I shall not undertake to speak of this great gathering further more than to say that I was very much impressed with the conciliatory spirit that prevailed. No one seemed to want to take advantage of another. That to my mind means real union. It has been interesting to me to read the accounts coming from so many sources.

We stopped in St. Louis long enough to say that we had been there. A great city. A speedy trip through part of Illinois and Indiana brought us into Louisville in time to strike the great throngs that were leaving the derby that was held there on Saturday. The roads, the camps, boarding houses, hotels, everything was crowded to the limit. We passed on through, and it was ten o'clock before we found a place to sleep. Several miles this side of the city. Not what we had been accustomed to having, but it was a place not only to sleep, but to get off the highway where so many reckless drivers were showing their foolhardiness in the way they were driving. I wondered if after they got their strong drink if they did not imagine they were on the race track.

Another question that came up in my mind: Would there be seventy-five or a hundred thousand attending these races if the gambling element were taken out of it. Like many other things we have in our country today in the name of sport. Take the betting out of it and there would be many who would never go about these places. I have always been in doubt as to the respectability of a thing where the gamblers seem to have the right of way.

Our being put out of a place to stay on Saturday night enabled us to get to Pine Ridge for most of the morning service. We were so cordially received and given lunch by Superintendent Theison, and rested over the remainder of the day, talked for the Christian Endeavor Society in their evening service.

Early Monday morning found us on the home stretch. It was a mountainous way into Asheville as we had these kind of roads in Kentucky, Tennessee, and the great mountains of our own good state. A detour at Marshall put us into the night getting home. But my! how good it seemed to be home again. Our people were unaware of our being back for a few days. But when they found we were here the calls began to come in. Words of welcome, and greetings on every hand, made us feel so much more at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Koontz left us Tuesday morning for their home in Lexington, and I am sure they are both enriched by this experience, for while we did not stay our time out by about four days, for we all got anxious to get home, and we lost no time coming this way, when we "got the prow of our vessel turned toward home."

Great sights we saw, every mile of the way was interesting, and anyone making this trip will have a greater appreciation of our country, but I am sure that anyone from North Carolina will not find anything better than he has at home. Higher mountains, but not as pretty as ours, bigger cities, but I am persuaded to believe, not as good as our little towns, and while we do not grow the citrus fruits, our diversity of crops makes ours more desirable. So you may see that while we went west, it was not for gold, but a richer experience for our work than if we had been digging for that for which many gave their lives. So many interesting stories there about this. I may in some future article give some impressions of the lessons given us. Thank you for reading these rambling notes.

DISTRICT MEETING

All the Missionary Auxiliaries in the Second District held an all-day meeting at Mt. Carmel Church on Granville Charge Thursday, May 18. The chairman, Mrs. T. P. Hester, presiding. The morning sessions opened with the hymn "O Zion Haste." The devotionals were conducted by Rev. J. P. Pegg. Prayer by Rev. J. T. Whitehead. Mrs. J. P. Pegg extended a most cordial welcome to the visitors. The response was given by Miss Emily Lloyd of Union Chapel. Mrs. Tompkins and Mrs. Hight of the Henderson church sang a duet. The roll call and attendance count taken with the followiwng members from the different Auxiliaries present, Spring Valley 2, Flat Rock 7, Henderson 9, Rehobeth 3, Gillburg 12, Union Chapel 4, Mt. Carmel 8. Reports were given and all the Auxiliaries gave splendid reports. The chairman, Mrs. Hester, read a card from Mrs. Bates stating that $500 of Mr. Minnis' salary is still unaportioned and ask that some action be taken in regard to same.

A nominating committee composed of Mrs. E. F. Smith, Mrs. Clyde Finch, and Mrs. Arthur Faulkner were named to select district officers before the next district meeting. Mr. Cranford gave a splendid talk on "Home Missions." He said the time to begin missionary work was while the lullabies were being sung to the babies in the cradle. Following Mr. Cranford's talk Mr. Pegg dismissed for the lunch hour with prayer Lunch was served picnic style.

The afternoon session was opened with the hymn "The Morning Light Is Breaking." Mr. Whitehead had charge of the devotionals using the 13th Chapter of 1st Corinthians. The duties of the secretary of Christian Education was told by Mrs. Clyde Finch in a very pleasing manner. A solo by Miss Sarah Pegg. The highlight of the day was the address by Rev. Harold Schaley of Wake Forest College a missionary from Brazil, S. A.

Mr. Schaley has been in the United States for the past four and a half years. He is planning to return to his native Brazil in November, 1939. He is a wonderful speaker. After hearing him talk you can not help but feel that we should appreciate our wonderful religious opportunities we have here in the United States. He told of the many diseases in Brazil, and of the hardships that he had had to endure that he might worship God. He is truly a man of God. I wish it were possible for everyone to hear his wonderful message of God's love that he brings. Following Mr. Schaley's address the meeting adjourned to meet again next spring, the place and time to be decided later. The benediction was pronounced by Mr. Schaley.

MRS. W. O. ELLIS, Secretary.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

James William Hopkins

Mr. James William Hopkins was born September 18, 1859, and departed this life after several days' illness, February 28, 1939.

While still a young man Mr. Hopkins united with the Fairgrove M. P. church. Later in life, when the Brown Summit M. P. church was organized, he transferred his membership to this church, and was a loyal Christian member of the Brown Summit M. P. church at the time of his death.

While Mr. Hopkins was still a young man he was united in marriage with Miss Lula Roach, who preceded him in death. However, to this first union were born five sons. Three of these sons, Mr. Arthur Hopkins, Mr. Ernest Hopkins, and Mr. Davie Hopkins, preceded their father in death. Two of the sons, Mr. Clarence Hopkins of Brown Summit, and Dr. J. W. Hopkins of Knoxville, Tenn., survive.

Mr. James William Hopkins was united in marriage the second time with Miss Ellen Moore, who also preceded him in death.

An August 24, 1927, Mr. Hopkins was again united in marriage with Miss Ida Moore, who along with five grandchildren mourn the loss of a faithful husband and grandfather.

It can truly be said of this true father, loyal citizen, faithful Christian, that the family, the nation, and the church have lost a very devoted member.

E. PAUL HAMILTON.

The Glory of the Commonplace

By Rev. C. F. Banning, D.D.

Out in Estes Park, Colorado, there lies a great giant of the forest, dead. Naturalists tell us that this tree was over five hundred years old when it died. When Christopher Columbus landed at San Salvador it was already a full grown tree. Five hundred winters piled their snows about its roots; five hundred summers spent their heat and storms upon it. Eleven times it was struck by lightning and each time it covered over the scar. Three times there were land slides, but each time the old tree dug its roots deeper and held its place. Five hundred years the old tree defied nature, laughing at the storms, the wind, the lightning, the cold and the heat, but now it is dead. What brought about its death? A tiny beetle, that a child could crush between its thumb and finger, slipped under the bark and quietly began to work. So it did what the forces of nature were unable to accomplish.

This is typical of life. It is not the great forces, the great opportunities, the great institutions that are the most important. We in America think that unless a man is wealthy, he is not important. We think that unless an organization has a tremendous membership it cannot be strong. We think that unless people can have their pictures on the front page of the paper they are not exerting a strong influence.

We need to remember the importance of the common-place. Think with me of the bigness of little things; of the weight of trifles; of the "glory of the common-place."

Sam Walter Foss, the poet, was walking down a country road one hot summer day. Near the foot of a hill under the shade of a tree he found a bench. As he sat down to rest he noticed a sign nearby directing him to a spring. Following the direction of the sign, he found the spring with a glass nearby where a traveller might refresh himself. In the shade, beside the spring, there was another bench and beside it a basket of fruit. Upon inquiry he discovered that an old man lived near the roadside and kept these two benches in repair, kept the spring cleaned out and the baskets full of fruit in season.

Sitting on one of these benches Sam Walter Foss wrote the poem that is known around the world, "The House By the Side of the Road."

I do not know whether the old man was rich or poor, educated or ignorant, Protestant or Catholic, but I know something about his character. Anyone who is faithful about such little things as this, who is thoughtful and unselfish enough to want to help the weary traveller along his way, is a man whom you could trust with the big things of life. One who is faithful in the common-place things of life cannot fail in the larger opportunities as they come to him. It is always true that character is made and character is revealed by our loyalty in the common-place things. It is thus that the common-place comes into its glory.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

No Word Yet Concerning Finishing Up Conference

Up to the present time I have had no word from Bishop Straughn concerning the Finishing Up Conference which he has been appointed to hold in North Carolina. Inasmuch as the Bishops fix the time for conferences we shall have to wait for the official word from Bishop Straughn. My opinion is that our Standing District Committee will still have the authority to fix the place for this conference, however, I am asking Bishop Straughn to rule on that point. So, brethren, just be patient until further notice.

Election of Delegate Deferred

When I wrote two weeks ago that we would elect our delegates to conference in the usual way I did not have before me the legislation passed in the Uniting Conference in regard to the election of delegates. Later the issue of the Daily Christian Advocate containing this matter reached me through the mails—the last issue was mailed to each delegate—and after studying this I am inclined to think that we had better wait until we have an official interpretation of this legislation before we vote for delegates.

Be Not Hasty In Merging Churches

Information has reached me of proposed mergers of local churches in so many communities this fall that I am issuing this word of caution. While the merging of some churches will be necessary yet it will be adding to the problem of the stationing authorities to merge any large number of churches immediately. For the past several years we have had difficulty in finding places for all of our men. I understand that the other two denominations have had similar difficulties. Whenever two churches merge that means an extra man unless in some way the merged church can find a place for both of the former pastors. I suggest that this matter be submitted to the officials of the conferences involved before the matter is carried too far, for it would be most unfortunate for the new conferences not to be able to place all of the men. This matter can wait in most of the communities for a year or two or perhaps longer.

No Churches Visited During the Past Week End

A stay of several days in the Guilford General Hospital in High Point last week made it unwise for me to try to visit any of our churches during the past weekend. It also made it necessary for me to miss the District Conference at Asheboro on Monday and all of the High Point College commencement exercises except that of Monday morning. While these things are regretable yet we do not always have the power to stave off sickness. But even a hospital experience is not without some compensations. The uniform kindness shown the patient, the skill with which certain things are done by those who have been trained in the art of making people comfortable have some value at least. And the application of the hyperdermic needle gives comparative calm to the patient while the experts are searching for the cause of the disorders. One who stops and thinks for a moment is bound to be thankful for medical skill and for the modern hospital. If these things were taken away from us then life would be much poorer.

Rev. D. R. Williams Ill

On Saturday of last week information came to me that Rev. D. R. Williams of Enfield was ill again and that he was being taken to Watts Hospital in Durham, N. C., for treatment. This new illness comes to those of us who had been hoping that Brother Williams might finish out this year without further hindrance as a great disappointment. I trust that he may soon get relief and be able to finish the year which is his thirtieth year in the ministry. Rev. W. L. Loy, the pastor of the former M. E. Church South in Enfield has written me offering to take over Brother Williams' work for as long a period as necessary and to allow the salary to continue to go to Brother Williams. I consider this a very fine spirit on the part of Brother Loy and I greatly appreciate it. I have communicated with the church in Enfield in regard to the desirability of this plan.

Preliminary Meeting To Be Held Next Week

I have been asked by Bishop Clare Purcell to be in a meeting at Duke University on Thursday of next week of himself and the District Superintendents of the Western North Carolina Conference in a preliminary survey of the problems before us in setting up the new conference. It is evident to all of us who have thought about it that there is much to be done along this line. But where there is a willing mind the problems are always easier and I am sure that in this case we shall be able to work out our common problem to the satisfaction of all. For the past few weeks I cannot answer now in regard to the procedure for the next few months. I shall be glad to pass on any information which I may receive from time to time but of course I cannot pass on to others information which I do not yet have. But I am expecting things to move rather swiftly from now on so that all may be in readiness for the new conference.

Pastors' Reports

Quite a large percentage of the pastors have returned the report blanks which I sent out a couple of weeks ago. While I have not been able yet to assemble the information in such a way as to arrive at definite conclusions yet it is apparent that much remains to be done before we are ready to go into the new conference. While most of the churches have made a good showing on World Service yet the larger number are far behind with the assessment for High Point College and the various other Annual Conference interests. While I realize the difficulty in carrying on more than one special at a time yet I do beseech everyone to be busy during the next few weeks. The college assessment must be raised in order for this institution to be able to meet its obligations in a manner satisfactory. The Annual Conference also has obligations which it must meet.

A Message In Verse

We are tired and weary, and worn and sad,
Let us go hand in hand,
Back to the glistening holy town
In an ancient holy land.

Under the high winter stars
The old path still is bright,
So many have wandered and missed the way,
Let us go back tonight.

They have laughed at faith that was clean and strong,
God help us lest that faith grow dim.
Oh, let us go back the old lost road
Let us go back to Him.

The Sermon of the Daily Life

Some one said "If you sift religion down to its essence you will find that its chief purpose is to help men to know real life and to live it satisfactorily to themselves, to God and to their fellowman." We presume there are few Christian people, who will disagree with that statement. While much has been said about the creed of the Christian, the importance of right belief, it is also admitted that living the right sort of life is likewise important. Faith without works is a very poor emphasis on the Christian way of life.

The church, the home, the shop, the community life, affords laboratories in which the Christian can try out the values of his faith. If it works well in all these situations, it must be worth keeping. But if our faith cannot stand the testing it necessarily receives in the home, the shop and the social contacts in daily living, it would as well be discarded and a new faith found. The ascetic feared to test and preferred his salvation by daily contact with the worldly affairs about him; he found a cloister where he could live alone and prove his profession in the absence of the rest of the world. But Jesus was not an ascetic. He never hesitated to contact people because they were not so good. His enemies said, "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them." We sometimes wonder if too much of modern Christianity is not ascetic; lives to itself and lets the world go by. We often emphasize the words of the prophet "come ye out from among them and be ye separate," and forget that Jesus really enjoyed going about among people daily, none of whom could approach Him in the goodness of their deeds or even in their intentions. It was by such a manner of life that Jesus made salvation known and effective with those who never in all their lives had possibly given much thought to God or to the manner of living a good life.

Facing a Great Opportunity

The other day a member of the former M. E. Church South said, "the Methodist Protestants got more out of the Methodist merger than either of the other participating denominations." Without debating that statement, let me say that if it is true as was said, then there has come to the members of the former M. P. Church the greatest opportunity for real service they have ever faced. The opportunity of entering into this larger fellowship, so many times larger than they formerly shared, will certainly be fruitful of great joy and spiritual exaltation. To be able to enter into the many fields of service which were opened to us by the Uniting Conference should make the consciousness that the world is our parish grow daily in our appreciation. What has come to us is difficult to describe and may require much time for us to fully realize. But we are not altogether insensible to their values. And we do know that everything which has come to us as a blessing from the Uniting Conference has brought to us responsibilities to which we heretofore may have been total strangers. And because these have now entered into our lives we can no longer live detached from any one of them.

To have a knowledge of the wide areas where the Methodist missionary daily witnesses for Christ can but warm our hearts and open our purses to Christian missions as never before. To know something of the scores of schools and colleges where the youth from Methodist homes receive their training for life service surely must make us more education-minded. But what shall we say of the hundreds of hospitals not only in our own land but in many lands, which invite the sick to seek health under their roofs; and many orphanages where the homeless may find shelter, love, protection and fitting for useful careers? Shall not all these by the story of their need make us more eager to send our gifts to them so that we too may share in their wonderful service? Yes, we former members of the Methodist Protestant Church face a wonderful opportunity for larger Christian service in the Methodist Church and let us also feel the larger responsibility which we must now share with all who would keep the Methodist Church going strong on all its fronts.

New Features Presented In The Methodist Church

The Jurisdictional Conference; there are six of them in the Methodist Church. Delegates to these conferences are chosen on the basis of one for every thirty ministers in the Annual Conference; one lay and one ministerial delegate.

The Board of Lay Activities; is composed of six bishops, six ministers and twenty-four laymen. These lay activities are to include Christian Stewardship, Christian fellowship, personal evangelism, lay preaching, the circulation of the church literature, attendance upon worship service, men's work, the training of official boards, work for boys, etc.

The One-Board Plan for Missions; the Foreign Missions, the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, the Woman's Home Missionary Society, the Wesleyan Service Guild, the Ladies' Aid Societies, the deaconess work, etc. are to operate under this one board. There are four divisions; 1, Foreign Missions; 2, Home Missions and Church Extension; 3, Woman's Division of Christian Service; 4, Joint Division of Education and Cultivation. We will take some time to become thoroughly acquainted with these organizations and the way they are to be operated, but we believe a wise step in advance is taken in this set-up.

The Herald For One Dollar

We believe we shall receive a general response to our proposition to send the Herald until November first for one dollar. All former Methodist Protestants should make much use of the Herald these remaining months. And then if someone at every church will take a little time to do it, the subsidy requested of that church can be secured; this will surely help us most wonderfully. We are anxious to close up the year with as little deficit as possible. And the plans proposed will help much in doing this.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

PAUL PLEADS HIS OWN CASE

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, June 4

By REV. O. L. EASTER

Golden Text—I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day.—Acts 23:1.

One of the glories of the Roman system in which even the Christian can glory was their justice in giving every citizen of Rome the privilege to plead his case in the courts of justice. However, in this present lesson we are led to say that still further than this, in Christianity everyone of its citizens who has lived before God in all good conscience has a case to plead that will in every event win him acquittal before the highest court of the Eternal Judge and in many cases will win appeal from even the carnolly-minded earthly judges as Agrippa or Felix.

Paul had some very dramatic and commanding points of argument in his case and he used them with brillant choice. He won the attention and respect of the Centurian by quietly asking, "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?" Insomuch that he went and told the chief captain, saying, "Take heed what thou doest; for this man is a Roman." Paul admitted that he was not only a Roman citizen but free born and used this means to frighten the captain of the guard in that he had been guilty of putting bonds upon a Roman citizen uncondemned. (Roman law said: "It is a crime to bind a Roman citizen; a heinous iniquity to scourge him; next to parricide to kill him!"). Thus for the moment things were going in Paul's direction. But was Paul trusting in these matters to effect his final acquittal for the offences whereof the Jews were accusing him? They had said to Felix that Paul was a pestilent fellow, a mover of sedition among the Jews of all the world. Not only Paul's life as a Christian with its true effect upon the religious life of the Jews could prove whether or not he was stirring up sedition or ushering in the salvation that every good Jew was clamoring to God to send. Thus Paul zealously won the privilege to present his case in person which was within itself his best argument. Every American Christian has priceless privileges written within his government's sacred laws which in nature and content far exceed in protection those which Paul claimed from Rome. But let us remember that the only real defense for Christianity is not a law, nor a book, but a life which is not disobedient to the heavenly vision which moved the early fathers to place that privilege there. Felix heard the case of these Jews and they told him what they knew about Christianity and he heard unconvinced. When Paul himself stood before him and reasoned with him in righteousness and judgment we are told that Felix trembled and sent him out of his sight for fear that his life would convince even him about this Christ.

"Thus oft it haps that when within
Men shrink at sense of sin
A feather daunts the brave;
A fool's wild speech confounds the wise,
And greatest princes veil their eyes
Before the meanest slave."

Sir Walter Scott
Marmion.

We then do well to claim our sacred rights of Christian freedom that are within the body of our law when to claim them serves to thrust us as Christian individuals out upon the stand to give just cause for the faith that is within us. But when that time has come we had better look well to our own selves to see that we have lived before God in all good conscience until this day. Our anxiety for acquittal must look not to Agrippa, nor Felix but to God, for even when all truth testifies to the judges of men that, in spite of all that your accusers have said, you went about doing good often they condemn you. Then your vindication comes only from heaven inasmuch as you were not disobedient to the heavenly vision. There is an old Huguenot device which represents men standing around an anvil striking it with their hammers, and others handing them new ones as fast as the ones used are broken on the anvil. Underneath is this legend:

"Strike away, ye rebels; your hammers may break but the anvil of God's word endures."

I am free born, says Paul, not so much by being a Roman as having become a Christian. Let the hammers of the rebels and the barbarian break the anvil of by Roman birthright; I still can claim my freedom—a freedom in the Kingdom of my God which no hammer can break.

8,000,000 METHODISTS IN UNITING CONFERENCE LAUNCH FAR-REACHING EDUCATIONAL PLANS IN UNSWERVING WAR ON THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

From: American Business Men's Research Foundation, 111 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Illinois.

Kansas City, Special.—Calling for the establishment of a new and far-reaching world program against liquor and the liquor traffic, the United Conference of the Methodist Church, comprising 8,000,000 Christians, made a notable contribution to the history of the Reform in the action taken here, on May 3, creating a single Board of Temperance for the new United Church organizations, and setting forth that the purpose of the new plan was "to make more effectual the efforts of the Methodist Church in creating a Christian public sentiment and in crystallizing opposition to all public violations of the moral law."

The importance of the action taken, the declarations adopted and the frank discussion of the problem by distinguished church leaders before the great gathering assembled here for the forthnight ending May 10, 1939, were so notable that they are here epitomized by the American Business

Men's Research Foundation as, altogether, comprising an outstanding utterance in the progress of the reform.

The Uniting Conference made plain its constructive attitude toward the liquor problem by thus describing that the program and objectives of the newly created Board of Temperance would be:

''To promote by an intensive educational program including publication and distribution of literature, voluntary total abstinence from all intoxicants and narcotics; to promote observance and enforcement of constitutional provisions and statutory enactments which suppress the traffic in alcoholic liquors and in narcotic drugs; and to promote the speedy enactment of such legislation throughout the world.

''It shall be the object and duty of this Board also actively to seek the suppression of salacious and corrupting literature and degrading amusements, lotteries and other forms of gambling, and in every wise way to promote the public morals.

''The organization of the new Board of Temperance provides for a Board, the membership of which, in addition to a Bishop, minister, and one lay member elected from each jurisdictional Conference of the United Church, shall include ten members at large of which five shall be women; and provides besides for the creation in each sectional jurisdiction of a Board of Temperance auxiliary. It is prescribed that the membreship in each auxiliary shall include two laymen who ''shall be young people under the age of 25.''

''Under the title 'The Local Church' it is provided (a) that each pastor should actively promote a vigorous program of temperance education in all departments of his church or churches, and members of both the church and the church school should be pledged to total abstinence, and (b) that each pastor should present the cause of temperance on or near World Temperance Sunday and take a free will offering for the General Board of Temperance.''

Church Refuses To Modify Liquor Stand

Saturday, May 6, after a sharp discussion, the Uniting Conference refused to modify the section of the Church Discipline which makes local church action mandatroy against any member who uses alcoholic beverages or is found in any way implicated in the liquor traffic.

An attempt to change the verb from a stalwart ''shall'' to a passive ''may'' in a paragraph of the Church Discipline was overwhelmingly rejected by the Conference, the text of the paragraph adopted being as follows:

''A member of the church who, after private reproof and admonition by the pastor or class leader, persists in using, buying or selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or who signs a petition in favor of granting a license for the sale of such liquors, or who applies for a license for the sale of such liquors, or who as an attorney or otherwise procures a license for himself or another for the sale of such liquors, or who becomes bondsman of any person or persons engaged in such traffic, or who rents his property as a place in which or on which to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors, shall be brought to trial, and if when found guilty, he envinces no purpose to amend, he shall be expelled.''

The Conference also unanimously approved a resolution presented by Dean James A. James of Northwestern University, a member of the body from Rock River Conference, and signed by fifty prominent Methodist leaders from every section of the United States, providing for suitable celebration of the centenary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, through special issues of the various Christian Advocates, and centenary services in every local church, on or about September 28, 1939, the birth date of the great humanitarian and temperance leader, who was also an honored and life long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

INTELLIGENCE ON FIRE

By Bishop Chas. C. Selecman, Chairman, General Conference Commission on Evangelism

In recent months, being actively engaged in an organized effort to promote the spirit of evangelism in our Methodist Church, I have become more firmly convinced of the vital connection between the educational and evangelistic functions of the church. It is impossible to carry on successfully in either of these fields without the other. Teaching that stops short of winning disciples is an unfinished process. ''Take my yoke upon you'' is a necessary prerequisite to ''learn of me.''

Evangelism has been defined by Lynn Harold Hough as ''intelligence on fire.''

In the realm of religion intelligence and fire are joined and we may well say, ''Let no man put asunder.'' Intelligence without fire becomes cold, dead formalism. Can anything be more cold and dead than such a chuch? No wonder pews are empty and finances behind, and the lonely, languid group sings, ''Hosannas languish on our tongues and our devotion dies.''

On the other hand, fire without intelligence in this realm soon assumes the nature of fanaticism. Emotional outbursts unguided and unrestrained by truth soon bring religion under reproach of the thoughtful public. Noisy demonstrations are a poor substitute for intelligent discipleship.

Jesus was both evangelist and teacher. He preached repentance, faith and love. But he also taught as one having authority. By his parables and precepts he laid the foundation of personal character and proclaimed the Magna Charta of the kingdom of God.

Christian education and evangelism are not two traffic lanes that run parallel. They must overlap and permeate each other. For this reason my most fervert appeal is joined in this movement for the increase in church school enrollment. This work must go before evangelism and prepare the way of the Lord. It must accompany evangelism and thereby insure permanence, usefulness, growth and saintliness. Young disciples must be introduced to the curriculum of the school of Christ, that they may grow by ''the sincere milk of the word.'' By this means we will avoid the continued production of spiritual dwarfs—Orphan Annies who never grow up.

This year we celebrate Wesley's first field preaching, April 2, 1739. There is yet a call to go into the highways and hedges and bring them to the feast of life.

WITH THE POETS

Elizabeth Vera Idol

THE VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL

By James Russell Lowell

The youngest, as well as the most important, of the group of nineteenth century poets in New England was James Russell Lowell. Van Wyck Brooks says that he was the most intelligent young man in Cambridge, but his leading trait was a gift of pure enjoyment. "He could lie on his back for days on end, dreaming in the fragrant air or conning some Elizabeth poet." All of his reading, and he read widely, was done with the same gusto and passion. In his four-fold capacity as poet, critic, essayist, and scholar, his position in America is comparable to that of Matthew Arnold in English literature; as editor of the newly-founded Atlantic Monthly he was able to become literary dictator of America.

He seemed to be master of all poetic forms, ode, song, epigram, sonnet, narrative poem, elegy, and sonnet, and tried his hand at them all, but his poetry suffers from unevenness of poetic conception and style. Though he can never be called one of the world's first-rate poets, as a secondary poet he ranks high. There was in him, nevertheless, something of a "shadow-poet." He had steeped himself in Shelley and Keats, he was influenced by Byron, he was thrilled by Emerson, and it was Tennyson who gave him the model for Sir Launfal. Notwithstanding these limitations, however, Van Wyck Brooks gives a more or less conclusive summary of his place in literature in these words: "Everything that was rich and sunny, all that was loving, strong and true, in Lowell's heart and talent, spoke through his Under the Willows and The Fountain of Youth, Sunthin' in the Pastoral Line, the 'June' of The Vision of Sir Launfal,—with every leaf and blade 'some happy creature's palace.' The Lowell of May and June was the joyous Lowell, the poet and the lover, off-guard for once and all the time, transfigured with the coming of spring and summer."

The search for the Holy Grail was a favorite enterprise of the knights of King Arthur's court, but only a knight who was stainless and pure could succeed in finding it. So it was Sir Galahad in the Romances of King Arthur who was successful, and Tennyson made Sir Galahad the subject of one of the most exquisite of his poems.

The story of Lowell's version is familiar to all. The young knight who sets out in all the glory and magnificence of an untried and undaunted youth to search for the Holy Grail; the leper who crouched by his gate.

"Who begged with his hand and moaned as he sate," and the repulsion that the glowing youth felt for the foul beggar:

"So he tossed him a piece of gold in scorn."

But the leper refused the gold:

"He gives nothing but worthless gold
Who gives from a sense of duty."

The second part finds the knight an old man, his youth and zeal gone—

"An old, bent man, worn-out and frail,
He came back from seeking the Holy Grail";

Though the cross no longer was blazoned on his coat, deep in his soul he wore and this time as the Christmas season draws near, and the chill pierced his thin raiment, he sighed for the warmer clime he had visited long ago in his search for the Holy Grail. Again he hears a cry,

"The badge of the suffering and the poor,"

"'For Christ's sweet sake, I beg an alms,'" and Sir Launfal again sees a leper, more loathsome and grewsome than before. The knight has learned much since the first encounter,

"And Sir Launfal said,—'I behold in thee
An image of Him who died on the tree'"; and instead of flinging an alms to leprosie, he shared with him his coarse brown bread and gave him water out of a wooden bowl.

"Yet with fine wheaten bread was the leper fed,
And 'twas red wine he drank with his thirsty soul."

So Sir Launfal found the Holy Grail in the cup he had shared with the poor outcast, and the outcast himself stood revealed as the Son of God. And the "voice that was calmer than silence" spoke to him:

"The Holy Supper is kept indeed
In whatso we share with another's need;
Not what we give, but what we share—
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds thee,— Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

The poem reaches its greatest height as poetry, however, not in the story itself and the lesson Lowell would have us learn, but in the description of spring and winter in New England. The chill and desolation of a bleak winter day as the old man returns, broken hearted and disappointed, are impressive; but the thrill and joy of every sight and sound of flower and leaf and bird of the spring, as the young man departs, are pictured in words that cannot be surpassed as incorporating the very breath and spirit of spring:

"'Tis heaven alone that is given away,
'Tis only God may be had for the asking;
There is no price set on the lavish summer;
And June may be had by the poorest comer.

And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days;
Then Heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays:
Whether we look or whether we listen,
We hear life murmur, or see it glisten;
Every clod feels a stir of might,
An instinct within it that reaches and towers,
And, grasping blinding above it for light,
Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers."

DEVOTIONAL ADDRESS BY BISHOP FRANCIS J. McCONNELL AT THE UNITING CONFERENCE

A number of years ago I happened to pick up a copy of a monthly magazine. It had a title on one of the articles which immediately arrested my attention. The articles was entitled, ''The Rich Man's Heaven and the Poor Man's Hell.''

It turned out to be nothing but a travel sketch of an experience in one of the islands of the Caribbean Sea.

Going Back to the Jungle

It seemed that a traveler had disembarked from a steamer traveling in those waters and was intending to cross on foot a small island, the island probably ten miles across. He started on a path through the jungle and in the midst of the jungle thought he heard a voice. He turned and saw a woman standing at a gateway. There was a house, rather tumbled down. There were the remains of what had once been a fence; there was a gate off its hinges; there were creepers all over the house and the fence and it was very manifest that the house and everything around it was fast going back to the jungle.

"Poor Man's Hell; Rich Man's Heaven"

The woman came down to the pathway and talked to the passerby and told her story. It appeared she and her husband had been led by some advertising material to sell their property in Indiana and move down into one of the islands of those southern seas to raise tropical fruits.

The first year everything went well. Then the jungle began to creep in on them and finally the jungle indicated very clearly by all its creepers and the growth of its vegetation and even the growth of trees, it intended to take possession of the house. There they were, lost, in a sense, in that jungle, unable to get back; looking forward to a fate that seemed to them to be utter poverty and destitution.

She said, ''We haven't enough to fight the jungle,'' and then she added, ''The jungle is the poor man's hell.''

The traveler finished the journey, went down to the other side of the island where he was going to be entertained by friends. He found everything in order; houses splendidly screened; the steamship at the wharf to carry the tropical fruits to the United States; everything in perfect condition.

This man remarked to his host about the contrast and then the host added another sentence to the woman's statement which stated the whole truth. ''Yes,'' he said, ''the woman didn't have enough. In fighting a jungle, you have to have enough. You have to have enough money; you have to have enough power and if you have enough, even a jungle can become a rich man's heaven, whereas, if you haven't enough, it is a poor man's hell.''

We Can Hear Call of Wild in Ourselves

And I think the lesson is clear on the face of it. We live in the midst of a jungle of terrific power. Anybody who has ever been in a jungle knows the perfectly irresistible nature with which it can sweep on after the months and take possession of what has been for the moment taken from it.

The only secret in dealing with the jungle, of course, is to have force enough, immense force, to stand against it and finally conquer. I don't suppose it is illegitimate to refer to this life of ours as a good deal of a jungle. We hear the call of the wild in ourselves very often. If we think that we have conquered ourselves, all the evil temptations in us and everything else, we can step down to the edge of the jungle most any time and hear the wolf's call.

The only thing that will conquer in that situation is to get enough size. While we sometimes disparage size and say there is a kind of Philistinism in talking about size, nevertheless there are some things in this world that can only be conquered by size, by immensity of resource, and the religious impulse has to be joined with other impulses so as to bring about that massive attack upon the forces of this world.

A. D. Lindsay, principal of Baliol College, Oxford, came to this country a few years ago and delivered before our college a very remarkable series of addresses on the essentials of democracy. In those addresses, he laid down this principle, that the time had come with rapid means of communication, to say ntohing of the growth of populations, in which democracies, like those of the United States and of England which are so great, can't be controlled, except for the moment, by the utterance of any one man, that any man who can make an impression upon a democracy has to have back of him an organized sentiment, that the more massive that sentiment the better.

Organization Necessary to Advance Causes Today

Of course, he said, through the radio one man can do something at a particular time, but his words have to find an organization back of them to support him—the statement of the truth which he is trying to make.

There was a day, back in the 18th century, when a man like Edmund Burke or William Pitt could stand before an audience of 250 people in the House of Commons and sway the destinies of England. That cannot be done now. The sentiment has to be more massive than that. Lindsay went on to say that the future of democracy lies with the free associations in states, the growth big enough to enforce their will, at least to bring their conceptions, to the attention of a hundred million people.

Then he spoke of the churches. He spoke of labor organizations and scientific organizations, but, he said, without any regard to theolological considerations at all, the time has come when the churches have to look upon themselves as the defenders of spiritual ideals on their social side, and they can only do that as they mass their forces, doing together the things they can do together and remaining separate for the things of their own that they can do separately.

War a Problem Requiring Large Resistance

The more you think it through the more you see that truth. The problems before us are great problems of the universal type that can be met only by large resistance. Take this problem of war that we are hearing so much about. If it isn't the jungle force, what is it? It is perfectly terrific in its power, and if we think that the war spirit is going to be conquered by just picking out people with whom we will associate, and uttering our thoughts about war, and not doing anything that really makes a massive appeal, we are utterly mistaken—the jungle will get us and we will go back to the law of the jungle. We have to stand beside every man who has at least this much of elementary humanity in him, that he will protest against treating human beings in the way war treats human beings at the present time.

Take the conquest of the social order. The same thing is true. The forces that determine the social order are deep in us. They are no accidents of an organization, they are no accidents of constitution that have been made. They are no accidents of anything superficial. They have to deal with profound instincts and feelings in the human heart, and though a system in any particular time may be only of comparatively short duration in the life of humanity—the present capitalistic system, for example, is only about 160 years old, as we know it—nevertheless nothing can exist through 160 years and determine the forces of man, through its own channels, unless there is might behind it. We have to have something that is more than the utterance of words and more than the thrilling of our nerves or sensibilities and experience, or merely beautiful dreams which we look at as dreams. We have to have something that has size, something that weighs, something that has a tremendous inertia about it when it once gets to going. And we have to think of the whole Gospel in those terms.

Size Changes Many Things

I say it becomes something else, then, a merely boasting in a materialistic fashion about size. Size is sometimes something that changes even the quality of things, yet beyond a certain point in your size everything changes.

For that reason, I think of this Conference as having not only a real, but a symbolic significance. It is a massing of the forces. We may not have been conscious of it. We may not have planned it out. We may not have any very definite ideas here as to what this is all about. Some of us haven't. We think of it simply in terms of organization, but just the same, if we can get together an organization of eight millions of people, with even the most elementary understanding of what the Kingdom of God is, we have a force there that begins to take on the power in itself.

And we need large ideas for it. Most heresies, the trouble with them is not that they are false, they are not false, they aren't big enough, that is all. There are some conceptions of Christ at the present time. We have heard them referred to, dealing with Christ simply as a prophet on the ordinary human scale. That is true as far as it goes. Man is not a heretic in one sense that believes that. The trouble with that is it simply isn't big enough, that is all. You can't get out on it. You can't put to sea on it. If you are going to have a view like that, you must stay close to shore, because it won't do much if you get out into the storm, and so it is with any conception.

Religious Conceptions Have Failed Because Not Big Enough

Almost all of the religious conceptions that have failed have failed not because of an inherent falsity but because they weren't big enough. The ideas of the universe are expanding. Twenty-five years ago men said we had learned about all we could, at least in outline, as the teachings of physics. For example, that is all broken open in twenty-five years, in the name of a larger universe. So we have to look for these larger conceptions.

Immortality, if it doesn't contemplate man in massive terms, isn't worthy. The immortality of a few choice souls trickling on like little brooks into Eternity—what does that amount to? You have to think of humanity in terms of a Gulf Stream. There is a passage in the Book of Revelation that has always been to me very significant, though I think my exegesis of it is wrong. There is nothing wrong, however, in having a wrong exegesis if you tell the people it is wrong before you start. So I have told you!

The expression is: "Salvation unto our God who sitteth on the throne." Let him have something of the benefits of salvation. Is the world redeemed? Here is every kindred people and tongue standing before the throne clad in white robes and palms in the hand, and then the cry comes, "Salvation unto our God, who sitteth on the throne." Now that sin is away, now that men are redeemed, let him have a chance to see and show what he can do with the saved humanity. Let him have some of the benefits of salvation.

Yet this exegesis is probably wrong. I have tried to find some commentator that would bear me out and never could. Nevertheless there must be something of an element of truth in it, something of size.

When Size Is Beauty

If you get the right ideas about size, that it isn't the mere size of the emptiness and the mere expanse of nothing in particular then when you get hold of that there comes a change in the quality of things. The beauty of the sea, largely, is that it is so big. You can stand by the seaside and see the changing tints, the blues and the grays; the varying moods of the sea are reflected before you. You can stoop then by the wave of the sea and dip up a glassful of the water and hold it up between you and the light and there is nothing of the coloring there. Is is just plain water.

What makes the glory of the sea? It is the sky over it, the immensity of the sky. And you can't catch the glory of the sky in a glass that you can hold in your hand. You have to have something bigger than that, and the sea by its very bigness gives us colors that can be found nowhere else.

And so let us get the right idea, the right attitude toward it all, and size itself becomes not very important. Majesty is impossible without a thought of size, splendor in some respects is impossible. The glorious colorings of the universe are impossible without size, and so with some revelations of the upper skies. Some of the glories of the upper skies will come to us as we get the United Christian body big enough to catch those colorings and show them forth to the sons of men.

Coming back to the figure of speech which came out of the illustration I used, it is our task in this world to transform a jungle into a Paradise. To do that, we have to have something that has mass and size.—Daily Christian Advocate.

Justice is as strictly due between neighbor nations as between neighbor citizens. A highwayman is as much a robber when he plunders in a gang as when single; a nation that makes an unjust war is a great gang.—Benjamin Franklin.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF BISHOPS TO THE METHODIST CHURCH

(This message is to be ready in every Methodist Church on Sunday, June 4, 1939, or as near thereto as possible).

The Methodists of America have entered into a new sense of brotherhood. They have consummated the largest union of Protestant Christians ever achieved. The full significance of what has occurred is beyond our present understanding; only eternity can properly evaluate the deeper meaning of what we have here done.

Of greater significance than the act of union is the result of union. The spiritual oneness so conspicuous at the Uniting Conference must be made to permeate the whole body of Methodism. Out of this union must spring a new and more intense loyalty to our Wesleyan heritage. Above all, this Methodist Church must immediately project a program of service commensurate with its latent powers and its unparalleled opportunity.

In the providence of God our Churches have come together at a moment of world crisis. In every land there is perplexity; and fear. The priceless values of life are everywhere threatened. Never in modern times was there such an imperative demand for the proclamation and application of the Gospel. At the very instant of its new birth, The Methodist Church is faced with a challenge to summon all men to behold the redemptive power which has always been resident in the eternal Christ.

The burden of our duty in this hour has been upon our hearts. In response to inner promptings, no less than to the request of the Conference, your Bishops express the need for a mighty resurgence of spiritual life and its inevitable moral overflow, and their willingness to help lead the Church in a movement to bring about its consummation.

Such a forward movement should be all-inclusive, and should be dynamic, inspirational and educational in nature and method. It should involve a dissemination among our people of information concerning the history, genius, theology, policy and program of Methodism.

It should inculcate a new loyalty to all our institutions. It should interpret unification to our people and weld them together in understanding, sympathy and a sense of fellowship. It should emphasize our world-wide missionary enterprise and stimulate the passion to evangelize all peoples.

It should promote Christian stewardship and bring about a greater liberality for the larger benevolent work of our Church. It should lay bare the social and personal sins of our time and call men to repentance and reformation. It should place emphasis upon personal religious experience and seek to revive in the hearts of our people the seeking spirit of the compassionate Christ.

Such a movement must be more than a temporary enterprise of an inspirational nature. Its foundations must be wide and deep; its cultivation fundamental and constant. The best of our thought and the most competent advice we can secure shall be devoted to projecting the details of a plan, which in due time will be announced to the Church. With the hearty and unselfish cooperation of all our preachers, people and organizations, the movement contemplated should bring the Church to its first General Conference having witnessed a revival of deep religious experience, with all its forces mobilized for the inauguration of the third century of vital Methodism.

No cause is forlorn with Christ at its head. We look up and behold the morning. Christ is out on the highways of the world's needs. No ingenuity of wickedness, no indifference or scorn of men can stop His unceasing march of redemption. We resolve anew to evade no peril and to seek no discharge from the tasks, but take our appointment way with Him until the gospel has been given in its uniqueness and redeeming power to all men.

We will rejoice in Thy salvation and in the name of our God we will set up our banner.

THE COUNCIL OF BISHOPS.

THE HOME IN A CHANGING WORLD

Much has been said about the effects of social changes, and of modern city life in particular, upon the family, and the point can hardly be overemphasized. The social order must be shaped for the family rather than the family shaped by unfavorable elements in the social situation. Indeed, there is no better approach to social questions than from the angle of the family.

Until our economic arrangements are more closely geared to the needs of our homes we shall have neither a mature nor a stable social order. When millions of young people have to delay their marriages because of economic insecurity, it is a grave symptom of social ill-health. When even more millions of young people look out upon a world which seems to offer neither a job nor a fair prospect of a home of their own, some of the roots of idealistic impulse and of force of character are sure to wither.

Harmony and security in the home are first and necessary steps to harmony and security in the wider realm of society. Homes that are tense, chaotic and insecure increase the disharmony, the chaos and the insecurity of the world. Homes in which the members learn to be peace-makers one with another, produce the sort of people without whom world peace cannot be. Homes which inculcate and practice respect for the rights of others provide a groundwork on which social justice among groups and nations can be founded.

Our problem, then, is not merely one of adjustment of the family to social changes but of framing a social policy which shall be favorable to the home, and under which the home itself shall be able most effectively to fulfill its high educational task of developing those attitudes and types of behavior which will contribute to the constructive and harmonious interaction of groups and nations.

Henry Ward Beecher is credited with this proverb: "In this world it is not what we take up, but what we give up, that makes us rich." Beecher was expressing the truth of Christ when he said that. The rich young ruler who came to Christ "had been taking up." Christ longed for the young ruler's real enrichment, and so He told him to quit "taking up" and go and "give up" and he would be rich.

To the Leader

This is the first of a series of two topics on "Getting the Most from Summer." We usually look upon summertime as a time of vacation, but it also offers unique opportunities for Christian development. At this time of the year we are making plans for our vacations. Many will be tempted to put aside obligations to the church, to reading, to personal culture, and to worship, public and private. This meeting provides a chance to counteract this harmful trend by pointing out a Christian's opportunity for making a vacation a spiritual retreat as well as a physical rest. Emphasize our summer camps, schools, conferences, youth assemblies, local church programs, and community enterprises. Show that everyone should get somewhere in Christian experience during summertime.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. Of what value is a vacation? For what intended?
2. How and where may a Christian spend a vacation?
3. What summertime amusements are questionable?
4. Should a church be closed in summertime? Reasons.
5. Does summertime afford good opportunities for making friendships? Reasons.
6. Should recreation be substituted for worship? Reasons.
7. What kind of reading can you suggest for summertime?
8. What can you suggest as a means of commendable personal culture for summertime?
9. What does the church offer in the way of a wholesome summertime program?
10. What should be a Christian's attitude toward worship, public and private, during summer months?
11. What service can Christians render during summer?
12. What can you suggest as a profitable summer program for a Christian?

The Poets

It's the heart where the Summer is molded,
  And women the magical blue,
And always a glory is folded—
  That waits but a welcome from you,
The world is the world that you make it,
  A dungeon, a desert, a bower;
The sunshine is falling and song birds are calling
  f only the heart is in flower.
—Frederick Langbridge.

I read
In a book
Where a man called Christ
Went about doing good.
It is most disconcerting
To me
That I am so easily
Satisfied
With just Going about.
—George Small.

Little Gems

Innocent recreation will help me; but any pleasure impairing my moral and spiritual energy is wrong, and should be avoided.—J. Agar Beet.

Never go any place from where you would be unwilling to be called to your eternal home.—Herbert Moninger.

As a countenance is made beautiful by the soul's shining through it, so the world is beautiful by the shining through it of God.—Jacobi.

Many people leave their religion behind when they go on their vacation, but there is no time when we need it so much. People are not in so great danger when they are busy with their work. It is when we are idle or seeking pleasure that we face the most serious danger. It is then we need to realize the presence of God. Rest for our bodies will do us little good if we dissipate our souls.—Rev. Gordon H. Baker.

Topic Hints

Christian Growth: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," said Peter. The Christian should grow as any living organism. Perfection is not reached at conversion. Day by day, facing and overcoming temptation, the Christian grows in the likeness of Christ. In the spiritual growth, spiritual nourishment and exercise are needed and needed regularly. While the Christian has a perfect right to enjoy a vacation, he should not neglect the things that made him and keep him Christian. His greatest enjoyment should be in things accompanied by the Spirit of the living God lest his spiritual growth be hindered.

Vacation: Summer is the time of vacations. The office and the shop are deserted while sea-horses and tourists' camps are crowded. The school room is emptied and students turn away to various activities of their choice. Commercial concerns offer their wares of every description to the vacationist. Their greatest interest is in making enough profits in three months to pay them a salary for the whole year. Inherent values are seldom considered. The Christian must have a very keen judgment in making a choice from what the summer market-place has to offer. He must know the difference between bees and beetles and be able to distinguish butterflies from moths. His choice should be in the interest of spiritual growth.

A Change: To most people a vacation means a change. They do not hesitate to say, "I want a change." One readily sees the desire of the heart may or may not be wholesome. What is it we want to change from? What do we want to change to? Certainly we desire a change of environment but this should not mean a choice of a worse. We hope for a change of companionship but our choice should not be morally lower. We would like to make a change in doing things but we should never desire to engage in a conduct which would in every way make us unfit to return to duty. Whatever the change might be, our vacations should build up within us resources which will make us better workmen when we return. Vacations should prepare us for vocations.

The Church: The Church is a lighthouse for weary sailors. The rays of light from God's Word never cease to shine in an effort to dispel the darkness of men. The church-windows are opened wide and her servants are ever at work in an effort to keep Christians off the rocks of destruction. She not only gives instruction but offers opportunity to the end that a growing soul might be nourished. She creates and promotes a fellowship that Christian might enjoy the privileges of a wholesome social life. The leadership of the church has considered the need of a summer program that her members might not turn to paganism. These programs provide a wholesome change and promise a spiritual growth.

Opportunities: Summertime offers the opportunity for making new friends and renewing old friendships; for giving special attention to physical, mental, and spiritual health; for catching up on reading good literature; for exploring nature and there reading God's message on every stone and leaf; for attending summer conferences, conventions, camps, institutes, and youth assemblies; for preparing for a larger field of Christian service; for doing some special Christian service. In all these things one finds opportunity for spiritual growth. Neither must we neglect the local church. There are no greater opportunities for Christian service than those to be found in the local church in the summertime. The average church program for the summertime is a fright. People who never go on vacations excuse themselves from worship and work. Such programs and excuses are not for the glory of God nor the growth of the Children of God. As Christians, we should give greater attention to our church when the world and weak church members are least concerned about her.

EXPANDING HORIZONS

No phrase could be more fittingly descriptive of desirable intellectual and spiritual development. The horizons of our lives are continually expanding. Our minds are ever reaching out in quest for truth, and our souls are enjoying larger adventures. This is a picture of Christianity at its best. It is not a prohibitive influence which limits the aspirations of man, but rather a dynamic influence which points to larger and better adventures.—From the Daily Christian Advocate.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

St. Paul's Church, Greensboro.—We have been doing around over at St. Paul's. First of all, we bought some new song books, a complete assortment of worship and Sunday school songs. Then we have been holding for the past two weeks (and expect to continue another week yet) a very profitable and enjoyable singing class. We have been able to get a very good teacher who has improved our choir quite a bit. We have learned more of the fundamentals of music than we have had an opportunity to learn before.

One of our members, Mr. Bob Andrews, a brother of Mrs. G. F. Millaway, died as a result of an automobile accident two weeks ago. Our sincere sympathy goes out to his wife, son, and sister.

Our revival meeting is scheduled to begin the first week in June. Our pastor, whom we all consider the most able to be found, is doing to do the preaching for us. We cordially invite everyone to attend. Your presence will be appreciated. Come on over to St. Paul's and enjoy our fine spirit.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Charge, Rev. W. H. Neese, Pastor.—Just a short report to tell you of our Third Sunday Rally, which was held at this church. We had a beautiful day and the church was almost filled. Our speakers for the morning were Dr. J. E. Pritchard and Miss Bruce Smith. They both made splendid talks. At the noon hour dinner was served in the grove.

The afternoon speakers were Rev. John Cagle, Mrs. Van Surratt, and Rev. J. T. Bowman. We were indeed glad to have the Thomasville and the Asheboro quartets with us. Their songs were well rendered and enjoyed very much by all.

The Woman's Auxiliary met May 16 with Mrs. Wade Surratt as hostess. Mrs. Penn Russell conducted the devotional. Our next meeting will be held Saturday night, June 17, with Mrs. Van Surratt. We feel that our auxiliary is doing good work. We want the prayers of all the people that we may carry on the Master's work in the right way.

Our prayers and best wishes go out to those who are sick and have been sick. May they soon recover and be able to meet with us again.

MRS. A. C. HARRIS, Reporter.

First Church, Thomasville, J. T. Bowman Pastor. — Accepting the truth of the Chinese proverb that one picture is worth ten-thousand words, I presume that one report with news is worth a dozen without news, so I find myself secluded in a corner of my home desperately trying to think of a few of the many important things which have happened in our church said the reporter last took inventory. It is not surprising that as I glance down my "jot 'em down" book that I at once see too many items to report very completely; I will, however, mention enough to justify the assertion that all is well.

The interest in the various activities of the church is fine. Just one visit to the Men's or Women's Bible classes would convince you that something is going on that is worthwhile for the attendance is such that it looks like we'll have to have a new church.

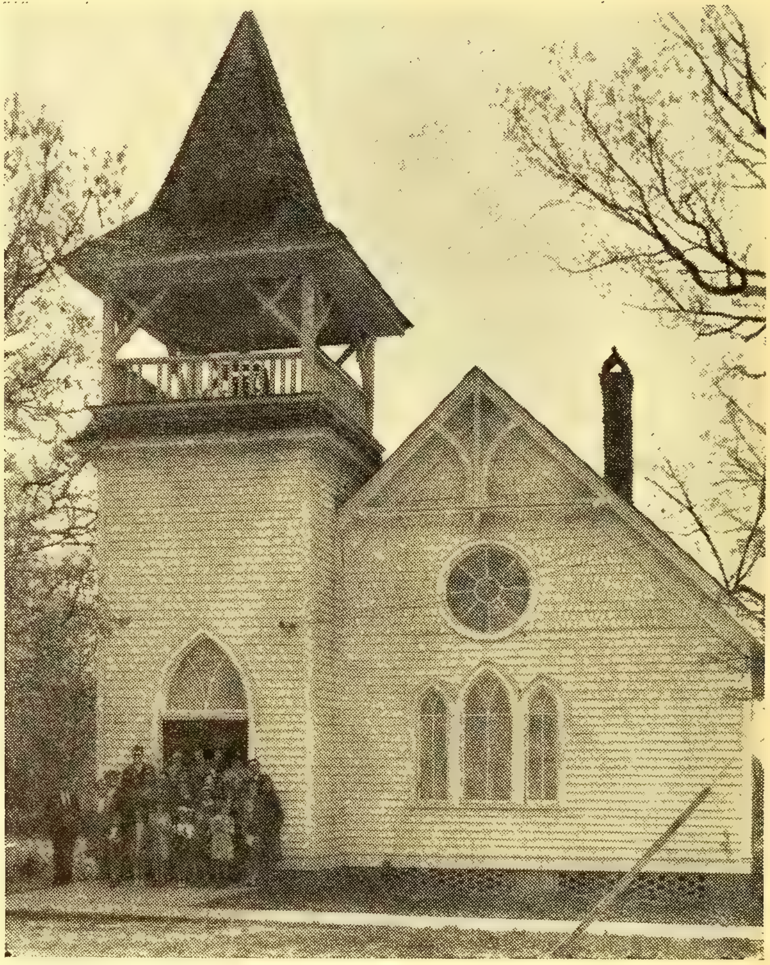
Much credit is due Mrs. A. H. Ragan and Mrs. Will Leonard, the teachers of these classes. The other classes are progressing nicely under the new plan of two teachers to the class. The experienced teacher sits back and nods her approval or disapproval, while a young and rather awkward but intelligent apprentice does the work.

Our Woman's Auxiliary is really one to be proud of. In fact, circles two and three have reported their budgets raised in full, and circle one has only a few more dollars until they will be out also. In behalf of the members I say that we'll be hard to handle the last eleven months with no money to raise.

Admirable commentary is brewing among our congregation for having gone over the top in the Appreciation Year fund. Some were heard to say, "It can't be done," or "Such a thing is impossible," but our precious and dependable membership proved that anything is possible in the work of our Lord.

The Scout troop of the church is well organized and is a beneficial factor to the community. Hats off to Mr. Luther Myers, scoutmaster, and Mr. Tom Lloyd, assistant scoutmaster.

It is indeed a healthy pleasure to announce those graduating this spring—Misses Helen Varner and Clarice Baity from Thomasville



LITTLETON METHODIST CHURCH (Former M. P. Church)

This church was organized something like forty years ago. Rev. C. H. Whitaker was the first pastor, and we believe the organizer. It has served the community well, considering the conditions under which it has carried on. The membership was never large, nor were the congregations large in attendance upon the services. It has had some of our best men as pastors who ministered there. This, we believe, is a complete list of all who served the church since its organization: Revs. C. H. Whitaker, H. L. Powell, J. H. Hartsell, S. W. Taylor, R. C. Stubbins, J. A. Ledbetter, C. J. Edwards, W. E. Swain, D. M. Loy, J. B. O'Briant, N. M. Harrison, M. I. Crutchfield, C. I. Smith, T. M. Johnson, R. L. Vickery, P. E. Bingham, J. H. Trolinger, and D. D. Broome .

High, Miss Mary Alma Teague from Hasty, and Opal Wood from Fairgrove; along with quite a number from the seventh grades. To these graduates we extend our sincere wishes for a successful and happy future.

Many of our little folk are suffering with the measles at this time. May God help them to a speedy recovery.

Now that United Methodism is a fact, I find that I am just one big question mark personified. Are you like me? I hope that in the next few days somebody who understands this thing will write a book explaining just what will become of this and that, and what will my church be called, and so forth and so on.

In closing I quote John 14:6, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

MRS. J. KNOX TEAGUE.

Women's Auxiliary, Vickery Church.—The auxiliary met at its regular meeting with Miss Eddie Holton. The president, Mrs. R. R. Winslow, called the meeting to order, and the first thing on the program was a song, "Sweet Hour of Prayer." The devotional service was read by Mrs. Ben Pentecost, and prayer by one of our visitors, Miss Bessie Mae Willard. Mrs. Joel B. Trogdon, our pastor's wife, gave us a very interesting talk on "Thy Kingdom Come," commenting on the devotion that was read, the 13th chapter of Matthew. Her most interesting and instructive talk was enjoyed by all the members.

The regular business part of the meeting was carried on as usual. It has been decided to have the Monroe Brothers to put on a program at Union Hill school near High Point the 19th of May.

Mrs. Trogdon closed our meeting with a prayer. The leader for our next meeting will be Mrs. Charles Northam, and we will meet at Mrs. Oliver Kirkman's for our next meeting.

Shiloh, Shiloh Charge, Rev. C. E. Ridge, Pastor.—Home-coming and memorial day was observed at Shiloh May 21, and proved to be an especially good day throughout. The Sunday school attendance was 321; of this number 39 were visitors. At the 11 o'clock hour Mr. Rridge preached the memorial sermon. Scripture lesson was the 1st chapter of Peter. The male chorus sang "In the City of God," dedicated to the memory of Rev. J. A. Young, and Rev. C. A. Pickens, former pastors who are buried in this cemetery. Also this song was dedicated to the memory of Rev. R. S. Troxler, who has passed to the Great Beyond since last year. Mrs. Grey Davis sang a solo in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Obediah Waitman. Miss Blanche Sink read obituaries for deceased members, and floral tributes were presented by the following: Miss Julia Waitman for brother, Frank Waitman; Miss Gladys Evans for grandafather, Madison Fritts; Mrs. Wade Walser for father, Luther Shoaf; Miss Annie Lee Leonard for uncle, Webb Craver. The intermediate girls' quartet sang "Some Sweet Day." The congregation marched to the cemetery where the meorial service was concluded.

The afternoon service was devoted to the home-coming program. Special music was furnished by the male quartet of the Second Presbyterian church of Lexington. Mr. Ray Leatherman gave the address of welcome, and Mr. H. Luther Leonard gave the response. A splendid home-coming address was given by Hon. Rupert T. Pickens of Greensboro. A very large crowd was in attendance throughout the day.

The first Sunday in June the election of delegate to the annual conference will be held.

The fourth Sunday in June at 11 o'clock the monthly prayer service will be held.

Continue to pray for us.

Palestine, Flat Rock Charge, May 22.—Our pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess, missed his first appointment at Palestine during his pastorate Sunday. Pastor Burgess being sick, our local preacher, Rev. G. A. Middleton, filled his appointment with a good message. Brother "Gus" being known and liked by all our people, it is always a pleasure to hear him.

We are anxious about our pastor, and hope he is not seriously ill.

L. A. Tucker, father of the writer, suffered an attack of high blood pressure and fell four weeks ago. He was able to attend service Sunday.

Miss Helen Walker, one of the young girls of Palestine, is a patient in a Greensboro hospital. Helen is an older sister of little Attie Walker, who was so seriously sick, and stayed in the hospital such a long time back in the winter. The girls of Mr. D. A. Walker, Miss Margaret Tucker, and Brother Lee and Miss Louise Cable have recently had measles. There may be other members who have had measles, but I do not have the names.

Cedar Cliff Church, Rev. J. R. Anderson, Pastor.—The annual home-coming day was held at our church on Sunday, May 14, with a large attendance. This service proved to be the best yet. We were pleased to have with us our former pastor, Rev. L. E. Mabry, who delivered our morning address, along with our pastor. We would never feel our service complete without a talk from Rev. Mr. Anderson. Dinner on the grounds was enjoyed by everyone. The afternoon service was taken up with singing by various quartets, directed by Mr. R. P. Smith, of Liberty. This day will always be a pleasant memory to recall.

Mitchell Payne, who has been sick for some time, will return to Duke hospital this week. We offer our prayers for his recovery and for his return to his home and his church.

Our Sunday school will meet at 10 o'clock Sunday morning instead of 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon as usual, owing to the fact that our pastor will be with his memorial service at Belmont. Our prayers and best wishes are for a good day there.

Kernersville-South Winston, May 29.—The attendance and interest, also the work in general, at all the churches on this charge have been about as usual since our last report to the Herald. We held special Mother's Day services at Kernersville and South Winston churches. During the month of June we will hold the election of delegate to the next annual conference at all the churches.

A special service was held at the Kernersville church Sunday, May 7, at 7:45 p.m., when the Kernersville Post of the American Legion attended the service in a body. The writer, who is a member of the American Legion organization in Kernersville, delivered the sermon on the theme, "Loyalty to God and to Country." The Pine Grove quartet sang during the service.

The May meeting of Circle No. 1 of the Ladies' Aid society of the Kernersville church was held at the parsonage Tuesday night of last week, with Mrs. C. B. Way as hostess. Mr. Way conducted the devotional service and also a brief program, after which Mrs. J. W. Corum, the president, took charge of the business session. The Ladies' Aid society, composed of two circles, will have a booth at the Kernersville Fourth of July celebration. At the conclusion of the meeting, the hostess served refreshments to eleven members and four visitors. Mrs. Ernie Wilson will be hostess to the June meeting of Circle No. 1, which will be held Tuesday night, June 20.

The pastor and family have received a number of gifts for our dining table in recent weeks. We appreciate very much the gifts and the spirit in which they were given. The gifts came from members and friends of the churches. An amount of money was received from one person not a member. May each one be rewarded with a spiritual blessing.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

Concord, Saxapahaw Charge, Rev. M. C. Henderson, Pastor.—Work is moving on very nicely here.

We have a newly organized C. E. society of young boys and girls that are doing fine work. This society meets each Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock, while the older people meet at the church for prayer services. Mrs. Grey Hargrove is leading the C. E. society. We appreciate her leadership very much.

The school house that stands near the church has recently been wired and plans are under way to paint and repair it so as to make it an attractive place to hold socials, as well as for Sunday school rooms.

The Ladies' Auxiliary plans to hold their next meeting there.

Memorial Services will be held at this church the first Sunday morning in June at the 11 o'clock hour. We are inviting any one who wishes to come and be with us at this service. There will be only morning services.

Concord church, Saxapahaw charge, will hold its memorial service the first Sunday in June at the 11 o'clock hour. Everyone who wishes to come has an invitation.

Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson Charge, O.B. Williams, Pastor.—It is a pleasure to report that we are getting along rather well at present. Attendance is good, and Brother Williams has been bringing us some really splendid messages all along. Both he and Mrs. Williams cooperate to the fullest extent in everything that we undertake to do, for which we are very grateful.

Our annual memorial service was held last Sunday, and the program throughout the day was rich both in fellowship and in spiritual blessings. The morning sermon was delivered by Rev. E. L. Mumford, pastor of the Liberty Baptist church. It was a splendid message, in which he stressed the building of a living monument while we are living here; a monument which will be a light and a strength to help some weaker person along, a monument worthy of the respect and admiration of those with whom we come in contact. Also during the morning worship service, Mrs. Williams sang a beautiful solo. Special music in the afternoon was rendered by the Fairgrove Quartet, and a very fine address was delivered by Prof. Carl Sink. During the afternoon service, tribute was paid to Mrs. Eliza Collett, a charter member of Mt. Pleasant church, who expressed very great pleasure at being able to be present for a memorial service in her 93rd year.

It brought a shock and also a feeling of very great loss when we learned of the death of Mrs. Claudia Shoaf last week. Mrs. Shoaf was one of the most loyal members that we have ever had. Hers was a beautiful life; a life of unselfishness and unwavering Christian character that made her a truly great woman. Surely she built many beautiful monuments that will live after her and cause each of us to cherish her memory as a beautiful goal to be attained; and may we press a little toward that goal.

Haw River Circuit.—The schedule for our special meetings has been completed and is as follows: Fourth Sunday in June at Midway, with Rev. C. E. Ridge assisting; first Sunday in July at Mizpah, with Rev. E. Lester Ballard assisting; second Sunday in July at Fair Grove, with Rev. Rollin Gibbs, pastor of Summerfield circuit of the former M. E. Church, South, assisting; third Sunday in July at Friendship, with Rev. J. W. Braxton assisting. At each church dinner will be served on the grounds on the Sunday of the meeting, with a service before and after; service on Monday night, each day thereafter morning and night. A cordial invitation is extended to the members who have moved away to return for the services. We are looking forward to good meetings at each of the churches, and are hopeful of large ingatherings. Brethren, pray for us and for the success of the services.

This Wednesday several of the brethren and the pastor are going down to Duke University to meet with the architect of the Duke Rural Church Foundation to talk over plans for the new church at Friendship. I have already had an interview with him, but want the brethren to have a chance to look over some plans he has.

The women at Friendship are not waiting for the men to decide what kind of a building is needed. They have already started to raise money for it. Had a Brunswick stew some days ago and raised $45. "O women, great is thy faith!"

And the women folks at Fair Grove are busy collecting money for new hymn books, which we hope to have in time for our special meeting at that church.

C. W. BATES, Pastor.

Children's Home Day

Our letters and our suggestions for securing an offering for the Children's Home on June 22nd went out last week. We hope you received them before Sunday, and that you have already begun to announce the expected coming of Bishop Clare Purcell of Charlotte and Bishop James H. Straughn of Baltimore as the speakers of that day. And because of their coming, we are hoping, and we know you are hoping, that a great gathering of Methodists will greet them that day.

We are promised the use of the gymnasium at High Point College for the program, which will begin at 10 o'clock a.m. on Thursday, June 22. It is a large room, and 300 or 400 people will seem lost in it. Let every pastor of every charge and every Sunday school superintendent and every Children's Home secretary of every local church help to fill the gymnasium that day. Announce it, talk about it, and encourage the people to come. We are so glad to report that there is quite a bit of enthusiasm already over the meeting. A number of people of the former M. E. Church, South, have expressed their purpose to attend the meeting. We hope that hundreds of former M. P. people will be here, and that the offering will be good.

Picnic Dinner

The picnic dinner will be served in the grove at the Children's Home at about 12:30 noon. We will place the tables and look to you for the food. We thank you for your cooperation in other years, and we know this will be the climax of it all.

A Little Trip Away

In 1899 a class of 35 graduated from Western Maryland College. That was just 40 years ago this June. I was a member of that class, and as the class is holding a reunion on Saturday, June 3, Mrs. Dixon and I are stealing away for just long enough to go for that reunion and return.

Duplications

If any of you received duplicate letters from this office last week, it is because our letters and also Mrs. J. M. Stone's letters went out from this office. She is not so well these days, and yet she wishes to help, so we sent out her letters to save her the work.

God bless and direct in all His work.

Faithfully yours,
A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

NOTICE TO AUXILIARIES

May and June were the months designated to pay the auxiliary college apportionments. This fund has come in very slow during May, and I hope that special effort will be put forth to get this college apportionment paid in full during June . Heretofore, this part of the apportionment has been practically paid in full during the month of April.

FIRST QUARTERLY MEETING OF WOMAN'S WORK

Community church, Thomasville, invites us to hold our first quarterly meeting there. The Executive Committee accepts unanimously this timely invitation. We appreciate the opportunity of meeting at Community church.

Every auxiliary is entitled to five delegates to this meeting. The president and corresponding secretary of the auxiliary, by virtue of their office, and three other elected representatives, one of the three from the young people's group. These should be chosen at the June auxiliary meeting.

The date for the meeting is, tentatively, July 12, 10 o'clock a.m. Please watch this page for definite notice of date, and other information.

t is very important that those who wish the Community church ladies to prepare lunch at 35 cents per plate for them, notify Mrs. J. R. Sechrest, 3 Elliott Drive, Thomasville, N. C., to that effect. If you should be unable to remember Mrs. Sechrest's address, Mrs. J. Clyde Auman may be notified.

We trust that every auxiliary will be represented, as plans for the remainder of the year will be set in motion at that time. An interesting program is being developed.

Corresponding Secretary.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION — HIGH POINT COLLEGE

When we think of Christian Education we naturally think of High Point College.

Some one asked Dr. Dan Poling this question: "Is it true that a great majority of our public leaders come from Christian or church colleges, rather than from other institutions of higher learning?" He replied: "Eight of the Chief Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States were college graduates, and seven of the eight came from church colleges. Eighteen of our Presidents were college graduates, and sixteen of the eighteen came from church colleges. Two-thirds of our leading Congressmen are recorded as graduates from Christian institutions."

Does not such a record as this make our hearts rejoice because we have helped to establish and maintain a Christian college in North Carolina? The growth of our college has been marvelous, and now that the whole Methodist Church is interested in it, we may expect it to become one of the leading co-educational colleges of the South.

We, the women of our Missionary Branch, have been happy to contribute to the success of our college, and I want to call attention to the fact that our college budget is now due. At our annual meeting we gave World Service the right of way with the promise that we would send our college apportionment to our treasurer, Mrs. Kearns, in May or June. We take pride in keeping our promises, and I feel sure we shall get busy and send the money soon, if we have not already done so.

This is just a reminder that "Now is the appointed time," and by another year we may change our methods to some extent, but we shall still go on boosting and helping the institution that has meant so much to the young people of the Methodist Protestant Church. and will in the future contribute to the educaton of many more preachers, statesmen an religious and civic leaders.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Hubert Banks Love

Hubert Banks Love was born November 10, 1904, and departed this life April 9, 1939, aged 34 years, 6 months and 29 days. He was the son of Rufus Hopewell and Maggie Louis Love. He leaves to mourn their loss his wife, Martha Furr Love; three sons, H. B., Jr., J. E., and Dwight; his parents, Mr. and Mr. R. H. Love, of Concord; five sisters, Mrs. M. C. Henderson, of Saxapahaw, Mrs. Bill Stancil, and Misses Bettie, Helen, and Bernice Love, of Concord; five brothers, Rev. Fred Love of Thomasville, and Floyd S., Eugene, Paul, and Melvin, all of Concord.

He professed faith in Christ at the age of 16 and joined Roberta M. P. church, where he remained a member until God called him home. Hubert was a good boy and was loved by all who knew him.

The funeral service was held at Roberta Methodist church, Tuesday, April 11, 1939, at 2:30 p.m. The writer was assisted in the service by Rev. Earl A. Cook, a former pastor, and Dr. J. E. Pritchard, president of the North Carolina Annual Conference. The funeral service was attended by the largest congregation the writer has witnessed at a funeral service in recent years. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful. The body of the deceased was laid to rest in Concord cemetery to await the Resurrection morning. May the Lord comfort the bereaved who mourn his passing.

PASTORS, PLEASE GIVE ATTENTION

Last conference a questionnaire was given out asking for certain facts. Most of them were returned; but some thirty of the brethren failed to get theirs in. For this reason the record was left out of the 1938 Conference Journal. We did not want to print just part of them. Now I have a letter from the secretary of the Western North Carolina Conference asking for certain facts which I cannot supply until I have them. If you failed to fill out one of these questionnaires, won't you please write me for one, fill it out, and return it promptly. It will be to your benefit to attend to this.

The Conference Treasury is depleted. I have not been able to get as much money from that source for the Journals as I have hitherto. Consequently we are far in arrears in our payment. I could reduce the amount still due materially if the brethren who have not paid for their Journals would do so. If you do not know whether you have paid, or how much you owe, please write me.

The Unprofitable Servant

The Bible has much to say about this sort of a servant. Our Lord emphasizes the truth again and again. Sometimes He uses terms of business, sometimes of agriculture, then again in the domestic relations. But in all of them the servant stands out condemned for his failure to meet the requirements of his task. No oppressive wrongs are mentioned in the story of Dives and Lazarus. Dives feasted while Lazarus fed on the crumbs with the dogs. But Divers never said a harmful word or did a harmful deed to Lazarus; just let him alone. As a fellow creature Dives was useless. And no positive dishonor was charged against the man with one talent who hid his task away instead of performing it faithfully. He is just accused of doing nothing, and for this he was condemned and cast into outer darkness.

For most of us religion began with emotions of great joy over the sense of pardoned sin. We were very happy and a profound peace was ours. How we felt we could forever abide in that blissful state. But it could not be so; the time came when we must deny self, must do some most unpleasant tasks—must take up our cross daily and follow Jesus. It was time for us to be useful as well as happy. In fact, our happiness could not longer remain unless we used our talent; unless we found our place in the world. It is fine to have great talents and high ideals, but it is better to be a profitable servant to our Lord. It is commendable in any one to live above sensuality, above dishonesty, and hatred; but it is not enough to abstain from evil and of the appearance of evil. The servant must be faithful to his Lord.

Negative goodness never transforms, the buried talents never grow, the shallow soil does not produce a bountiful harvest. Good intentions, fair promises, even the acceptance of a task are not worthy of a reward. The savorless salt, the barren fig tree, will forever represent the unproductive life to the thoughtful Bible reader. And in every case the profitless servant and thing were cast out.

Every pastor has known people by the score who expected to be saved from hell because they had not been unkind, nor unjust, nor dishonest, nor impure, nor untruthful, while others whom they knew had. They had doubtless lived long lives of spiritual inactivity. They had never stood up for the right and out against the wrong. Like the priest and the Levite in the Parable they left the wounded man in his blood and made no effort to arrest the thieves. They can tell you of much evil abroad in their community but they have no intention of joining with those who would destroy the works of the devil. This unprofitable servant today, as a rule, is not ignorant of his task; is not unaware of what is expected of him. He needs conscience more than intelligence. This unprofitable servant of our time is not handicapped by the lack of opportunity to do well his part; he lacks the desire to do well what God and his fellows expect him to do. This unprofitable servant of our day may not fail of his reward because he was lazy, he may even be very busy, but like the servant in First Kings, "Busy here and there," but fails to do the thing required of him.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Spencer Church Dedicated

Last Sunday morning was a glad day for our church at Spencer, N. C., in that the church was dedicated at that time. Practically all if the ritual of the former Methodist Protestant Church was used in the service with the sermon by the president of the Conference. The usual congregation was augment by the presence of several friends of the church from the community and by delegations from our churches at China Grove which is a part of the Spencer charge and Kannapolis. The service had special interest for the China Grove people because they are to dedicate their church the fourth Sunday in this month.

The church at Spencer had its origin in the mind of the late Rev. D. A. Braswell as early as 1925. Brother Braswell preached at first in the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Moore who have been among the leaders of the movement from the beginning. Services were also held for a while in an Episcopal chapel in the community. The lot was bought, I believe, in 1925 but the building was not ready for services until the fall of 1928. The building is of brick construction and will seat something like three hundred. It is located on the corner of Carolina Avenue and 7th Street, three blocks north of the main highway through Spencer. The railway shops are on the opposite side of the main highway and the church is located in a reasonably good residential section. One of its most acute problems now lies in the fact that this church is located within a couple of blocks of a large, flourishing Methodist Church, former M. E. Church South. Whether a place can be found for both churches so close together of course is on the mind of our people. Had the congregation been able to foresee Methodist Union when the lot was bought, the situation would be otherwise just as in many other communities. The lot and building cost about $4,100. The Board of Church Extension of the Annual Conference helped considerably in financing the proposition, but of course the bulk has been raised by the local church.

Now that the financial struggle in a sense is ended I will say this that this is the kind of loyalty which makes me take off my hat to those who have carried on during the years. Brother A. L. Moore and some others who played an important part in financing this work never lived to see the church dedicated, however, they do live in the memory of those who are left behind and will continue to live in the deeds which they performed. And should this church not be needed in the new order of things in some respects it has justified the expenditure. For people grow rich in spiritual things through their loyalties and devotion. The responsibilities and sacrifices of this particular project have developed these people far more than they could have been developed had they been members of some large and growing church where they would have been lost in the crowd. In fact as I think about it it seems to me that this is true of the entire Methodist Protestant Church. Our very hardships and struggles as a small denomination may have prepared us for a larger work in a larger fellowship. Any way, as we go out of business as a denomination it is comforting to know that our toils and sacrifices have not been in vain and that the money which we have used in carrying on our work has not been wasted. The stalwart men and women which our church has produced will ever stand out as the Church's justification. And whatever happens to the Spencer church, the people are enriched and prepared for larger things.

The Half Way Mark

It is needless for me to remind any of our people of the fact that this conference year is more than half gone. While we do not know just when the finishing up conference will be held we know it is not long off. The question comes, are we going to be ready for it. Shortly I hope to begin giving extracts from the second quarterly reports but the tragic thing about so many of them is that nothing has been raised on so many of the interests and seemingly there have been so few conversions and accessions. A few days ago I read in the North Carolina Christian Advocate about a certain District Conference and the statement was made that only two or three charges in the District failed to report having reached the half way mark in all assessments. As we think of this we wonder if we have done our best. It is true that some of our charges have spent the most of their energies the first half of the year in raising World Service in full. This seemed to be necessary, however, we must come up with many other things to make anythnig like a favorable showing.

Two Churches Which Failed To Get Credit

I have been informed that Fairview Church on the Glen Raven charge and Bethel Church on the Alamance charge both raised World Service in full but for some reason they did not get on the honor roll as printed in the HERALD for some weeks. We hail these two churches as being worthy of a place in the sun and we apologize to them for the omission.

The High Point College Commencement

As I said in my letter last week I was unable to attend any of the High Point College commencement except the graduating exercises on Monday morning but I will say that among the seventy-eight who were graduated were the names of many which I recognized as former Methodist Protestants. I know it is dangerous to mention some unless you can mention all but I am going to take a chance by saying some of these are, Mary Mitchell Baity of Henderson, Rev. Charles E. Anderson of Gibsonville, J. Vaughn Boone of Alamance charge, Rev. Paul Hamilton, G. W. Holmes, III of Alamance, Miss Lea Joyner of Mississippi, Rev. Thomas Edward Stickland of High Point, James Allen Thacker of High Point, Sara Forrest Thompson of Thomasville, Rupert Gilmer Wagoner of the Haw River charge, Fred J. Cox, Jr. of State street, Lexington; Porter Allen Hauser of Shoals, M. C. Henderson, Jr. of Saxapahaw, Nancy Parham Royster of Henderson, Daniel Coble Sharpe of Calvary, Helen Bates

Message In Verse

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right,
Pray if thou canst with hope, but ever pray,
Though hope be weak or sick, with long delay,
Pray in the darkness if there be no light,
And if for any wish thou dare not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away.

Although Church membership does not make one a Christian, a Christian may find in his Church membership a wonderful means for expressing his Christianity.

"Life is after all, just one long day; morning, noon, afternoon, night. Most lives are like an April day; sunshine, showers, laughter and tears, joys and sorrows, prosperity and adversity."—Charles Reisner, D.D.

The pastors' school began at High Point Monday; we are unable to secure the number enrolled this year. Duke also has the Pastors' Conference and Rural Church Institute running concurrently this week.

People who mistake emotionalism for spirituality usually have "many ups and downs" in their day's march towards the promise land.

One may be as determined to pursue a course because of prejudice as he could be for the sake of principle; we must learn to distinguish between prejudice and principle.

Duke University graduates 812 this year; students from 27 states and several foreign countries. The youth of our day has many and wonderful opportunities to prepare life.

The sort of a responsibility your friends are willing to trust you with reveals the sort of a person they believe you to be. It is a compliment to be requested to perform a difficult and a responsible task—is it not an opportunity to render a finer service to mankind?

Christians are comrades in a great cause. When writing to the Church at Philippi St. Paul said, "Salute every saint in Christ Jesus." To this man recently redeemed from Pharasaic bigotry, any man in Christ Jesus, Greek, Barbarian, wise and unwise, was a saint whom he held in high esteem. A marvelous thing had happened in the life of St. Paul that he could do this. And this same sort of transformation has to take place in the lives of all the followers of Christ before the Christian Church can be the power for righteousness among men it is intended of God to be. Dr. Percy Ainsworth so well states it in these words; "Our strength belongs to the weak, our vision to be blind, our health to the infirm, and our life to the brotherhood. This is the noblesse oblige of the Christian faith."

The Home Coming This Year

Dr. Dixon has announced a program for the Annual Home Coming at the Children's Home this year which should find a response in the hearts of all the friends of the Home and should easily fill the Gymnasium at High Point College. But let not any friend of the Home come empty handed. We trust that every pastor will present to his congregation the appeal of Superintendent Dixon and that this shall also be a wonderful day for the Home in every manner.

of the Haw River charge, Virginia Curry of Denton, William Franklin Hester of Grace. The one former Methodist Protestant which I recognized as graduating Magna Cum Laude is Mary Mitchell Baity of Henderson. Those whom I am sure are Methodist Protestants graduating Cum Laude are: J. Vaughn Boone, G. W. Holmes, III, Lea Joyner, Nancy Parham, Thomas Edward Strickland, James Allen Thacker. It is possible that many more of those graduating belong to our church.

Rev. H. S. B. Thompson Ill

A letter from Rev. D. D. Broome, the pastor of the Littleton charge brings me the distressing information that Rev. H. S. B. Thompson, one of our honored Superannuate ministers has had a stroke and that one side is paralyzed. Brother Thompson lived for a number of years near Roanoke Rapids, N. C., but last year moved to his new home near Vaughn, N. C. I think his address is Littleton, N. C., R. F. D. 3.

WITH THE POETS

Elizabeth Vera Idol

SEA-FEVER

By John Masefield

John Masefield, present poet laureate of England, even as a child craved the sea. Apprenticed as a cabin boy at fourteen, he spent the next few years leading a vagabond life by sea and land, and gathering a rich fund of knowledge and experience. In 1895 he landed in New York with less than five dollars in his pocket, hoping to become a writer, to express the music of the sea, the wind in the rigging, and the men ''hard-palmed from tallying on to whips.'' During the years he spent in New York, working at whatever job he was able to find, he read Chaucer and fell in love with his vigor and humanity—''it was Chaucer,'' he said, ''who made me realize what poetry could be.'' As yet, however, he had not been able to capture the voice of the sea and put it into verse. He returned to England and there in 1902 his first volume, ''Salt Water Ballads,'' was published. Since then he has published more than a score of volumes including poems, novels, essays, plays, and in 1930 the office of poet laureate was awarded him.

Chaucer continued to influence him both as to form and treatment of his subject matter. He wrote a series of long narrative poems distinguished for their vigor and vivid realism, thus proving that such poems still have a legitimate place in literature. He excelled as an imaginative realist, and as a purely descriptive poet his place is among the masters of sea and landscape.

His fondness for English landscape and particularly for that of his native Hertfordshire is marked, and his love for England is broader and more sympathetic than that of either Tennyson or Kipling, but one of the chief elements of his verse is his love for the sea. He knows it in all its moods, its changing colors, its storm-tossed waves, its sparkling sunlit waters, and the angry winds that whip it to foaming masses, or in gentler moods whisper softly above it, bearing its salty fragrance from far-off shores. No other writer, unless it be Josef Conrad, can so make his reader feel the spray in his face or taste the salt on his tongue. And as Masefield knows the sea itself he knows the boats that sail on its surface, all of them, from the ''dirty British coaster with a salt-caked smoke stack'' to the ''stately Spanish galleon'' and the ''tail ship'' spreading its sails majestically before the breeze. He knows them and loves them as only a man can love the sea and ships who has for years given to them the deep passion of his soul. Those who man the ships he knows too, and chants their songs with them, as he says in Consecration:

''The sailor, the stoker of steamers, the man with the clout,
The chantyman bent at the halliards putting a tune to the shout,

No poem, however, of all his Salt Water Ballads, holds in it more of the sea itself, and the nostalgic longing of a man in whose blood is the not-to-be-denied call of the deep than Sea-Fever. The rhythm and meter suggest the roll and swell of the heaving waters; the vivid realism of the ship and the sea and sky is in its unequalled descriptive phrases—''the wheel's kick,'' ''the wind's song,'' ''a gray mist on the sea's face,'' ''a windy day with the white clouds flying,'' ''the flung spray,'' ''the blown spume,'' ''the sea-gulls crying,''—on and on we see the details he pictures, we feel the dampness of salt spray in our faces, we hear the unforgettable low mewing cries of the gulls.

The ''gull's way'' and ''the whale's way'' remind us forcibly of the Anglo-Saxon poetic kenning, and the quiet strength and deep sincere emotion of the ending lines move us to an appreciation of the depth and reality of the poet's love for everything pertaining to the sea, an emotion that does not die when this life ends, but brings ''quiet sleep and a sweet dream when the long trick's over.''

The poem is so short and so complete a unit that it must be read in its entirety:

''I must down to the seas again, to the lonely sea and the sky,
And all I ask is a tall ship and a star to steer her by,
And the wheel's kick and the wind's song and the white sail's shaking,
And a gray mist on the sea's face and a gray dawn breaking.

I must down to the seas again, for the call of the running tide
Is a wild call and a clear call that may not be denied;
And all I ask is a windy day with the white clouds flying,
And the flung spray and the blown spume, and the sea-gulls crying.

I must down to the seas again to the vagrant gypsy life.
To the gull's way and the whale's way where the wind's like a whetted knife;
And all I ask is a merry yarn from a laughing fellow-rover,
And quiet sleep and a sweet dream when the long trick's over.''

ACHILLES' HEEL

NIPPON

Walter Lippmann has recently stated that, so far as the Anti-Comintern line-up was concerned, the decision for peace or war lay with Japan. "Germany plus Italy against England and France equals war." He goes on, however, to suggest that with the U. S. A. in the combination on the side of the democracies, even the presence of Japan would not bring war. However, all the movements of the Triumvirate show but too plainly that the members of the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo axis are working on the principle of one rushing out and grabbing what is desired, while the two others stand threatening anyone who may interfere.

Further evidence of a gang-up that looks far beyond the admitted objectives is found in the vast accumulations, in Japan, of war materials—accumulations far beyond any conceivable need for the China incident. These are, of course, strictly guarded, and the ever tightening espionage laws make the slightest inquiry regarding such matters dangerous.

To the democracies, thus being pushed either to fight or to go to the wall, the vulnerable points in the Fascist line-up are of great significance. If there is an Achilles' Heel to be found, and struck, it should be done quickly, ere the world situation drifts too far.

That the position of Japan with regard to national finance is precarious in the extreme, is becoming daily more apparent. Evidence is also accumulating that this is being realized in Japan, by the leaders and the people, and further, there are thoughtful Japanese who, convinced that peace and the downfall of the military-totalitarian movement can come only through the agony of national bankruptcy, are contemplating the arrival of that day.

Today Japan carries the greatest burden of debt in all her history. Her bonded debt, at the close of 1938, totaled Yen 16,207,943,000, of which slightly over one billion was held abroad, the balance being domestic. At the close of the 1930-'31 fiscal year, the debt was Yen 5,955,816,760. Put in per capita terms, it was Yen 63.20 in the spring of 1931; Yen 190 at the close of 1938. Budget recommendations now before the Diet, and clearly scheduled to pass, will total Yen 10,000,000,000, so far as revealed figures are concerned. Without considering the unrevealed plans, we now know that Japan faces an indebtedness of approximately Yen 300 per capita.

The unusually large proportion of the debt being in bonds domestically held, is an interesting phenomenon. It betokens, on the one hand, that Japan has not been able to borrow abroad. It might, in addition, betoken great financial strength at home. How has Japan thus far undertaken this real feat of financing?

Taxes have been raised as rapidly as it was felt the nation would endure it. In 1935, when Japan was paying the costs of the Manchurian incident and its aftermath, per capita taxes were Yen 11.23. But with a cheapened yen, Japanese commerce was increasing by leaps and bounds. In 1938, taxes were Yen 22.64 per capita, while Japanese trade abroad had dropped to almost one half of the trade of 1936. For the year 1939, additional taxes, expected to produce a total of Yen 200,000,000, are being imposed. It is thus hoped to provide for one fiftieth of the tremendous outlay that the Japanese Government expects for the coming year. When the result of this greatly increased taxation is considered, it must be taken into connection with the indirect taxation which has come through the control of imports, and hence the ruining of the business of great numbers of Japanese.

For 1938, Japan's trade, exclusive of the yen-bloc, was literally cut in half from that of the previous year. But 410 foreign automobiles were allowed to enter the country. Foodstuffs, books, magazines, all were practically prohibited, because of the rigid control of money. Raw materials for manufacture were so kept down that in non-war industries great unemployment problems were produced.

For Japan's financial situation, the significant thing is that, despite a drastic reduction of imports almost to the strangling of non-war industry, and despite pressure applied to boost exports, Japan ended the year with a debit balance in foreign trade of Yen 545,000,000.

To offset this situation, Japan is urgently pushing "reconstruction" in North China, which means a rapid seizing of and capitalizing on China's resources for the benefit of Japan's finance, while developing trade within the yen-bloc. This trade was, in 1938, listed as follows: exports, Yen 1,165,540,000; imports, Yen 564,051,000; total, Yen, 1,729,591,000. If this trade meant gain for Japan, it would be a promising situation. But it is achieved only by the spending of billions of yen to make the trade possible, and in large part this profit would cease were the far larger military and civil administrative expenses stopped.

With a gold reserve of less—probably much less—than Yen 500,000,000; with a bonded debt of Yen 20,000,000,000, to be increased in 1939 by another Yen 10,000,000,000 at least; with growing shortage of gasoline, cotton, wool, rubber, leather—all basic to war and non-war industry; with a serious shortage of man-power, how long will Japan's financial structure endure?

Japan is depending upon every cent that can be earned by exports outside the yen-bloc. They alone represent real income which can strengthen her arm. Most of Japan's trade is with democracies. Germany and Italy take but little, and watch the balances closely. They must. Japan knows this. She also knows that thirty-five per cent of the arms shipped to Chiang Kai-shek comes from German sources, and is under few delusions concerning her allies. There lies already in the hand of the democracies a weapon of tremendous power to strike at the Achilles' Heel of Fascism. That is the active boycott of Japanese goods, especially of Japanese silk, which represents a pure profit of Japan's labor. The United States bought Yen 639,428,000 worth of goods from Japan in 1937. Of this, Yen 325,225,000 was raw silk. In 1938, Japan's raw silk sales advanced over the previous year by 1,500 bales. But the United States alone took an additional 39,000 bales. In other words, increase in raw silk purchases in the U. S. A. turned a great loss in silk sales, for Japan, into a slight gain. If Americans would eschew Japanese silks alone, they would strike a blow for China and against Fascist aggression that would be tremendous.

Some revolt at such a boycott, recalling the starving of Germany. But no such fear need be entertained about Japan. Her rice fields and her seacoasts furnish enough to feed her millions with sufficient plain food.

Moreover, boycott will not provoke war with Japan. The Japanese people—one hears it everywhere—dread the thought of war with the U. S. A. more than anything else. Such a war is out of Japan's thought today—she dare not risk it, though some of her generals make brave words. But tomorrow? Ah, that's a different question.

Finally, such a step leading to the defeat and discrediting of the military would be received with more than half-joy in the educational circles of Japan, where the installation of army and navy men as presidents of universities, the prosecution of professors for books published years before and then accepted, and the suppression of freedom of study and research are creating a deep sense of uneasiness. More than half-joy would well up in the breasts of non-war industrialists, who have been squeezed to make "gifts" and buy bonds, and in addition have seen their business shot to pieces by exchange and trade restrictions. And lastly, it will be met by more than half-joy by many thoughtful men and women who are coming to see that the losses of Japan, morally and spiritually, will far outweigh any material gain. Said one, "The true soul of Japan will not be discovered until once we have suffered crushing defeat."—Zion's Herald.

AN ACCOUNT WITH MOTHER

Doctor Weigle tells this story: One morning Bradley put beside his mother's place a little piece of paper. His mother could hardly believe it but this is what Bradley had written: "Mother owes Bradley: for running errands, $0.25; for being good, $0.10; for taking music lessons, $0.15; for extras, $0.05. Total $0.55."

His mother smiled but did not say anything, and when lunch time came she placed a bill on Bradley's plate with the fifty-five cents. Bradley's eyes danced. But there was another little bill which read: Bradley owes mother: for being good, $0.00; for nursing him through a long illness, $0.00; for shoes, gloves, clothes, playthings, $0.00. For all his meals and a beautiful room, $0.00. Total: Bradley owes mother $0.00.

Tears came to Bradley's eyes and he put his arms around his mother's neck, thrust his little hand with the fifty-five cents into her and said, "Take all this money back, mamma, and let me love you and do things for nothing."—Religious Telescope.

METHODIST RALLY

A Methodist Rally will be held in the Front Street Methodist Church Sunday, June 11th at 8:00 p. m. The pastors and people of all Methodist Churches in this area are most cordially invited to attend. An interesting and inspiring program has been arranged.

FRED W. PASCHALL.

HISTORY OF THE SPENCER METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, ORGANIZED SEPTEMBER 13, 1925

In 1925 Rev. D. A. Braswell came to Spencer and held services in the home of A. L. Moore, 600 Carolina Avenue. These services were continued twice a month until September 13, 1925, when the Spencer Methodist Protestant Church was organized, with an enrollment of fifteen members. The following church officers were elected: Trustees, A. L. Moore, C. R. Jackson, Mrs. N. A. Lynch; Stewards, C. R. Jackson, Mrs. A. L. Moore—later adding J. W. Redding and J. L. Furr; Treasurer, Mrs. A. L. Moore. The church members, looking toward the future, realized that a more adequate place would be required for their meetings and on June 2, 1926 purchased a lot, located at the corner of Carolina Avenue and Eighth Street, for the sum of $600.00. The congregation grew steadily and in 1927 it became necessary to secure a larger room in which to worship, and the church rented St. Joseph's Chapel, located on Rowan Avenue, which had been outgrown by the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On Thursday, July 9, 1925, the Woman's Home Missionary Society was organized in the home of Mrs. A. L. Moore. Officers elected were as follows: Mrs. A. L. Moore, President, Mrs. N. A. Lynch, Recording Secretary and Mrs. C. R. Jackson, Treasurer; only three present. During the next week four active, and three honory members were added.

During 1928 work was begun on a new church building, a neat brick veneer structure to seat approximately 250, which was completed November 16, 1928, with the opening service held Sunday morning, November 18, 1928, conducted by Rev. S. W. Taylor, President of the North Carolina Methodist Protestant Conference. The total cost of the lot, building and equipment amounted to $4,186.00, and on April 15, 1939 the mortgage debt was canceled, and the church, with a membership of 24, was formally dedicated on Sunday, June 4, 1939. This service was conducted by Rev. J. E. Pritchard, present President of the North Carolina Methodist Protestant Conference, and was well attended not only by the members, but also by friends and well-wishers of the church. The following is a list of the pastors who have served this church: Rev. D. A. Braswell, Rev. T. G. Madison, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, Rev. P. S. Kennett, Rev. G. H. Hendry, Rev. W. M. Howard, Jr., Rev. A. M. Smith, Rev. Lee Moser, Rev. F. A. Wright and the present pastor, Rev. A. Ridge.

The Spencer Methodist Protestant Sunday school was organized December 6, 1925, in the Mason's Hall, but met at this place only once, as the hall could not be rented and, therefore, transferred to the home of A. L. Moore for meetings. Officers of the Sunday school were elected as follows: C. R. Jackson, Superintendent, J. L. Furr, Assistant Superintendent, J. L. Furr, Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. J. L. Furr, Bible Class teacher, Mrs. C. R. Jackson, Primary teacher and Mrs. A. L. Moore, Beginners teacher.

OUR STORY PAGE

THE PROGRESSIVE BEAN

Teddy was eating his Boston baked beans, when his father suddenly sprang an idea upon him.

"Teddy," he said, "suppose you were to see a dry white bean start suddenly to grow, sprouting first, then sending out two green leaves, then some roots, the stem growing longer all the while, and other little leaves coming out—and all within two minutes' time?"

"Why, daddy!" cried Ted. "That is a regular Jack and the Bean-stalk story! Such things don't happen really and truly. You know they don't, dad!"

"Well," said daddy laughing. "I can show you something out in the garden that seems a good deal like that story. You come out with me after dinner and I'll show it to you."

You may be sure Ted was on hand when dinner was over.

A moment later the little boy and his daddy were walking toward the garden.

"Two weeks ago, Ted," said his father, "I planted a dry, hard bean out here; and the second morning after that I planted another, and every morning since I have planted a bean. The last one I put in the ground this morning. See, here it is." And Ted's father began to draw the earth away from a bit of a stick that was stuck in the ground. "It hard and dry, just as it was this morning. Now we'll look at the one I put in day before yesterday morning.

"See! it has swollen a little in the damp earth," his father continued. I'll split it open down the middle, and you'll see a tiny bit of a stem at one end lying curled up between the two halves of the bean."

"Yes; there it is!" cried Ted, growing interested.

"Now, we'll look at the one planted two days before that. This is swollen still bigger; and I can open it with my fingers, the outside covering is so soft."

"The little stem has grown bigger and is trying to straighten out," said Ted.

"Here's the one planted two days before that one."

"Why!" said the little boy excitedly, "the little stem has come out through the outside covering, and the two halves of the bean has spread apart at the other end."

"And the one that is two days older still?" said daddy, smiling to see how interested his little boy was getting.

"That? Why, that's a regular little plant. It has poked its head up through halves of the bean and stands up just like two leaves!" And Ted opened his eyes very wide.

"That has little roots starting down from the stem, and those two halves of the bean are turning green, just really and truly leaves," cried Ted, looking closely at the little plant.

"We will not have to dig up the next plant. It has poked its head up through the ground, and you can see a bit of a stalk growing up between two halves of the bean that are still greener than the last ones."

"And here, in the last one, the bit of a stalk has sent out two real leaves," said Ted, walking along to where the first bean of all was planted, two weeks before.

"It's a regular little plant now," he said. "But was the little plant in the bean all of the time, daddy?"

"It was curled up there in the bean all the time," was the answer. "And now, if John will give you a handful of peas, you may try the same experiment and see how peas grow."

But before dad had finished a small pair of legs were flying down the path to find John, the gardener.—Selected.

NOBILITY

True worth is in being, not seeming—
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.
For whatever men say in their blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure—
We cannot do wrong and feel right,
We cannot give pain and gain pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren.
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.

'Tis not in the pages of story
The heart of its ill to beguile,
Though he who makes courtship to glory
Gives all that he hath for her smile,
For when from her heights he has won her,
Alas! it is only to prove
That nothing so sacred as honor,
And nothing so loyal as love!

We cannot make bargains for blisses,
Nor catch them like fishes in nets.
And sometimes the thing our life misses
Helps more than the thing which it gets.
For good lieth not in pursuing,
Nor gaining of great nor of small,
But just in the doing and doing
As we should be done by is all.

Through envy, through malice, through hating,
Against the world early and late,
No jot our courage is abating—
Our part is to work and to wait,
And slight is the sting of his trouble
Whose winnings are less than his worth;
For he who is honest is noble,
Whatever his fortunes or birth.

CHILDREN'S HOME PLAYS

Methodist Protestant Home Organized in D

The Methodist Protestant Children's Home was organized in Denton, in August, 1910, by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the North Carolina Annual Conference. It was moved to its present site in High Point, in August, 1913, where the children were moved into a modern brick dormitory surrounded by a farm of 38 acres. The farm, dormitory and equipments when first opened in High Point cost about $36,000.

The Home has had steady growth in equipment and in service. There are at present 132 acres of land, two large dormitories, a home for the Superintendent's family, two good barns and the other necessary out-buildings. And the estimated value of the entire plant is $250,000.

Mrs. R. S. Russell (Mabel Williams) of High Point was the first superintendent and matron. A bit later Mrs. J. W. Austin of High Point and Mrs. Fannie Page Luck of Asheboro assisted with the work at Denton, and Mrs. Luck moved with the children to High Point.

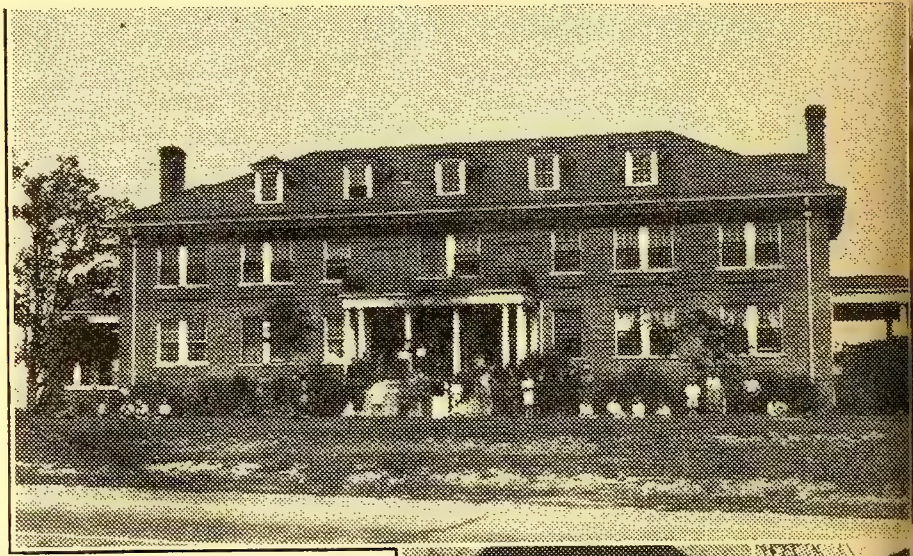
Why the Change From Denton

A new building had to be erected, because the children were first housed in an old school building. In many ways Denton was a fine location for such a Home, but at that time railroad facilities for that community were poor and highways were bad. So it was thought best to seek a new location.

Sentiment pointed to High Point, so in the spring of 1912, Dr. A. G. Dixon, then pastor of the First M. P. Church in High Point, preached a sermon on "The Child in the Midst," in which he laid the matter of a new location for the Children's Home upon the hearts of his people. At the close of the service the late Dr. J. R. Reitzel, who had been left an orphan, said he would be the first man to give $500.00 if it could be located near High Point. Captain A. M. Rankin immediately said he would do the same. A Locating Committee was appointed, composed of J. M. Millikan, Greensboro; O. R. Cox, Asheboro; Captain A. M. Rankin, High Point, and R. R. Ross, Asheboro.

Dr. and Mrs. Dixon were asked to find a location, and after searching several days, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Welch, "uncle Jap" and "Aunt Lizzie" said they would sell 38 acres where the girls' building now stands, at $100 per acre. At a meeting of the Locating Committee the next day he said, he, "Uncle Jap," would give the first $1,000 to help pay for that, and then "Aunt Lizzie" gave $500, George Penny $500, and W. P. Pickett gave $250. These gifts, with the $500 each already pledged by Dr. J. R. Reitzel and Captain Rankin, together with other gifts, which were made at that time, enabled the committee to vote unanimously to locate in High Point.

A Building Committee was appointed: J. M. Millikan, Dr. J. R. Reitzel, T. A. Hunter, Prof. M. H. Holt, R. R. Ross, Mrs. W. C. Hammer, V. W. Idol, and Mrs. A. G. Dixon, and work was begun at once. Mrs. A. G. Dixon shoveled the first dirt, also laid the cornerstone in September, 1912. Mrs. V. W. Idol was Treasurer of the Building Committee, and, since the death of Mr. H. H. Garrett has been Treasurer of the Endowment Fund.



Purpose

The purpose of the Home is to care for dependent children only. Usually one or both parents are dead; but ungodly parents will sometimes forsake their children, and somebody must care for these. All children are admitted to the Home upon written application, the Home furnishing the blanks.

Children are received between the ages of 4 and 12, and are kept in the Home until they are about 18 years old, or until they have finished high school. And even then care is taken in placing them.

Self Help

The Home runs a farm on which is produced all the vegetables, hay and grain possible. Also a dairy barn and poultry yards in which are produced all the milk and butter, and chickens and eggs that are used, except for a few chickens the country circuits give us each fall.

The home life is very much like that of a private family. The meals must be cooked, the dishes washed, the beds made, the rooms swept and dusted, the milking done and the butter churned, and all other tasks performed such as those in any ordinary home. The children are divided into groups for this work under a supervisor. Even the smallest child has some tasks to perform each day. The large campus is also kept in order by the children.

Cost of Running Home

An effort is made to keep all expenses at a minimum. We buy at factory and wholesale prices when possible. At present prices it costs about $220 per year to keep a child, and that covers all expenses, salaries, fuel, lights, school expenses, food, clothing — all. And yet 60c per child per day will do it.

The following have served as Superintendents of the Home since it was moved to High Point: Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett, 1913 to 1925, Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk, 1925-1927, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Allman, 1927-1928, Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon, 1928 to the present. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Dixon had charge of the boys' dormitory, and Mr. Dixon has been farm superintendent so long that he seems a permanent fixture at the Home. He has been there over fourteen years.

The Dividends

The contributors are the stockholders, but the Home does not pay back to any of its stockholders any cash dividends. About 250 children have been reared and trained and sent out by the Home. These are taking their places in the business and professional world, and nearly all of them are making good. Many of them are married and have their happy families, and they delight to come back home and bring with them the grandchildren of the Home. So the dividends are shown in children taken from the unlikely places of earth and trained into men and women of intelligence, refinement and character. The Home has a right to be proud of its output.

There are remaining in the Home 118 bright, wide-awake happy children. They are rapidly growing into maturity.

Some of the outstanding men and women who were trained in the Home include: Bessie Morris, registered nurse, out from Richmond, Va.; LeRoy Sykes, salesman, typewriters and adding machines, High Point; R. C. Haltom, secretary-treasurer, North State Lumber Co., Charleston, S. C.; Vergil Randall, traveling salesman, Norfolk, Va.; Lawrence Hiatt, manager, Sears and Roebuck Store, Wilmington; George Caldwell, singing evangelist, Sanfeansis Co., California; Archie Bevil and Knox Lomax, farming out from Burlington; Edd Welch and Conway Bayliff, floor managers in knitting mills, Burlington; Paul Voncannon, government employee, Greensboro; Cecil Bulla, McCrary Knitting Mills, Asheboro; George Crickmore, salesman, Penney Store, High Point; Herbert D. Garman, pastor M. P. Churches in Shelby, Bessemer City and Caroleen; Miss Flora Coble, with the Bell Telephone Co., Greensboro; Miss Laura Braswell, in office Cannon Towel Company, Kannapolis; Mrs. Leon Thompson, mother and church worker, High Point.

During the last ten years there have been 28 boys and girls from the Home to graduate from the Jamestown High school; three of these have graduated from college, two of these with "Cum Laude." One is a registered trained nurse. Five have been to college two years, four have been to college one year, and of the five who graduated from high school this May, one will enter High Point College, one is seeking work, and the other three are applying for admission to hospitals for training.

The boys and girls take average rank in scholastic attainments in the Jamestown school, and they take high rank in the athletics.

THE OFFERING AND THE AWARDS

Of course all of you understand that the offering for the Home on Children's Home Day is the one outstanding expectation of the day. We need a good offering, and we hope each church will plan to bring a good offering; but we want you to come this time whether you bring an offering or not.

The offered awards are as follows: A good picture of the present Children's Home family to the chairman of the one committee, in each of the following groups of churches, who raised the largest amount for June 22nd: 1. With over 400 members. 2. Between 300 and 400 members. 3. Between 200 and 300 members. 4. Between 100 and 200 members. 5. Between 50 and 100 members. 6. And with a membership of fewer than 50. We put it this way that the smaller churches may have a chance with the larger ones.

You yourself must keep your record, so in putting in your offering please make the amount clearly, and also the number of members in your church. Thank you so much. A. G. Dixon, Supt.

President's Letter-Women's Work

The N. C. Branch of Women's Work has until March 31, 1940, to complete the work it set out to do at the 1939 Annual Meeting, but we shall have to be dilligent in business, fervent in spirit, in order that nothing shall suffer during these last months of our separate life.

High Point College Apportionment

High Point College has been promised our support, each Auxiliary has an apportionment for this interest, and the payment of that apportionment at once is greatly needed. The college should not suffer on account of its generosity to World Service during the month of April.

I have searched the records of the Uniting Conference and have found nothing to indicate that Women's Work after March 30, 1940 will make apportionments to educational institutions—so it is of very great importance that we do our best in this last year of our existence under the present form.

Student Loan Fund

Our Student Loan Fund has not seemed to be sufficient for the demand in recent years, so in these next ten months it would be a very fine thing if friends of education would make donations to this fund which goes to help needy students at High Point College. The fund is loaned in amounts not exceeding $100 a year per student, and has helped 113 students, some of whom would have been unable to come to college without the loan, and others of whom would not have been able to remain in college after the third quarter without a loan. This fund which was begun by a gift of $100, has been added to year by year and will doubtless be perpetuated in the Union of Methodism.

Minnis Salary

Our Treasurer needs $125 every month in order to pay our obligation on Minnis Salary. She reports in the Herald of June 1, that $265.82 have been paid during April and May, so two months salary are paid. But as I read the report I compared the amount paid by First Church, Thomasville, and found it to be $95 more than their apportionment, for this item. This is very commendable in First Church, Thomasville, we hope that several other churches will follow this splendid example. The total amount apportioned on Minnis Salary at Annual Meeting was $947.50 so it will be necessary that several churches lend some friendly aid on this part of our budget.

Help Needed For Pastors

The need for an informed ministry in the new Methodist Church, is imperative. At a recent District Meeting I made a suggestion that for every pastor in our conference who does not get the Methodist Protestant Herald, and the Missionary Record, eighteen women be found by the District Chairman who would pay ten cents each and send their pastor these two periodicals that will keep him informed about some very vital matters. Any pastor surely would be glad of these gifts, and undoubtedly he would be a better pastor for reading their contents.

Woman's Convention This Week

The program of Woman's Convention at Western Maryland College this week is full of fine things, from which the North Carolina delegation will bring echoes to the Quarterly Meeting at Thomasville Community Church in July.

President of N. C. Branch of Women's Work.

ON THE ANXIOUS SEAT

We made a big venture this time when we invited two bishops to speak for us at our Children's Home Day June 22nd. But we made it with faith in our people that they would gladly respond to our call and give Bishop Purcell and Bishop Straughn a good hearing.

On this our last celebration as a Methodist Protestant Children's Home we hope to see the largest gathering of our people in the history of the Home.

It ought to be a great occasion with all our churches represented in the crowd. It will be a great gathering of our people if somebody will just plan it in each church. Plan to have one or more automobile loads come from each community where we have a church.

We are also inviting the people of the former M. E. Church, South, to come also. And we are believing that numbers of them will come.

However, the uncertainty of it all puts us, not on the mourner's bench, but on the anxious seat.

We have invited two bishops to speak, and anticipating a great crowd. We have engaged the Harrison Gymnasium at High Point College for the program, and will have it seated so as to seat a large crowd. We shall be exceedingly anxious until 10:00 o'clock Thursday morning, June 22nd, when we shall see how well those seats are filled. You can help wonderfully by coming yourself and getting others to come.

We are looking for you. You will not disappoint us.

Picnic Dinner

The picnic dinner is to be served here at the Children's Home under the big trees. We have all the shade trees needed. We hope for a fine day. We will place a long line of tables, and we are looking for you to fill those tables with good things to eat. Come and we will have a good time together on June 22nd from 10:00 a. m. until about 1:30 p. m., or as long as you care to stay. There will be no afternoon program. We shall anxiously await your coming and we believe you will come in large numbers. God bless and keep each of you.

Yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON, Supt.

To the Leader

Summer offers a fine opportunity to meditate on the future and to make some decisions. This is the time to plan for summer camps, conventions, conferences, and leadership training schools. Candidates should be urged to think of such experiences as a chance to find themselves in Christian activity. The reading of vocational books may be suggested to youth that will have leisure time at home. These may be opportunities to serve in the local church during the summer months. Most people have leisure time in the summer. It should be well spent. This topic affords the opportunity to discuss some of the ways for personal culture and Christian service during the leisure hours of the long summer days. You may point out the ways of preparing to do better Christian work upon the return of the autumn days.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. How may one culture his soul?
2. What summer activities for personal development have you enjoyed?
3. What sugggestions have you to offer for the use of leisure time?
4. What summer activities does the church provide for her youth?
5. In what ways, if any, does the summer season offer opportunties for meditation?
6. What local church work suffers during the summer?
7. What service can we render to the church in the summer?
8. What is your plan, if any, for summer reading?
9. How does summer reading prepare one for winter work?
10. What camps, conventions, conferences and schools can you recommend in this area?
11. Can one spend a profitable vacation in a leadership training school? Explain.
12. What summer pleasures do you consider worthwhile? Why?

The Poet

One asked a sign from God; and day by day
The sun arose in pearl, in scarlet set,
Each night the stars appeared in bright array,
Each morn the thirsting grass with dew was wet,
The corn failed not its harvest, nor the vine.
And yet he saw no sign.

One longed to hear a prophet; and he strayed
Through crowded streets, and by the open sea.
He saw men send their ships for distant trade,
And build for generations yet to be.
He saw the farmer sow his acres wide,
But went unsatisfied.

One prayed a sight of heaven; and erewhile
He saw a workman at his noontime rest.
He saw one dare for honor, and the smile
Of one who held a babe upon her breast;
At dusk two lovers walking hand in hand;
But did not understand.

—Victor Starbuck.

Little Gems

Never let your love for your profession overshadow your religious feeling. Depend on it that religion will strengthen, not weaken, your energies, and will not only make you a better sailor, but a superior man. Professional studies are not to be neglected; but, on the other hand, take care how you fall into the common error of believing they are the remedy for all the ills of life.—B. R. Haydon.

Have you ever rightly considered what the mere ability to read means? That it is the key which admits us to the whole world of thought and fancy and imagination? to the company of saint and sage, of the wisest and the wittiest at their wisest and wittiest moment? That it enables us to see with the keenest eyes, hear with the finest ears, and listen to the sweetest voices of all time? More than that, it annihilates time and space for us.—Lowell.

Leisure, the highest happiness upon earth, is seldom enjoyed with perfect satisfaction, except in solitude. Indolence and indifference do not always afford leisure: for true leisure is frequently found in that interval of relaxation which divides a painful duty from an agreeable recreation; a toilsome business from the more agreeable occupations of literature and philosophy.—Zimmerman.

Topic Hints

Leisure Time: For many of us summer time is leisure time. Benjamin Franklin said, "Leisure is time for doing something useful; this leisure the diligent man will obtain; but the lazy man, never." Why let our leisure be empty time? On every hand there is provided opportunities for the culture of the soul, the training of the mind, and the building up of the body, in the summer months. He who takes advantage of these opportunities will profit thereby.

Meditation: Summer is a good time to think deeply and seriously about the future. In the forest, on the farm, and by the seaside, one may live with God and learn His way for one's future. Away from traffic and tension, one may have time to commune with himself and with God. It may be in a quiet and secluded place God will speak to the earnest seeker and show him his place in Christian service.

At Home: Many will not have the privilege of spending a vacation away from home.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Kannapolis, N. C.—Kannapolis church had an unusual visitor speak at both services last Sunday. That visitor was Dr. P. K. Li, a Chinese doctor and student of Duke Hospital. He gave a stirring gospel message at the morning service. The evening hour was used by the same speaker to describe the horrors of war in China. A brief history of the Chinese people and government was also given by Dr. Li. The speaker was a guest of our pastor over the week end.

The fourth Sunday was unusual in another way. The debt of the church was paid in full and will be ready for dedication when Dr. Pritchard comes to us on June 25th. This is the first time our church has been entirely clear of debt. Most of the money has been raised to re-paint the church auditorium before dedication. It is believed that all church bills can be paid in full by the dedication day. All former pastors and friends of the church are invited to the services for June 25th.

We are glad to report the great improvement of Gay Nell Price at this time. As you know Gay Nell is a member of our church and is now a patient at the Black Mountain Sanitorium. We are looking forward to her return home some time soon. Gay is such a sweet Christian girl always looking on the bright side of life. To know her is to love her. We are glad that the Great Physician of whom she serves is able to heal both soul and body.

The Woman's Auxiliary is planning to make a great improvement of the church pulpit in the near future. The Auxiliary have a very good business here selling socks under the leadership of our new president, Mrs. J. S. Marshall, assisted by our active vice-president, Mrs. Mahaffey. We are expecting a good year.

The Mother's Day program was enjoyed by a good crowd at Sunday evening service. Mr. Arthur Tutteron sponsored this program which consisted of special songs and poems. We are glad that Little Dorothy Ruth Huss (our new baby at the parsonage) is back from the Duke Hospital and doing fine.

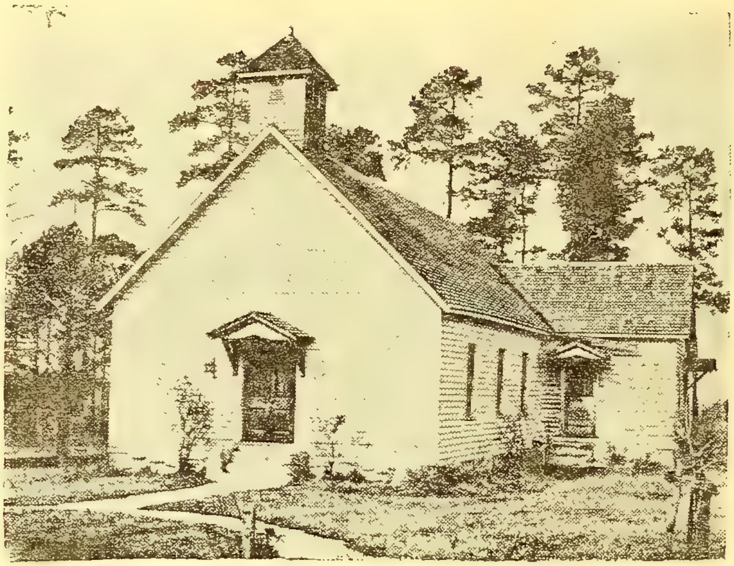
Central Church, Dr. Taylor, Pastor.—Dr. Taylor, Mrs. W. C. Hammer and Frank Redding, Jr., delegates to the unification conference in Kansas City, were speakers at the morning worship hour, May 21. Mrs. Hammer told of the musical contributions at the conference, the notables who were in attendance, the missionary set-up of the new church, particularly as it concerns the women.

Frank Redding described the observance of Holy Communion at the opening of the conference. He also told about the pageant which portrayed the founding and progress of the Methodist Book House.



Spring Valley Church on the Vance Charge, Rev. J. D. Cranford, Pastor. The interior of this church has recently been refinished and the exterior has been repainted.

Dr. Taylor explained the proceedings of two high spots of the conference, namely, ordaining women to the ministry of the church, and the attitude of the church on war.

The "Echo" meeting was enjoyed by a large congregation. At the evening worship Dr. Taylor spoke of the last act of the conference which was the Declaration of Union.

The church is glad to announce that Tom Houts, son of Rev. R. T. Houts who is pastor of the Spray Methodist church, has been employed as director of religious education for Central church. Young Houts is recommended highly for this important post and will direct the summer vacation school which is scheduled for June 5-16. Houts possesses a promising baritone voice and contributed Sullivan's "Holy City" during the morning hour Sunday, May 28. The splendid group of young people at Central church are in dire need of a director and the church is desirous of securing an all-time leader.

Mrs. John Taylor, Herald agent, is directiong a Herald campaign for six month subscribers.

Mrs. Eunice Hayworth returned to Asheboro Sunday decidedly improved after several weeks' treatment in City Memorial Hospital, Winston-Salem. Mrs. W. E. Luck has recovered from an operation in Randolph Hospital, and Mrs. J. F. Lamb is improving from several days' illness.

Miss Elizabeth Henley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Henley, of Main street, is a member of the senior class of the Capital City School of Nursing at Washington, D. C. Miss Henley will continue in her chosen profession in the Capital city.

Sunday morning, May 21, at the 11 o'clock church service, the eleven members of the Asheboro 1939 high school graduating class were honor guests. They were L. D. Burkhead, Jr., James Hendrix, Wallace Black, Sam Taylor, Mary E. Hughes, Frances Ridge, Margaret McCullers, Ola Mae Brower, Frances McDowell, Nellie Hopkins, and Margaret Stowe.

The Women's Bible class which is taught by Mrs. S. W. Presnell met on monthly schedule at the parsonage Thursday evening with Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. W. C. Hendrix and Mrs. J. R. Lutterloh as hostesses.

College St., Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Our pastor has filled both of his regular appointments for us this month, and I think his sermon was one of the best Sunday morning. He spoke to us on "The New Church of Methodist Union." Lots of good points were brought out in his message.

On Thursday night, May 18th our pastor and his wife entertained all the Auxiliaries on the charge at the parsonage, with a reception.

The living room and hall were well filled, and a program was planned for the evening.

Songs were sung, poems and reading were read, business discussed and games played at the close of business discussion.

Each Auxiliary took part in the program. Weavers Chapel had charge of the devotional; Hawkins Chapel, the program, and College St., the business. Miss Alice Mae Whitley and Mr. Mathew Wilson of Weavers Chapel took part in the devotional, Miss Esther Hawkins of Hawkins Chapel was program leader, Miss Grace Pittard played the piano, and Miss Annie Perkinson, vice-president of College St., acted as chairman.

Ideas and plans were discussed such as repairing parsonage, sending delegates to Leadership Training School, and installing a suit of furniture in the parsonage.

Each Auxiliary told of their ways of making up money, and Mrs. H. S. B. Thompson of Vaughn gave an interesting talk on their way of raising money. We also had

Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Trolinger to speak to us and I'm sure their talks were an inspiration to us all. We are glad they are pleased with the progress of our work, and we were indeed glad to have them with us and we hope they will come again real soon.

At the close of the meeting our hostess served us a delicious ice course, and all talked and eat to our heart's content.

Along with many other things I've mentioned I must not forget to congratulate our hostess on how splendid everything was carried out for our comfort and benefit as well as pleasure.

I must also say Mrs. Broome is very much gifted for this kind of work and seems to know just how to get along with us women. Congratulations to her, and I hope that she may continue to succeed. May all that is interested in us and our work pray for us.

Mt. Carmel Church, Rev. L. E. Mabry, Pastor.—Sunday was a very good day at this church. Sunday school attendance was the best it has been this year. Rev. Mr. Mabry preached a very helpful sermon, using for his subject the last phrase of John 3:16.

Memorial and Home Coming. We invite all friends and former pastors of our church to be with us. First Sunday in August Dr. J. E. Pritchard will speak in the afternoon and dedicate new pulpit chairs, carpet and altar fixtures. Rev. I. R. Evans, pastor of Spencer Baptist church will conduct the afternoon devotional. Visiting singers are welcome.

Quarterly Conference for this church and Lextington meets at Mt. Carmel Tuesday night. Nominees for delegate to the next Annual Conference will be elected at this meeting.

Concord, Rev. E. O. Peeler, Pastor.—Since our last report our ladies have sponsored a supper and a flower show. Have had our kitchen in the dining hall of the church remodeled. Also we tried a new project for Mother's Day. We asked people for 25 cents and their mother's name that it might be placed on our church bulletin for Mother's Day. Now we are going to do the same thing for Father's Day. It makes lots of work for our untiring pastor and wife as they print our bulletins each week but they seem to enjoy it. Our Missionary Circles are planning different things. One is planning to put on a supper in the near future; another is planning to sell wax paper, all seem to be anxious to get a good start on the work. A committee was appointed Sunday to work on the Home Coming offering for the Children's Home. The Baraca boys I think cloth a child at the home and they were very busy Sunday getting their money for that. Our delegate to our Annual Conference will be Mrs. J. L. Sides with Mr. Tom Rabon alternate. The women of the B. and S. class have been having some spring cleaning done. Their room looks very pretty and they did not have any trouble getting the work paid for. The members of the Bible Class are going to clean their room. We think our pulpit looks so much better with the beautiful Bible that Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Ketner gave to the church in honor of Mrs. Ketner's mother and fother, Mr. and Mrs. George Holland. We have missed Mr. S. C. Cass from church for two Sundays. He has been very sick with the flu. The first time any of us ever knew him to be sick. I think he said it was the first time he had been sick in 25 years. Yesterday the relatives and a group of friends gathered at the grave of Rev. D. A. Braswell and held a memorial service. He is the only M. P. ministers buried in the local graveyard. The service was conducted by our pastor, Rev. Peeler, assisted by Rev. J. N. Randall, pastor of Mt. Olivet Methodist Church and Rev. D. D. Nash. Two favorite hymns of Mr. Braswell were sung. They were "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord" and "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me." Mr. Peeler read a short account of Mr. Braswell's activities taken from a history of New Hope Church. Mr. Braswell's life means a lot to some of us older folk that were converted and joined the church while he was our pastor. The flowers that were placed on Mr. and Mrs. Braswell's graves by relatives and friends were very beautiful and we are so glad that we knew them both and that we were permitted to be present in the memorial service and pay our respect to such wonderful soldiers who have gone on to their reward.

First Church, Lexington, Rev. L. E. Mabry, Pastor.—Due to the fact that now we have two First Methodist Churches in Lexington, the First M. P. Church will change its name in the near future to the Holt Memorial in honor of the late William Holt, Sr., who donated the land on which the church rested.

The Fireman's Memorial service, an annual event, will be held next Sunday at 11:00 o'clock a. m. at our church with Rev. L. E. Mabry delivering the memorial address. The firemen will also decorate graves of deceased firemen. The public is cordially invited to these services. We are planning to enlarge our church grounds and also to have a church hut in the near future.

Our Sunday school and church attendance is holding up very good at this time. Our pastor has been preaching some very interesting sermons for the past few weeks.

First Church, Winston.—We have recently —within the last three weeks—given the Church Auditorium a complete new dress of paint on the walls and the overhead has been papered, giving it a more attractive appearance. Our people are very happy in this achievement, for they thought at one time, that such a thing could not be done. Our Sunday school is the largest over a period of several years, and the congregations are well over par. We have also papered several rooms and put a new roof on the old parsonage on 7th street, which is being rented. The morale of the church and congregation is the best I have seen it.

I leave Friday morning for San Antonio, Texas, as delegate to the National Convention of the Travelers Protective Association of America, with all expenses paid by the association. Will be gone about 12 days. Rev. Sulon Ferree will supply the pulpit while I am away.

I hope that I can get a copy of last week's Herald along with this week's issue. Come to see our new church some time!

And, oh, yes, my class of girls has papered the study too.

Littleton Charge, Corinth Church, Rev. Mr. Broome, Pastor.—Our annual memorial service was held at this church yesterday. Rev. Mr. Broome delivered a very inspiring message.

The church was decorated very pretty with flowers. After the service the flowers were taken to the cemetery and placed on the graves.

We were very glad to have Rev. Broome's father worship with us yesterday. He is spending some time with Rev. Broome and family. We were also glad to have visitors from Richmond, Va., Roanoke Rapids, Vaughan, Littleton, and Hawkin's Chapel and hope they will come back and worship with us again real soon.

Since our last report Rev. and Mrs. Trollinger, a former pastor, have visited in our community. We were very glad to see them and have them in our home again. For they will always hold a very dear spot in our hearts and we will be glad to have them visit us at any time they can.

Sorry to hear of the illness of Rev. H. S. B. Thompson. We are wishing for him a speedy recovery.

We missed Mrs. Broome from our services yesterday. We hope she can be with us at the next service.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Charge, Rev. J. W. Braxton, Pastor.—If you were at Mt. Pleasant Church the first Sunday it was truly a day well-spent. It was the annual home coming and memorial day. At the morning service Rev. Braxton brought an inspiring message. Lunch was spread on the table put on the church ground and there was plenty of good things to eat. At the afternoon service a memorial service was held for members and all who were buried here that had passed away the last year. A beautiful basket of pink and blue flowers carried by Mildred Black was placed on the altar rail in memory of these with Mr. Floyd Amick calling the names. After this two baskets of white flowers were placed on either side of the large basket to honor the memory of the two pastors buried at Mt. Pleasant. Rev. G. F. Milloway who passed away this year and Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk. These baskets were carried by Rev. Milloway's granddaughter and Rev. Lowdermilk's niece. The address of the afternoon was given by Mr. Clifford Frazier of Greensboro, using as his subject "Light." Mr. Frazier was an interesting and forceful speaker.

Special music was furnished by the girl's quartet and a choir composed of Mt. Pleasant and Pleasant Union churches. The church and Sunday school rooms were well filled for both services. We wish to thank all who took part to make this day one to be remembered and of spiritual benefit to all.

The bulletins for the day were given by Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk in memory of her husband and Rev. Milloway.

Dr. D. E. Everheardt, former president of Louisburg College, will be the pulpit help in our August revival.

Mr. Alfred Alexander is on the sick list and we hope he will soon be better. We missed him at church Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Shoffner are both much improved, also Johnsie Smith is some better and Mrs. Underwood, the mother of Mrs. R. C. Causey, is able to stand on her feet for a few minutes after not walking for two years. Mrs. Maggie Holt is also improved.

Mrs. Trixie Suits and her Sunday school class had a picnic at High Point Lake on Saturday, June 3. All reported a nice time.

Shoals-Pinnacle, Mt. Zion Charge.—On March 25 our hearts were made sad to hear of Mrs. Lucy Owen Bowen's death. She had been in feeble health for a number of years and had been in bed nearly all winter but not seriously sick until about two weeks before her death.

She was one of the charter members of our Auxiliary and always attended church when her health would permit. She enjoyed company very much. We will miss her cheerful face.

Her funeral was conducted from the Baptist church March 27 by her pasotr, Rev. J. D. Morris, assisted by Rev. Ellis Norman. She leaves to mourn their loss her companion, Mr. H. H. Bowen, two daughters, Mrs. Roger Scott and Mrs. Wesley Fowler, two stepdaughters, Miss Roxie Bower and Mrs. Viola Flynn, two stepsons, Robert and Raymond Bowen.

Her body was laid to rest in the cemetery beneath a beautiful mound of flowers.

The Shoals township Sunday School Convention will be held at Fairview Methodist church the third Sunday in June.

The revival meeting will begin the second Sunday in July.

Mr. H. E. Kiger, who has been sick so long, is now seriously ill. His daughter, Miss Lydia Kiger, a nurse of High Point Hospital, is at his bedside.

Mr. Porter Hauser, who graduated at High Point College May 29, left for Washington, D. C. on Thursday, June 1.

Baltimore Church, West Forsyth Charge.—Our pastor, Rev. G. B. Ferree, filled his regular appointment Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock. He read from II Timothy 4th chapter, using as his text the 7th verse, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." His subject, "A Good Soldier of Jesus Christ." Paul said the words of this text as he was nearing the end of his life journey.

Paul's faith never failed, when we think of an old man facing death and writing so challengingly to the young preacher as Paul did to Timothy to preach the word and fulfill his ministry. This "battle-scared veteran of many conflicts for Christ" says to Timothy a last word about himself in which his triumphant faith looks beyond his death to the waiting crown of life. We too should pray with Paul that "we may fight the good fight." That we to might be good soldiers for Jesus.

We are sad to note the sickness in our community. Mr. L. E. Doub, a faithful member was taken sick last Thursday, and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Kelley have been in declining health for several months.

Our revival meeting will begin July 9, with the Rev. S. G. Ferree. He is a very fine young man just entering the ministry. We pray that the Lord may use him in a great way toward winning souls. We trust everybody will be much in prayer for this revival. For the only way to have a real revival is to let it first begin in the hearts of every individual Christian.

The Sunday school still continues to grow. 109 were present Sunday morning.

The monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary met at the home of Mrs. George Nichleson, a very interesting program was held and seems to do very much good.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

Not a few will be deprived of the privilege of attending camps, conferences, and schools for leadership training and personal religious living. In every community, however, there are opportunities for everybody. There are libraries, summer schools, and public meetings conducted by local oganizations for the development of the individual. Many of these activities afford an unusual opportunity to do Christian service.

The Home Church: Church organizations are weak during the summer season. Many Sunday school teachers are absent and the children need to be taught. Here is an opportunity to substitute and not only do a real Christian service but discover one's hidden possibilities for this work. Talent for music may be discovered by serving in the absence of the choir members. Special services may be conducted by individuals or by organizations to which they belong. Hers is a real opportunity for the Christian Endeavor society.

Future Plans: The summer season is a good time to make plans for the future. Leaders of church organizations may plan their work for the winter months during their leisure time. It is a good time to make plans for one's future. A program for life may be planned and the methods of working the plan discovered. There no end of books that will help in most any field of endeavor. We will find that our winter work will not be so difficult if we do more summer planning.

Summer Programs: The church provides opportunities for preparation in Christian service and for Christian service. Schools, conferences, assemblies, and conventions afford opportunities for youth to spend studying vacations, and for trying out various kinds of Christian service. Daily Vacation Bible Schools are opened to the younger and the older are needed to conduct them.

A Consideration: In planning for future vocations, youth should seek those vocations in which they will be able or work out the ideals of the Christian religion. It is important for them to give a large part of themselves and their time to the Church of Christ, no matter what vocation they may choose. The church must not be left out in one's plan for life. Not only does she need full-time religious leaders, but she needs lay leaders who can give a part of their time and ability to Christian service. Consider the church while considering a vocation.

READING ALOUD

By GRENVILLE KLEISER

MANY PEOPLE REALIZE that poetry gains an added beauty by intelligent reading aloud. It is obvious that it should be so, for poetry, even more than rhythmic prose, has a musical element that needs vocal expression, either actual or imaginative.

THOSE PEOPLE WHO LIKE POETRY generally are willing to hear it read aloud. But it is rarely so with prose—largely, one suspects, because the poetry-reader is often a person of education and sensitive imagination, whereas the man or woman who reads prose aloud too often lacks both these gifts.

"Reading aloud" nearly always means "to an audience," whether of one or more: the audience of one is often a defenseless invalid who cannot ecape the well-meant attentions of the determined reader. The audience of many is often a collection of people forming a Mutual Admiration Society.

That is why the art of reading aloud has fallen into disrepute; it is almost never undertaken with the right motive.

THE RIGHT MOTIVE IS INTERPRETATION: not self-glorification, nor a vague idea that it's "the thing to do," but simply to make the author understood more fully.

* * *

IN ORDER TO INTERPRET WELL, the reader should be practiced in the technical accomplishment necessary to interpretation. As a musician must practice in private before he can perform publicly, so the really good reader should practice his art, so that he learns how to modulate his voice properly, control his breathing, cultivate a pleasant tone, varied without being over-emphatic and calm without monotonous.

Reading aloud to oneself gives an ease and confidence which are necessary before one can give real pleasure to other people by reading aloud to them.

THE PRACTICED READER IS A REAL ADDITION TO SOCIETY. One has only to contrast him with some well-meaning persons one has met—persons who have insisted on reading aloud to one—to understand the immense difference between the art as properly practiced and the usual bungling that is substituted for it.

How many of us have suffered from the prosy reader; from the man who gets so absorbed that he goes on reading to himself in silence and leaves his audience waiting; from the over-emphatic reader, or from one who stumbles and corrects himself?

* * *

IT CAN BE ONE OF THE PLEASANTEST OF SOCIAL ARTS. The reader first ascertains the tastes of his audience, and selects a book likely to prove attractive to them. He waits till his hearers are comfortably settled; he reads quietly, unaffectedly, with expression but without over-emphasis, so that he, as a man, is forgotten, and only the book remains, directly conveyed to the mind of the hearers. Only when the reader pauses and closes the book do they realize how perfect a medium for the author his voice and personality have been.

It is soothing, revealing: it draws the audience out of themselves; it interprets fully literature which, to a casual glance, has not been fully revealed. It forms the bond between man and man, author, reader and hearer, that is one of the most precious gifts of literature.

With a seed of love, of truth and of light

Once a friend of Mark Twain's was conversing with him regarding a trerrible affliction of a person known to them both.

"Can you imagine anything worse than having diphtheria and scarlet fever at the same time?"

"Yes," replied Mark, "I can easily imagine worse than that—for instance, rheumatism and St. Vitus dance."

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Lena Ferguson Wynne

Mrs. Lena Ferguson Wynne, wife of Richard H. Wynne, of Gibsonville, died at her home here Thursday morning, April 27, after an illness extending over a period of several weeks.

Mrs. Wynne was the daughter of the late Walter Sherwood Ferguson and Sarah Margaret Blue Ferguson. She was born in Moore county and reared and educated in Greensboro. Mrs. Wynne was one of Gibsonville's most popular and beloved women. Her engaging personality won many friends, and these remained steadfast and true, and the news of her passing, though not unexpected, came as a profound shock. Her life was short but well lived. She was very active in Sunday school and church work, and also in club and civic work. She loved children and was loved in turn by them as her work in the primary department of her Sunday school attests. She loved music passionately and was never too busy to give of her own musical talent when called upon. She loved beauty and showed it always in her surroundings.

Her pastor, Rev. Charles E. Anderson, of the local M. P. church, had charge of the funeral, which was held at the home Saturday afternoon, assisted by a former pastor, Rev. R. C. Stubbins of Greensboro. Two of her favorite songs, "God Moves in a Mysterious Way" and "Abide With Me" were sung by Mrs. W. N. Huff of Elon College. Her body was laid to rest in the Gibsonville cemetery underneath a mound of beautiful flowers carried by members of the church choir, Book Club, Music Club, and neighbors.

To her home to which she was greatly devoted, to her church which she loved, to the community of which she was a part, her death represents a great loss, which we all feel most keenly. Surviving are her husband and one daughter, Miss Margaret Francelia Wynne, of the home, one sister, Mrs. H. C. Trexler of Salisbury, and one niece of Salisbury, Miss Miriam Trexler. A sister, Mrs. Alf Parsons, of Iola, Kansas, died last November.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD
Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts

The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.

Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for Indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

The Social Creed and War

[Extract from an Editorial by Dr. William P. King in the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.]

No falser accusation can be made than the intimation that all conscientious objectors are cowards. The sincere conscientious objector represents the most courageous type. It is not that he is afraid of being killed, but he is not willing to kill. "The religion of Jesus led Him to die for humanity's sake. It never led Him to kill for humanity's sake."

To make the charge of cowardice is to say that the primitive Christians, who renounced war, were cowards.

We must keep in mind that governments, and the mass mind, are not infallible. We know that Pitt was right in his opposition to the war with the American colonies, and that the mass psychology of his country was wrong. We know that Bright was right in his opposition to the Crimean War, and that the misguided populace was wrong. We believe that Lloyd George and Ramsay MacDonald were right in opposing the Boer War, and that their country was wrong. We believe that Abraham Lincoln and General Grant were right in condemning the Mexican War, and that our government was wrong. We believe that President McKinley was right in his first position against the war with Spain, and that the Western Republican senators who were guided by the motive of their own political safety were wrong. We believe that the Christian conscience of America was right in its declaration against war with Mexico, and that the yellow press who wanted to fight Mexico were wrong.

Against all the ranting of militarism, I deliberately take my stand with the truly heroic spirits of the past who by a constant invasion of the dominion of physical force have made all progress possible. I take my stand with Martin Luther in his courageous words that launched the Protestant Reformation: "It is unsafe and injurious to go against one's conscience." I take my stand with the apostolic declaration: "We must obey God rather than men." The famous Supreme Court decision in the case of Professor Macintosh was five to four against the conscientious objector. Since Justice Holmes and Justice Hughes were among the four, if the decision had gone by weight rather than numbers, it would have gone the other way.

In conclusion, it should be understood that there is a difference between a concession to conscientious objectors and absolute pacifism. The paragraph of the Social Creed which defended the right of conscience in the conscientious objector defended also the right of conscience of the soldier.

Our own government, in its most militaristic mood and when most influenced by the war spirit, has exempted the Quakers from service as soldiers. The man who thinks that Quakers are cowards does not know the Quakers and does not know history. As a minority, they have made a contribution of moral and spiritual values to society out of all proportion to their number. They have been the pioneers in moral reform, social betterment, and humanitarian measures, and have bravely borne persecution for conscience' sake and through their sense of loyalty to the Prince of Peace.

Having introduced the resolution calling for a declaration of a Social Creed for the united church, I have felt the more impelled to make a further defense of the item in the creed which bore the brunt of the opposition.

The gratitude of the church is due the committee for the clear and strong declaration which was submitted to the Conference.—Zion's Herald.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

An Omission

In my letter last week concerning the dedicatory service at Spencer, the name of the pastor, Rev. Atlas Ridge, was left out either in the setting of the type or the making up of the forms. Anyway, Brother Ridge is the pastor of this church and has been for the past two years.

The Approaching Annual Conference

Last Thursday, I was in a meeting at Duke University called by Bishop Clare Purcell. The District Superintendents of the Western North Carolina Canference and the secretary of that conference were present as were Dr. W. J. Plint, District Superintendent of the Blue Ridge Atlantic Annual Conference of the M. E. Church. Dr. C. W. Bates who was attending the Pastors' School at Duke was also invited to sit in. Bishop Purcell read a letter from the Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church which outlined the matters of procedure for the new conference as well as the finishing up the old.

The fact was emphasized that the Methodist Protestant Conferences are to be governed by their own discipline during the remainder of this conference year. This means that we are to elect our delegates to conference in the usual way, however, Bishop Purcell emphasized the fact that it is to be understood that the same delegates to our finishing up conference will sit in the new conference also.

Another matter of vital implications is that we will be responsible for making the appointments to our churches this year, subject to the review and approval of the new conference. This means that for the first year Methodist Protestant ministers will be assigned to Methodist Protestant Churches except in cases where the conferences agree to an exchange. Since we are to be responsible for finding a place for our men it becomes necessary for us to hold all of our churches for the coming year. When the count was taken of the three denominations it seemed that there would be thirteen more men coming in than were going out insofar as any one knew. It was decided that each of the former denominations would make an appeal to its churches to hold steady for another year. In the past several years we have had great difficulty in finding places for all of our men. If we do not keep our churches the problem will be intensified.

It was also announced that the place to which a man is assigned this fall would determine his conference membership. If one of our men should be assigned to a church within the boundaries of the present Western North Carolina Conference he automatically becomes a member of that conference. The same is true of the North Carolina Conference.

Bishop Straughn who is to hold our finishing up conference having left the matter in our hands, we agreed that our conference would meet in Grace Church on Wednesday morning, October 18th at 10:00 o'clock. The other two denominations will meet in Greensboro on Thursday morning, October 19th. It was decided for each conference to try to finish its work by Saturday noon so that the conferences could be merged Saturday afternoon and the rest of the work could be done in the united conference. It was decided that all three of the church will hold a Mid-Year meeting in Statesville some time near the first of July, the exact time to be announced a little later.

An Explanation

Not many of us like to be very personal, however, it becomes necessary for me to explain a few things. One is that this letter is being written Sunday night, for the reason that I am entering the Guilford General Hospital here in High Point tomorrow morning at 7:30 o'clock for a tonsilectomy. This made it necessary for me to get a substitute for the dedicatory services at Fallston on next Sunday. Dr. R. M. Andrews has agreed to substitute for me in the Sunday morning service. Bishop Clare Purcell will preach in the afternoon and will dedicate the church. Dr. P. E. Lindley has agreed to substitute for me in the dedicatory sermon at Kannapolis the fourth Sunday in case I am not able to go by that time.

A Sunday Morning At Cedar Falls

This morning was spent with the congregation at Cedar Falls on the Richland charge, Rev. C. L. Grant, pastor. The congregations here, I was told, are never large, but the one today was as good as usual or better and the people seemed interested. It was a pleasure to preach to them. This is Brother Grant's first year on this charge but he has taken hold of the work in a commendable way and the work seems to be moving along nicely. I trust they may finish up well.

Memorial Services In High Point

This afternoon I took part in the memorial services in the High Point cemetery for the six members of our conference who are buried there as follows: Rev. W. R. Lowdermilk, Rev. T. T. Ferree, M.D., Rev. R. E. Andrews, Rev. C. A. Cecil, Rev. J. H. Stowe, and Rev. J. H. Moton. To my mind it was a very impressive occasion and I think very much worthwhile.

Children's Home Anniversary

All of us are now looking forward to the anniversary of the Children's Home which will be on Thursday, June 22nd. Bishop James H. Straughn and Bishop Clare Purcell both are to be there. Let our people come from far and near and bring a good offering both in money and in food for the dinner hour. Do not fail us here.

The Pastors' School

There is space for only a brief reference to our Pastors' school at High Point College last week. While the attendance was not large, those who came were greatly benefitted. The presence of a number of the wives of the pastors added considerably to the pleasure of the occasion. While it is not known now what can be done in regard to perpetuating our school after the conferences are merged we can say this that it has done a lot of good in the past. If it should become necessary to combine it with the one at Duke next year we

A Message In Verse

There is a way to work and rest,
To play and love and pray,
That turns the good into the best,
And speeds the coming day.

There is a way of meeting pain
Of bearing hurt and wrong,
That lifts our losses into gains,
Our sorrows into song.

There is a way to walk with God,
To whom all souls belong,
That makes the narrow wondrous broad,
The feeble strangely strong.

There is a way—for me, and now,
To win new life divine;
Before the Lord of life I bow
And own that way is mine.

A conscience void of offense before God and man, is an inheritance for eternity.—Daniel Webster.

President Pritchard is recovering nicely from his tonsilectomy.

Those attending the Convention of Woman's Work from North Carolina which held its annual session at Westminster, Md., were Mesdames G. R. Brown, W. C. Hammer, G. C. Halton, J. M. Millikan, J. T. Bowman, and Mrs. R. M. Andrews. They report a fine convention.

It now appears that the conference of the former M. P. ministers and delegates will hold a three or four day session instead of one as formerly predicted. And that former M. P. preachers will receive their appointments at this conference, only going into the final sessions of the united Conference.

There is much more uncertainty in the minds of our people than need be about the way the North Carolina Conferences shall merge. The fact is it must be quite clear to those who have given much thought to the problem that there will be but few local mergers for the present and a very few exchanges of pastors—former M. P. preachers as a rule will serve former M. P. churches next year. If this should displease any pastor or church, just bide your time; things will surely work out in a most satisfactory manner. But let's not get in too big a hurry about it.

"We'll see you next week at the High Point College Gym" is doubtless heard very often these days as our people plan to attend the Children's Home Home Coming.

God gives us power to help ourselves and we have many occasions for using it; but he who does nothing else with it is a stingy, sordid, selfish, unprofitable sort of a creature.

Our Subscribers Please

Please examine the label on your Herald to see when your subscription is due to expire. We are not now sending out notices of expirations as heretofore. We are sorry to discontinue this service but have done it because of the expense incurred. We do not want to discontinue your paper, but when we tell you that it costs us four cents per copy for every paper printed you may see why we are so much concerned about this whole matter. We regret so much to cut off a name from our mailing list, but we have no way of knowing who now is taking the paper and wants to continue it, so we just presume if you want the paper you will either renew or send us a card saying you will at such a time. While we do not think much of this manner of handling our subscription list, we do not have the money to stand the cost of doing it differently. Some of our friends have expressed displeasure because we discontinued their paper, the fact is, the editor does not know who takes the Herald, never sees the mailing list at all. This list is worked by another. But the policy was established before we became editor to discontinue all papers unless notified to continue them.

Closing Up the Work of the Church

Judging by the reports now coming to the Herald from the churches we are wondering if pastor and people are really aware of the shortness of the time we have to close up the work of this conference year, and with it the work of the Methodist Protestant Church for all time. If the information we have is correct, we have just about four months in which to wind up the work of this conference year. A time far too brief for such a task; for there surely remains much to be done by both pastor and people in this third of a year. Revival meetings are to be held; pastors' salaries to be raised in full; conference claims to be paid; Herald subsidies and subscriptions far in arrears. There are enough of all these to challenge every earnest church worker's thought and endeavor. Out of an experience of years the writer knows that none of these things ever happen of themselves. And too, the conference year will be something like two weeks shorter this year than usual. These two weeks may carry in their fourteen days most humiliating failure. We doubt that any normal person wants to fail in anything he is trying to do, and for a pastor to fail in this year, the very last year's service he can ever give to the denomination which has meant so much to him, will be a most humiliating experience. For how can we prove that we shall be true to our new pastorate if we have neglected duties which are ours to the old pastorate? If our records will have any meaning at all, they will show just what sort of pastors we are. And it is obvious that the faithfulness and skill exhibited previously will have much to do with the opportunity the pastor may secure in the new church. These lines are written out of an earnest desire to warn all who should be concerned about these matters that it is high time for them to be busy with these tasks.

That One Dollar Subscription Till Conference

You may already know that we are incurring a debt upon the annual conference each week we send out the Herald and that the annual conference will pay this debt. But if all our pastors and Herald agents will get busy and send in the Herald subsidy for each pastoral charge and also secure a batch of one dollar subscriptions, this indebtedness will not be so great when conference meets. How about it pastor? Prove your interest by rallying to this appeal and let us keep the debt down as low as possible. Our proposal is to print one issue of the Herald after conference, giving the full proceedings of that conference with the plan of appointments for this year. Since this will absolutely be our last conference we believe every loyal friend of the church will want to make this project succeed. Let us hear from the friends of the Herald for it has sponsored and helped to put over every worthwhile move the North Carolina Conference has undertaken in forty years.

GRATEFUL FOR TRUTH

By Rev. W. A. Ledford

The nations of the world are following the Roman poet Virgil in singing the praises of arms, and heroes of bloody battle-fields, rather than joining in with the Apostle Paul, and the Hebrew people in extoling faith. We find no such remembrances to the unknown heroes of faith, as we find to the "Unknown Soldier" in Arlington National Cemetery. I am not raising my voice against heroes on any battlefield; whether it be in war between nations, or in fields of sport, or industry: what I am pleading for is a wider appreciation of the heroes of faith, whom Jesus called the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and the good seed of the Kingdom.

Paul said in his Epistle to the Romans, "First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is proclaimed throughout the whole world." Paul began all his letters, except the one to the Galatians, with words of commendation and thanksgiving. He was free from rhetorical arts, and flattery in his endeavors to woo his readers. Yet his custom was to select things that were praiseworthy, and see the best in all individuals and churches. Happy, if we would always look for the good, and begin all things with thanksgiving and blessings. Never do or say a thing that we could not invoke the blessings of Almighty God upon.

The way of beginning with blessings and thanksgiving is not an impossible dream, but was the fixed habit of our Lord. When he fed the five thousand men, besides the women and children in the desert place, he paused for the people to be orderly seated, and then he returned thanks. How tempting amid great throngs of people, and pushed for time to sit down and eat one at a time, without returning thanks to the giver of every good and perfect gift. That tense evening in the upper room, after Judas had gone out to betray his Lord, and Peter's denials a few hours ahead ,with the agony down in Gethsemane, and suffering on Calvary less than a day before him, Jesus took bread and the cup, returning thanks, instituted the Holy Communion. He was known to the disciples at Emmaus in the breaking of the bread. Perhaps, we are better known at our tables than anywhere else.

Nathanael said, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" The question could have been raised concerning Rome in Paul's time. Here, reputed to have been the most wicked man who ever lived, was on the throne, and historians describe Rome then as a cesspool of iniquity and crime. Yes, Jesus Christ came out of Nazareth, and the reports of the faith of the Christians in Rome were proclaimed throughout the whole world. It was nothing short of miraculous that faith was found in Rome, and saints there in Caesar's household. It was living illustrations that the Gospel is the power of God unto slavation to every one that believeth. It conquered all mighty Rome could produce. "This is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith." I John 5:4.

We are grateful that this group of faithful Christians, did not yield to the temptation of worshipping behind closed doors, and keep their discipleship a secret, as did Joseph of Arimathaea. The place for Christians is not behind closed doors, except in his private devotions; but out in the open, engaged in holy crusades for their Lord, and His Kingdom. Jesus said, "Go into all the world and make disciples of all nations . . . lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." How ridiculous to seek shelter behind the closed doors, and refuge in secrecy, when we have a Companion along with us, possessing all power that is both on earth and in heaven.

The Christians in Rome, who were the leaven for that mighty empire; and those heroes of faith enshrined in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, were out in the open. They were in the presence of almost insurmountable obstacles, but the record is that they through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, and come out more than conquerors through Him that loved us, and gave Himself for us. My prayer is that we Methodists may have faith that is needed for the days just ahead of us.

Elizabeth Vera Idol

IN MEMORIAM

(Introduction)

By Alfred Lord Tennyson

In Memoriam should be classed with three other great elegies in English poetry, Milton's Lycidas, Shelley's Adonais, and Arnold's Thyrsis. It was written in memory of Tennyson's dearest friend, Arthur Henry Hallam, the gifted son of a famous historian, Henry Hallam. The two were schoolmates at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1828, then became devoted friends, making summer trips together, and Hallam spent many holidays in Tennyson's home. Their friendship was further strengthened by Hallam's engagement to Tennyson's sister Emily. Then on September 15, 1833, Hallam died suddenly at Vienna and his body was brought home to England for burial in the chancel of Clevedon Church in Somersetshire.

Tennyson's grief was deep and sincere, and this poem was his attempt to find surcease from his sorrow. He himself said of the poem: ''The different moods of sorrow as in a drama are dramatically given, and my conviction that fear, doubts, and suffering will find answer and relief only through Faith in a God of Love.''

The action of the poem begins with the death of Hallam and extends into the spring of 1838. The lyrics written without any view of weaving them into a whole were composed over a period of seventeen years, and reveals the various degrees of Tennyson's sorrow and his various attitudes toward life, death, and immortality. Henry Van Dyke ranks the poem as ''the greatest elegy of the nineteenth century, the longest and most important of Tennyson's poems on the problems of doubt and faith, the poem in which he made the strongest and widest impression on contemporary thought.''

In Memoriam does not follow all the conventions of an elegy but throughout there runs the question proposed by all elegaic poetry, ''If a man die shall he live again?'' And it was the orthodox Christian answer to this question that Tennyson sought for seventeen years, and finally answered in the opening section of the poem, the section, however, which he wrote seventeen years from the time he began the poem. There is an approach to this same conviction at the very end of the poem as he speaks of

''That God, which ever lives and loves,
One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves.''

But the final conviction that faith alone can discover the eternal purpose of God and solve the problem of immortality lies in those stanzas which introduce the poem.

Tennyson used as a form for this poem a stanza form which he at first believed was his own invention, but he discovered that it had been used in the Elizabethan period by Phillip Sidney, Ben Jonson, and others, and by many later poets. Tennyson makes it peculiarly his own by giving to it a slow, grave music especially suited to the subject which he had chosen. Throughout the entire piece there is a fine quality of reverence and faith, but it reaches a high water mark with the opening lines:

''Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove.''

Tennyson is the most representative poet of his age, and to understand this poem fully it is necessary to review the science, the philosophy, and the religion of the time in England. Tennyson was influenced by the religious unrest of his day and his exultant cry of faith was the result of a long struggle with doubt and questioning, a struggle that finally saw God conqueror of His own creation, Death;

''Thou wilt not leave us in the dust:
Thou madest man, he knows not why,
He thinks he was not made to die;
And thou hast made him: thou art just.

No poet has written more convincingly of faith as fulfilling the Biblical definition of ''the substance of things hoped for,'' but he builds that faith as he must, on knowledge—a knowledge which must have as its basic ingredient reverence:

''We have but faith: we cannot know;
For knowledge is of things we see;
And yet we trust it comes from thee,
A beam in darkness: let it grow.

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music as before,

But vaster.''

The ultimate answer to the question set forth in the poem is definitely expressed:

''Forgive my grief for one removed,
Thy creature, whom I found so fair.
I trust he lives in thee, and there
I find him worthier to be loved.''

The poem ends in a quietly reverent prayer for wisdom to be given by One who is all-wise:

''Forgive these wild and wandering cries,
Confusions of a wasted youth;
Forgive them where they fail in truth,
And in thy wisdom make me wise.''

Sunday School Lesson

PAUL WRITES PERSONAL LETTERS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, June 18

By Rev. O. L. Easter

Lesson Text—2 Timothy 1:1-6; Philemon 1-7, 21, 22.

Golden Text—Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. 2 Timothy 2:15.

As we get deeper into the life and accomplishments of St. Paul we are compelled to be impressed with the remarkableness of his ability and character. As we see him with passionate zeal hurry from one province to another, from continent to continent, over land and sea, in pursuit of the object to which he was devoted we are ready to admit that this Golden Text written by Paul to young Timothy is not trite platitude preached by him; rather, it is the very philosophy and motive of his own life finding expression in a letter. Throughout the whole chain of his self-revealing letters one ruling purpose seems to stand out in his mind to drive him ever on through shipwreak, imprisonment, and even death—it was to fight the good fight and so keep the faith as to be approved unto God. "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel"; this was the motive that drove him on. He felt that he had a world of new truths to utter and that the salvation of mankind depended on their utterance. He knew himself called to make Christ known to as many of his fellow creatures as his uttermost exertions could enable him to reach. It was this that made him so impetuous in his movements, so blind to danger, so contemptuous of suffering. "None of these things move me, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God."

Overwhelming as is this impression of his travels and exploits in the gospel, this impression is greatly deepened when we remember that he was at the same time the greatest thinker of his age, if not of any age, and, in the midst of his outward labors, was producing writings which have ever since been among the mightiest intellectual forces of the world, and are still growing in their influence. Here Paul rises above all other evangelists and missionaries. Some of them may have approached him in certain respects—Xavier or Livingston in the world-conquering instinct, St. Bernard or Whitefield in earnestness and activity. But few of these men added a single new idea to the world's stock of beliefs, while Paul equaled or excelled them in their special line, and gave to mankind a world of new thought.

If his epistles could perish, the loss to literature would be the greatest possible with only one exception—that of the Gospels. They have quickened the mind of the Church as no other writings have done, and scattered in the soil of the world hundreds of seeds the fruit of which are now the general possession of mankind. Yet in writing these epistles Paul probably had little idea of the part they were to play in the future. They were written from the heart of an eager father for his Christian babes who were in some particular danger or need. They were part of his day's work. Just as he sailed over sea and trudged over land to revisit his converts, or sent Timothy to carry his counsels and news from him, so, when these means were not available, he would send a letter with the same design. Paul seemed to have believed that if he lit the lamp of the gospel here and there over vast areas, the light would spread of itself by its own virtue and power. In his dreams he saw men beckoning him to new countries and where he could not go he his his epistles.

These epistles are valuable, of course, for their teachings and the effect they produced upon the early churches but for us they are also invaluable in portraying the great life of St. Paul. Paul is visible in his letters as he releases the truths of which he himself is the embodiment. As there are some preachers greater than their sermons, and the principal gain of their hearers, in listening to them, is obtained in the inspiring glimpses they obtain of a great and sanctified personality, so the best thing in the writings of Paul is Paul himself, or rather the grace of God in him. The words of Mrs. Browning are applicable to our approach to the books or epistles of the great St. Paul:

> "It is when we gloriously forget ourselves,
> And plunge soul-forward, headlong,
> Into a book's profound and impassioned soul
> For its beauty, and salt of truth—
> 'Tis then we get the right good from a book."

ALSO GOOD FOR THOSE UNDER 70

In Oklahoma City an organization whose 800 members are 70 years old or more, are maintaining a "school of maturates" to learn how to live to be 100 years old. Following are the six principal rules agreed upon to reach that objective:

Taking a walk in the open air each day.

Keeping the blood alkalinized by managed diet.

Attending church or making a social call at least once a week.

Pursuing a personal hobby or light daily task.

Keeping cheerful.

Maintaining faith in life, people, and the Infinite Goodness.—R. Telescope.

THE PREACHER FACES A NEW WORLD!
Has He Anything To Say?

By KARL QUIMBY

While preaching is always highly personal, it is also deeply rooted in history. If we are to understand great preachers, their motives and their message, we shall need to see their total ministry against the illuminating background of the age in which they lived. No prophet can live in isolation, apart from the world of his day. The true prophet has to live in the very heart of his contemporary world. One can never fully appreciate the First Epistle of John until the peculiar tenets of Cerinthus are known and their strong opposition to the Christian faith comprehended. One can hardly know Paul's letter to the Galatians until the upsetting work of the Jewish emissaries is understood. They went out from Jerusalem dogging Paul's every footstep and constantly discredited his apostleship. Paul's letter is a defense of his ministry. In like manner, one cannot perceive the magnitude or the significance of the ministry of either Luther or Wesley apart from an intimate knowledge of church affairs in Europe in the case of the one, or the condition of English society in the case of the other. Each period in human history has its own peculiar requirements, and the present time is no exception. The preacher today cannot afford to ignore, except at his peril, the tremendous events of these exciting days.

Until recently the one outstanding characteristic of our age was its unbounded optimism. But now we live in a world of stark realism and dark pessimism. The more the pages of modern history unfold, the darker the scene becomes. Again, the pre-war world was essentially a stable world. It was firmly grounded in a widening economic system which touched the ends of the earth. Progress seemed evident in every realm of human endeavor. Suddenly a fairly peaceful world became volcanic, eruptive. Evil forces began their deadly work at incredible speed. Now we live in a mad world of unrestrained force. Perhaps the greatest change in this modern age is the mazing ethical and moral surrender. Law and order have given way to the will of economic and political dictators. It is not that civilization is endangered; it is the slow but painful realization that civilization, as we have known it, is gone. Right, justice, human considerations, are all secondary factors in this furious military world. The human individual is handed over to the state, to the mass. Years of darkness, stagnation, are now forming! And no man knows when the end will be!

So much for the world in which the preacher lives. Has he anything to say of major importance? No one answer is adequate, but may I venture a few suggestions?

Among other things, the preacher will do well to understand the prevailing moods of the new world which he faces. What, then, does the present require of the preacher?

First—it must be apparent that no superficial appeal will do. This is the time when experience and maturity of thought do count. In a stable world, where the tomorrows are only reprints of today, where continuity remains unbroken from year to year, the prime qualities in a preacher were enthusiasm, energy, and a forceful personality. The preacher of that day found his chief obstacles in the apathy of the pew and the indifference of the public. There was no opposition. Consequently he had to be a man of aggressive action, of clever resourcefulness in plans, and a popular man-about-town type. Conditions favored the "go-getter" whose energy and enthusiasms make it possible for him to "put it over." The interests of the church were in sharp competition in the minds of men with other concerns of life. Hence the striking and charming personality of the preacher often became the deciding factor. There is a strong hold-over of this point of view through the church yet. This is evident in the way many churches pick their new ministers. Of course, new ministers to succeed must have charm and personality. Their vision of truth, their understanding of the nature of the kingdom, and their insight into the meaning of the gospel, as well as their mastery of tested procedures, are often matters of secondary consideration. How many times do youthfulness and charm receive attention at the expense of experience and wisdom!

As an illustration of this, consider how a large number of more experienced men are making unusual records. Dr. Henry Howard completed his ministry in Australia, and retired. Then he came to New York on a visit. He preached. The people instantly discovered a voice with understanding. He was called to a large Presbyterian church and had the most conspicuous ministry of his entire career. The experience and wisdom of years went into that pastorate. Never anything cheap, clever, or superficial was admitted. Here the people found the "wisdom-about-life" they needed. The preacher spoke out of wide experience and deep understanding which only years of patient toil and ceaseless study make possible. Right now there comes to my attention the singular fact of six men, all beyond sixty years of age, who are doing the most constructive work of their lives. They know. They proceed with no faltering step. They create confidence. The preacher to this troubled age must have a message gained by careful study, deep meditation, and re-enforced by great courage. This is not to be construed as a blanket approval of all old men, or a general discount to promising young men, but it does mean that tested methods and proved procedures are vital to any permanent success today.

Second—In the pre-war world, various competing programs struggled to capture the attention of men. Today the center is held by the conflict of major ideas. It is one philosophy against another. Therefore, more youthful exhortation, while very pleasant and at time soothing, is utterly inadequate, and soon loses its force. People are today facing life's deepest problems and asking the most fundamental questions. This is no time for inexperienced guidance. Rather, it is vital for every congregation to face afresh the basic Christian assumptions, and seek to interpret their meaning against the sinister background of this war-torn age. Christianity has lost its foothold in many a life and over wide areas of living. It is too often taken for granted and frequently too little understood. It is so frequent an assumption to be considered rather than a conviction to be followed. That is why so many of our people are spiritually illiterate. Preaching of the teaching, interpreting type was never more needed than now. Until we have a wider base of understanding of the great truths of the Christian religion, both personal and social, we shall be unable to build that noble superstructure of social and ethical practice so many of the younger men crave today.

Third—Preaching should always be rooted in the present needs of men. One of the gravest charges against the church is that it is not relevant; that it does not touch life effectively. This means that the preacher will have to preach, not more sermons, but to living people of living issues. Straw men must depart and reality, even tragic reality, enter. It was interesting to hear Dr. Emil Brunner recently place practical stress on the pastoral ministry. At no point is the preacher such a wise pastor as when he stands in the pulpit. If he has lived with his people, they have shown him their problems, revealed to him their needs, indicated where they live, and laid bare their souls. Then as he enters the pulpit, with these problems in the foreground of his thought, with all the history of Christian experience behind him, he may speak directly to them. All he has to say will apply to their problems. He will preach to their daily needs. He will speak in a tone that has authority. After a Sunday morning service, a woman came to the preacher saying, ''Why, you speak as though you understood us.'' That is real preaching!

Fourth—Perhaps the preacher can do most for his people by getting away from them. That is, getting far enough away to gain perspective, to discover reliable methods of helping them, and to lay hold of inexhaustible resources. Jesus went to the mountain for prayer and meditation in order to be able to come again with healing power. This principle of alternation lies at the heart of every successful ministry. Every preacher owes his mornings to his study, his afternoons to his field, and his evenings to contacts, conferences, committees. It is instructive to sail the ocean and watch the captain. He takes the best care of the passengers by going away from them. He spends much of his time on the bridge. From that vantage point he directs the course of the ship and discerns shifting currents. The captain knows where he is going and why. Uncertainty and confusion are never present. Compare that with modern preaching!

Fifth—Preaching today demands horizon. The pathetic weakness of many local churches is that they are too local. It is exceedingly easy for a church to become self-centered. In fact, the general indisposition of church after church actually to envisage the kingdom of God spells our impotency. Too often, maintaining the institution gets more attention than advancing the kingdom. Carrying out the will of the officials, including the pastoral committee, takes priority over discovering the will of God. Unless the preacher sees all the kingdoms of this world, we may rest assured the people never will. Where there is no vision, the people perish. For ministers to go abroad, to travel, is not self indulgence. It is the very finest equipment for effective service. The ecumenical outlook should first take shape in the pulpit. The vision of fields white unto the harvest should never fade. The vision of world Christian unity will be attained only so far as it is taught, explained, and interpreted by a pulpit that sees it with increasing zeal as a growing possibility. The preacher stands as the nexus between the pew and the wider world of Christian attainment.—Zion's Herald.

MINISTER'S PRIVILEGES IN SERVICE

The Minister As Shepherd

If all the tasks of the ministry were simplified by elimination until only two remained, one of them would be pastoral visitation, house to house, hospital to hospital, office to office. Much might be said about calling. We shall suggest two things as basic. First, call. Second, call with a purpose.

Call. There should be a calling plan. Of course no plan will fit every situation. For those who do not have a better plan we suggest the following:

Call in every home not less than once a year. Then people cannot say, ''The preacher has never called on me.'' All of us have heard that about ourselves or our predecessors. Keep a check list so you miss no family. Leave a card when they are not home.

Call on chronic invalids, shut-ins, aged and crippled people once a quarter, preferably at the beginning of the quarter when the Upper Room is timely. Your shut-ins will become accustomed to looking for it. You thus take the church into their oft-times dreary and spiritually barren lives.

Call on the definitely sick once a week or oftener. Take one day each week, perhaps Wednesday, and use that afternoon for this purpose. You will discover that people begin to anticipate your coming. If you must miss them on your regular day because of a District Meeting, a word of explanation will be accepted.

Call on new families in the community and strangers who have attended church. Do this soon. Many of these calls do not bring results, but the only way to find out religious interests or needs is to go and see.

At least once in a pastorate it is very helpful to call on men and women where they are employed.

We have heard of preachers who graciously announce that the people may feel free to call them any time, day or night, then let the matter rest there. They have taken professionalism seriously, arguing that people call the doctor or lawyers when they need them. Why not the preacher? It is a good argument. But we will find that only the man who has revealed in his house-to-house visitation that he has something to contribute as a spiritual counselor will have many calls. When the members come to see in their preacher a man of understanding friendship, good counsel, spiritual strength, and one who can keep a confidence, only then will they call him as they call the physician.

Call with a purpose. Discouraged and sick folk need to be cheered. Their minds need to be pointed God-ward. They desperately need the ''peace which passeth understanding.'' A back-slapping, funny-story-telling, cheap-optimism cheer is not enough to leave. The preacher who really is a messenger of Christ has the greatest good-cheer tonic in the world. It is the gospel, adapted to the situation as he finds it. Sick people think too much about themselves. Help them think of God. Nothing else has such power to lift the broken in spirit.

But much of our calling is in homes. Every home is a new situation. One never knows what he will meet. Constantly he should seek the guidance of the Spirit as he goes up the front steps. Let him be alert somehow to get in a word for the church and the religious life. This may become a fine art. Let the preacher be interested in the family. He has not come to talk about himself, but to learn about people. His is the task to relate the church to whatever human interest or situation appears. The alert pastor will leave few homes with a sense of futility. Calling is basic in ministerial efficiency.

The Minister In the Community

The question of community leadership by the local pastor is one that is determined largely by the man's conception of his work. There are, in addition, extra-personal factors, such as the size of a community or a church and the cooperation of other churches and various secular organizations. These operate with varying degrees of opportunity and restriction upon the quality and amount of leadership given or desired. However, these influences may be discounted to a large extent. A minister can win a position of leadership, if he so desires. The very nature of his calling puts him to the forefront. His good will, his friendliness, and the earnestness with which he works, will stamp him as one to be trusted and followed.

The main question is not, can the minister be a leader, but, in what manner shall be make effective use of the preeminent position society accorded him when he proves worthy of it?

Those of us who are younger in years often become impatient with our brethren who scrupulously avoid touching the world with their mental and moral skirts. In like manner we are out of symathy frequently with those who merely act as coaches, while someone else hits the ball. We crave to be in the thick of the game, knock a social home run once in a while ourselves, although it may mean an altogether too literal force-out at home plate by the pastoral relations committee.

Yet there comes other moments when the pale cast of thought makes us humble. We realize that we are engaged in a social and a gigantic work. The God of men has not called us to be isolated individuals seeking selfish glory, not to be superhuman beings attempting a superhuman load. We become aware, when we are most honest with self, that "there is no limit to the good a man can do, if he doesn't care who gets the credit." And, "great leadership doesn't consist of doing ten men's work but in getting ten men to do work." However pleasant it may be to toy with the thought of leading the victorious hosts at daily Armageddons, it becomes clearer to us as we grow in grace and years that our work as ministers of Jesus Christ will be most effective when applied indirectly.

So it seems that, while direct projection of the minister into the battlefront is sometimes good for his soul and does prove his own position, a far more effective type of community leadership is derived when he permits his thoughts, saturated as they should be with the righteousness of God, to flow out through the lives of others. The good he would do alone now becomes multiplied many times.

Conclusion

By telepathic grape-vine, we hear someone say, "such things are all right on a large charge, but can not be put into practice on a small rural field." This committee is of the conviction that either these or similar standards can be made the methods of living of any pastor who sees that, though he may have a small church, no minister of Jesus Christ has a small job. We are not chauffeurs for community meetings, we are not janitors, we are not general handy men for chores of various kinds. When we get the conviction that we have the biggest task in the community, others will follow our leadership in zealously guarding our time and energy for Kingdom building. This committee confesses that we have not fully attained our ideal, but that we are plodding steadily in that direction and ask you to join us in this quest.—The Pastor's Journal.

FOR THE CIRCUIT

By A. J. Walton

General Board of Christian Education,
Nashville, Tenn.

Building a spiritually vital program is a deeply religious and educational experience for the pastor and his workers. The program of action they develop is an expression of their Christian spirit and vision. It reveals their devotion and skill in sharing with Jesus in building His Kingdom.

To make a spritually vital program of work for the local church is the concern of all its members. Each should feel a responsibility for providing those services and activities which will help everyone in the community to know more of Jesus Christ as His Saviour and to live a truly Christian life.

It is not practical for the whole membership to meet, even in the small church, and give the necessary time to plan such a program. Therefore the membership sets aside certain official workers whose duty and privilege it is to receive suggestions from all who are interested and use their best judgment and skill in creating a program which will be most helpful.

These officials are chosen to work closely with the pastor who has training and experience in planning helpful procedures and activities for making Christian work effective. The local workers know the intimate details of community need, while the pastor sees these things in the light of the broad program of the entire church. Together they can protect every interest and need.

The pastor of small churches has oversight of several churches and many phases of work. This makes it necessary to plan carefully with the leaders for long periods of time, giving them as much help as possible in planning, and meeting with them occasionally to see what progress they are making. For the most part they must depend upon the workers to see that the work goes on helpfully.

Occasionally the pastor cannot give time to the workers of the local congregation to help them plan the program needed. In such a situation he should train some one to take over the responsibility of guiding the group. Usually this should be the superintendent.

The following suggestions can be modified as needed by the pastor and used as a basis for planning better programs.

To begin, the pastor will seek to understand the situation in the church and community and see what is needed to help people to be more Christlike. This knowledge will help him to see ways for the church to do better work. He will list the improvements he thinks useful and plan how each might be undertaken to best advantage.

He will then meet with the workers of the church and together they will study the situation and make a list of all the changes (in persons and community) thought of by every one to insure Christian growth. They will plan the teaching, study, worship, work, and activities needed to bring about the changes desired.

When these plans are ready they should be explained to the congregation with helpful enthusiasm and understanding to enlist cooperation and working support.

Workers will continue to keep these things in their proper order before the various meetings and groups in the church to maintain interest and secure continuous activity. They will also find it very helpful to meet at least once a month to discuss the progress made and the revisions or additions that are necessary.

It is better to emphasize a few items clearly each month than to confuse and burden the members with too many unorganized activities. Enthusiasm grows when, with understanding, we work regularly and see real results for our efforts. We must be certain to work in the way that will insure enthusiasm and joy, otherwise we will destroy helpful work and the vital life of the church.

In making the circuit church program, the workers will find it helpful to follow some such series of questions as the following:

1. Make a careful appraisal or study of all the activities of the church.
   Which are helpful?
   Which have lose their pleasure in the doing?
   What weakness is there?
2. Study the community to discover what is needed most to help people and organizations to be wholesomely Christian.
   What are the community organizations which help?
   Which hinder Christian growth?
   What people are not reached and served by the church?
   How far does our responsibility reach?
   What needs are to be met?
3. Study everything done by all agencies.
   What is being done to help people to receive the needed knowledge of God?
   What is the church doing to help people to gain the needed skill and practice in Christian living and service?
   Are we seeking to reach the aims of Christian education?
   What agencies are helping to make life more worthwhile and abundant? How?
4. Programs are not effective unless persons are made responsible for each phase of work.
   Who are these persons?
   What is each to do?
5. There must be regular reports of progress and difficulties encountered.
   When shall we meet to study these reports?
   How shall we deal with difficulties?
6. There are available materials to help us in our work.
   What and where secured?
   How best used?
   Who shall secure this help for us?
7. What are the next steps?
   What plans needed to make the step?
   What persons will be involved?
   How may we help them get ready for action?
8. What are the basic areas of Kingdom work?
   Do our plans provide for each of the following:
   Preaching the word.
   Teaching the word.
   Enlisting persons for Christ.
   Healing and helpful service.
   The Fellowship function.
   Requires organization.
9. How are the results of the program to be discovered?
   Did we reach the goal we set?
   Were helpful changes made?

When we make changes we have seen that there is a better aim or goal in view. We must see this goal clearly before planning the program, and keep it life-centered and not program-centered.

These nine general areas should not be considered at every meeting and perhaps not all at any meeting. The leader should know conditoins well enough to look over the questions and arrange his own agenda for the meeting.—The Pastor's Journal.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

James Edward Crook

James Edward Crook was born in 1886 and went to his reward April 3, 1939. Brother Crook was a resident of the Cross Anchor community all of his life, being born and raised here. The entire family attended Yarborough's Chapel church. A devoted husband and father, whose loss is greatly mourned, both by them and the entire community.

Brother Crook is survived by his wife, Alma Dunaway Crook, and eight children: Mrs. Mattie Bell Brown, Mrs. Edith Hughes, Catharine Crook, Hallie Crook, Virginia Crook, and Edna Frances Crook; and two sons, C. B. Crook and Ben Crook.

The funeral was conducted at Yarborough's Chapel by the writer.

THURMAN H. VICKERY.

Mrs. Martha D. Gordon

Mrs. Martha D. Gordon was born on the 22nd day of May, 1861, and departed this life on the 13th day of April, 1939.

She was married to the late N. W. Gordon on the 26th day of April, 1886, and to this union were born the following named children, who, together with 17 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, survive her: Mrs. Letty Gordon Pegram, of Stokesdale; R. C. Gordon, of Summerfield; Mrs. Curtis Jones, R. F. D., Kernersville; Mrs. Lois Harrison, of Kernersville, and Whitfield N. Gordon of California.

Immediately following their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon made their home at the old Gordon homeplace, where they lived together in happy devotion to each other and their home until the 9th day of February, 1938, when the beloved father and husband was called from the labors of earth to refreshment in heaven. Mrs. Gordon was a loyal member of Bethel church from early childhood. She was a kind and sympathetic neighbor, a loving wife, and a most devoted mother.

Martha D. Gordon is not dead. Her physical being merely sleeps. Her spirit has truly answered the summons to join her beloved husband in that home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, and where they shall live through all the eternal ages—at home with God.

Funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. A. Burgess, assisted by Rev. C. B. Way, and the body was laid to rest in Bethel cemetery.

At Camp

Last week we spent a few days in a camp on the banks of the Catawba river near Statesville, N. C., with 60 of our children who have no homes to which they could go for a brief outing. This camp was furnished us through the kindness of Supt. J. B. Johnston of Barium Spring Orphanage. Mr. Johnston and his workers and children were exceedingly kind to us. And on Thursday evening the Men's Bible class of Broad Street Methodist church, Statesville, came out to the camp with some musicians and with ice cream, and gave our entire group a wonderful treat. We are greatly indebted to Barium Spring Orphanage and to this Men's Bible class for a very fine outing for over 60 of us.

Away for a Week

This week we are in Pennsylvania visiting Mrs. Dixon's people in and around Ligonier, Pa. We expect to return home on Saturday, June 17.

A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

On Saturday afternoon there will be the parade down the Main Street of High Point. The many religious organizations of the town will join the Endeavorers in a big parade. Too, a number of floats will be entered by the business men of the town in addition to those by the societies, unions and districts of Christian Endeavor in the State. The parade will begin at three o'clock.

LOOKING BACKWARD—THINKING FORWARD

By MRS. FRED G. HOLLOWAY

Looking backward—when are we likely to do it? Perhaps when we have reached a high place in our experience. I remember standing, last summer, on the shore of a beautiful lake, surrounded by towering mountains. Then we took a train which climbed up and up into those mountains. As we climbed we looked back on the scene below us, saw the place where we had stood, but saw also much more from the height we had reached. And when we had climbed to the highest point from which we could look back, the view was most entrancing of all. So, we like to sit down, when we have reached some high place in our life's experience, and look back at the way over which we have come.

Or perhaps we look back when we have reached a turning point in our lives. Before we branch off into new paths which will take us away from a path we have traveled for a long while, we stop and look back.

When we have brought a series of events in life to a joyful and triumphant conclusion, we enjoy looking back to review our success. Or when a tragic failure in some field has been our experience, we look back with sorrow and regret over the paths that led to the tragedy.

Is it well that we should thus take time to look backward across the days of our years? Yes, and for the following reasons:

First, as we see the way of our lives as it stretched behind us, we get a whole view. We see the beautiful places of happy memory, and rejoice. We see ugly spots, and are sad because they scar the landscape, and can never be removed. But if we are thoughtful and wise we profit by those scars, and resolve that they shall not appear on our future paths.

Second, we get a right perspective on the whole scene as we look back. Events assume their correct proportionate size. If we have made mountains of mole hills when we were close beside them, we now see our mistake. Some times events that loom large when we are close, seem so trivial as to be scarcely noticeable when we look back. On the other hand, we may see that events that we passed by as of little consequence have had great effect on our lives.

Third, we profit by looking back because we see whether our course has been straight, or whether it has changed as we traveled, either for good or ill. Some times we know by no other way than looking back, as to whether we have changed our course. I recall, again from a summer vacation, standing in the stern of a ship. We were watching the beautiful colors in the wake of the ship—the creamy foam and the indescribable phosphorescent blue, when someone said, "See, we are changing our course," for the wake of the ship showed a decided turn in the ship's direction. Yet in no other way than by looking backward could we have known this, for we were entirely out of sight of land.

Finally, looking backward is profitable because if we look backward over the past, it is practically certain that we must be in a quiet, meditative mood. Periods of quiet contemplation and meditation are sorely needed in our busy, bustling routine of every day living. And if looking backward brought us nothing but periods of quiet thoughtfulness, it would be a worthwhile occupation.

But, for one to look backward forever is to become a dreamer. So, after we have looked backward, we must turn our faces forward, whether the look ahead be pleasant or difficult. Also, we shall say thinking forward, because a look ahead must be purposeful.

Youth sometimes accuses those of older years of looking backward too much—"living in the past." This is at least partly natural, for age has an interesting and extensive past over which to roam, while youth has not.

But even with older people, the look ahead ought still to be purposeful and interesting. If they have lived their lives with high ethical and spiritual ideals, with hope and faith and love, they can say with the poet,

"The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made."

Especially ought this be true of Christian people, who are—or should be—building constantly, on Christian faith, spiritual experiences which are not only for this life but for eternity.

Jesus is our best example of one who kept a perfect balance between the backward look and the forward thought. How do we know that Jesus thought often of His early years? By His constant references to activities of the home and to home life; viz., bread-making, patching, lighting of candles, work in the carpenter's shop, children's play in the fields or in the market place, mothers busy at household tasks.

"When Jesus was a little thing,
His mother in her hood of blue,
Called to Him through the dusk of spring,
"Jesus, My Jesus, where are you?"

Caught in a gust of whirling bloom
She stood a moment at the door,
Then lit the candle in the room,
In its pink earthen bowl of yore.

The little Jesus saw it all;
The blur of yellow in the street,
The fair trees by the tumbling wall,
The shadowy other lads, whose feet

Struck a quick noise from out the grass;
He saw, dim in the half-lit air,
As one sees folk within a glass
His mother, with her candle there.

"Jesus! Jesus!"

When He a weary man became
I think, as He went to and fro,
He heard her calling just the same
Across that dusk so long ago.

"Jesus!"

For men were tired that had been bold;
And strange indeed this should befall—
One day so hot, one day so cold—
But mothers never change at all.

"Jesus!"

(Lizette W. Reese).

As He climbed those quiet hillsides of Galilee and looked backward at those boyhood days in a loving Nazareth home, it must have been difficult indeed for Him to tear Himself from quiet memory and contemplation, and think ahead to a future of misunderstanding, tragedy, death.

What, then, gave Him the courage to think forward? Perhaps three things:

He saw a world of needy men and women.

He saw a Father's love and purpose for His World.

He saw His own part in this plan.

So, Jesus steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem, and wherever His Father's will should lead Him; through life to death, and then beyond to somethnig greater—too great for our finite minds to fully take in. But because Jesus had courage and faith to think forward to God's purpose in life for Him, so have we courage and faith to try to do likewise.

A CORRECTION

The article in last week's Herald, pages 8 and 9, was copied from the High Point Enterprise. I made a few pen corrections and sent the article to the Herald. Where it says "Mrs. V. W. Idol was treasurer of the Building Committee, and, since the death of Mr. H. H. Garrett, has been treasurer of the Endowment Fund," it is Mr. V. W. Idol and Mr. H. A. Garrett who are referred to.

The preacher held a special meeting for the children, giving them a brief history of a mission to the South Seas, where, he said, the islanders were mostly cannibals.

"Now, what do you think, children, should be the very first thing the missionary should teach the cannibals?" he asked, and paused for an answer.

A bright lad lifted up a smiling face, and said: "Teach them to be vegetarians, sir."

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Brother Broome filled his appointment the fourth Sunday evening and second Sunday morning. We were very much inspired with the message. We feel we have more love for the united church than ever before.

Our class leader, Mr. C. F. Hawkins, asked when he was not present to please read a chapter in the Bible. Miss Hattie Pittard responded to his request the first Sunday, reading the first Psalm.

Our Sunday school around the same, Mrs. Baldy Greene's class, and those who would help have made a quilt for the purpose of getting some song books. At present we have collected about six dollars.

It has been reported twice about the Auxiliary meeting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Broome. We do not want to be called copy cats, but some of us were there and we know this. We, too, would like to say we enjoyed being in their home, and with the Littleton and Weaver's folks, also seeing Mr. and Mrs. Trolinger, and have an opportunity to meet Mr. Broome's father.

Our Ladies' Aid will meet with Miss Clara Hawkins Thursday evening, June 15.

Mr. and Mrs. Broome and family were the dinner guests of Mrs. Bertie Hawkins Sunday.

One of our members, Miss Frances Glasgow, finished high school at Roanoke Rapids.

Very sorry to note the chairman of the stewards, Mr. Clarence Hawkins, is in the Roanoke Rapids hospital, operated on for appendicitis, but glad he is getting along nicely.

Well, most of you know our revival meeting always begins the second Sunday in August. Brother Broome announced Sunday that Rev. J. W. Braxton, from Mt. Pleasant, will be pulpit help.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor, June 12, 1939.—We were indeed glad to have our good pastor with us Sunday, filling his regular appointments and bringing two very impressive sermons.

Plans are under way for the Children's Day program which will be rendered the fourth Sunday evening of this month.

We were indeed sorry to hear of several in our community being ill at this writing. Among some of them were: Billie Waddell, Thomas J. Brannon, and Tom Gaston. We wish them and all others who aren't mentioned that are on the sick list a speedy recovery.

Rev. T. M. Johnson and B. A. McClimon were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McClimon, of Greer, S. C.

The contest of the Willing Workers class ended the fourth Sunday in May with the Ford V-8 leading by four stars. As a leader of the Ford V-8 side I would like to say I really appreciate all the kind help, loyalty, and splendid work that was accomplished during the five months of this contest. We added several new members and received several of our former members who were not attending regularly to start back. I feel sure it was a great help to our entire Sunday school. We had a great number of visitors to visit our Sunday school during the contest. Miss Lillian Compton, who was the leader of the Chevrolet side, was a fine person to work with; although we are first cousins, I would like to say she is among the finest young ladies of our church. She did splendid work, and I never have worked with anyone I enjoyed any more than I did with Lillian. She is always ready to do anything that is uplifting in Christian work for our church and community. She is also the president of our Sunday school class, and is very interested in all our church work.

We were indeed sorry to hear of T. B. Nalley, of Fairview church, having the misfortune of losing one of his fingers. We do pray that he will soon be well and nothing else sets up.

The Willing Workers class counted it an honor to have our good pastor, Rev. T. M. Johnson, to teach our Sunday school lesson Sunday morning. We had two of our former members back with us, Misses Nelle Wood and Lucy Hunnicutt. We hope they can come back to be with us more often.

Our church is planning highly of sending two of our young ladies with our pastor to North Carolina for the Bible Educational School which will start June 26, 1939. We pray that nothing will delay them and that much will be accomplished while there.

The music school is still being held each Saturday night at our church.

Davis St. Methodist, Burlington, N. C. Dr. Fred W. Paschal, Pastor.— There has not been a report from our church to the Herald, since the uniting conference. We were glad to have our pastor back with us and his inspiring messages, and reports a wonderful time while in Kansas City, with many uplifting and heart warming experience. Our church services are well attended also our Sunday school, the S. S. supt. recently reported a gain in attendance over last year. The writer glancing at the bulletin board on a Sunday morning noticed the attendance for the day over the five hundred mark.

The Womans Auxiliary is getting off to a grand start for the new year. We are looking forward to the best year ever. Practically ever circle having a gain in attendance every month with many in-active members becoming active. Some circles are able to pay their budget in advance. We are hoping and expecting to do a great amount of home work as well as the foreign.

Our church we feel is very fortunate in securing Miss Eva Wisemon a member of our local school staff to work with us for two of the summer months as an all time worker some months ago she organized a young peoples choir for our children ages, eight to twelve. We expect to hear from this choir within a few Sundays.

Our Vacation Bible school began on Monday, June 12, and we are hoping for a large attendance.

The Baraca contest has just closed with the blues winning over the reds, don't know just yet how the losing reds will entertain the winning blues, how nice it would be if their best girls and wives were included.

There was a membership meeting held Sunday after the eleven oclock service at which time a name was voted on for the church here after it will be called Davis St. Methodist.

Taking the place of the regular evening services in our church there was a Union Rally of the Methodist Churches of the Burlington area held at Front St. Methodist Church on Sunday evening June 11 with Rev. H. L. Glass, pastor of that church, presiding. The main speaker for the evening was Rev. M. T. Plyler, editor of the Christian Advocate, also our pastor Dr. Fred Paschal. Others taking part on the program were: Rev. Joseph Coble, O. L. Hinson, H. F. Surratt, A. J. Hobbs, and George R. Brown. The music was beautifully rendered by the Front St. and Davis St. Methodist Choirs.

Bethany Church, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—We had 118 present for Sunday school Sunday. Three classes of the young people have had a contest to raise money for the World Service budget. The captains were Frances Ellis and Junior Garner. A nice sum of money was turned in. Frances Ellis's side was the winner. We hope to have the budget raised in full soon.

Frances Marion Pugh and Luna Johnson are getting up a Children's Day program. Bessie Baldwin and Frances Ellis will have charge of the music.

Our revival meeting will begin the third Sunday in July.

Our oldest member, Mr. E. R. Trogdon, will be 92 years old the 29th of June. He is very active for his age.

First Methodist Church, High Point, N. C.—Childrens day was observed very impressively at both services last Sunday. At the eleven oclock hour nine babies were christened and the members of the Junior church worshipped with their parents in the main auditorium. The infants christened were: Kenneth Lee Sykes son of Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Sykes; Benjamin Porter Montgomery, son of Mr. and Mrs. Porter Montgomery; Cawlyn Bostian, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Bostian, Jerry Webster Koonce, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Koonce, Jr.; Glenn Gray Perry, Jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. Glenn Perry; James Shelton Moffit, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. James Moffit; Betsy Ross Dairs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Dairs; Carolyn Jane Spencer daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Spencer; and Amanda Sue Auman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Auman.

At the eight oclock service, a pageant was presented by the Junior church. Its title was "By the River Brinks" and approximately one hundred young people participated. It was so splendidly given and its meaning was so forceful, justice would not be done to it without giving a brief synopsis. The pageant opened with a mother singing a lullaby to her baby, in which she implores God to give his wisdom in the moulding of the child's life. The scene next shifts to the Voice of the Past and the rivers brink of ancient Egypt where Moses was rescued by Pharaoh's daughter in order that he might fulfill God's promise for his life. Next the "Voice of the Present" speaks and the scene changes to the modern world where the Sunday school is reaveled as the Princess who rescues the child of today at lifes river brink and prepares him for fulfillment of of God's promise. The stage settings were beautiful and a large congregation witnessed the splendid performances.

Mr. Madison is spending six weeks at Duke University, attending the Pastors conference. He plans to return to High Point each weekend to fill his appointments.

Mr. J. Worth Joy is very ill at Burrus Memorial Hospital as the result of an appendectomy performed Monday. We trust his condition is not serious and that he will speedly recover.

MRS. C. L. KOONTZ WRITES OF HER TRIP TO CALIFORNIA

Miss Katherine Lee Bates, a professor in English literature at Wellesley, in company with other New England teachers, attended the Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893. They then traveled westward through the ripening fields of wheat to the "purple mountain majesties of Colorado." They climbed to the summit of Pike's Peak. Returning to Colorado Springs, Miss Bates expressed her appreciation of our wonderful country in the words of the hymn "America the Beautiful." The words of the fourth stanza "alabaster cities bleam" were prompted by the white buildings of the Exposition. A visit across our country gives new meaning to the words "America, the Beautiful." I wish that I could describe for you the beauties and wonders. I can only hope to share some of my experiences and hope that many of you will have the joy which a trip of this kind gives.

May I offer two suggestions if you are planning this tour? First, choose congenial companions. My husband and I knew that Rev. and Mrs. N. G. Bethea would meet the tests. This was our fourth trip with them and they have proved as near ideal as we could ever hope to find. Second, go in the Spring. The weather was pleasant, the desert not unbearably hot and the rainy season in California over. We saw plenty of snow, but the sun was warm and we did not suffer from cold. And now that we have talked about the weather, on with the trip!

Our party started from Asheville, N. C. on the morning of April 11th, and made our first stop at Tallulah Falls. We spent the night in Montgomery, Ala. The second day proved interesting. Several hours were spent in Mobile, chief seaport of Alabama and a famous port for the importation of bananas. The drive from Mobile to New Orleans is one of beauty. Biloxi and Gulf Port, Mississippi, are noted for their handsome ante-bellum homes with their stately white columns and spacious porches. The gardens were radiant with bright colors. Tulips, oleanders, hibiscus, amaryllis and geraniums were in full bloom, and azaelas had just faded.

New Orleans is an interesting city. I agree with the writer who said, "New Orleans is as changeable as an April day or a pretty woman. Catch her above Canal Street and she will tell you in English the story of her climb to her present position as the greatest city in the South. Cross her widest street and she will turn French before your very eyes. The French Quarter covers eleven square blocks and among the interesting sights are French markets, antique shops and the Cabildo, which is a museum or a picture book of the history of Lousiana. A visit to the famous Saint Louis Cathedral is a cherished memory. The interior of the 143 year old shrine has been changed but little. The paintings of the masters lend grace and beauty to the edifice. The music of the Cathedral is famous, some of the noted French opera singers are members of the choir. The singing of 'The Palms' on Palm Sunday and their Christmas chant are two of the most famous of their chants."

Leaving New Orleans we crossed the Mississippi River over the Huey Long bridge, which is four miles long. After crossing the "Father of Waters" we walked on the levees to better view the river. The levees are man made mountains which harness the river and fertilize the land. Alfalfa, sugar cane and rice grow in abundance.

You have heard that Texas is a large state, but do you know how large? It is farther from Beaumont to El Paso than from Chicago to New York. We spent most of three days crossing the Lone Star State. The cities are very far apart, the most interesting on our tour being Houston, San Antonio and El Paso. In the heart of San Antonio is the Sacred Alamo, shrine of Texas patriotism. It was within the grey stone walls of the quaint old chapel that Travis, Barrett, Bowie, Crockett and 170 unsung heroes gave their lives for Texas liberty.

And now we come to the first High Spot, Carlsbad Caverns in Southeastern New Mexico. I wish I could describe the wonder, but the caverns are as unimaginable as the Grand Canyon. The tour is between six and seven miles and requires most of a day. We ate lunch 750 feet below ground. In the lunch room was Jim White, the orignial discoverer. After 20 years of unsuccessful effort, Jim White was made happy when in 1923 the General Land Office in Washington sent Mr. Robert A. Holley for a survey. He was very skeptical at first, thought Carlsbad was just another cave, but after completing this work his emotions were so stirred that his report convinced the powers in Washington of the wisdom of helping others to feel the fear and awe which he so deeply experienced. The government has cooperated in making the Caverns a work of art. Stalagmites and stalactites form cathedrals, grottos, draperies, jewels; hills and lakes enhance the beauty. One of the stalagmites is 60 million years old and is still growing. It is called the Rock of Ages. The climax of the pilgrimage is reached when an impressive worship service is held beneath this majestic column. The Chaplain asks for perfect quiet, preparing the worshippers for the darkness. Perfect silence, absolute darkness. From the depths comes light, half a mile away. The familiar hymn, Rock of Ages is wafted from afar. More lights are turned on, the music swells, the searchers have once more discovered God in the beautiful. The day we were there more than 400 people representing 31 states were thrilled with the beauty and wonder. Following the ritual a couple from Texas were married standing beneath the Rock of Ages.

From El Paso we crossed the Rio Grand into Jaurez, Mexico. Shopping proved interesting, the Mexican merchants were very eager to sell and followed a prospective customer and persisted in showing his wares.

The morning service in Trinity Methodist Church in El Paso proved a blessing. Dr. William E. Brown, presiding elder preached on "The Dormant Hours." His message showed in a beautiful way how long illness or other conditions that cause seeming inactivity may be very fruitful. These hours may give time for meaningful prayer that will result in great power.

Leaving El Paso we traveled in the desert for hours. The various cacti are interesting, some are immense, some repulsive and some very beautiful. We learned, that in an emergency, water may be obtained from the cacti and that candy is made from some kinds. Night found us in Lordsburg, New Mexico, looking forward to a view of the Grand Canyon. On the way we passed an Apache Indian Reservation, saw Coolidge Dam and Roosevelt Dam. At Globe and Miami great smelting plants were smelting ore to produce copper. Miami has the largest copper pit in the world.

How I wish I could express my emotion as I viewed Grand Canyon! This greatest result of erosion in the world absolutely defies description. The great sculptor, Nature, using rain, wind, and frost as her tools is cutting a work of art. The erosion has gone on for uncounted centuries and still the Colorado River continues to cut deeper and deeper into the earth. The variations of blues, greys, purples, reds, yellows are indescribable. One can only stand in awe and worship the Creator. It merits a trip across the continent just to look upon it for five minutes. A lifetime of observation, however, could not exhaust its panprama of beauty, wonder, and majestic splendor.

Among the man made wonders of our country, Boulder Dam ranks very high. It is a magnificent engineering feat. Enough cement was used to build a 16 foot hgihway from Miami, Florida to Seattle, Washington.

One of the interesting sights in California is to see the mountains covered in snow, while at their feet flourish orange groves. On the plains grow dates, olives, walnuts, lemons, grapefruit and other trees.

As interesting as were Las Vagas, Baker and Barstow we were glad to reach Los Angeles. With its many suburbs this city covers more area than any other city in our country. We spent five days in Hollywood. Among the interesting places are the studios and the Chinese Theatre where the foot prints of many movie stars are made in the cement. We enjoyed the drives in Beverly Hills and Bel Air and viewing the estates of the celebrities.

On the way from Hollywood to San Francisco we saw San Monica, Santa Barbara and other famous missions along the coast. It was thrilling to cross Oakland Bridge, which is eight miles long and to look upon the wonderful Golden Gate Bridge. Treasure Island is an enchanted place, the Fair Ground, beautiful with lovely flowers and sparkling fountains. The exhibits were typical World's Fair displays.

The big trees in Calavaras State Park are so huge that a man standing beside one looks like a pigmy. We walked on a stump on which several cars could park and not be crowded. Eldorado National Park covered in snow and sunset on Lake Tahoe were scenes of indescribable beauty.

In Nevado, we saw the smallest capitol in the would, and the court house in Reno.

Salt Lake City merits a stopover. The Great Salt Lake, the largest inland body of salt water in the world, is several times saltier than the ocean. The beds on either side of the highway look like a light snow. The pioneers of the Mormon Church have truly made the desert bloom like a rose. The Temple grounds could not be more beautiful. The Temple, which was 40 years in the building, is entered only by Mormons, but the Tabernacle is open to the public. The state capitol is one of the most beautiful in the world. It is built of Utah granite and the dome is of Utah copper.

What can I say about Yellowstone Park? Although a large part was not accessible on account of the deep snow, we could look upon many of the famous wonders. Among the most interesting, Fire Hole River, hot springs, terraces, baby geysers, giant geysers, mud pools, rainbow pools, Old Faithful in action and the Great Falls of Yellowstone. As I viewed that majestic river falling violently 308 feet and the rainbow mirrored below, with the matchless coloring of the canyon walls and the snow adding grandeur, I prayed sincerely with the poet who said:

"God, who touches earth with beauty,
Make me lovely too,
With thy spirit recreate me,
Make my life anew."

Because of the closed gates, we left the park at Livingston, Montana and spent Sunday in Laurel where we attended the Methodist Church. We were impressed with the earnestness with which all the pastors whom we heard prayed for the Great Uniting Conference. After enjoying Cheyenne, Wyoming and Denver, Colorado it was our great joy to be present at two sessions of the Uniting Conference in Kansas City. I shall not attempt to describe that meeting, because our lay delegate has given such a full, inspiring report. I, too, was impressed with the beautiful Christian spirit and the consciousness that those great preachers and laymen felt their dependence upon God. Of interest to Methodists is McKendron College in Lebanon, Illinois because it is the oldest Methodist College in the United States. We also appreciated seeing the college in Berea, Kentucky, made famous because it is E. Stanley Jones' Alma Mater.

The Blue Grass section of Kentucky is one of great beauty and the mountains around Pine Ridge comparable to those of our own state. We especially enjoyed the trip to Natural Bridge. This marvel reminded us of the Natural Bridge of Virginia. God seems very near and real when we view with wonder and awe His masterpieces.

After being in 22 states and one foreign country and traveling nearly 8,000 miles, we welcomed the sight of the Old North State. We all agreed that Western North Carolina is unsurpassed. Mr. Bethea, who has seen the mountains of Switzerland, said that while some are much higher, they do not equal ours in sheer beauty.

"Here's to the Land of the long leaf pine,
The summer land, where the sun doth shine;
Where the weak grow strong and the strong grow great,
Here's to down home, the Old North State."

COURAGE

Press on! Though mists obscure
The steep and rugged way,
Or clouds of doubt ascend—
Soon dawns the brighter day.

Keep on! Though hours be long,
And days deep-frought with woe,
Give patience a chance to do her work,
And vanquish every foe.

Hope on! Though all seems lost,
And dark'ning storms beat high,
Have courage, faith, and know,
That God is ever nigh.

OUR LAST CALL FOR JUNE 22

We are asking our pastors and Sunday school superintendents, and all our friends throughout the conference, to help us get the folks to High Point for Children's Home Day on June 22.

We have tried to plan a great program for our Methodist people for that day, and now we are dependent upon you for the success of the day. We plead for your help.

First—You will please announce the day and its purpose once more to all your Sunday schools and congregations on Sunday, June 18, and urge them to come in goodly numbers with their picnic dinners in boxes and in baskets. The occasion calls for it, and we are expecting a large crowd of Methodists.

Second—Please have your committees make a last special effort to get a good offering for the Children's Home. For the awards see page 9 of last week's Herald. Of course no committee will claim a reward unless a special effort has been made.

We rest our case with you and your people.

Please Remember

The program will be given in the Harrison Gymnasium at High Point College beginning at 10 o'clock. Picnic dinner in the grove at the Children's Home at about 12:30 noon.

God bless and direct in it all.

Faithfully,
A. G. DIXON, Supt.

The Pastor's Support

It is never easy for a minister to discuss the question of the pastor's salary without appearing to some to be a "special pleader," but the editor of a Church paper ought to have that privilege without appearing to plead his own case, otherwise those who know most about certain features of this subject may never have a chance to discuss it. For there are certain facts usually passed over as very minor matters when discussed by Mr. Average Church Member, which indeed are most vital. For instance Mr. Average Church Member appears to think that the pastor and his family are not subject to the necessities of human beings or that they have "meat to eat" that the pastor knows not of. They seem to overlook entirely the fact that the pastor is dependent upon the salary received from his churches to pay all his bills; food, clothing, many times house rent, the entertainment of guests who are visitors to the Church, the expense of owning and operating a car largely for the benefit of the Church—to perform his duties as pastor, etc. These expenses are paid out of the pastor's annual stipend. And add to this the expense of transporting his household effects to a different charge every two or three years.

Now if pastors were angels, as some church members appear to think they should be, they would be delivered from all such cares, and at the end of the year they would possess the entire amount of the salary received which they could put into the bank to be kept until the next bank failure occurs. But fortunately or unfortunately, such is not the case. Let us itemize one of these items of expense which is rather modern; the ownership and operation of a car. Forgetting for the time being the purchase price of this car, let me remind you of the cost of operating it. The pastor of the average charge travels from fifteen to twenty thousand miles a year. The minimum estimated cost of this mode of travel is three cents a mile, so the pastor will take out of the average salary of one thousand dollars from $450.00 to $600.00 each year for the expense of traveling the charge. It is quite plain that the average church member does not take into consideration the expense the pastor must incur if he is to meet the requirements of the average church member of today.

Now as a rule both pastor and family do without many things in order that there may be gas, oil, repairs and new tires for the car by which the sick may be visited and the appointments reached. Could we return to the horse and buggy days these pastors could fill their appointments as their fathers did, and do what visiting time permitted to make at a cost of a hundred dollars a year. BUT when have you seen a pastor making his rounds with a horse and buggy? Besides this, I know of no official board of a church who would accept a pastor's services rendered in that way and pay him the average salary now received. Just what will be done about this matter at the fourth quarterly conference remains to be seen; but one thing remember, that the average salary paid by the former Methodist Protestant Churches will require considerable boosting before it reaches the average salary paid by the former M. E. Church South Churches in North Carolina. Our people should want to be fair to their pastors and since they have received service faithfully rendered by their pastors whose salaries are lower than the salaries paid by many of the churches of sister denominations around them, would it not be a fine exhibition of appreciation to give the pastors' salaries a boost when time comes for fixing the salary within the next few months?

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

A Common Conference Journal

One thing which I failed last week to mention, growing out of the Durham meeting was that this fall all three of the denominations would issue just one Conference Journal with sections devoted to each of the three denominations. This will save considerable expense and will make it possible to have a wider range of information. However, there is one thing now that ought to be called to our attention, namely, that we make our record such this year that we shall not be ashamed for it to appear in print alongside the others. We former Methodist Protestants have been somewhat congregational in our make-up and we have used a good deal of liberty as to whether we would do things or not. The other two former denominations have become accustomed to working the program of the conference so it will not be as difficult for them as it will be for us. While the appointments this fall will be made by each of the former denominations up to that time when they are approved and read by the new conference yet after the conferences adjourn then the new conference has complete jurisdiction and the supervision planned at the Uniting Conference becomes operative immediately.

Two Committees To Meet

On Wednesday morning of this week a committee consisting of eight District Superintendents and myself will meet in Salisbury to determine the number of Districts and the boundaries of the districts in the Western N. C. Conference. This meeting will be followed by a joint meeting of the Board of Missions of the Western N. C. Conference and our Board of Church Extension. I am presuming that some representative from the Blue Ridge Atlantic Conference will also be present. I understand that one of the purposes of this meeting will be to attempt to supplement salaries to that extent that any man serving a charge may be able to devote his entire time to the work. If the new Methodist Church can accomplish this it will be a worthy beginning.

Congratulations To Friendship Church, Fallston Charge

Last Sunday must have been a glad day for Friendship Church on the Fallston Charge, Rev. R. L. Hethcox, pastor, in that the church was to be formally dedicated on that day. For months I had had an engagement to speak there at eleven o'clock and Bishop Clare Purcell was to speak in the afternoon. On account of my tonsilectomy I could not go but Dr. R. M. Andrews, the editor of the HERALD agreed to substitute for me and I presume he did. So far I have had no report on the activities of the day but I trust it was all that could be desired. This congregation is to be congratulated on the erection of such a splendid building. This building was erected some four or five years ago during the pastorate of Rev. H. F. Fogleman. Brother Hethcox became pastor after the building was erected and has played an important part in paying for the same. Now all are to be congratulated who have had anything to do with it. I was indeed sorry not to be there last Sunday but hope to visit this church yet this year.

Dr. Lindley To Preach Next Sunday

While I am on my feet again and feel better than I have for months following my tonsilectomy yet I realize the danger of overworking my throat, so Dr. P. E. Lindley, the dean of High Point College, will go with me to Kannapolis next Sunday and will preach the sermon, leaving me free to perform the dedicatory rite in dedicating the Kannapolis church. I am very grateful to Dr. Lindley for this favor and hope that from now on I will be able to do my work with greater zest than I have the first half of this year.

A New Herald Committee

For the purpose of helping the HERALD tide over the lean months of the summer and for the further purpose of safeguarding its future I am appointing a committee consisting of Revs. J. Elwood Carroll, C. W. Bates, F. W. Paschall and C. L. Spencer and Mr. J. D. Ross and Mr. F. R. Stout. I trust this committee may be able to render real service to this important arm of our work.

The Dangers of Inactivity

I have read somewhere that there is a zone reaching around the earth near the equator which was most dreaded by the sailors in the days when the boats were dependent on the winds. For here there were no winds, for there is a law of the earth which makes the wind on one side of the equator blow from one direction and on the other side the reverse is true, so the winds neutralize each other and there is nothing going on. It is said that the old time sailor preferred the storms of the sea in other parts of the world to this place where there was nothing going on. I trust that we as individuals and as churches shall not allow ourselves to get in that states of inactivity. Brethren, for the next few months let each one put forth every possible effort to finish up the year in the best possible manner. There is much to be done. There are souls to be saved and to be gathered into our churches, there doubtless is an unpaid balance to be raised on Delegates' expenses to the Uniting Conference, the Annual Conference budget including the College assessment must be raised, the HERALD must be kept going, the Children's Home must be supported and many other things must be done before we can say that our work is finished.

A Message In Verse

IF ALL THE SKIES WERE SUNSHINE

If all the skies were sunshine
Our faces would be fain
To feel once more upon them
The cooling splash of rain.

If all the world were music
Our hearts would often long
For one sweet strain of silence
To break the endless song.

If life was always merry
Our souls would seek relief
And rest from weary laughter
In the quiet arms of grief.

Fallston

Last Sunday the editor of the Herald was "pinch-hitter" for President Pritchard at Fallston. The occasion was the dedication of their beautiful Church. There was a very large audience, dinner served picnic style and Bishop Purcell spoke in the afternoon. He dedicated First Church, Shelby, at 11 a. m. that day and was to perform the same service at Fallston in the afternoon. We enjoyed our visit with Pastor Hethcox and his people but regretted our inability to remain for the afternoon service. Dr. P. S. Kennett, High Point College, kindly filled the appointment at West End Church that morning. We appreciate so much his service.

Miss Idol Ceases To Contribute Weekly

Because of the pressure of her summer duties Miss Vera Idol, professor of English Literature, High Point College, finds it necessary to discontinue her weekly contribution on poets and poetry. We regret this very much indeed. She has in her most delightful manner presented to our readers weekly many most interesting and instructive articles. We hope she may find time to renew her weekly letters when the summer is over.

Indifference

If indifference is a sin then, it surely is the most common of all sins. Its effects are seen upon man from the lowest to the highest in places of honor and of responsibility. "Gallio cared for none of these things," is the comment of St. Luke as Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, was beaten in the very presence of the judge (Gallio) who cared for none of these things. It may often be said of the officers of the law today, "they care for none of these things" when lawlessness is present under their very eyes. Of leaders in the affairs of the church when the great needs of the Kingdom are exhibited in their presence, and "they care for none of these things." Nothing so paralyzes the rate of progress as indifference. The most violent opposition is never such an enemy to the cause of Christ as the indifference of the professed followers of Christ to needs of the cause of Christ.

Wilson Ratledge

Last Sunday afternoon there was buried from West End Church one of the most heroic sufferers it has been my privilege to know. Thirteen years ago he sustained an injury which made him a life-long cripple. Everything was done for his recovery that could be done, without avail. Wilson suffered very much during the last months of his life but was most patient in it all. His love of life under such a tremendous handicap was manifest in his radiant smile, his efforts to do things (although bedridden), the books he read, and his interest in what others were doing. He was deeply interested in his church though he could not attend its services. He greatly enjoyed visits from his friends and the prayers of his pastor.

His funeral service was largely attended, the floral offering was large and beautiful, and the expressions of appreciation of his wonderful fight to live, of his trust in God, and of his appreciation of all that his family so sacrificially did for him, was expressed by the attendance of hundreds of people at his funeral services. The pastor was assisted by the Reverends Messrs. Bowers, Mongerson, and Reavis. Wilson died in the full assurance of eternal life. We laid his crippled form away to await the resurrection when this mortal shall put on immortality and be raised in the glories of the resurrected life.

EDUCATION IN UNITED METHODISM

It would be difficult indeed to exaggerate the importance of Christian education to the progress and welfare of the new united Methodism and to its contribution to the advancement of the kingdom of God. It seems trite to emphasize once again the fact that upon trained leadership more than upon any other single factor depends the success of any undertaking or movement looking toward human betterment, but that fact remains as true today as it was a thousand years ago. And when it comes to the church of the living God, a broad training of both the ministry and the laity is simply indispensable if organized Christianity is to realize the ideals and make powerful the ideas of the Lord Jesus Christ. There should be no discount of "simple piety" or noble devotion, of good intention or "complete surrender to the will of God"; for the acceptance of Christ by the individual through an act of the will and an honest, open-hearted giving of himself to do the bidding of the Heavenly Father is basic to the Christian life. A well-intentioned Christian needs something more, however. He needs wisdom and insight, that he may serve his Lord and Master to the utmost of his capacity. At the present time we need converted men to lead the hosts of the Almighty against the powers of darkness. But these men must also be able men or their leadership will fail to achieve the highest victory.

With so much at stake in the new stage of Methodist development in this country, it is no wonder that the Uniting Conference at Kansas City gave much time and attention to the formulation and consideration of reports dealing with Christian education. Provision was made for a "Board of Education for the promotion of Christian education." This board will be organized in three divisions—Educational Institutions, Local Church, and Editorial. The first of these three divisions will have its headquarters in Chicago, Ill., and the two other in Nashville, Tenn.

The Division of Educational Institutions is to have "an advisory relation to the business and educational management of all universities, colleges, schools, theological schools, Wesley Foundations, and other educational institutions related to The Methodist Church in the United States except those institutions owned by other boards."

The Division of the Local Church is instructed to "develop a comprehensive and unified program of Christian education which shall lead to a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, the Christian religion, and the Christian church. It shall provide for worship, fellowship, study, and service, including social, recreational, evangelistic, and missionary activities, and education in the Christian way of life. It shall be responsible for forming standards and preparing programs for the organization and work of Christian education in the local church."

Through the Editorial Division, working in cooperation with the Curriculum Committee, the Board of Education "shall provide all curriculum materials necessary for carrying on" the work of Christian education in the church school. "The editor of church school publications shall be responsible for the preparation of all curriculum materials, including periodicals, undated materials, and books authorized for use in the program of Christian education. The circulation of the literature prepared by this division shall be a joint responsibility of the Board of Education and the Board of Publication."

In the legislation adopted at Kansas City, provision also was made for Jurisdictional and Annual Conference boards of education, and for a church board of education in each local church.

With all these excellent organizational arrangements for the promotion of Christian education in the new church, we must not overlook the importance of the attitude and policy that are to make the machinery highly effective. A timely word of warning comes in a recent letter to the Herald office from a distinguished leader in this field who senses the dangers of overemphasis on machinery and of possible wrong direction in the foundation of educational policy. Among other things he says:

> If a Christian church such as our denomination goes in for education, it should be for education of a distinctive type.
>
> The Methodist Church, reputedly great, after all has none too much power. We should focus all our resources. We cannot afford to scatter and dissipate them if we expect to make any great impact on the world today.
>
> The state increasingly will provide amply for general education. The church cannot expect to compete with the state in this field. For this reason, in our education, we should concentrate upon particular emphases inherent in the Christian religion.
>
> Our children remain the same individuals as they move from the local situation out into college life; therefore, we should seek to correlate and unify their education throughout.
> There is an appalling dearth of intelligent lay leadership in the Christian church today. Where may the church look for this leadership to be supplied if not to its educational institutions? This service can be rendered best if the church and its schools are very closely and sympathetically allied. The tendency now is for the church schools to compete with state institutions and to separate themselves from the church. If this tendency increases, it will not be long before the church will lose all its schools.

This correspondent has lifted up an issue of very great importance. We must keep our education Christian throughout. Certainly there is need to stress unity in the educational process, and especially its Christian character.—Zion's Herald..

WITH THE POETS

Elizabeth Vera Idol

PRAYER

By Louis Untermeyer

Louis Untermeyer, critic, lecturer, translator, and poet is one of the leading voices in the world of poetry today. While he has not written as much verse as some of his contemporaries, and perhaps in the years to come, may not be accounted among the few poets who will take their places among the truly great geniuses, he appraises the work of other poets with sound and appreciative judgment, and he himself has written a few things that will continue to appear in anthologies of American poetry.

His first volue of verse appeared in 1911 and showed him to be under the spell of Heine and Housman. Of these poems Untermeyer reprinted only three in his later selected works. In 1914, the year in which appeared so many outstanding volumes of poems by new authors since become famous, Untermeyer published his second volume, Challenge. Though there are suggestions of Henley in this volume, a few of the poems, especially Prayer and Caliban in the Coal Mines show "a fresh and lyrical sympathy with the modern world." The Boston Transcript said of this volume: "His vision is a social vision, his spirit a passionately energized command of the forces of justice." This volume was followed by other books of original verse, some noteworthy translations, and a number of anthologies, as well as several books of fiction and criticism.

In the poem Prayer Untermeyer uses the simple four-line stanza with the familiar interlacing rime. The simple form suits the quiet dignity of the prayer and the reverence of the thought and language.

The thought of the poem is new; the idea incorporated throughout is different from the prayer we are accustomed to hear—and pray. Not for victory and humble acquiescent faith, not for the ability to see and hear beauty, and not for quiet satisfaction at last, does the poet pray, but for the heart to lose a fight, to be insurgent, to see along with beauty the dirt and "all that spawn and die in it"; to hear the music of "Spring's first flutes and drums," but to remember the "bitter ballads of the slums," until he at last prays for the ability to keep unsatisfied—that quality which alone can promote growth and development. A satisfied soul is a dying soul. Thus while Untermeyer does not omit the commonly accepted petitions he turns the prayer into new but nonetheless essential channels of the needs of the human soul. Though the subject of some kind of prayer is as old as human beings, Untermeyer has succeeded in giving us a new conception of its place in the life of one who must face the social needs in the world around, as well as the possibilities of growth in his own soul.

While this is not a poem of great imaginative fervor or even of deep intellectuality, it does stir the imagination with the thoughts of the part that each of us may play in the scheme of humanity, that which the great religious poems of all times has done.

"God, though this life is but a wraith,
Although we know not what we use,
Although we grope with little faith,
Give me the heart to fight—and lose.

Ever insurgent let me be,
Make me more daring than devout;
From sleek contentment keep me free,
And fill me with a buoyant doubt.

Open my eyes to visions girt
With beauty, and with wonder lit—
But let me always see the dirt,
And all that spawn and die in it.

Open my ears to music; let Me thrill with Spring's first flutes and drums—
But never let me dare forget
The bitter ballads of the slums.

From compromise and things half-done,
Keep me, with stern and stubborn pride;
And when, at last, the fight is won,
God, keep me still unsatisfied.

Old age has nothing to support itself with but the remembrance of a life innocently passed and the hope of a better one to come: these are the two crutches upon which old age is borne up.—Erasmus.

OUR NATION'S SHAME

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

On June 2nd the Associated Press brought the news to our American people that the steamship St. Louis with 907 passengers, men, women and children, was anchored off the neighboring island of Cuba, and that the passengers had been refused admission by the Cuban authorities, although they had passports with proper bisas from Cuban representatives in Germany, and had paid their passage with reasonable expectation that they would be permitted to land in Cuba and remain there at their own charges until they could enter the United States under the quota regulations of our immigration laws. These passengers were all Jews. After much tribulation, and by great sacrifices, they had managed to escape from the clutches of their Nazi German persecutors. The only charge against them was that they belong to the Jewish race.

To that same Jewish race belonged Moses, Samuel, David, Isaiah, Paul and Peter, and through His mother, Mary, the God-man, our Lord Jesus Christ. The Cuban government and the Cuban people are supposed to be Christian in sentiment and belief. But to the amazement of all humane persons the Cuban government endeavored to put a tax of nearly half a million dollars and guarantees of maintenance as a price for the admission of these helpless Jewish refugees. That any government should try to make a bargain based on the misery of these Jewish refugees was monstrous. But when this proposal was finally met by the American-Jewish Committee it was declared to be too late. How much of graft was involved in the proposal will probably never be known.

The steamer containing these miserable people cruised around in nearby waters for several days, and the press reported that the ship came close enough to Miami for the refugees to see the lights of the city. The press also reported that the United States Coast Guard under instructions from Washington followed the ship while it was in American waters to prevent any possible landing on our shores. And during the days when this horrible tragedy was being enacted right at our doors our Government at Washington made no effort to relieve the desperate situation of these people, but on the contrary gave orders that they be kept out of our country. Why did not the President, Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Labor, and other officials confer together and arrange for the landing of these refugees who had been caught in this maelstrom of distress and agony through no fault of their own? Why did not our Congress take action in accordance with the free and humane spirit which has characterized our people and our Government in the past? The failure to take any steps whatever to assist these distressed, persecuted Jews in their hour of extremity was one of the most disgraceful things which has happened in American history, and leaves a stain and brand of shame upon the record of our nation. The fact that the Dutch, the Belgians, the French and the British are reported to have arranged to admit these trapped refugees simply adds to the shame upon our own Government that we should have known and seen their misery and should have played the part of the Priest and of the Levite rather than of the Good Samaritan, and that we should have passed by on the other side and left these Jews to whatever fate might befall them on their return to Europe.

This failure on the part of our Government to help the stranded Jewish refugees is in accordance with the attitude taken by our Government toward the Japanese unprovoked, unjustifiable, barbarous warfare against China. This warfare has been open and undisguised and has continued for nearly two years, accompanied by the indiscriminate, merciless, horrible slaughter of civilian men, women and children, the destruction of unfortified towns and cities, and of schools, churches and hospitals wherever the Japanese airplanes or armies have gone.

Our Government is a party to the Nine-Power Treaty which was signed February 6, 1922, by representatives of the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, China, France, Italy, Japan, The Netherlands and Portugal. The signatories agreed to respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial and administrative integrity of China; to use their influence for establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for trade and industry of all nations; and to refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of peoples of friendly states.

This unprovoked Japanese warfare called forth an appeal from Generalissimo Chiang Kaishek to the nations of the world, especially to the signers of the Nine-Power Treaty, to intervene to stop the Japanese warfare. Realizing in September, 1937, that Japan had determined to secure control of China so as to be the dominant power in all trade and governmental relations, I wrote to Secretary of State Hull and urged him to take immediate steps to put an end to the undeclared Japanese warfare by severing diplomatic relations with Japan as a violator of the Nine-Power Treaty, accompanied by a ban on all monetary or trade relations with Japan as long as she continued to violate her Treaty pledges to help the other nations to maintain the sovereignty, independence and territorial and administrative integrity of China. But nothing has been done by our Government to indicate its official disapproval of the barbarous warfare of Japan against China. Diplomatic and trade relations have remained as though Japan had not become a veritable outlaw, as though she was not flouting the rights of other nations in utter disregard of the Nine-Power Treaty.

Our present neutrality law states that the President must declare an embargo against shipment of arms to belligerents as soon as he recognizes that a state of war exists. Is there any doubt whatever that a state of war does exist in China? Has the United States a President who has not the information or the intelligence to know that such a state of war does exist? Why then has the President remained silent? What right has he to ignore the responsibility placed upon him by the neutrality act? Why has he not declared that a state of war does exist in China? Does not our Government know that Japan has been continuing her warfare in direct violation of the Nine-Power Treaty of which our own Government is one of the signatories? Does not our Government realize that if Japan accomplishes her purpose in China she will dominate every important policy of the Chinese people, and that there will be no independence, no territorial, no administrative integrity of China, and that Japan will determine what right and privileges the other signatories of the Nine-Power Treaty will have left to them?

Thinking to take Great Britain at a disadvantage because of the present European situation, Japan is using strong measures to secure certain agreements favorable to her plans in China and contrary to the Nine-Power Treaty agreement. Press reports state that Japan's pressure at present is chiefly against Great Britain, and that she has been careful not to antagonize the United States. But is not the honor of the United States bound up with that of all the other signatories of the Nine-Power Treaty? Shall not our Government join with Great Britain, France and the other signatories of the Treaty in demanding that Japan shall cease her undeclared barbarous warfare, and shall respect the provisions of the Nine-Power Treaty? Or shall our Government continue its illogical, spineless course in its dealings with Japan?

The President of the United States addressed a notable appeal to Herr Hitler for the preservation of peace in Europe. Why has he not addressed a similar appeal to Japan to cease her warfare in China? Why has he not proposed to try to arrange a conference to consider the questions at issue between China and Japan?

It is the shame of our Government, and to that extent of the nation as a whole, that for nearly two years it has continued diplomatic and trade relations with a nation which has flouted her treaty with us, and has become a veritable outlaw among the nations of the earth. Can not something be done to compel the President and the Government to meet the responsibility which is upon them to join with other nations to enforce the provisions of the Nine-Power Treaty quoted above?

JEALOUSY

In the Songs of Solomon, eighth chapter and sixth verse, there is a statement that one only has to watch the movements of people who are not possessed of the Spirit of Christ to see it verified day after day. The verse says, ''Jealousy is cruel as the grave.'' Hard as the grave, the marginal reading has it.

There is no telling to what depths jealousy will stoop. We see it manifest sometimes in small children; jealous of the affections of another; and it may go on in a person till it reaches that point of envy which will take goods, character, life. If this then will lead to that point, how careful one should be that this shall not control in a life.

One may be jealous of another's success, popularity, goods. By this many have been led to say and do things against people that has been the means of ruining the reputation of the one of whom they were jealous.

We manifest this kind of a disposition towards one who is outstripping a friend of ours. Jealous for another. How dangerous to let this control in our lives until we filch from another their good name in order to have our friend or friends be ahead. And right here it becomes more dangerous. We may deceive ourselves to that point in misrepresenting another to help our friends that we reach the point of lying to justify our words or actions in behalf of our friends.

In order to be ahead, or to put some one else forward, we may cultivate the feeling of jealousy towards one until we do not see the good in them, get where we hate them, and hatred is a dangerous attitude to have toward any one. God's word says that ''He that hateth his brother is a murdered.'' How often have we murdered some one's good name, or even tried to destroy what little good there is in them to carry our point? Cain reached the point through his envy,—jealousy, that he slew his brother.

How many broken hearts have suffered because some one was jealous? Said an unkind word because that one had been praised by some one. Result: a broken and a discouraged life. Leaders in church work have been crippled because some one else seemed to outstrip them in usefulness, jealousy may get in its devilish work here. It may be shown by the parties who are doing the work, or it may be that there are friends who cannot stand to see the ones that they want to see succeed outstripped. It is dangerous to give assent to one who will damage another for your sake. As a result both parties are hurt, and to be sure the one who damages another is always hurt. They may be in that business so much that they have no conscience in the matter. Timid souls may not rebuke them for the unkind things they say,—though they should be rebuked,—but they have less opinion of the one who makes the rebuke. If only the gossiper could see the inside of the hearts to whom they may give out their poison, there would be less of this done. And that usually starts from jealousy.

Jealousy has been decribed as being green eyed, poisonous! To be sure it is! Beware of the person that says unkind things of another. There is a wrong motive back of it of some kind, and this monster about which we are writing may be the cause.

This monster is no respecter of persons. He gets into every heart possible, ruins every life possible by enlarging that which had no evil intention, and yet a jealous person can make a mountain out of a mole hill ''set on fire the course of nature and that is set on fire of hell.''

Gentle reader, if you have ever been used as an instrument or agency for a jealous person, beware lest it come back on your own head. And if you have ever allowed some to do questionable things or say make insinuations that have grown into that which will damage a life, be careful, for you are not dead yet, and sin has its unavoidable penalty.

Jealousy for the good things of life may be commendable, but to have that attitude towards any that would cause you to damage them, even if you think you are justifiiable in doing so, will bring punishment upon your own head—Contributed.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

PAUL REVIEWS HIS LIFE

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, June 25

By REV. O. L. EASTER

Lesson Text—Phil. 1:12-14; 21-24; 3:12-14; II Tim. 4:7-8.

There is a proverbial saying in the Book of Proverbs, Chapter 16, which gives us, I believe, the counter-part to Paul's glorious statement of his happiness in the latter days of his life and ministry: “The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.” The quiet confidence that assured Paul that he fought a good fight was satisfying within itself, for there is a joy in doing even a trivial thing well, but it is only when we couple with this his faith in believing that this course he had finished was the way of righteousness do we fully comprehend his glory. The best immortality is in living and dying for a noble cause and no cause out of Christ is noble enough to be worthy to live. Nero is dead but Paul still lives and speaks. Rome fell, but the Kingdom of Christ still increases. Paul had faith and vision to see this and even as his strength to fight the good fight was fast waning he was gloriously useful and thereby happy even unto the end.

The stone unhewn and cold
Becomes a living mold,
The more the marble wastes
The more the statue grows.”

In this latter picture of Paul's great life I think we see his greatest message to the world. All men find their lives, be they great or small, rich or poor, gradually moving towards that twilight zone of old age wherein they meet the greatest crisis of their human battle. It is a time when they find the spirit still willing and their flesh grown weak. Every young preacher today must face up to that period to which he is moving when no longer he will have a flock of his own or even the strength of body and mind to bow out of his beloved field gracefully, perhaps. This is true in all walks of human life, and is rapidly becoming in our modern civilization one of its major social problems. It is indeed one of the seeming paradoxes of the human spirit that it can flourish so brilliantly and so proudly in its youth and then to come to the latter end so ingloriously. This prevalent reaction to the stages of life is evidenced by old age resorting to the many artificial means of opposing young in physical faculties, or by their utter despair of their lives. There is great need for readjustment in this inevitable relationship of all human life and Paul has it for us.

The trouble seems to be that men have emphasized success and usefulness upon carnal things that pass with old age. When one today can no longer put in a “good day's work” he is put aside by industry and he too has valued his entire usefulness in terms of dollars and cents and hence he feels that old age has rendered him a failure. At Hampton Court, England, there is probably the largest grape vine in the world. One day a tourist remarked to the keeper that the grapes seemed very small for Hamburgs. “Yes,” he said, “an old vine cannot bear as large grapes and clusters as a younger one; but the grapes are sweeter and of finer flavor. They are kept for the Queen's use.” Paul in his latter days could do little missionary work like that of his earlier days and he could not endure the hardships for his Lord, yet it is a holy fact that his ripest, sweetest, most enduring work was done in prison. It is as the writer of Proverbs says again: “The path of the righteous is as a dawning light, that shineth more and more unto a perfect day.” (Proverbs 4:18). Thus we see that the secret of a happy ending for human life is in the purpose for which it has lived. In Christ we find a purpose so enthralling and obsessing that even if life in youth throws hardships before us still with Paul we see that to live is Christ; then when the inevitable hardships of old age descend upon us there comes that comforting security of the heart which speaks its assurance that “to die is gain.”

“And when these earthly years are past and gone
Temptation's battle fought, the victory won,
From heaven shall gently come this message down,
They that have borne the cross, shall wear a crown
Never to fade.”

JOHN RUSKIN'S ESTIMATE OF THE BIBLE

Possibly there is nowhere words of higher praise of the Bible than those of John Ruskin. In speaking of the way his mother taught the Bible he has this to say, “I opened my oldest Bible just now . . . yellow with age, and flexible . . . the lower corners of the pages of chapter seven of First Kings; chapter eight of Deuteronomy are worn thin and dark, the learning of these chapters have caused me much pain. My mother's list of chapters with which, learned every syllable accurately, she established my soul in life, has just fallen out of it, as follows: Exodus 15th, and 20th chapter; 2 Samuel 17th; I Kings 8th; Psalms 23rd, 90, 91, 103, 112, 119, 139; Proverbs 2, 3, 8, 12; Isal 58; Matt. 5, 6, and 7; Acts 26; I Cor. 13, 15; Jas. 4; Revelation 5 and 6. And truly, though I have picked up the elements of a little further knowledge, I count this very confidently the most precious and on the whole, the one essential part of my education.”

OUR STORY PAGE

THE ROBBER BEARS OF YELLOWSTONE PARK

Yellowstone National Park is believed to be the only public park in the world where bears roam about at will among the people. As a consequence, the beautiful atmosphere of the park is colored at least several times a day by loud shrieks from lady tourists who react in a strange manner when being informally presented to a four houndred-pound bear at very close range. Bears usually wear a pained expression when confronted by a screaming woman. Sometimes the animals run away hastily for fear of being bitten. Of course, they act from sheer instinct, for no actual case has been recorded of a tourist biting a bear, but some bears are naturally conservative and do not like to take chances.

The bears of Yellowstone Park are tame. One might even call them civilized. The manner in which some of them obtain their food appears to be anything but primitive. These ingenious fellows have a system of their own that never fails. They simply stand in the road, always selecting a main park highway, and stop all the traffic. Of their exact method of operation the author of this article was an eye-witness.

All of the cars in the road ahead of us had stopped, so naturally we stopped, too. Two bears in the road were holding up traffic. The "oh's" and the "ah's" of the tourists rivaled the sighing of the wind in the pine trees. Until this time most of these people had seen bears only in cages. One of the bears planted himself in the middle of the road, while the other—a large brown brute—slowly lumbered along the line of cars with an innocent look on his face.

Suddenly he stopped alongside of the car head of us. Of the five people in the car, three were women. Without warning, the bear stood up on his hind legs, placed his paws against the rear, partially open window of the sedan, then thrust his huge head inside, practically into the laps of the passengers. The most horrible screams that ever issued from human throats came out of that car. My hair stood on end. I wanted to do something. My buddy, sitting alongside me, wanted to do something. But we were paralyzed by the fearsome sight. This is what comes from letting bears run around loose! No more awful finish for a tourist could be imagined.

But—what was this? The bear had withdrawn his head, and in his giant jaws was—not a lady tourist but—a loaf of bread!

Everyone laughed, including the occupants of the ravaged car—although they did their laughing a trifle shakily. Only another "robber" bear plying his trade! He shuffled along the road for a time, then leisurely turned off into the forest. His partner got up presently and followed him, and traffic resumed its course.

These robber bears have a code all their own, and the first rule is, "Never break car windows; it's bad for the tourist business." So if you wish to be fully protected against an intrusion such as the above, all you have to do is to close your car windows when a robber seems about to pay you a visit. The bear's feelings might be injured, but he'll never permit you to know it. And certainly he will never force an entrance, even though your car may be jammed full of honey.

However, he could easily break in if he chose to do so. One blow of his giant paw could rip your tin lizzie open like a second-rate can of sardines. It's only one of the mysteries of the park.

The bears are not entirely harmless. Throughout the park signs read, "Warning—Do Not Feed the Bears—It Is Dangerous." In Yellowstone it seems that a bear in the act of feeding itself will not bother anyone; yet being fed annoys him. Perhaps the kind of food that tourists offer him makes him ferocious. Missionaries often have to accept whatever is offered them, but bears are exceedingly independent and often lack the Christian spirit of understanding and meekness.

The tourists always face the problem of where to store their food at night when they camp in the park. Some of them lock it up in their cars. Some tie it up neatly and hoist it into the air, high up, by means of a rope cast over the limb of a tree. In one or two of the official auto camps the rangers have provided heavy iron safes that can be locked. But some campers are naturally careless, incredulous, or just plain dumb, and leave their food supplies in their tents. Dire results sometimes follow. Canned goods are not safer than anything else; not only do the bears know that the tins contain food, but some believe that the beasts can read the labels. And they don't need can-openers, either. A bear takes a can that you or I would struggle with for five minutes—and probably cut our fingers in the bargain—and touches it with his paw, and lo! the can is opened! People that always have trouble with can-opening gadgets should keep a bear handy—say, on the back porch.

During our first night in camp we got an intimate glimpse of the bear problem. About nine o'clock, a huge bear wandered into the grounds. Somebody saw it and started to chase it away. To chase a Yellowstone Park bear out of camp is usually a simple matter: you made a terrific noise—chiefly by beating two frying-pans together about six inches from the bear's nose, and by yelling for all you're worth. The bear takes the hint. On this particular occasion everybody joined in the bear-chasing, and you never in all your life heard such a banging, clattering and shouting. The bear retired hastily, and in a few minutes all became very still.

Then about five minutes later, a loud voice howled out of one of the tents down the line. "GET OUT OF HERE, YOU BIG LUMMOX!" One of those campers had left his food ungarded inside his tent. They say that he was awfully surprised. You would be too, if you awakened out of a sound sleep and found yourself staring into the countenance of a bear three times your size.

On the whole, the bears of Yellowstone are rather nice fellows. They have become tame because they always have all they need to eat, and no one is permitted to harm them; guns are not allowed inside the park. The garbage-cans of the park have special, heavy wooden railings around them so that the bears can help themselves to the garbage, but cannot knock over the cans. These garbage-cans are patronized chiefly by the more timid and inexperienced bears; those "in the know" waylay tourists and help themselves to the cream. In a way, however, it's unfair to call them robber bears; they amply reward anyone they rob, because for years afterward he can tell the thrilling story again and again. And the oftener he tells it, the bigger the bear becomes; but, after all, babies, acorns and practically everything else grows larger in the course of time—why not bears?

Somebody said to a friend, "Next time you go to Europe be sure not to miss the ocean trip—it's a wonderful experience." And in the same vein I say to you, "When you go to Yellowstone Park be sure not to miss the bears." But don't feed them, or you may be among the missing yourself. —Harold S. Kahm, in Youth's World.

THE TRUTH PAYS

The first day that John Wanamaker opened his Philadelphia store he took in the sum total of $34.

The next day he put the entire sum into newspaper advertising. This copy was a trail-blazer in modern merchandising, for it told the exact and literal truth.

John Wanamaker never departed from that course. He said in the later years of great success—"The shrewdest people in the world are those who tell the truth consistently and persistently."

Well, it is not difficult to tell the truth consistently. The truth is the thing you don't have to remember! On the other hand, a liar is always between the devil of his own invention and the deep sea of actuality.

And there are many ways of lying in addition to the spoken lie. Ten lies are acted for every one spoken. A shrug of the shoulders may dissemble truth. A lift of the eyebrow may hide knowledge. Silence may be the shroud of falsehood.

Such artifices fail in the long run. They are hardly worth the mental agony they occasion at any time. Unless a man is willing to see his good name and reputation for integrity become a byword, he would do well not to fall into the habit of disregarding the truth.

Tell the truth "consistently and persistently." It pays.

WELL, WHY NOT?

Horace Greeley once received a letter from a woman stating that her church was in distressing financial straits. They had tried every device they could think of—fairs, strawberry festivals, oyster suppers, a donkey party, turkey banquets, Japanese weddings, poverty sociables, mock marriages, grab-bags, box sociables, and necktie sociables. "Would Mr. Greeley be so kind as to suggest some new device to keep the struggling church from disbanding?" The editor replied: "Try religion." — The Presbyterian Record.

CHANGE

The philosopher who first discovered that one could not go wading in the same stream twice was soon superseded by the one who realized that that particular trick could not be done even once. Both of them had hit upon life's universal characteristic of relentless, continuous and unescapable change.

Youth is always moving on into old age, day into night, summer into winter. Today is ever replacing yesterday; this week disappears in favor of next week, and the old year slips away under our feet to give place to the new.

Our social order passes out of one phase and into another; political structures are continually being modified. Church organizations and even our habits and beliefs are ever affected by the law of change.

So many and so rapid are the changes that the Christian minister could easily give up in despair in the face of what sometimes seems to be a complete refusal of everything to remain as it is. But in a world of change some things abide. It is the privilege of the Christian minister to deal much with the things that remain steadfast.

A famous sociologist loved to startle his students with the statement that all human institutions collapse. A business firm which is one hundred years old is something of a wonder. Lodges, literary societies, and political parties come and go. Yet the Christian church is, after nineteen centuries of buffeting, society's greatest volunteer organization.

Competition and attack have failed to disturb the eternal truths which Jesus spoke so simply on the shores of Galilee, and the God that he revealed is the God by whom millions live and for whom they would be willing to die.

The human values of character and personality continue to be the world's finest product and with those values the church is concerned. Honesty, good will, and justice are abiding virtues.

Nor have the conditions been altered under which those values are created so much as sometimes we are tempted to believe. Agricultural colleges teach many facts that were once unknown, but the most scientific farmer must still deal with seeds and with nourishment for the growing plants, just as did the first barbarian who ever stirred the soil with a crooked stick.

In the church we use many terms, evangelism, conversion, worship, youth training, religious education, and the like, but back of them all is the need of men and women and boys and girls for God and the alluring opportunity of those who have found Him to bring others to that knowledge. That is the mission of the church.

Dealing with a changing and sometimes baffling world, the minister of Jesus Christ can orient himself among the things that are permanent and move forward into his work with a calmness and an assurance which near fear of change can shatter.—The Pastor's Journal.

LOOKING BACKWARD—THINKING FORWARD TO OUR IDEAS ABOUT GOD

By MRS. FRED G. HOLLOWAY

In our childhood we had certain ideas about God; about our relationship to Him and His to us.

There were various ways in which we thought about God. If we were fortunate in the kind of religious guidance that was given us, we thought of Him as a Father. Perhaps we regarded Him as rather a stern Father, though this phase of our thinking probably depended on our attitude toward our earthly father. I can never think of this type of thought about God without remembering the little child who screamed with fright when told by his church school teacher that God was like a father. The teacher did not know that the child's father was a drunkard, and terrorized his whole family. Obviously a child under these unfortunate circumstances could never have that conception of God which to Jesus was the sweetest of all. From this highest conception we can go down the scale regarding satisfactory childish conceptions of God until we come to the rather low but frequently discovered idea that God is a sort of glorified Santa Claus, or perhaps a kind of celestial spy; as one child said, "a big eye watching us from heaven."

Whatever our earliest ideas about God, youth brought doubts into our mind as to the existence of the kind of God imagined in childhood. This was right and natural. Many ideas of our childhood have to change as we grow. Fortunate we were if we had the help of an understanding parent, teacher, pastor or friend as we were changing our ideas about God. How unfortunate those who lost their belief in God during these years, instead of changing the form. How equally unfortunate those who in adult year, still cling to their childish conception of God. Apropos of this, there is a little poem about a child and his attitude toward material and spiritual things, which represents the attitude of some of us who have never had a growing conception of God; who continue always to look backward to our childish ideas of God, rather than thinking forward to more mature and more adequate ones. The poem is called "Grandfather's Love."

"They said he sent his love to me,
They wouldn't put it in my hand,
And when I asked them where it was
They said I couldn't understand.
I thought they must have hidden it,
I hunted for it all the day,
And when I told them so at night
They smiled and turned their heads away.

They say that love is something kind
That I can never see or touch.
I wish he'd sent me something else,
I like his cough-drops twice as much."

—Sara Teasdale.

Naive and sweet and amusing—in a child, we say. But are there not those who continue to hold something of this same attitude if we were to change the title to "God's Love?" Could we all be trusted to prefer and desire God's love, even though it included suffering, rather than material bounty from God?

Youth finds its growing conception of God in various ways and places. Perhaps the sensitive spirit of youth finds God most easily and most satisfying revealed in the beauties of nature. Then, as young people study Christ they begin to realize how clearly God is revealed in His life. But of this particular type of revelation I shall say no more in this talk, as I want to use it as the theme of the next meditation.

Thoughtful young people find God revealed as they study the arts and sciences, especially if they be talented along these lines, as well as spiritually inclined.

But not until we have come to adult years, thinking our way forward step by step, do we come to a fully satisfying and fairly adequate conception of God and His meaning for our lives.

In these later years we find that God is revealed in history, although comparatively few seem to recognize His hand there—or see the handwriting on the wall. The Hebrew prophets are an excellent example—and far enough back in history to be a safe one. Dr. Richard Roberts in his recent book, "The Contemporary Christ," says of these ancient prophets, "to them apostasy and calamity, peace and war, prosperity and adversity appeared as acts of God, working through a moral order which could not be abrogated or repealed, and from which there was no escape. This the prophets perceived so vividly and so decisively that they confidently announced "Thus saith the Lord."

Of course God is increasingly revealed to thoughtful adults in the wonders of earth and universe—God's own creations. He is also revealed in man's creations when they are inventions that work toward the good of mankind. But so often man's inventions and creations seem to be directed toward the destruction of mankind rather than its improvements.

Perhaps the place that we have to train ourselves longest to see God revealed is in our fellowman himself. Yet we know that God made man in His image. So often it seems, however, that man busies himself trying to make God over in his own image. Bernard Clausen, one of our contemporary preachers, said in a recent sermon that an ancient philosopher made a statement that at first seemed simple and obvious enough to be trite. But on closer inspection we discover that it has great significance, and deserves thoughtful consideration. This is the saying, "If horses have gods, their gods are doubtless horses." Think about this. Of what kind of a God do we conceive? Are we trying to be made into His image—or are we busy trying to make God over into ours?

Another revelation of God is through prayer. This is a revelation which should begin in childhood, but should certainly change and develop through the years. As we look backward can we trace the development of our prayer life? Has it developed very much? And as we think forward do we purpose to find God more and more through prayer?

From earliest times man has reached out to God with questions about the problems of life, with pleas for help in solving them. But why should man thus reach out to God unless the Creator Himself first put the need and desire to do so in man's heart and mind?

Through prayer and consequent revelation, some whom we know have progressed so far in their spiritual lives that they are like those to whom Dr. Roberts says the Scotch refer as having gone "far ben." That is to say, I suppose, that they have gone far beyond others in their experience of God and His revelation of Himself to them.

We know people in our own churches and communities who fit this description; people like whom we hope to grow as we try to find God revealed more clearly in the world about us, and within ourselves.

These are they of whom the poet wrote

"As torrents in summer,
Half dried in their channels,
Suddenly rise, tho' the Sky is still cloudless,
For rain has been falling
Far off at their fountains.

So hearts that are fainting,
Grow full to o'erflowing,
And they that behold it
Marvel, and know not
That God at their fountains
Far off has been raining."

We, too, can have God fill our lives with His presence if we thoughtfully purpose to seek constantly a clearer revelation of Him.

To the Leader

Remember that this is the second of a series of two topics on "Continuing Our Education." Connect this discussion with last week's discussion. Study the various ways in which the processes of education are fostered by the church. Discuss the opportunities offered for an education by the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor society, Women's Missionary auxiliary, and other organizations. Point out what subjects are taught by the various organizations and the importance of being receptive and responsive. Explain how such an educational program helps one in successful living. Survey your local church "set up" and find out in what ways the local church is endeavoring to educate children, youth, and adults. If you can, discover wherein changes can be made and the program expanded.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. In what sense, if any, is the church an educational institution?

2. Name all of the local church services. What are the objectives of each?

3. Can you show how each church service has an element of educatoin in its objective?

4. As a school, what is the church supposed to teach?

5. To what extent should Christian teachers interpret and apply God's Word to everyday life?

6. Is a church a school for adults? Explain.

7. Is a person truly educated if he has no religious education? Explain.

8. What are the educational features of a sermon?

9. Do we take our educational opportunities in the church seriously? Explain.

10. What do you think should be the educational qualifications of a music director in the church?

11. Is throat singing enough? Is singing below the throat merely enough? If not, what then?

12. Should we have higher standards in Sunday school teaching? Should we have more receptive and responsive pupils? If so, what can be done about it?

13. In what ways do you think the church can improve in its method of instruction?

14. In what ways do you think we can take better advantage of what the church has to offer?

The Poet

When once thy foot enters the church, be bare.
God is more there than thou; for thou art there
Only by His permission. Then beware,
And make thyself all reverence and fear.
Kneeling ne'er spoil'd silk stockings: quit thy state.—
All equal are within the church's gate.

Let vain or busy thoughts have there no part:
Bring not thy plough, thy plots, thy pleasures thither.
Christ purged His temple, so must thou thy heart.
All worldly thoughts are but thieves met together
To cozen thee. Look to thy actions well:
For churches either are our Heaven or Hell!

—George Herbert.

Little Gems

I believe that the root of almost every schism and heresy from which the Christian church has ever suffered, has been the effort of men to earn, rather than to receive, their salvation.—John Ruskin.

Doubts about the fundamentals of the Gospel exist in certain churches, I am told, to a large extent. My dear friends, where there is a warm-hearted church, you do not hear of them. I never saw a fly light on a red-hot plate.—C. H. Spurgeon.

And this is the mission of the church—not civilization, but salvation — not better laws, purer legislation, social elevation, human equality, and liberty, but first, the "kingdom of God and His righteousness": regenerated hearts, and all other things will follow.—A. S. Kittredge.

Topic Hints

Greatest School: In college or out of college, the church is the greatest school in the universe. While one is in college, the church trains him in successful learning. When one is out of college, the church trains him for successful living. We have many institutions and systems for learning, but the church is the greatest of them all. We have grade A colleges but none of their standards compare favorably with the standards of the Church of the Living God. In fact, the best educational institutions are the fruit of the church.

Differences: Many people differ in their opinions about the educational work of the church. Some feel that there is no place for education in Christianity. Others feel that there is no place for anything else but education. Both views are errors. In Christianity the head and the heart work together and God is the Master of both. Christianity is both emotional and intellectual and the true church is aware of this truth. Paul said to the Corinthians, "Brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant." The church is a school.

Church School: The church promotes many organizations whose purpose is to school people. The Sunday school, the young people's societies, the missionary organizations, the Sunday worship services, including Sunday evening services, and the mid-week services which are sadly neglected, are sponsored to educate as well as inspire, not only church members, but everybody. If Christian people are ignorant, it is no fault of the church and her leadership. The church deserves to be praised for her buildings, equipment, curriculum, and faculties. Her empty pews are an emphatic invitation for a larger enrollment.

Offerings: Fundamentally the church offers an education on Biblical subjects. These subjects touch every phase of life. Every sermon, every Sunday school lesson, every group discusion, every choir selection, every lecture, every prayer meeting meditation, every reading circle, and every gathering has a lesson to offer the receptive mind and heart. The type of offering is intended to meet the needs of people with all of their individual differences. Whatever ignorance may be found in the church is due largely to the neglect of people. A student cannot become educated by deliberately absenting himself from school.

The Great Need: In a discussion group some time since, the editor heard this question asked: What is the greatest need of the church? This was the answer: The greatest need is trained leadership. The church does need a trained leadership. No honest pastor would dare deny this fact. Many times he has tried to work with a leadership whose training was deplorable. In any Sunday school one may find teachers trying to teach subjects about which they know little or nothing. The greatest weakness of the modern Sunday school is the result of teachers not profiting by the training of the pastor, who has specialized in college and seminary. But there is another need which may be greater than the need of a better trained leadership. This is the need of a more receptive group to be schooled. What can a well-trained teacher do with absent pupils or pupils whose minds are a thousand miles away from the lesson? What can a preacher do with a congregation that carries on a correspondence course while he is pouring out his heart for their sake? What can God do with people who plan parties while a saintly member of the official board prays? The Sunday school records and the empty pews show that ignorance is due to the lack of fellowship as well as the lack of leadership. We need better trained church members as well as better trained preachers and teachers. The church is a great school. The student-body is weak as long as one member neglects his training.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Love's Grove Church, Earl A. Cook, Pastor.—It seems that the reporter for Love's Grove has been waiting for something to be done, since there has not been a report for so long, but we have been having excellent attendance in Sunday school. Our enrollment is the largest ever, and very much interest is being shown.

Several months ago we had an attendance contest between the men's, ladies' and young people's classes, and I am glad to say the young people won, and the entire school enjoyed a fine picnic supper in a beautiful, shady place near the river. We enjoyed the fellowship very much.

On the second Sunday in this month Children's Day was held, with a very interesting and impressive program. There were a host of children and young people who took part, and it seemed as if everyone tried to make the program interesting as possible.

We have a fine group of boys and girls at Love's Grove, and they are willing workers. We pray that God will guide and direct their lives so the Kingdom work will be carried on.

On last Saturday evening the Ladies' Auxiliary gave a supper at the club house, the proceeds of which will be used as they see fit. We thank the ladies for the bountiful and most delicious food, also the splendid work which they are doing; something over $25 was taken in.

Our pastor and family, also Mr. Cook's father and mother, have gone on a trip to New York to visit relatives and see the New York Fair. The church and many friends wish them a grand and most successful trip. Brother Cook will not be with us next Sunday, although he has someone to take his place—Mr. J. D. Griffin, of Monroe, N. C. Mr. Griffin has been with us seevral times before. We always look forward to having him with us, and hope that a large crowd will be present to hear him.

There has been much sickness in our community lately, but I am glad to say that most all who have been hindered by illness are able to be at church again.

Moriah, Rev. J. Leo Pittard, Pastor.—Last Sunday was a very good day at our church. We had a nice crowd for Sunday school, and at the church hour we had our Children's Day service. This service was in charge of the Junior Bible class. The choir was filled with these young people and they can sing as well as get up a grand program.

The Auxiliary held its regular monthly meeting on the last Friday night in May with Mrs. W. A. Sherrill. There was a good crowd present and some most interesting scrap books were turned in that the Auxiliary had been making for some unfortunate children. It was decided that this society would help clothe a child at the Children's Home for the coming year.

The Greensboro Union of Christian Endeavorers are going to hold their rally at our church on July 18. There is to be a picnic and we most cordially invite all Christian Endeavorers to this meeting.

Something special is going on at our church this week. Rev. Sidney Crumpton, a student of the School of Religion at Duke University, is conducting a Religious Emphasis Week this entire week. These services are designed for the benefit of both old and young. The services are beginning at 8:00 p.m. He is also holding special classes for children at 9:30 a.m. and for Christian Endeavorers at 7:30 p.m.

Our pastor is out of school and is with us this week. We are only sorry that Mrs. Pittard cannot be with him.

Plans are under way to redecorate the Sunday school rooms. We hope that this step will brighten our surroundings so that the attendance for Sunday school services will increase.

MRS. W. A. SHERRILL, Reporter.

Union Chapel Church, Mocksville, Rev. K. G. Holt, Pastor.—Rev. Mr. Holt filled his regular appointment at our church the second Sunday night.

Our revival meeting will begin the fifth week in July. Definite arrangements have not yet been made as to the hours of the services. We learn that our help minister will be from Thomasville, N. C. Everyone has a hearty welcome to join with us in our revival. Pray for us if you can't attend our services.

The Lord's Supper will be observed at our church the fourth Sunday morning in June.

We hope that some of our people will be able to attend the Christian Educational School which is to be held at High Point soon.

The health of our community is very good at this writing, except we are sorry to state that little Frances Hutchens still remains ill, although she has returned from the hospital to her home.

Our Sunday school is progressing rapidly. Everyone seems to be enjoying the work that is being carried on.

Pine Bluff Church, Rev. C. G. Isley, Pastor.—Since our last report a goodly number of things have happened, such as the Woman's Auxiliary serving a chicken supper, also an ice cream supper. The response to all these drives was splendid, and we feel that our people deserve praise for their good work. The funds raised will be used to help put a new floor in the church.

Sunday afternoon, June 11, our second quarterly conference was held, with a good many present for the meeting, and all official members giving good reports.

Our Sunday school is looking forward to the Sunday School Convention which is to be held at our church in July.

CLIFFORD BARBEE, Reporter.

Calvary Church, Greensboro.—Our congregation is very much pleased with a newly painted auditorium in which to worship. This was the gift of Mr. David Glass, one of our members. Beauty and attractiveness in the church seem to add to the spirit of worship, and we are very grateful to Mr. Glass for this large contribution.

The Daily Vacation Bible School began Monday and will continue for two weeks. It is under the direction of our pastor, assisted by a number of our Sunday school teachers and workers. It will close with a Children's Day program Sunday night, July 2. Our pastor and Rev. S. M. Needham, pastor of Proximity Methodist church, exchanged pulpits last Sunday night. Rev. Mr. Needham gave us quite a stirring message.

John Frank Williams, one of our boys and a student at High Point College last year, is a patient at Memorial Hosptial, Richmond, Va. We are trusting he will soon return much improved.

Rev. T. F. McCulloch, who has been confined to home on account of illness, is much improved, and we hope he will soon be in his accustomed place in the church.

Floyd Reynolds, Kemp Reynolds, and the twins, Bob and Burrin Flemming, are in New York this week seeing the World's Fair. They are some of our faithful young men, and we miss them when they are away.

Hickory Grove, Guilford Charge, Rev. J. B. Trogdon, Pastor, June 19.—Although we have not reported lately, we are still moving on. Rev. Mr. Trogdon has filled all appointments.

Our Sunday school enrollment is the highest it has been for some time. We have now 135 on roll.

Our Children's Day program will be given next Sunday, June 25, beginning at 11 a.m. Dinner will be on the ground, and in the afternoon a pageant will be given and also some special singing.

We ask the prayers of all Herald readers that we may grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior.

St. Paul's Church, A. D. Shelton, Pastor.—We at St. Paul's have just been through two glorious weeks of revival. Our special meeting ended Sunday, June 18. Our pastor, whom we all consider the best available, conducted all the services but one. We consider the series of services a success from the standpoint of good religious experience. The number of souls saved may not have been as numerous as in other meetings, but in results as to spirit stirring times, the meeting was really successful.

For several weeks preceding the meeting, we had Mr. E. C. Hamilton to teach us rudiments and fundamentals of music. He also directed the music for meeting, doing it very efficiently.

Our attendance at Sunday school and church has been remarkably good for hot weather and vacation time.

Come to services at St. Paul. We are always glad to have visitors and strive to make them feel welcome.

REPORTER.

Friendship Church, Shiloh Charge, Rev. C. E. Ridge, Pastor, June 19.—We are very glad to state that our Sunday school is growing in numbers and attendance, and we hope spiritually, too. We have 234 on roll, and hope to have a large number present next Sunday morning for preaching service. Mr. Ridge always brings helpful messages.

The birthday offering for the Children's Home amounted to about $30 or more.

Our ladies' auxiliary met with Mrs. A. L. Hartley, June 12, with a large attendance.

We had an interesting program, and we were very glad to have as visitors, Rev. and Mrs. Ridge, Mrs. Tulia Hartley, and Mrs. J. W. Walser; hope they will come again. At the close of the program, Mrs. Hartley served delicious refreshments. Our next meeting will be with Miss Addie Shoaf.

We are glad to report that Mrs. Elmer Hartley is doing fine, after an appendicitis operation last week at the Davidson hospital. But we are sorry to report that their baby, little Ann Hartley, is sick; hope it will be well soon.

Messrs. Lawrence and Robert Holt are attending summer school at High Point College.

Miss Melba Ree Koonts, of Fork, spent the week-end with Miss Rachel Koonts. Miss Paige Shoaf visited away over the week-end.

Love Joy Church, Seagrove - Love Joy Charge, J. H. Trolinger, Pastor, June 19.—Although we have not sent in a report for several weeks, we are glad to say our work is moving on splendidly. We are well pleased with the increase in our Sunday school. We have 142 on roll; 116 were present yesterday. Our attendance for church has increased also, but still we want to see even more present for next Sunday. We would like to see the young people take a deeper interest in our worship services.

Children's Day will be observed at our church the second Sunday in July. The program is now under the leadership of Misses Elaine Pritchard and Isley Galloway. It will be an all-day service and we want all in reach of our church to come and help to make it a splendid day for the children.

The Friendship Circle held its regular monthly meeting with Mrs. C. T. Russell the first Tuesday night in June. Twenty-six members were present. An interesting program was given, after which refreshments were served. We are planning our next meeting to be with Mr. and Mrs. Trolinger over at Seagrove.

Greensboro, Grace Church, J. Elwood Carroll, Pastor.—With all noise eliminated, we are just going along in a progressive manner. We have done nothing of spectacular significance, yet our regular work is in good condition.

June is the month of graduations, and Grace church had her share. The vesper services for the graduates of Curry High School of Woman's College were conducted in our church on Sunday evening, May 28. Then, despite our small number of young people, we had outstanding graduates in many colleges and schools. On June 13 Rene Hardre, one of our most promising young men, received his doctor of medicine degree in Chicago. Wade Johnson was graduated from Carolina and George Jones from Davidson, the latter a member of the tennis team with an outstanding record for the past year. Bill Hester, one of the basketball stars of past years, was graduated from High Point College. Edwin Booth and James Boren Millikan were among the Grensboro High School graduates, and Helen Sharpe and Marguerite Cox among those in Curry High School. We wish for all these young people a useful future.

Our 48th anniversary was observed with a fellowship banquet on Friday evening, April 29, with about 180 persons present. James E. Coltrane served as toastmaster, and a variety program was presented. New church directories were prepared and distributed. On the first Sunday in May the pastor delivered an appropriate message for the occasion, and the altar flowers were donated as symbol of the charter members. Mrs. Louis Puckett and Mollie Cox were received as new members, thus making 22 for the year.

(Engraving courtesy Greensboro News-Record)

District Superintendent L. B. Hayes, D.D, made us an unofficial visit on the first Sunday in June, and brought us a very fine message.

At present a Vacation Church School is being held in cooperation with the West Market Street Methodist Church at the latter church. A number of our children are attending, and teachers from our church include Mrs. J. Elwood Carroll, Helen Sharpe, Mrs. J. R. Dodson, and Mrs. F. R. Stout. The school will close Friday of this week.

Our third quarterly conference was held Monday evening, June 19. Mr. Ferd R. Stout was reported elected as delegate to the next annual conference, which will convene in our church on October 18.

On Monday evening, June 12, about 45 of our church school officers, teachers, and friends had an outing at the Jefferson Standard Country Club with Mrs. L. C. Westbrook as hostess. After games a most delicious picnic supper was served by women of the Auxiliary.

A few of our young people will be in attendance at the state C. E. Convention this week at High Point College, then next week we are expecting a large delegation from our church in attendance upon the Leadership Educatoin School, of which our pastor is dean.

We are happy to report all of our sick members on the road to recovery. Mrs. W. A. Hornaday is much improved after two operations, and hopes to go home soon from Wesley Long Hospital. Mrs. C. B. Huffines is steadily improving in St. Leo's Hospital. Mrs. Warren McCulloch is better and hopes to be out of bed at home soon.

We are happy to have Dr. and Mrs. Spahr back in town after a month's trip of nearly 4,000 miles through Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Texas, Kansas, and Oklahoma. They traveled by auto with their daughter, Mrs. Bey Van W. Phillips, of Bradford, Pa.

Mr. J. Norman Wills made a report at prayer meeting on the Uniting Conference.

Caroleen, Rev. H. D. Garmon, Pastor.—There hasn't been a report from our church in quite a while, but we are still up and about the Master's business. Our pastor filled his regular appointments here Sunday, both messages being enjoyed by a good attendance, among whom were many visitors from other churches of our community.

Our Sunday school is still growing, with several new members each Sunday. We are very proud of our young men's and young ladies' class of our Sunday school, the great interest they show in their church work. We realize that we need this great training today to be able to carry on the work of the church of tomorrow.

Our revival services were held from Sunday, May 21, until June 4, the preaching being done by our pastor, who brought wonderful messages each night to a packed house. Several accepted the Lord and several were reclaimed. These messages also revived the church members, causing them to take on new life and work harder together for the upbuilding of God's Kingdom.

We greatly appreciate the wonderful cooperation of the other churches of our community during our revival. It was truly a community revival. We feel as a result of our revival that the people of our community love each other better than before.

On Saturday, January 3, our young ladies' class and some members of the young men's class, and their teachers, enjoyed a trip to the mountains. We visited Asheville Park, Chimney Rock, and Lake Lure; carried lunch and spent the day. Everyone reported a grand time. Our only regret was that some who had planned to go had to miss the trip by being in bed with measles, or other sickness being in the home.

Remember us in your prayers that we may ever do the will of the Father.

RUTH REINHARDT, Ass't Reporter.

Midway Church, Greensboro, Paul Hamilton, Pastor.—In spite of the hot weather and vacations, our attendance has held its own. It seems, though, that the children are more interested than the older people of the church. Practically every Sunday morning you see the same children's faces, with an additional two or three new ones. We older people must wake up and help our children to keep the race going for God.

The Senior Christian Endeavor society has been meeting regularly every Sunday night. We have had several special programs and speakers aside from our usual lessons. Three times we have gone together in a group to different churches to observe their meetings. We are hoping the interest will continue through the summer months as it has in the past.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society meets every first and third Sunday nights at 6:45 p.m., and is well attended by the younger boys and girls. Mrs. C. M. Ball, Mrs. D. H. Jurney, and Mrs. Clyde York have charge of this work.

The Woman's Auxiliary has been meeting regularly each month and there is a great deal of interest in this work. They gave a picnic during the week of commencement at High Point College, in honor of our pastor, who was in this year's graduating class, at the home of Mrs. C. F. Pinnix.

Have you really ever heard a young preacher preach? You should hear our pastor. It seems as if each service is better than any before. Our pastor is sincere, and the words he speaks seem to go to each listener's heart and dwell there. Our church is proud of our pastor and we feel fortunate in having him to guide our community. May God bles him and our church.

First Methodist Church, Liberty, Rev. Aubert M. Smith, Pastor.—Since the uniting conference a group has been organized consisting of men and women from the M. E. and M. P. churches. Dr. N. F. Marsh is president of this interesting group.

The chief speaker Sunday evening was Rev. Clyde Brooks, graduate of Wofford College. The Sunday school made an offering of $25.

Quite a few of our members plan to attend Home-Coming Day at High Point College, Thursday, June 22.

Our pastor will be one of the speakers at the State Christian Endeavor Convention which convenes in High Point from June 22 through June 25.

Our members who have been on the sick list for some time are improving, this most lovely time of the year.

Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Isley had as guests last week Mrs. J. W. Isley and daughter, Miss Ina Isley, of Greensboro.

Mrs. R. L. Elkins will entertain Circle No. 1 Wednesday, June 28. Mrs. Wade Hardin, circle leader, will preside at the meeting.

Miss Lora Bowman has returned home after spending the winter doing office work for her brother, Dr. Earl Bowman, of Lumberton. We are indeed glad to see her in our midst again.

Dr. J. F. Amick, of Columbia, S. C., was guest of his sister, Mrs. F. A. Shepard.

Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Kirkman were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wade Hardin Sunday.

May the Lord bless all who are working for the cause of Christ.

Trinity and Mt. Carmel, Lexington.—The main object of these lines is to inform our fellow Christian workers that the former First Methodist Protestant church of this city is now Trinity Methodist church. This change became necessary as a result of Methodist Union. Several names were suggested, but after prayerful consideration, the congregation on last Sunday formally voted to use the above name. The choice was readily made and everyone seems highly pleased with our new name. Methodist Union will eventually strengthen this church. It is located in a section of the town that it is much needed and is serving a much felt need in the community.

During the present pastorate the interior of the main auditorium has been completely refinished and modernized in many respects, which adds much to the physical appearance and aids very materially in the worship services.

At Mt. Carmel there is still a marked growth in many ways. If I have been correctly informed, last Sunday was the record attendance at the Sunday school for the conference year so far. The interest is certainly good at this church. The members and pastor are looking forward with much interest to the annual home-coming the first Sunday in August. All former pastors and friends of the church are invited to spend the day with us. This also marks the beginning of our revival. Dr. F. W. Paschall will come on Monday and remain through the meeting to do the preaching. Pray with us that God may work through this meeting to bring his own closer to him, and cause those who are in sin to see the way and walk therein.

The meeting at Trinity will be held the third Sunday in September, and following, for about ten days. Rev. J. W. Groce will be the visiting evangelist. Pray for God's work, here and everywhere.

L. E. MABRY, Pastor.

Connelly Spring Charge, Shady Grove Church.—Our revival meeting closed Saturday, June 10. We feel and hope it has not closed in the hearts of the people. Rev. V. N. Freeman did some real gospel preaching. Many souls were saved and six members were received into the church.

We still have good prayer meetings, and hope they will grow larger and better.

The Ladies' Aid society met at the home of Mrs. Ethel Southerland with 18 members present. Two new members were added to our roll. We were very glad indeed to have Mrs. J. L. Love present with us in this meeting. She gave us a very encouraging talk. We are wishing her and Rev. Mr. Love a great success at Draper.

"Christ Calls"

Hitler calls! Mussolini calls! The Sun Emperor calls! Challenging tocsins sound over a word that rocks beneath the tread of converging armies. The dictators call and youth answers. Unnumbered millions are carried forward upon a rising tide of super-nationalism that threatens to engulf and destroy our boasted twentieth-century civilization. As this international convention of Christian youth opens, more men are under arms than ever before in human history save only during the actual hostilities of the Great War. The expenditures for conflict have bankrupted human society. By the economic tests that ordinary business must meet to survive, there remain few if any solvent states.

Is there an answer? Is there a solution? Clearly the chancelleries of Europe have no answer; nor is isolation, which seems to be America's more seriously regarded answer, a solution. Man has failed. While there was yet time, he offered slogans instead of a solution; he talked about "saving the world for democracy"; he centered his hope in a "war to end war"; he brought forth treaties that divided and sub-divided the earth; but deliberately he turned away from world appeasement. Civilization has again come to the end of the trail with traditional statesmanship, and the prospect is a catastrophe that would wreck the race.

"What the world needs," another has written, "is power that will make men and women good. Where may this power be found? Nowhere else than in the New Testament." The world's hope and only hope is in Christ; truly, He has the only solution for the world's problem. His Sermon on the Mount is the epic of human brotherhood, and here are comprehended the particulars of statesmenship that can save human society. We have tried every other way. Within a generation, we have witnessed the repudiation by one or more parties to the agreemen of every solemn international engagement entered into since the Armistice. All treaties have become scraps of paper. Leagues and courts have been repudiated; national and international honor are a brutal jest; and might alone has ruled each new occasion. From this world madness the church of Jesus Christ rises scarred, chastened, delayed, but not defeated. There is little to choose between the violence of Russia and the persecutions of the Third Reich. Russia boast that she has liquidated religion. (But she has not!) Hitler persecutes Jews, Catholics, Protestants alike—more than fourteen hundred clergymen of our own faith have been or are in concentration camps or prisons because they made Christ their first choice.

In all authoritarian states the immediate prospect is ominous, but "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Christianity is a forward march. The march itself may be delayed, but it cannot be stopped, and "He at last shall reign where'er the sun does his successive courses run."—From an address by Dr. Daniel A. Poling.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

A Mid-Year Meeting

Having discussed the matter with Mrs. R. M. Andrews, the president of the North Carolina Branch of Women's Work, I am now announcing a Mid-year Meeting of our conference activities for Wednesday, July 12th, beginning at 10:30 a. m. The place for this meeting will be the Presbyterian church in Thomasville. The reason for having this meeting at this time and this place is that the women will be meeting in the Community Church in Thomasville that day in their Quarterly Branch meeting and it was thought that many of the men would be coming to bring their wives and that both meetings could be held at the same time to good advantage. The Presbyterian church is almost across the street from the Community church and so for convenience we have asked for the use of the Presbyterian auditorium and it has been most graciously granted by the pastor of the church. Those who come in their cars can park just once and that will be sufficient for the day. At the noon hour both groups can be together without doing any driving. Those of the Mid-Year meeting who want lunch at the church can have it for the small sum of thirty-five cents provided they are willing to write Rev. J. Clyde Auman, the pastor, that they want lunch and for how many. In the past there has been so much uncertainty about how many to prepare for that it has resulted in loss to the women in serving in some cases, so this time those who write in advance for reservations can eat at the church and those who do not care to do this can find plenty of restaurants within easy walking distance of the church. This notification should reach Brother Auman by Monday, July 10th.

In this meeting we want to have reports from the various agencies of the Conference in order that we may see just where we are and also we want to discuss procedure for the remaining part of the year. Those of us in official positions are having many decisions to make these days and it would help wonderfully for us to have the opinions of others in some of the great issues. Bishop James H. Straughn will be invited to this meeting and I sincerely trust he may be present. Now it is true that some of our ministers will be in revival meetings at that time and will not be able to be present. This would be true at almost any time of the year from spring until autumn. The only thing I know is for those who can come to come and those who have other engagements just do the best they can.

Kannapolis Church Dedicated

Last Sunday was a glad day for our Kannapolis church in that it was formally dedicated at that time. I took with me as my substitute for preaching the sermon Dr. P. E. Lindley, the dean of High Point College, and he preached a fine sermon for the occasion as he usually does. The house was well filled with interested listeners. The pastor, Dr. D. T. Huss had charge of the worship service and conducted this in a most pleasing way. Printed programs were used for both the morning and afternoon services. In the morning service Miss Laura Braswell, one of the most outstanding products of our Children's Home sang "The Holy City" in a most pleasing manner. Following the sermon Brother M. W. Henderson, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the church gave a brief history of the church then presented it to the president of the conference for the formal dedication. At the noon hour a picnic dinner was served in the large assembly room of the Sunday school building. In the afternoon the congregation reassembled for another service. Short addresses were made by the Rev. Mr. Jones, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church, on the subject of "The Future of Methodism in Kannapolis"; Dr. C. N. Clark, District Superintendent, spoke on "The Future of Methodism In the Salisbury District" and I spoke briefly on the importance of our work for the remainder of this conference year and touched lightly on the subject assigned me, namely, "The Future of Methodism In This State." Some of the members of the local church spoke briefly as did the pastor, Brother Huss, who presided over the service.

The Kannapolis church was organized by Rev. G. H. Hendry under the sponsorship of the Concord church in April, 1927. It has grown until it now has about 250 members. It is located in a section where there is not other Methodist church close by so there will be no problem of merging churches here. The building consists of a good sized auditorium and some eleven or twelve Sunday school rooms with a rather large assembly room. Brother Huss, the pastor, is now serving his third year and seems to be very popular. The church under his administration as well as under the administration of others has prospered. Those who have had any part in the work are to be congratulated.

The Joint Meeting of Boards

On Wednesday of last week there was a joint meeting of the Board of Missions of the Western North Carolina Conference and our Board of Church Extension. The purpose of this meeting was to find out about the work of the two boards and their resources so that plans could be made for the future. The matter of chief concern seems to be to supplement salaries in places where they were not able to pay so that each man might devote his entire time to the work. The Executive Committee from our Board was asked to study the situation from our angle and to file such requests as are necessary.

Many Calls For Conferences

Just at the present time calls are coming in from various sections of the state for a meeting of the District Superintendent and myself as president of the conference in regard to procedure in certain localities. One thing which complicates matters is the fact that each denomination must find a place for all of its men this fall. These matters will be handled to the best of our ability and we are asking for patience on the part of our people. The situation is more complicated in some respects because there are not precedents. The Uniting Conference laid down general principles and left many details to be worked out. The fact that my territory covers the whole state puts me at a disadvantage when trying to meet these engagements. J. E. PRITCHARD.

Message In Verse

There's part of the sun in an apple,
There's part of the moon in a rose;
There's part of the flaming Pleiades
In every leaf that grows.
Out of the vast comes nearness;
For the God whose love we sing
Lends a little of His heaven
To every living thing.

Brother Earl Cook is enjoying the World's Fair this week; he is giving two weeks to it.

Brother J. L. Trolling has returned from a trip to the Lone Star State.

President C. E. Forlines has transferred his membership from the North Carolina Annual Conference to the Maryland Annual Conference. The Unification of Methodism seemed to make this necessary. We hope the good Doctor may have many years of happy service in the United Church.

Bishop Straughn was compelled to cancel his engagement at the Children's Home in order to hold the Michigan Conference. He is a very busy man these days. Dr. R. L. Shipley, Editor of the Methodist Protestant Recorder "pinch hit" and as usual hit a home run.

Wherever you see a group of pastors together you can safely guess the topic of conversation—"what's going to happen at the approaching annual conference?"

The building occupied by McCulloch & Swain, printers of the M. P. Herald, was damaged by fire last Friday. Considerable damage was done to the equipment as well as to the building. We suppose it was protected by insurance.

Land Sale

Next Saturday the remaining unsold property on Trinity and Brown Streets, South Greensboro, near the home of the late Dr. McCulloch, which was purchased to be used for the site of what is now High Point College, will be offered for sale. There are thirty-five lots and they are to be sold by Penny Brothers, Auctioneers. The sale is advertised to start at 1:30 p. m.

West End Makes a Record

During the present pastorate of eight months, nineteen members of West End or members of the family, some of whom belong to West End Church, have been patients in the hospital. Most of them were surgical cases. Out of a membership of just a few over two hundred this record exceeds any I have known. We rejoice that only one of the number has died.

Let's Go Forward

To all Methodists of the three uniting Churches there is a most inviting future. The large membership gives us courage to undertake greater things than before. The many mission fields with hundreds of missionaries working with peoples of almost, if not with every race known to the Church, is a source of great joy to every mission-minded Methodist. The colleges and schools under the auspices of the Methodist Church which have followed the march of Christian missions, reassures us of the stability, and the endurance of the work of our missionaries among even the more degraded. In fact, all philanthropic projects of the united Church must receive a great impetus from this union. Looked at from these aspects there are many reasons for being greatly encouraged and none for discouragement. Of course, it will require time, maybe much time, to consolidate our gains and to coordinate our labors. But since there has been no change in the spirit of Methodism and there is no change in our objective—to bring men to Jesus Christ, there should nothing arise which would keep all of us, pastors and people, from working joyously and successfully together.

Class Picnic

The Philathea Class of West End Church held its monthly business meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Stockard Monday night of this week. The Baraca Class was invited to the picnic supper served on the lawn, which preceded the meeting.

The Stockards have recently moved to the country where they have a large house, surrounded by ample grounds shaded by great oak trees. Grapes, figs and other fruit in generous quantity are or will be available from their own premises soon. A barn which would house 16 head of cattle is at their service, but Victor says he is no farmer, does not know how to hitch a horse or milk a cow. His job with the Duke Power Company deals daily with the wild horses harnessed by Franklin and his successors, instead of the plodding mules of the fields.

The New Herald Committee

We hope that every reader of the Herald will give careful consideration to the statement of the Special Herald Committee's Report in this issue of the Herald. We are surely facing a situation difficult to handle, but it is by no means impossible. A little boosting by our pastors and cooperation by our people would put the Herald out of the "red" and make the publishers feel fine. It is too bad we have so many people who have such facility at getting from under a responsibility. Were the Herald a private project our pastors and Herald agents and other subscribers might justly feel they were not to be blamed for deserting the paper in these months of great need. But the M. P. HERALD BELONGS to the North Carolina Annual Conference; the same conference that these pastors are members of, the same conference that these two hundred and some churches are members of, and is as much a project of the church as is any object for which money can be raised. Recently a leading member of a church said he had not heard his pastor name the HERALD during his present pastorate of nearly two years. But that pastors looks after his own support with meticulous care. We cannot see how any one can prove his love for a denomination which has given him the opportunity for making his life what it is by deserting it in the hours of its greatest need.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Upper Room or Supper Room?

By FRANK Z. CUTHBERT

Membership in any evangelical church should mean something. We have let down the bars so it is the easiest thing in the world to become a church member.

The majority of churches have discontinued the Sunday evening service and the mid-week prayer-meeting, and in many instances the Sunday dinner is made an excuse for not attending Sunday school. Some church members have discontinued private prayer and meditation on the Bible, and a few have discontinued giving to the cause of missions—and still we wonder why the church is not more prosperous. We have too many members of the wrong kind.

Every pastor is anxious to make a good showing and increase his membership, and this craze to get people into the church has led to some amusing methods. One pastor asked a woman to join his church, and she replied that she did not feel that she ought to join, since she had never experienced a change of heart. His answer was, "Well, you are a member of the Ladies' Aid Society, and that is sufficient." Another pastor began a "drive" to get new members and interviewed many, and to those who expressed unfitness he said, "If you believe in God and the ultimate triumph of good over evil, that is all that is necessary."

In apostolic days they preached repentance, and men asked, "What shall we do to be saved?" Now it is a social gospel and "be good." When Paul preached before Felix, the Scripture tells us that Felix trembled. There is very little trembling in the pews today. As Dr. Joseph Parker once remarked, "formerly the pulpit was a Sinai, now it is only a reading desk"; consequently there is no conviction of sin and people feel there is nothing to be saved from. We need to be thrown down like Paul on the Damacus road, and realize that we have no resources in ourselves and that our only salvation is in clinging to the "old rugged cross." Instead of the preacher's coaxing and teasing people to join the church, the desire ought to be on the part of the person joining.

In one community the church roof caught fire by sparks from the engine on the train. People hurried to the edifice and formed a bucket brigade and put the fire out. Among those who helped was the judge of the municipal court, who was an infidel. After the fire was extinguished, some one said to the judge, "Judge, this is the only time I ever saw you at church." "Well," said the judge, "this is the only time you ever had a fire at the church. I will come every day if you will have a fire." The trouble is, we have not had any fire—we have not even had a blaze.

"The early church was praying in the upper room. The modern church is cooking in the supper room," said Dan Shannon, the evangelist. Do not misunderstand me here. I enjoy all kinds of nutritious food and see no harm in people's eating, and I believe in the church's being cordial, and I can laugh as loud as anyone—when there is something to laugh at. It is the tactics of getting people to join the church that bothers me.

I maintain that one should have a conviction of sin and a vision of the cross and of Him who died on it, and a desire to live on a higher plane, before one joins any church. One should be so interested that one will go to the Sunday school and church services and will be inquiring the way of salvation. Uniting with the church as some do gives a wrong impression to the world. It conveys the idea that one can join the church just as one joins a club or other organization by simply handing one's name in for membership.

By this, I do not mean to imply that in order to join a church one should be so erudite and learned that one could discuss all theological subjects and doctrines intelligently; but this growing into the Christian life gradually, after one becomes a member, is taken for granted too often, and instead of a growth in grace there is a decline in grace.

I was once present at a meeting where some young people came to be examined for church membership. At a previous meeting all had taken a "stand" for Christ and declared by so doing that they wished to become Christians. The pastor and one or two church officials were present and asked the candidates several questions. They all admitted that they had private prayer and studied the Bible, and each one told what led him to Christ. They all expressed a wish to join the church and were accepted.

In calling attention to this particular meeting, I am not laying down any arbitrary rules, or saying that every church should follow this method, but I am convinced that it was a much better procedure than to take people in irrespective of their fitness for membership.

The message to the church at Sardis could be applied to many churches of today—"Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." There is very little liberty or freedom in the church. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Church members know they ought to pray, but they do not. They know they ought to testify and tell what God has done for their souls, but there is no testimony. They talk on other matters at a social so they weary one at times, but the substance of the meeting is reading from a slip of paper, with the excuse that it expresses their "thoughts" better than anything they could give, and it would appear that they have no thoughts.

I have traveled all over the country and have visited hundreds of churches and prayer-meetings, and have often led the prayer-meeting, when I was invited to do so, but I declare that we shall have to change our tactics and run on a different schedule and form a new line of battle before we shall ever impress this world that there is a reality in the religion of Jesus Christ.

O church of the apostles—church of the living God—church where "prayer was made without ceasing" for Peter and they prayed him out of prison—church at Philippi that was Paul's "joy and crown"—church where they love one another—church where they have a prayer-meeting and pray—church where they have a fire—church that Christ declared the "gates of hell" should not prevail against—come back! Come back to us and refresh us, that we may refresh others and be glad when they say unto us, "Let us go into the house of the Lord"!—Zion's Herald.

THE CHALLENGE OF REPEAL

"A Saloonless Nation by 1920" was a rallying-call that came out of the Atlantic City International Convention in 1911. The Eighteenth Amendment and national prohibition were a direct result of a unity in the field of temperance action that began with Christian youth. Today, the nation faces an alcohol problem in a new liquor traffic, a problem more intense and terrifying than the problem of thirty years ago. A president of the United States promised that "at no time or under any condition, at no place or under any circumstances, shall that institution the saloon or its equivalent be allowed to return to American life." But as I speak to you tonight, there are three times as many places of beverage-liquor sales as there were in pre-prohibition days. The taproom, or bar, or the liquor-selling night club of 1939, is a more demoralizing institution than was the old saloon. Not one promise of repeal has been kept; every promise has been broken; every solemn engagement has been disregarded. Beyond these failures we face the fact that liquor now is more easily procurable by young people under age and more generally indulged in by women and girls than in pre-prohibition days. In thousands of American communities, beverage alcohol is given into the hands of little children, ostensibly for their parents of course, but with a constant and devastating menace to boys and girls. In 1917 we were singing, "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier," but in 1939 we are face to face with the fact that, whatever our intention, we have raised tens of thousands of girls to become glorified barmaids.

John Barleycorn has not contributed to safety on the American highways, nor to law enforcement, law observance, and good government. There is a rising tide of anti-liquor sentiment. In more than six thousand political units, large or small, the traffic has been outlawed by popular vote since 1932. The end is not yet!

Temperance Education

Christian Endeavor is particularly interested in an educational campaign that shall be youth led and youth supported. Christian Endeavor continues to highly regard Allied Youth, in which its own leaders have an honored place. Specifically, Christian Endeavor is interested in a nation-wide campaign to make liquor advertising illegal and to remove the traffic from roadside stands, filling stations and restaurants. We would particularly commend our associates in Michigan for their leadership in these fields. A supporting public opinion is vital to any political enactment; and it is in the field of public opinion that Christian Endeavor will increasingly concentrate her temperance activities.

"Take private profit out of liquor," may become a unifying campaign slogan of the next decade.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling.

A STATEMENT OF THE SPECIAL HERALD COMMITTEE

Dear Friend:

We don't know whether you like figures or not; but you may be interested in some that have to do with the financial situation as regards the Herald. They ought to be of great concern to all those who know how important a church paper is in carrying on the work of the Kingdom. Not to prolong the statistics, we are giving the facts for the last four issues. We might go farther back with much the same story.

Issue	Income from Subscriptions	Income from Subsidy	Cost of Issue	Deficit
May 25	$17.44	. . . .	$70.60	$53.16
June 1	11.00	$15.50	70.56	44.06
June 8	17.70	. . . . .	70.26	52.56
June 15	14.00	. . . .	69.56	55.56

It doesn't take much figuring to see that we are accumulating a tremendous deficit—we are "going in a hole" at a rapid rate. Just how much longer we can continue the paper under such conditions is a problem. BUT CONTINUE IT WE MUST. We do know that the printer, who is the son of Dr. J. F. McCulloch, is unable to finance that deficit. We must find some other way out, if the paper is to continue.

The way out is obvious. It lies in two directions: 1. Increase the Herald subscription list. (There has been a decided decrease in recent weeks due to lapses). 2. Raise the subsidy apportioned to each charge. Not much is asked of any church, and if someone will interest himself in it it can be secured without much effort.

We need more cooperation on the part of the pastors and those who are vitally interested in the Herald to keep it going. With the processes of Methodist Union going on it is extremely important that our people should be informed. Until adjustments can be worked out, we must have the paper in order to carry on our work effectively.

Let us bestir ourselves, and PUSH THE CAMPAIGN. It will succeed if we will do our part. Send in subscriptions and subsidy. But do it now—delay may be dangerous.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

SOLOMON: A RULER WHO BEGAN WELL

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, July 2

By Rev. O. L. Easter

Lesson Text—I Kings 3:5-15.

Golden Text—Give thy servant therefore an understanding heart . . . that I may discern between good and evil. I Kings 3:9.

Herodotus observed long ago a fact that is still painfully true today: "Nothing in human life is more to be lamented than that a wise man should have so little influence." The kingdoms of the world have suffered much at the hands of rulers who are not wise in the wisdom of God. They have been shrewd and cunning in the use of worldly-wise schemes but not in the use of the only true wisdom which is of Almighty God. St. Augustine says, "All that we possess of truth and wisdom is a borrowed good flowing from that fountain from which we ought to thirst in the fearful desert of this world, that, being refreshed and invigorated by these dews from heaven, we may not faint upon the road that conducts us to a better country. Every attempt to satisfy the cravings of our hearts at other sources only increases the void. You will always be poor if you do not possess the only true riches."

With our study of Solomon we learn of one who became wise and was in great influence, and who also received his wisdom from the God of all wisdom. His prayer at the beginning of his reign as King of Israel is a model to every monarch or ruler upon the throne of government of any land. "Oh Jehovah my God, Thou hast made Thy servant king instead of David, my father: and I am but a child; I know not how to go out or come in. Give Thy servant an understanding heart to judge Thy people that I may discern between good and evil. . . ." The greatest obstacle in the way of true wisdom is self-confidence inspired in the mind of a leader by external resources. The dictator of today claims that he is infallible in his rulings and commands and convinces himself and his unfortunate subjects by parading his "invincible" army. At the same time this false pride is blinding him to the real truth of God concerning his nation the lack of which—all history shouts—will make futile and void all his highest hopes. Solomon's humility enabled him to receive the wisdom of heaven for in his attitude of human weakness he turned towards God, and God's possibilities are infinite.

Thou canst never ask too much."

When Solomon asked for wisdom rather than riches or long life it pleased God and He granted Solomon's wish even unto these things that were not put first. This would testify to us that if men would seek first the kingdom of wisdom of God all these other things would be added. In our feverish desire for selfish gains we forget God and His wisdom and without that we are striving blinding in a world of mystery without a chart. After men learned the general law of the power of electricity in the shock of Franklin's kite these were added unto them the "other things" of electric appliances. When Columbus sought and proved that the world was round there was added unto man the "other things" of many continents. So with man and the highest of all general promises; when we discover the universal truths or wisdom of God to walk in them, then nothing in the world or out of it con prevent us receiving the good of the land.

"But there is yet a liberty unsung
By poets, and by senators unpraised,
Which monarchs cannot grant, nor all the powers
Of earth and hell confederate take away;
A liberty which persecution, fraud,
Oppression, prisons, have no power to bind;
Which whose tastes can be enslaved no more.
'Tis liberty of heart, derived from Heaven
Bought with His blood who gave it to mankind—
He is the freeman whom Truth makes free,
And all are slaves besides."

—William Cooper.

You will notice that Solomon received this grant from God upon condition that he walk in God's ways and keep His Commandments. In spite of all the wisdom and understanding inparted to him of God Solomon missed out in that he did not walk according to the light he had. Now God through the truth revealed in Christ has revealed to many men more of His wisdom of life than Solomon dreamed of and we, like him, are failing in that we are not living up in deeds to the light that is in us. Jesus explained it thus: "Everyone therefore that heareth these words of Mine, and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man. . . ." The tragedy of the so-called Christian areas of the world today is not that we do not have truth or wisdom enough to solve our every problem but rather that we are not willing to use that wisdom as God's commands. Oliver Wendell Holmes of another generation asks, "Can a man look around and see what Christian countries are doing, and how they are governed, and what is the general condition of society, without seeing that Christianity is a flag under which the world sails, and not the rudder that steers its course?" That was a noble prayer that young Solomon prayed when he asked for wisdom to know how to govern his life and that of his people, but a more expedient one for him to have made would have been to have asked for power and courage to put that wisdom into deeds. Mark Twain whimsically declared that the parts of the Bible that gave him the most trouble were not the parts that he did not understand but rather those he could understand.

"O living will that shall endure
When all that seems shall suffer shock,
Rise in the spiritual rock,
Flow through our deeds and make them pure."

—Tennyson.

NEGATIVES

By Harry E. Grant, 32°

When the weight of experience belies the constant iteration of dictators that "black is white," man, blessed with a reasoning faculty, looks for causes and for the best means of correcting attempted deceptions.

What, he asks, is the cause of such widespread mistrust, of the denunciation of democracy, and of the persecution of races and of religions? Wherein lies the lust for conquest and its grand larceny on a national scale? Why do nations, even now emerging from the dire throes of war, race with each other to impose greater suffering upon themselves and increased burdens on their posterity? Why are peoples mass-moved toward certain self-destruction? These and other like questions not only perplex but interest us intensely. They are the straws which show not only which way the wind blows but betimes cause it to blow or not to blow.

Many oldsters, contemplating our seemingly topsy-turvy world, will recall their earlier excursions into the fascinating field of photography, when, in order to focus the camera, an opaque hood had to be placed over the head to exclude all light. The object on the screen usually appeared blurred; but as it was brought into focus it was seen in miniature in all the beauty of its natural coloring—but invariably upside down.

When, after exposure, the fragile plate was taken into the darkness and developed, and at a certain stage permanently fixed, not only was the coloring missing but everything was reversed. Of the beauty glimpsed by the photographer on the focusing screen, only a colorless negative resulted. These negatives could, of course, be used to produce positive likenesses in black and white but for this purpose the influence of light was requisite.

Negatives, like wrong opinions, when reversed in the light of principle, may be utilized to produce something positive.

Distrust means dissolution; confidence the reverse. Lacking a well-founded confidence, racial and other groups whose peoples individually desire peace but who cannot attain to it because of the negative mass-objectives developed by dictatorial leaders, are victimized by strife of their own creating. Mistrustful, they perish by the very swords they have so futilely forged and drawn in such unworthy causes.

Leadership prompted by unbridled ambitions, ambitions that are opposed to principle, blindly leads the blinded to self-destruction. Leadership so ambitioned is not creative but destructive. It does not advantage the unfoldment of constructive good but, instead, incubates a menace. Instead of enlisting place and pelf and power on the side of its followers for their advancement, it burdens these advantages on their backs as a handicap to their progress and a hindrance to their peace. It substitutes the shadow of want and the darkness of despair for the substance of prosperity and the light of contentment. Negative leadership, insisting that dark is light and light is dark, utilizes that which might be used for the avoidance of poverty to instead emphasize destitution.

Realism, so-called, which ignores the ideal is a falsity—is unreal.

Man may live and happily advance only in harmony with unfolding ideals—with unalterable principle. Principle, expressed as law older than those to whom it applies cannot be altered nor avoided. Man, singular or plural, may not be deified. The fiat is established and is exacting, Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

This Me, the I AM which is God, is Principle; and is identified as omnipresence, as omnipotence, and as omniscience in whatever is fundamentally good.

This good, or God, must be ever-present in thought—an effectual restraint from violence. Listen! Thou shalt not hate nor covet nor steal; and contrariwise you must love and live and be generous in demonstrating and in establishing the golden rule of reciprocity.

The essence of realitics is the everywhere-ness of God. What may this mean? That nowhere is the law of God inoperative. Man must obey! Nowhere may anyone ignore nor endeavor to abrogate that law, and kill and cheat, lie and defraud, remaining free from condemnation and its consequent punishment. Under the law of God it hurts to be not good.

Thinking, even to be symbolically creative, must be in accord with principle. Leadership which ignores principle and opines as it pleases—which attempts to establish its own distorted impressions—represents an attempted usurpation of power which must of necessity be rendered impotent. In attempting to focus on and to develop its abortive negatives it shuts out the light.

Leadership must be principled if it would be positively constructive, if it would see things as they are intended and have things as they may be properly picturized in all their real beauty and color and strength.

The world, its distance and peoples brought together by the progressive unfoldment of thought, has neither time nor place for that falsely assumed leadership which develops only negatives. Let there be light!

Does Christendom really believe (know) that it is principled in good? That this unconquerable good, which is its God, has all-power, is ever-present, expresses infinite intelligence, IS Almighty? Then it will fear not at all and will move forward confidently in this secure strength and light toward the realization of all that this active sovereignty implies.

Democracy is self-government founded upon government of self in accord with this Principle. Democracy, to be attractive to all, must be fully lived—demonstrated and defended in every particular; and the principle upon which democracy is founded may not be flaunted nor its privileges abused.

'Ware negatives! The responsibility of genuine leadership lies in a sole allegiance to unfolding principle as expressed in positive ideals and in the avoidance, as objectives, of outmoded negatives.

To the Leader

Youth of every generation should know something about the foundation upon which the systems of life have been constructed. A knowledge of the history in the past will better prepare a generation in making a history to be read, with shame or regret, by that generation's posterity. Christian Endeavor societies should promote enough discussions to acquaint affiliated youth with the issues which arose when Protestantism was born. The discussion should be intelligent and Christian enough not to create or promote intolerance and hatred. What can the righteous do if the foundations be destroyed or neglected? This meeting affords the opportunity to review the issues in early Protestantism and make the issues the basis for comparison with the issues of today. Among these basic issues are these:

1. The place and power of no one man, even though he be a pope or temporal ruler, are not to be regarded as a substitute for God. God's great powers cannot be delegated to human beings.

2. Direct access to God in seeking forgiveness for sin is the possession of every believer; the only mediator necessary is Jesus Christ.

3. The church should respond to the will of its members, when expressed in any orderly fashion; it should not exercise dominion over them.

4. The best spiritual blessings are not to be bought and sold. The individual's approach to God is "without money and without price."

b. How do they compare in a kindred regard for the importance of fellowship among people?

c. How does each recognize the right of private judgment and private choice?

6. What contribution has Protestant Christianity made to our form of government?

7. Is our younger generation familiar with the foundations of our government? Explain.

8. Are we familiar with the foundations of the Protestant Church? Explain.

9. Of what value is the history of the past to any generation?

The Poet

Breathes there the man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
    This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned
    From wondering on a foreign strand!
If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
For him no minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim,
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentered all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

—Sir Walter Scott.

Topic Hints

Kinship: Protestantism and democracy have many things in common and for this reason a true Protestant believes in, strives for, and faithfully supports a true democracy. Protestantism and democracy have a kindred attitude toward people. They seek to liberate people from that which destroys their freedom of honest speech and noble action. Protestantism and democracy have a kindred regard for the fellowship of people. They seek to promote a community spirit based on cooperation. Protestantism and democracy have a kindred regard for private judgment and private choice. At the poles and before the throne of grace, the individual presents himself as a "free agent."

Mother and Child: A Protestant believes in democracy because the principles of democracy were born in the minds and hearts of Protestants. The democratic form of government is the work of Protestant pioneers. Democracy is the child of Protestantism. The Puritans came to America that they and their children might escape the sovereign power and influence of the Church. The constitution of the United States was written and our government established on the basis that our citizenship should not be subject to a political sovereign. The early settlers ascribed the sovereignty to God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and believed that every man should worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Likewise they believed that every man should have a voice in the government and the freedom of choice in selecting political representatives.

Native Soil: The freedom of the saints is enjoyed most in the land of the free. Democracy is the native soil of the Protestant faith. A democratic form of government affords a better opportunity for a Protestant's growth in the liberty which is his by conversion and consecration. Protestant institutions flourish best in a land where people are not slaves to the state and where their institutions are not controlled by Pagan powers. The Protestant can bring up his children in the Protestant faith to a much better advantage in a country where he can live without being shackled with the chains of a dictatorship. The Protestant believes in a democracy because it is the native soil for his Christian growth.

The Protestant: There is a common feeling in many quarters that one is a Protestant because he is nothing else. Because he is not a Jew nor a Catholic, he feels that he is a Protestant though he belongs to no Protestant church. Not a few call themselves Protestants because they belong to the Protestant church. Here we find much erroneous thinking which results in a poor citizenship for a pure democracy. One may adhere to Protestant thinking and imitate Protestant action and yet be nothing more than a fashion figure. A true Protestant is one who has found liberty in Christ Jesus. This liberty sets his heart on fire and he blazes forth to establish freedom in every phase of life that he touches. He enters a form of government and that government becomes democratic in its form. It remains true to that form only as long as the idea of the sovereignty of God and the brotherhood of men prevail. We covet a true democracy but it must come by the way of the true spirit of the Protestant faith.

NAME OF METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH IS CHANGED

At a congregational meeting of the members of the First Methodist Protestant church of Albemarle on last Sunday, the name of the church was changed to Main Street Methodist church. A change in name became necessary when the three branches of Methodism united into the Methodist church at a uniting conference held in Kansas City recently.

Main Street Methodist church has one of the best church plants in the city, and its membership has long had a reputation for church loyalty and devotion to the work of the church.

Rev. C. G. Isley is pastor of the church.

Home Coming Day

Last Thursday was a great day for the Children's Home. Dr. R. L. Shipley of Baltimore, Md. and Bishop Clare Purcell of Charlotte both delivered fine addresses which were well received. Dr. Shipley came in the place of Bishop James H. Straughn, who had a conference date changed on him, so he had to be in Adrian, Michigan that day presiding over the Michigan Conference.

The crowd was the largest we have ever had, and the dinner was bountiful. The good people left the fragments on the table for our supper. And the offering was better than a year ago. We thank all who helped. May the dear Lord bless and direct all of you. Articles contributed will be reported next week.

CHINA DEMONSTRATES HER SPIRITUAL STRENGTH

By JEAN LYON

The close of the second year of China's armed resistance to the aggression of Japan marks a new phase for China. While she has been fighting, she has been building. A new China is springing up in the west and south—a China which no one dreamed could be so rapidly developed or quickly unified.

The impression gained in this country from newspaper reports and the maps of military maneuvers has been that China has lost the heart of her country to the invaders. With the large cities of Shanghai, Peiping, Nanking, Hankow, and Canton ostensibly in Japanese control, Americans feel that most of China is now "occupied territory." There has also been a feeling that with the industrial centers gone, and with the seacoast cut off, China's ability to manufacture or to import supplies was ended—that, in effect, she has already lost the war.

The amazing truth is that China, on the contrary, is surging with new life. The largest proportion of territory of China still belongs to "free" China, and in the "occupied territory" only six per cent of the loyal Chinese magistrates are completely unable to carry out their duties because of Japanese control, according to a report by Dr. H. H. Kung, president of China's Executive Yan, and also its Minister of Finance. In the completely free western territory China is doing a pioneer job of settling and developing while she continues to harass the Japanese army in the invaded areas. China has found a new ability to organize her economic structure, to rebuild her industries, and to establish herself as a unified government. Rather than growing weaker in the two devastating years just past, she has grown stronger.

Observers recently returned from China report that the highway from Chungking to Burma is completed, and is carrying a steady stream of supplies to the Chinese capital. China's Communications Minister has just returned from a month's survey of the transportation facilities and reports that the Yunnan railway leading into China from Haiphong in French Indo-China, together with the highways, is able to handle an adequate amount of supplies into free China. Relationships with the French authorities in Indo-China have improved, and the cargoes at Haiphong, he reports, are moving rapidly.

Already 755 industrial cooperatives have been organized to provide work for the refugee factory workers from the occupied cities, and to provide homemade supplies to the increasing numbers of people arriving in the west. Plans are already drawn up for the establishment of 10,000 more of these cooperatives during the next year. Products shown at a recent exhibit of the work of the cooperatives held in Chungking included cotton cloth, soap, matches, chemical and mechanical products such as synthetic gasoline (one of the products China has had the most difficulty in acquiring), vaseline substitute, simple motors and parts, and munitions. Synthetic cotton manufactured by Shensi cooperative united is reported to be supplying 80 per cent of the needs of the Chinese Red Cross. Another group of cooperatives in Hunan province is specializing in army uniforms and blankets.

University laboratories in Chengtu, to which three of China's Christian colleges have now been moved, are manufacturing laboratory supplies for the secondary schools of the province. They are making such things as fluid extract of gentian, and anatomical models of the human body.

New inventions are being made, the most recent one being a new spinning machine. The rich mine deposits of western China are being developed—gold, and tungsten and tin.

A new pharmacy factory has been established at Chengtu. Cotton mills, flour mills, match factories and machine shops are springing up daily according to reports from Chungking.

These facts are indicative of the new power in China. China is providing herself with the strength to continue her resistance against Japan for an indefinite length of time.

Prophecies of the outcome cannot be made. John Gunther, author of "Inside Asia," believes that it will be difficult for Japan to win. She has been sucked in further than she ever intended. P. C. Chang, member of the People's Political Council of China, now visiting in the United States, likens the struggle to the struggle of a fist being pushed into soft glue, rather than a fist against a fist. ". . . the glue will follow the fist," he says, "although the fist may feel very proud that it is going ahead. In other words, the glue is going to surround the fist. The farther you go in, the harder it is to get out."

Mr. Gunther, however, also believes that it will be difficult for China to drive Japan back into the sea.

To Americans the importance of the outcome of this war lies in the facts behind it of broken treaties and unhalted aggression. With each success of aggression in Europe and in Asia, the hope of a world which can live by peaceful treaty agreements fades. That Japan should be forced to lay down arms and turn to the conference table is an essential to a future peaceful world. And that she should do it without having tasted the brew of success by arms is another essential.

China is growing stronger, to be sure. But until the United States ceases to give aid to Japan, China cannot be expected to win the battle for future world peace.

Americans can do several things to show their belief in treaty agreements and peaceful settlement of conflicts. They can insist upon placing an embargo on Japan. They can carry on individual boycotts of Japanese goods. They can give succor to the wounded and to the refugees of China who are helpless victims of aggression.

Until America faces her own responsibility in the conflict, however, there may continue to be a "stalemate in the Far East," as John Gunther predicts. Despite China's growing strength, her task of resisting a Japan who is aided by the democracies is too great. If China is to win back her right to live as a peaceful nation, she must have the moral support of Americans.

QUARTERLY MEETING

There has been no need to change the date of this meeting, so we hope to see a representative gathering at Thomasville Community Church July 12 at 10 o'clock a. m.

All state officers who wish to make reports or present plans for the remainder of the year will be given the opportunity to do so.

If you have not elected three delegates in addition to the president and corresponding secretary of our Auxiliary, please do so in order that we may be able to transact whatever business is presented, in such a way as to get the best results.

Do not forget to notify Mrs. J. R. Sechrest, 3 Elliott Drive, Thomasville, if you wish to eat lunch at the church at 35c per plate.

MRS. R. M. ANDREWS, President.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION—OUR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

While High Point College is the Educational Institution in our area to which our women are asked to contribute, our Theological Seminary belongs to each area. It has assisted in the training of preachers in most of our conferences. Eight of our General Conference officers and six of our Annual Conference presidents are graduates of our Seminary, to say nothing of the long list of men who are professors in colleges, or have other positions of leadership in our church. Eighteen of its graduates have gone as missionaries to foreign fields. Think, if you please, what the Seminary has meant in the history of our beloved church since 1882!

The work of the Seminary must go on, located as it is, only eight miles from the spot where Methodism had its origin, with no other Methodist Theological Seminary between Madison, N. J., and Durham, N. C., we can readily see the opportunity it will have for rendering incalculable service to the new Methodist Church; but it must be better equipped, if this service is to be rendered.

In the first place, it is not now an accredited Theological Seminary, because it had not until a week ago enough professors—another was recently elected. It has not as many volumes in its library, nor as large an endowment fund as is required before it can be accredited. You may ask why these things should make any difference in the standing of its graduates.

In the new Methodist Church the standard set for its preachers is much higher than formerly, and a young man would hesitate to graduate from a Seminary not accredited.

Ever since our women have been behind the whole program of our church, the Seminary has been calling to us for help. It seemed that High Point College needed all the help we could give, and we must not withhold anything from the College; but can we not make an extra effort and help our Seminary also? Many of you read the thrilling story in our last year's Guide Book of a man who was a barefoot North Carolina boy with a vision that made him live on the bare necessities of life that he might buy books in order to realize that vision. That boy has been giving his life to our Seminary for years. I have known him for thirty-one years, and I have never known a man who more unselfishly and devotedly has given his life to a cause he loves than has Dr. Forlines.

We have been proud to claim him as "ours," because he has belonged to our Conference until the law of the new Church required him to move his membership to the Maryland Conference. We never fully appreciate our blessings until we lose them. We have not appreciated him as we should. We would like to honor him. How shall we do so? By doing our best to help him realize his dream of a metter and more useful Institution for training men to preach the gospel and help bring the world to Christ.

This is the last year the women will be asked to be financially behind the whole program of our church. We have been given a broader vision of our church and shall not lose interest in Christian Education. Let us prove our real interest in it by responding to the appeal in the following letter, and at the same time prove our love for the man whom we delight to honor.

MRS. GEO. R. BROWN,
Secretary, Christian Education.

Dear Mrs. Brown:

It has been suggested to me that the women of our Church might be glad to do something definite for the Westminster Theological Seminary, if they knew some of our definite needs. Acting upon that possibility, I am naming the following needs of the Seminary.

1. The Library is in constant need of funds for books and periodicals. Most of these range in price from $2.00 to $5.00.
2. We need about 100 classroom chairs and 40 dormitory chairs costing about $5.00 each.
3. We need 3 indirect lighting chandeliers for the chapel costing about $15.00 each.
4. We need about $250.00 for tables, chairs and other equipment for our recreation room.
5. We need a power lawn-mower costing about $150.00.

I am wondering if you will be good enough to see that this information is presented to your Branch and that as many as possible of the Auxiliaries be given a chance to help us. If you are not the one to whom this communication should be addressed, please see that it gets to the proper person.

C. E. FORLINES.

"As doctors we must begin to think of promoting the cause of temperance. How often do we hear, when we are speaking of a certain man, 'A very bright man, but he drinks.' Of my classmates in college, so far as I know, none of those who drank steadily are now living, and of those who were addicts to even a very mild degree, from the time the addiction became manifest none progressed or maintained his position. One of the greatest surgeons in the world, talking to me, said he had never known a surgeon of the first rank who was in the habit of using alcoholic drinks."—Dr. W. J. Mayo.

Does one have to drink to be popular? It all depends upon whom you want to be popular with.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Bess Chapel, W. L. Harkey, Pastor.—The Fourteenth District Rally was held at our church, April 29. The attendance was the largest of the last several meetings. The welcome was by Miss Blanche Houser; Rev. T. G. Madison responded. Rev. Thomas Swofford, of Polkville, brought the morning message. His subject was the Uniting Conference.

The afternoon brought us a male quartet from Brevard College. After the singing, there was a business session of reports and roll call of auxiliaries. We feel the day was well spent and enjoyed by all.

Second Sunday in May was annual homecoming day at our church. The attendance was large. In the morning a short Mother's Day program was given, followed by an address by Rev. B. Wilson, of Lowesville. His theme was the Influence of Mother and Home. In the afternoon Rev. D. M. Nifong of Cherryville spoke to us.

Second Sunday morning, in the absence of our pastor, Rev. Ferman Wright filled the pulpit. The message was very inspiring. His topic was Finding God Through Nature.

Our pastor attended Summer Conference at High Point College. He is not enjoying good health at present. Pray for him.

The June meeting of our auxiliary was held at the home of Mrs. Karr Beam, with Mrs. Beam and Mrs. John Heavner hostesses. The July meeting will be at the home of Mrs. B. L. Heavner.

The Mission Band met last week with Miss Martha Jane Harrelson.

Yesterday morning a Children's Day program was given at the church. The little ones did their parts well. The directors were: music, Miss Blanche Houser; speaking, Mrs. Beverly Heavner.

Prof. Ward D. Milan, of Lincolnton, is conducting singing classes at the church each Thursday evening.

MRS. B. L. HEAVNER.

Weaverville, W. C. Clark, Pastor.—The work of the Weaverville church is being carried on by its few faithful members until this fall, at which time the church will be closed and its members will unite with any church they may choose. This action was taken due to the loss of so many members moving from town, and because we could see no necessity of two Methodist churches in a town so small as ours. We voted to give the church properties to Jupiter and Clark's Chapel churches, the building to the Southern Methodist church for Sunday school rooms, to sell the lot and give the money to the High Point Children's Home.

Two weeks ago a committee from the other Methodist church attended services at our church and extended a cordial invitation for our members to feel free to merge with their congregation after we disband this fall. Our pastor, Rev. W. C. Clark, expressed his belief that all our members would remain Methodists. He said that the reason for joining the Methodist church was as strong today as it ever was, and that we should not feel that because we are closing our church we are being swallowed up by the larger Methodist church, but that we should feel we can make a vital contribution to the larger church.

Our Sunday school has suffered a great loss since Mr. L. R. Blackwelder and his family moved a few weeks ago. Mr. Blackwelder had served as superintendent of the Sunday school for several years, and Mrs. Blackwelder and the children took an active part in all church affairs. We feel that the Methodist church in West Asheville has gained by our loss.

The Sunday school unanimously elected Miss Maud Potter to act as superintendent until the church disbands this fall.

Our Christian Endeavor society and the Women's Auxiliary are carrying out their programs as usual, and the members are being as loyal as if our church were going on and on.

We feel that Methodist Union is going to prove a blessing to our little church and her members.

Main Street Methodist Church, Albemarle, Rev. C. G. Isley, Pastor.—Our revival has just come to a close, with 14 new members. Our pulpit help was Rev. M. C. Henderson, who brought to us many inspiring sermons.

We were overjoyed to have 250 present for Sunday school on Sunday, June 18. We have been trying to reach the 200th mark, so we were very proud to have gone over that much.

Mrs. J. E. Gantt's and Rev. Mr. Isley's classes had an attendance contest, and Mrs. Gantt's class won with 23 new members. The two classes enjoyed a fried chicken supper at Beaver's Lake on Saturday night.

The boys and girls from our church who are attending the Leadership Training School at High Point College this week are the following: Dona Gantt, Louise Shoe, Emma Harkey, Laura Van Hathcock, Frances Hatley, Bill Gantt, Charles Lowder, Bill Helms, and Bobby Lipe.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Anderson have returned home from a trip to New York where they attended the World's Fair.

One of our Sunday school boys, Claye Austen, is a patient at W. N. C. Sanatorium, Black Mountain, N. C.

MRS. COLAN MAULDIN, Reporter.

Palestine, Flat Rock Charge.—Pastor Burgess filled his regular appointment at Palestine the third Sunday, the attendance being the largest during the year.

The revival meeting will be at our church the third Sunday in next month (July). Our pastor will have for his helper, Rev. J. B. Trogdon, one of our beloved former pastors. Many of our people are looking forward to his coming. Brother Trogdon is lovingly remembered by our people, and we are glad to have him come again.

Uncle "Dick" Sharrow was able to attend service Sunday for the first time in a long time. W. Tom Tucker, one of our members living in Madison, is able to be out again after being sick.

Little Charlie Tucker, the small and only son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. A. Tucker, was hit by a car and knocked to the paved road in front of his home several days ago. The little fellow got lots of bruises and seems to be getting over it, although a narrow escape.

Mrs. Nannie Winfrey Mabe, the wife of Everett Mabe, was buried at Palestine Monday, June 19, age 44 years. She leaves her husband, six girls, and one son. They have our heartfelt sympathy, especially Alice, Mary, and Helen; six and seven years ago they were little girls in my Sunday school class. As they learned from the little picture cards then to know and love Jesus, I hope they are still trusting Him to help them bear the hardest burden they have ever been called on to bear, giving up mother.

Spring Church Circuit Auxiliary, Spring Church Charge. — With eighteen members present, the Spring Church Circuit Auxiliary met at Lebanon Church on Tuesday, May 13.

Several schemes were suggested as means of raising money. It was decided that a bazaar would be held at the next meeting of the organization. Members of each church volunteered to sell ice cream, the profits to be put in the treasury.

The furnishing of the parsonage was undertaken as a new project. Since the meeting new curtains and mattresses have been gotten. The building has recently been painted.

The program, gotten up by Mrs. W. W. Grant, Jr. consisted of a review of the study book "Punjab" by Virginia Grant and a review of "The Slums of New York" by Dorothy Cook. Instructive papers were read by Edith, Rebecca, and Mildred Grant.

Miss Katherine Crew, who has been a patient in St. Luke's Hospital in Richmond, has returned to her home. Mary Rose Crew is also much improved. Mrs. Will Massey and Mrs. Watt Jordan are in the hospital.

Spring Church is very fortunate in having Mrs. Miller from Roanoke Rapids as director of the choir. At the suggestion of Mr. Garlington, our pastor, the members of the choir have gotten vestments.

MRS. G. J. MITCHELL, Cor. Sec.

Efland, Orange Charge, C. P. Morris, Pastor.—For the past two weeks we have been privileged to have Brother J. F. Whitehead of Henderson bring us splendid revival messages. He came on the second Sunday and was with us for a ten-day meeting. During this time he aided our pastor and his coworker in the Vacation Church School each morning. As a result of these meetings fourteen members were added to our church and our church and community are much better for having spent these days studying and hearing the message of Brother Whitehead. During the church school a junior choir that has been in the making was further trained by Misses Maxine Efland, Eloise Efland and Grace Bivins. This choir promises to be a great help in our church. The commencement of the church school was on Friday evening and it was an evening full of inspiration and helpfulness to all. From the tiniest tot to the pastor each performer did splendidly and the teachers deserve much credit for their work during this school.

We would not forget the real climax of this church school. I'm sure the children and young people who went on the picnic to our Children's Home will not forget it soon. Even though the weather was hot it was a day to be remembered by all who went. Seeing the Home and the boys and girls for the first time and recreation at the municipal park made a very enjoyable day, with the picnic dinner at the Home.

As I write two of our promising young people are on their way to the Leadership Training School in High Point. The Sunday school is sending Miss Marjorie Bradley and Wayne Taylor is going also. We feel sure both of them will enjoy their work and get much from it that will help them as they work in the Sunday school and church in the future.

Our young people will meet on the second Sunday evening for the purpose of organizing a junior church. This was discussed in the church school and plans are in the making for this organization. With almost one half of our church members young people we feel this will be a worthwhile addition to our church.

Several of our members have been sick, some in the hospital recently, but we are glad to say they are improving now. We learned yesterday that Mr. and Mrs. Morris were right sick Saturday night but were better Sunday though he was unable to attend the Home Coming and Memorial Day he had planned for Hebron. We trust they will soon be out. Jerome Phillip has already endeared himself to all of us and we are glad he keeps well and is getting on fine.

Pinnacle Charge, Mt. Zion Church, Rev. J. D. Morris, Pastor.—We are having a very busy time trying to reach our goal. We have organized a Christian Endeavor Society. We had our first social gathering at the home of Mr. W. E. Jones. We had our first devotional meeting last evening at our church. Officers elected were: president, Mr. George Jones; vice-president, Mr. Bryce Needham; secretary, Miss Nell Mickey; treasurer, Miss Lillian Hicks. We will appreciate your help at any time.

The Missionary Society met at the home of Mrs. Marvin Needham last Tuesday night, June 20. There were 24 members and three visitors present. A very interesting service was given with the president, Mrs. F. G. Fowler, presiding. After the program the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Everette Mikeds and Mrs. M. H. Needham, and Misses Nell Mickey and Velnia Needham, served delicious refreshments.

Our attendance for Sunday school yesterday was 81, collection $1.18. Let your presence fill the vacant spot next Sunday.

Our pastor delivered a very impressive sermon to us last night. He announced Rev. C. D. Ridge would be his help in conducting our revival meeting, beginning the third Sunday in July and continuing through the week. Rev. Ridge, we welcome you and promise our best.

There will be a lawn party at our church next Saturday night, July 1st, sponsored by the Missionary Society. The public is invited to come. Proceeds will go for the benefit of the church.

We invite you to attend our services at any time possible. May God be with you.

Haw River Circuit.—Plans for the new church building for Friendship have been received from the architect. We are making haste slowly; but we expect to put on a campaign shortly for pledges for the building fund. And if all goes well, you may expect to hear the sound of the hammer and the saw late this fall—or thereabouts.

Song books for Fair Grove are being ordered this week, so we may have them for use during the meeting which begins there on the second Sunday in July.

When I was down at the Rural Church Institute at Duke University some days ago, I asked the architect to help me solve a problem in acoustics at Midway church. Ever since the new building was erected it has been difficult to hear in it. He told me what the trouble was, and suggested a possible remedy. I pased the word on to the brethren at Midway. They did what the architect suggested, and we tried it out yesterday. It appears to be a complete success, the folks indicating that they could hear without difficulty.

Some of the young ladies of the Midway Sunday school put on a pageant yesterday morning. It was splendidly done. One of our good women said, "These young ladies are going to preach for you this morning." They not only preached for me; they preached to me. I am grateful to them for a very fine message. And the offering for missions was good, exceptionally so. After the basket lunch, Rev. E. Lester Ballard gave us a good sermon. So it was a good day all day long. We were glad to have Brother Gillespie, former pastor of a group of Baptist churches near Midway, and Brother Ashburn, a former pastor of Midway, with us in the services of the day.

Mrs. Herbert Hopkins has been training the choir at Friendship, with a choir practice every Thursday night, either at her home or at the church. It is wonderful what she has been able to do with the group. They have given us some special numbers that would do credit to some city churches I know.

Our special meeting is in process at Midway this week. Sunday we will begin at Mizpah with Brother Ballard doing the preaching. C. W. BATES, Pastor.

Davidson Charge. — Grandma Frank, now past ninety years, continues rather feeble. She is the mother of Rev. J. W. Frank of Japan. Her home is with her other son, W. A. Frank, of Lineberry Church.

The parsonage and Lineberry Church are to have electric lights before much longer, we hope. Money is being raised to pay for wiring.

The charge, I think, is making fair progress, we hope to make a better showing by the end of the year.

Shiloh, Shiloh Charge, C. E. Ridge, Pastor.—As usual the reports from our work are encouraging. All departments and organizations seem to be doing a good work. Our attendance is very good, and we hope for even better.

Sunday, June 18 was observed as Children's Home Day at Shiloh. It seems that every member of the Sunday school cooperated to make a good contribution. Our attendance was 274. Each class answered roll call Sunday, June 11, by his age and June 18, each answered with the amount being contributed. Final counts totaled $85.43. We are sure that this was given freely. Shiloh is classified in group 2 as Dr. Dixon suggested by membership—between 300 and 400. We are the proud owner of a group picture of the Children's Home Family which was presented one of our members when the offering was presented June 22. We treasure this very highly and hope that it shall inspire us to be more mindful of the needs of our Children's Home, and more willing to give it the support that it deserves.

Our monthly prayer service was conducted Sunday morning at 11 o'clock by the boys Intermediate Class of which Mr. Ira Koonts is teacher. Every class member that was present took an active part. The attendance was 93.

Our mid-week prayer services are being continued and, it seems, are becoming more interesting. Our attendance last week was 40. Our pastor led the service and used the first chapter of Acts for study and meditation. This book will be studied, using a chapter each week. We believe that this special study will help to prepare us for our revival which is very rapidly approaching; and we are hoping that Christian people will continue to pray for us.

Our reporter, Mrs. Kyle Sink, was unable to report this week on account of illness, but we are hoping for her a speedy recovery. At her request I have tried to give this report. Watch for her reports later.

College Street, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—We have just come to the close of another good revival meeting. It began on the third Sunday in this month of June and lasted through until Friday night. Rev. Bill Howard of the Halifax charge was our helper. And did he preach some good sermons! I should say so! Everyone was well brought out and inspiring, and full of inspiration and spirituality. We hope many hearts were warmed, and much good accomplished throughout the meeting. Communion services were held on Sunday morning and practically all the congregation partook.

We are thankful for the large number from the other churches in town that took part in our revival. We hope they will come again soon.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely, and we are looking forward to have more to attend, since we have quite a large number of people moved in our town recently, with the C. C. C. Camp, that's been established here. Let's hope that everyone will take more interest in the work of the Lord, for the uplifting of His Kingdom.

We were indeed glad to have Rev. Mr. Madison and family with us last week. They took supper at the parsonage and attended services on Wednesday night. We hope they will come back real soon.

The Auxiliary met with Mrs. W. L. Perkinson the last meeting. Not as many were present as we had hoped for, but some plans were discussed, and we had a call meeting later at the church.

Weaver's Chapel Church has sent a delegate to the Leadership Training School this time. Miss Alice Mae Whitby was elected and Miss Mae Shearin accompanied her.

We are very sorry to not have Mr. Tasker Williams with us. He has a job in Richmond, but we will be looking forward to his visits home.

First Church, Charlotte, Rev. T. E. Strickland, Pastor.—The First M. P. Church voted to change the name to Central Avenue Methodist Church after the conference in Kansas City. We have announced the change of name and have also changed our bulletin board on the front of the church. The Methodist leaders have shown a great deal of interest in our church by helping to organize the various groups for the women in missionary work.

We have been very fortunate the last two weeks to have had two very fine young ministers in our midst and visiting in our homes. Rev. Odell Brown, Duke University evangelist, has just completed a two week revival service. We were very fortunate in getting Mr. Brown for the services and he certainly delivered some very fine sermons. During the revival several souls were reborn and about twenty-two new members added to our church roll. We feel that in spite of the hot weather the meeting did our church a great deal of good. Our prayers follow Mr. Brown as he goes to Cleveland, N. C., where he will hold a ten-day meeting.

We are very proud of our regular pastor, who having completed his course at High Point College, was graduated with honors. To you, Mr. Strickland, we express our congratulations.

Our Sunday school attendance has held its own for the summer months. The contest that was held helped the attendance and the spirit of our school. Friday night, June 9th, the losing side gave the winning side a picnic supper in Cordella Park. Everyone had a swell time with plent of good things to eat.

The ladies of the church have reorganized their Auxiliary under the supervision of the Methodist leaders. Mrs. L. W. Garmon was elected president of this society.

Several of the delegates from the C. E. Convention, which was held in High Point, have returned to say that it was the best convention they had ever attended. We are very fortunate in having the newly elected editor of the Tar Heel Bulletin in our own membership, Miss Margurite Helms. Miss Helms has done a fine work with the juniors of our church and also of Mecklenburg County in the C. E. work.

Brower's Chapel, Richland Charge, Rev. C. L. Grant, Pastor.—We had such a fine day at Brower's Sunday that I felt it just must be published. First we had the largest attendance at Sunday school that we have had in some time. Then also we had a larger number of visitors than usual. Among the visitors were Mr. O. R. Ferree of Louisiana and Mrs. Penn Henley and her daughter, Ruth, of Los Angeles, Calif.

Mr. Ferree is a former resident of the Brower community but has been away for forty-four years. This was his first visit back here. Mr. Ferree made a very interesting and inspiring talk about his childhood days here and recalled many memories.

Mrs. Henley and her daughter had never been here before, but Mr. Henley was a former resident. It was indeed a pleasure to have them with us .

Rev. Grant brought us a very impressive message at the 11:00 o'clock service, using for his topic, "Examine Ye Yourselves." The service closed with the observance of communion.

During the service we were very happy to welcome four new members into our church by letter. These new members are Mrs. Clifford Brown, Mrs. C. L. Grant, Edward Grant and Olevia Grant.

The Christian Endeavor is going along nicely now. Our attendance has been fair and our programs very interesting. The C. E. decided several weeks ago to have the church rewired for lights and new globes bought. However, the Sunday school wanted to help with this so of course we would not deprive them of this opportunity.

All young people please note that the Christion Endeavor will meet Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the church instead of the usual hour.

The Ladies' Auxiliary will meet Thursday, July 6 with Mrs. W. A, Styers. All members are urged to attend. REPORTER.

James S. Stafford

For some years he was superintendent of the Sunday school, class leader, and was often teacher of the Adult Bible Class. He was a regular attendant of church services as long as he was able. Mrs. Lucy Owen Bowen

Knowing that our Heavenly Father does all things well, we, the members of the Auxiliary of Shoals Methodist Protestant Church mourn the passing of one of our members, Mrs. Lucy Owen Bowen on March 25, 1939.

When unable to attend she helped financially.

Therefore be it resolved:

First, that we extend to the bereaved companion and children our deepest sympathy praying God's blessings to rest upon them.

Second, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, the Missionary Record, the Methodist Protestant Herald and that a copy be recorded in the minutes of our Auxiliary.

REV. F. L. GIBBS SPEAKS

June 11th Rev. Mr. Gibbs, Executive Secretary of the Board of Christian Education of the Former Methodist Protestant Church, who is one of the speakers at the Leadership Training School, High Point College, this week, gave the baccalaureate sermon at Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pa., on "More Optimism Needed."

The Washington Observer, Washington, Pa. made the following editorial comment on the sermon:

His statement will meet with complete agreement from many persons who have studied the present plight of the nation.

After listing the many times that Christ said "Be of good cheer," the prominent minister said "this positive note is needed today."

Psychologists are agreed that there is, in the individual, an innate spiritual power capable of tremendous accomplishments, but that it needs a spirit of faith and confidence to function. The same is true of a nation.

Yet today, as the speaker pointed out, the general attitude is one of fear, discouragement and defeat. In such a situation, the inner power of the American people will not exert force. An optimistic and positive leadership is needed.

Nothing to bring about the needed spirit of courageous optimism has been accomplished by the failures of the elaborate and costly experiments undertaken by the American government in recent years. That is bad enough. But present-day public leaders, instead of admitting that their experiments have failed and then resorting to measures that have been proved to be sound by long experience, give the impression that the problems facing America are beyond solution.

The result is a spirit of defeatism that is stagnating, and a strange development in America which should be the most optimistic of nations.

Moral and optimistic leadership is the great need in America today. Many of our ills would be cured and greater prosperity and a more pronounced feeling of security would quickly develop if it prevailed.

In a ceremony marked by charm and beauty, Miss Bertie Goodman Cash became the bride of Charles Hendricks Elkins, of Liberty, Friday afternoon, June 16, at the First Baptist church of Shelby. Rev. John A. Hamrick, cousin of the bride, and Dr. Zeno Wall, pastor of the church, officiated. The vows were spoken at 4:30 o'clock before a candle-lit altar of white flowers and greenery.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, John W. Cash, and had her cousin, Mrs. Michael Kokoska, of Charlotte, as matron of honor and Miss Cornelia Sparks as maid of honor. Mrs. Robertson Douglas accompanied by Glenn Connar of High Point rendered the music. Rev. Frank Dennard was soloist.

Ushers were Roy Thomas, Lonnie Russell, Elton Saunders and Joseph Beaman of Troy, and Robertson Douglass and Walter Vuncannon of Trinity. Charlie Thomas was the best man.

The bridesmaids were Misses Edna Hunsucker, Byrle Gentry, Ruth Vuncannon, Myrtle Hodges of High Point, and Margaret Wood, Ella Jane Hamilton of Troy. Miss Catherine Phillips of Asheboro was maid of honor. Flower girls were Goldie Lee Saunders of High Point and Oleen Hamilton, sister of the bride, of Troy. Trail bearers were little Misses Sarah Frances Hamilton and Betty Sue Saunders. The rainbow color scheme was carried out throughout the ceremony.

The bride's gown was of white satin, floor length and long sleeves. Her veil was of silk illusion bordered with chantilly lace. It was held in place by a coronet cap of lace and a tiara embroidered with tiny seed pearls. She was given in marriage by her father.

The bride is the older daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Garfield Hamilton. She has been a member of Love Joy Church since early girlhood. She received her education at Troy high school and the college of Liberal Arts of God's Bible School.

Mr. Jennings is a minister in the Congregational Methodist Church and has been active in the ministry since 1930. He received his Th.B. and A.B. degrees from God's Bible School this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Jennings are spending the summer in revival meetings in Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas.

We wish for this couple much success and happiness in the future.

THE BIBLE

The Bible is a mine of gold,
A source of blessings manifold,
A coffer of the rarest gems,
Sublimest truths and apophthegms.
A fountain of supernal joys,
A daily feast that never cloys.
A garner of the finest wheat,
A garden filled with fragrance sweet.
A beacon in the stormy night,
A lamp the vale of death to light.
A master key for every lock,
A hammer strong to break the rock.
A trusty blade for valiant hearts,
A shield to turn the devil's darts.
A sturdy staff to lean upon
When other frail supports are gone.
A pillow for the weary head,
When strength is spent, when youth has fled.
A treasure of transcendent worth,
The best, the dearest Book on earth!

Where else, save here, may mortals read
The answer to their every need?
Where may the earnest, searching mind
Such truth perceive, such wisdom find?
What other works that men indite
Afford us such supreme delight?
What other book reveals to man
The glory of redemption's plan?
What other speaks of guiltless blood
Poured out to bring us back to God?
What uninspired pages tell
Of endless bliss, or warn of hell?
Where else, but here, may Christians learn
Of holiness? of Christ's return?
What other book holds such a store?
God help us then to love it more!

THE ONLY THING

Billy Sunday used to tell the story of a traveling salesman who was playing cards on a railroad train with fellow drummers. One of the men offered him whiskey which he refused. "What! You on the water wagon?" said the drinker, laughing at him. "Yes," replied the abstaining salesman. "For years I have taken from five to ten drinks a day, but I was at home in Chicago not long ago and I dropped into a pawn shop operated by a friend. While I was in there a young fellow with ashen cheeks and a wild look on his face came in, threw down a small package and said, "Give me ten cents." The pawn broker opened the package and it contained a pair of baby shoes. "No," he said. "Take them," said the young man. "I want ten cents." "No," repated the pawn broker, "take them home. Your baby will need them." "She won't need them. She's dead, and I want a drink," said the young man. It has been said that liquor is the only thing that will make a man pawn his baby's shoes, and it comes very near being true.

THE LAW OF GROWTH

"There are no sudden changes in nature; all is gradual and elegantly varied. There is no being which has not either above or beneath it some that resemble it in certain characters, and differ from it in others. From a plant to man the transition from one species to another is almost insensible. The polypus links the vegetable to the animal. The flying squirrel unites the birds to the quadruped. The ape bears affinity to the quadruped and the man. By what degrees does nature raise herself up to man? How will she rectify this head that is always inclined to the earth? How change these paws into flexible arms? What method will she make use of to transform these crooked feet into supple and skillful hands? The ape is this rough draft of man; an imperfect representation which nevertheless bears a resemblance to him, and is the last creature that serves to display the admirable progression of the works of God! There is a prodigious number of continued links between the most perfect man and the ape."—John Wesley, "Philosophy," Volume IV.

Hot Weather is Here—
Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. Trial package ten cents, family pkg. twenty-five cts. At drug stores. (Adv.)

Life as a Stewardship

The conception of life as a stewardship seems to enter very slowly into the conscience of man. That something in the natural man which makes him feel that his life is his very own; that his time belongs entirely to him to do with it as he pleases; that his talents are more of a biological inheritance than a gift of God; and that the wealth which he accumulates is his own to keep and to use for his own gratification, is by no means easy to eradicate.

Because our Lord knew how selfishness dulls man's eyes to the truth; because He knew how greed freezes the sensibilities into glacial hardness in the very presence of dire need; because Jesus knew how cupidity restrains man's hand from giving, wherever He saw men under the spell of greed He condemned it most severely. How wonderfully He taught the duty and the privilege of the stewardship of life in such parables as the Good Samaritan, the talents and the pounds, the story of Dives and Lazarus, the Rich Young Ruler and the General Judgment. These and other sayings of our Lord describe most graphically the destroying effect of selfishness upon the life of man. And yet these enduring lessons teaching the duty and the privilege of sharing, of giving ungrudgingly, too often fail to enter the soul of the professed follower of Jesus Christ. Many who appear to have mastered the theology of the Bible as it was formulated by the great scholars of a thousand years ago, fail to grasp the ethic of Jesus. They stand still before such sayings as "It is more blessed to give than to receive," that forgiveness knows no bounds, and that men should give without expecting to receive, for the Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom. Our Lord's conception of life is that men should give to those in need regardless of color line or of previous condition or of their present attitude. Not hate for hate; not blow for blow; not gift for gift. But love for hate, forgiveness for unprovoked wrongs. To give freely, cheerfully, because we have received freely, and because only by maintaining such an attitude can we find and keep the things of our Lord. "For if he know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

THE MID-YEAR MEETING

Since President Pritchard is indisposed at this time the editor of the HERALD is passing on to our readers certain things about the Mid-Year meeting at the Presbyterian Church, Thomasville, next Wednesday, July 12th.

The meeting is called for 10:00 a. m. and will have both morning and afternoon programs. Lunch will be served by the ladies of Community Church at the price of thirty-five cents per plate; it will be served in the Community Church dining room. It would be well for all who expect to be present to notify Mrs. J. Clyde Auman at once, if you desire to enjoy the lunch with others who will be there. Bishop Straughn, who was expecting to be present, has cancelled his engagement. Dr. Forlines, president of Westminster Theological Seminary, is to be present. Dr. F. W. Paschall has been asked to preach at 12 noon, just before lunch. The afternoon program will doubtless begin at 1:30 p. m. Several matters of vital interest to our church will be discussed then. The Special Committee on the M. P. HERALD will possibly make a report and there may be a panel discussion of the need of keeping the HERALD going until Conference meets, etc.

This meeting is one of more than usual interest because of the near approach of the last annual conference session the North Carolina Methodist Church will ever hold, and too, because the Quarterly Meeting of the N. C. Woman's Work will be held at the same time in Community Church.

We regret the illness of our President which deprives him of the pleasure of filling his page this week and we hope he will soon be in his usual good health. And now let all of us plan to be at Thomasville, Wednesday, July 12th.

R. M. ANDREWS.

We appreciate the interest and cooperation of all who are sharing in these enterprises.

A Message In Verse

"Let us plant our feet on the highway
Along with broken men.
And the bitter breath of the tempest
Let us find again and again.

"The cry of their blasted dreaming,
The taste of their failure's brine,
While the mice of hunger are knawing
At vitals of brain and spine.

"Let us plant our feet on the highway,
Along with broken men
Who are marching across the ages,
Over and over again.

"For never until we have fathomed
The anguish of flesh and soul,
Can we gather the titan power
To make humanity whole."

''Take from us, O God, all pride and vanity, boasting and forwardness; and give us the true courage that shows itself by gentleness; the true wisdom that shows itself by simplicity; and the true power that shows itself by modesty.''—From a prayer by Charles Kingsley.

I recently came across the old story of a nobleman giving a Bible to a celebrated actress, telling her there was a treasure in it. She thought he mean religion and since she did not want religion, she laid the Bible aside without even opening it. She died in abject poverty; the party who bought the Bible found in it a 500 pound note.

Church people who do not support the programs their own leaders put on soon have occasion to wonder why all the services of their Church have a diminishing attendance upon them.

''A horse can't pull while kicking. This fact I merely mention.
And he can't kick while pulling, which is my chief contention.''

Those systems and policies which are propagated by the sword must be perpetuated by it also. ''He that taketh the sword shall perish by it.''

The difference between Pentecost and Calvary is the spirit which motivated the participants there.

''Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall.''

We were glad to have a visit from President Forlines. He is visiting some Churches and pastors in the interest of a larger endowment for the Seminary. Brother Garlington was his pilot. We hope the response will be gratifying. The North Carolina Conference most assuredly owes a great debt to the Seminary for the many well equipped leaders it has sent to its Churches.

We have been greatly pleased by letters received recently expressing the appreciation of the writers for the Herald. They tell us they do not want to miss a single copy—do not see how they can get on without its weekly visit. It certainly refreshes the editor to know how some of his readers feel.

Sunday School Lesson

By O. L. EASTER

JEROBOAM: A MAN WITH A GREAT OPPORTUNITY

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, July 9

Lesson Text—I Kings 11:26-31, 37-40.

Golden Text—In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he will direct thy paths.—Proverbs 3:6.

We turn from Solomon, the man who began well, to Jeroboam, a man with a great opportunity. Solomon was offered his crown of rulership because of the favor of his father David had found in the Lord's sight and he asked therefore for ability to rule the people. This pleased the Lord and gave assent to the virtues of Solomon to be king in his own right even though he was at first chosen for his father David's sake. Jeroboam came to his kingship in a different manner. Instead of having to pray for qualities to enable him to rule the people Jeroboam was chosen by God in the beginning because of the qualities he possessed to rule his people. Here is a success story that fits into our American pattern—where a humble individual of no standing by rank is able to build for himself a place in the sun by his own "brain and brawn." Somehow this process wins the highest applause in the human heart. We cheer our loudest at the sight of men overcoming their obstacles and winning the goal. Abraham Lincoln was a great president as shown by his official acts themselves but much of the luster of his name was put there by the contrast of the dark cloud of handicap and hardship of his youth which he so nobly overcome. It can be further said, I think, that man wins the highest applause of God himself by this process. This is seen in the case of Jeroboam and likewise runs thread-like through the stories of the Bible. Job is perhaps the classic example. God gloried in the qualities of the fortunate Job but it was when He allowed the plague of Satan to descend upon him which stripped him of all he had that God was able to applaud the loudest at his life. God further vindicates this when we see Him letting Jesus be born in a stable before becoming the King of Kings. Aeschylus touches upon this fact when he said: "To the man who strives earnestly, God also lends a helping hand."

So it was with young Jeroboam as he worked earnestly at the building of Millo; his workmanship and personality won the applause of the king and he made him one of his leaders in spite of his obscure birth of one of Solomon's servants. Likewise, he won the favor of God by these same qualities who subsequently gave him his great opportunity. Now God gives all men opportunities. That is the sole purpose of our existence upon this earth, and the success or failure of our lives is judged by the way we treat our opportunities. Thus in just being a man with an opportunity Jeroboam was not distinctive, but rather in being a man with a great opportunity. We all have our talents of God but God does allow that among us some have as high as ten while others have only one. The justice of God in this discrimination of opportunities or talents lies of course in the degree of returns expected from each, and we are not concerned with that at all. The significant quest of this particular case is to see how this Jeroboam, who received a greater opportunity than the average, made use of it.

As we have already intimated in the figure of the talents, if Jeroboam received ten talents and then hid them in God's sight he would have stood condemned just the same as the one talent man, but these would be a difference in degree in its effect among his fellowmen. In the case of the latter only one talent of result would be affected but with the former ten. As we go further in the life of Jeroboam we learn that he did sin the sin of the one talent man by failing to take the advantage of his great opportunity to rule Israel according to the ways of God, and thus we see the larger extent of his sin in this phase of him: "The sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebot, who made Israel to sin. If some Hebrew of a one-talent caliber should have sinned he would have been just as guility before God but without power to rule Israel he would not have cause "Israel to sin." Every ruler today should look well to the sin of Jeroboam. The sins of nations are in most cases the sins of their rulers. We are informed on every side today that the common man of every land is crying for peace, and if that be true, we need pray for the Jeroboams in power who are walking in the same paths that shall cause the people to sin.

> "And yet it was never in my soul
> To play so ill a part:
> But evil is wrought by want of thought
> As well as by want of heart."
> —Hood Lady's Dream.

In spite of his great qualities and the great opportunity they won for him the failure of Jeroboam's life rested in that little key phrase that we shall see running throughout our study of the lives of Israel's leaders: "If thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee," saith God. Jeroboam did not hearken and God did not direct his paths and that spells failure for any life.

> "If thou canst plan a noble deed,
> And never flag till it succeed,

Those who in the spirit of the ancient Haman built up a gallows from which to swing their enemies are still the ones to be the first to try out how effectively the trap can spring.

SECRETS OF SUCCESSFUL CHRISTIANITY

By BRUCE L. MIDDAUGH

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.—John 15:8.

Christianity is the world's greatest successful failure. It is always successful, while always failing. Never has there been a time when all went well for Christianity. From the day when its Founder and Lord bowed His head in death upon the cross, it has met one failure after another. John Knox, whom history regards as one of those rare persons who are able to sway a whole generation, wrote toward the end of his life: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit and put an end, at Thy good pleasure, to this my miserable life, for justice and truth are not to be found amongst the sons of men.—John Knox, with deliberate mind, to his God." Many choice souls have died in the conviction that they had utterly failed, even though out of their failure came ultimate success.

There is growing up a generation that is inclined to discount the Bible to the vanishing point because it seems to promise results that do not happen. Young people are saying there is no such thing as conversion, because they have never seen it take place. Older people read the Sermon on the Mount, with its description of a love for others which makes one glad to serve, to sacrifice, and to suffer without thought of self, and they say, "It is all very beautiful, but of course not to be taken seriously." We are skeptical of the promises of the Bible, because we believe they cannot be made good, while at the same time we despise the practices and methods recommended, on the ground that we can get along quite well without them. For instance, someone will say it is absurd to talk of being free from worry (unless you "have a sunny disposition"), for it can't be done; but if it is suggested that the path to such freedom lies through regular private prayer, he shies away on the ground that prayer is no longer necessary for a modern-minded man.

We live in a state of spiritual poverty, feeling ourselves unable to cope with the world, either within or without. Wickedness reigns in high places, and all we can do is to deplore it with a shake of the head, or resort to a cynical "Life is like that." Our own personalities are puzzles to us, and we find ourselves slaves to habits that harm, or subject to discouragement and boredom, or adrfit on the sea of life with no idea of a purpose or a goal. But all the while there are secrets of successful Christian living which are secrets because they are so familiar, open to anyone who will look, but forever hidden from those who will not see. We do everything with them except put them into operation. What are they?

First, successful Christianity depends on ruthlessly discarding impediments. In Paul's fine phrase, "let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." In most lives there are definite hindrances which could be thrown out, and must be thrown out if success is to be won. A surprisingly large number of people can, if you pin them down, tell immediately what is the real impediment that hinders them. They go on struggling under the handicap because nobody ever does pin them down and make them face it. A young man, in his fight for purity, hopelessly handicaps himself by the type of cheap literature he habitually admits to his mind. A girl, in her search for real friends, carries about with her the terrible impediment of a gossipy tongue. Jesus met a young man loaded with the handicap of wealth, who came thinking he was sincere in his quest for life, but who turned regretfully away when Jesus put his finger on the impediment: "Young man, you care too much for wealth and convenience. Get rid of your property, and then you will be able to come and follow me." Successful Christianity depends first on actually renouncing known sins that handicap us.

Second, it depends on the actual use of prayer. This is old stuff, a family heirloom if you please, which we allow to gather dust because nothing traditional can possibly be of value. Jesus didn't trouble to tell people they should pray. He said, "When thou prayest . . . ," knowing full well that no prayerless person would have the spiritual endurance to remain very long in His band of followers. The man who drifts with the crowd thinks he can get along without prayer, and perhaps he can so long as he is content to be like everybody else. But let him have some convictions of his own, and really attempt to be Christian in this unchristian world, and he will find prayer an absolute necessity. Even those who do not care whether they are Christians or not, and never use prayer, are finding that the exigencies of life itself are compelling them to turn somewhere for help. "In the fell clutch of circumstance" they turn to drink or drugs. Some wallow in self-pity, or daydreams. Others, too honest to seek in amusements and dissipations an escape from the difficulties of life, struggle on as best they can in their own way, conscious of the inadequacy of their resources but bravely doing the best their own strength will allow, becoming more discouraged and disillusioned as life goes on.

Why do they do this? Some of them because they have never been told what prayer can do, or never have had an opportunity to learn; but others because they have been told too often, and have had too many opportunities. Prayer has been handed down to them from time immemorial, an heirloom whose familiarity has bred contempt.

There are those who say they do not pray because they do not know how, or because they have this or that difficulty with prayer. But no one need remain in such a state who really wants to learn effective prayer. Two pathways are open: practice and study. We learn to pray by praying. Without any outside guidance at all except the Bible, humble folks have repeatedly taught themselves to pray. More, there is an abundant and increasing literature on making prayer count, much of it available in public libraries, church bookshelves, and other places accessible to the public.

Third, success depends on a continuing and increasing companionship with Jesus of Nazareth. He Himself put it this way: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, . . ." How well we know that it is personalities that help us most. Some people by their very presence strengthen our good impulses and increase our faith in right. Often the mere thought of a great and good friend will hold us steady and give us strength to win. How much more is this true of "the Noblest Personality"! The most rewarding use we can make of the Bible is to use it to bring ourselves imaginatively again and again into the presence of the matchless personality of Jesus, so that He lives again in our minds, and we in Him. "If my words abide in you . . ."—what a prescription for shaky Christians! Some of the giants of the past and of the present have read and reread the words of Jesus until their minds were filled with them, and His words did really "abide" in them continually. Every situation that comes up reminds such a person of something Jesus said, and he finds that the word Jesus spoke is still spirit and life. About three years ago a newspaper story told of an experiment conducted by a New York judge in the case of a thirteen-year-old delinquent boy. His case was discharged after seven months of consideration, during which the judge gave the boy four great books to read and review. The judge's final comment was this: "This boy is a splendid youngster. Some day I hope to see him made a member of the bar, or maybe follow in the footsteps of his relative, wearing the cloth of his church; maybe in the footsteps of his father, an engineer. I do know that, no matter what profession he chooses, he will excel in it. I wish you, my son, joy and all possible success." Subsequently, the New York Public Library compiled a list of forty-three books to serve in the handling of juvenile delinquency, the list to be modified on the basis of actual experience with the books in Children's Court cases. If this sort of result can come from books by Cooper, Defoe, Dickens, Hugo, Scott, Stevenson, and such men, how much more may we expect of the little books by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, which tell of the words and character of Jesus of Nazareth!

Finally, he that would be great among you must be the servant of all, and "he that loseth his life shall find it." The path to successful Christianity never lies in the direction of the quiet cultivation of one's own soul apart from the world. We have known this too a long time, but we still do not believe it. One finds life, and one finds success, as one loses oneself in service to others. No unusual talents nor prominent position is necessary. The place of beginning is next door. The materials with which you work are hours and minutes of your own day, spent in the interests of others instead of your own convenience; the materials are the dimes and dollars that you divert from your own use to the relief of another individual, or to the support of a great cause. What counts is that you begin to sacrifice for the sake of serving—success will follow as inevitably as dawn follows dark.

Years ago in New York City a publisher was visited by a young man with a bag full of manuscripts, but the publisher was busy with a host of urgent affairs, and could not be bothered. So he sent the young man away, suggesting that he come back later. In that two minutes he lost a fortune, for the young man's name was Rudyard Kipling, and he did not "come back later." The publisher's chance had been there for the taking. So is yours.—Zion's Herald.

METHODISM FACES THE WORLD

"Are We Able?"

By W. G. CRAM

The title of this article is properly stated if we are to discuss the influence and authority of the Methodist fraternity in the world of today. We cannot reverse the statement and say that the world faces Methodism. Methodism in its international aspects may be a force with which the world must eventually reckon, but, if so, it will be only upon the basis of an aggressive and cumulative policy of proclaiming its partnership with God—a partnership whose sole objective is to declare God's plans for the redemption of the world.

The world in its corporate capacity is not making overtures to Methodism. It is not faced that way. No resolutions or appeals or petitions are being handed to the leaders of the Methodist Church by national, economic, or humanitarian groups asking for help. The multitudes outside of the Methodist Church and outside of other Christian orders are making no appeals to God for aid and succor, much less to the church. Rather, the world of thought and action that represents these multitudes looks to the emphases of a secularism, which is largely godless, for its improvements. It places reliance and hope in strange and bizarre forms of government, sustained by armed forces, instead of giving energy to the bringing in of the rule of God. It depends upon the use of its man-power to emphasize its national and sectional division. It proceeds on the theory that its parts are greater than the whole, which is an exaggerated nationalism.

Methodism, being in and of the world and facing its delirium of confusion, must make a declaration of its purposes, interpret its policies, proclaim its essential genius, and give irrefutable and sound reasons for its existence and continued maintenance. This must and can be done only upon the glorious fact that it is founded upon the character and promises of God through Christ Jesus. It must declare that its wealth is discovered in the assessment of its spiritual values and not in material accumulations; that its source of authority is disclosed in the commandments and power of God and not in the philosophies and vagaries of the mind of man, and that its chief aim is to bring men and the social orders in which they live to the recognition of God as the great Reconstructor of souls and orders of living. If this is done in words of love and compelling exhortation, the peoples of the earth will be tied into the great succession of immortality.

Facing the world, today, as united Methodism certainly is, we ask the serious question "Are we able?" Our ability rests upon the proper understanding and application of the doctrine of spiritual relativity announced in mathematical terms centuries ago, namely, "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight." Caculating safely and for easy results, we estimate that the hosts of Methodists in the world number nearly ten million souls. Against the multitudes of the world, this ten million has not the slightest chance to resolve any of its difficulties projected upon the basis of matching wits against wits, or human skills and energy against human skills and energy. This would be proceeding upon the common idea of man's strength against man's strength. But by applying the higher but understandable theory of spiritual mathematics to the problem, ten million Methodists should be able to chase the illusions and false philosophies and superstitions of fifty billion people.

I must confess that this is a sort of dizzy contemplation and no doubt reminds the reader of some of the dramatic scenes in "Green Pastures," but we know that figures do not fabricate and that the doctrine of spiritual relativity has been demonstrated here and there in the past, as the records of history in the development of the kingdom of God on earth have revealed. All of this is to say that, if Methodism takes seriously enough its mission and deploys its forces guided by divine strategies, there is no limit to what it may accomplish as its faces the world with its racial inhibitions and inequalities, with its turmoils and unrest, and with its warped and diseased souls.

To fulfil the purposes of God, in the calling of Methodism to union and to a new program of world evangelization, the genuineness of union with its power of accumulated energies and cooperation must be employed to the full. "United we stand, divided we fall" will find its exemplification in how Methodism plans to go about the business of saving the world. Union with competing agencies and with conflicting and diverse interests contending for supremacy within its organized set-up is no union at all. Union with divisions is an orgy of bureaucratic dominance. Union with cooperation merges the machineries and agencies of operations into the smoothness of a consonant whole. Traditions and personalities and past achievements and regulations and societies and boards and ministries and types of services must give way to a new order. To make this a certain and unmistakable fact, the old orders must decrease that the new adventure in union may have its chance to grow. This will give us for the coming day an effective church—a church that will speak with a voice of authority, that will move in unison, and that will make the world to know that, here and now, we are one, girded for a mighty conquest.

Methodism, in the United States and in other lands where it is established, by the processes of union now being consummated, seems to have come to face the world for such a time as this. The "time as this" is a confused world order in which are found a renaissance of pagan philosophies, the shutting of doors once open to the church and to the missionary, unprecedented unemployment in a world of plenty of work to do, hunger in the midst of abundant harvest, gambling and crime and extortion and ruthless wars and aggressions. This dark picture, we clearly see in somber outlines. It seems to have been painted in blacks and blues and sepias, by drunken artists. Methodism must endeavor to repaint the picture in luminous colors, resplendent with the glories of God.

Methodism has nothing to fear as its approaches the world into this great adventure of unification. There must be give and take. The world conditions demand a united movement of all Christian forces. We cannot escape this. With this demand goes the corollary that the missionary agencies of the new Methodist Church must speak the words of our common salvation to America and the rest of the world, with one great voice so that its sound may be like the sound of many waters.—Zion's Herald.

OUR SEMINARY AND US

At the North Carolina Conference of 1938 and at Woman's Convention of 1939, Dr. C. E. Forlines, president of Westminster Theological Seminary, was given opportunity to speak. On both occasion he presented some of the needs of our Seminary.

He told us that the immediate need of the Seminary is four thousand books for the library, to add to the eight thousand on hand, and make the required twelve thousand volumes necessary for this phase of accrediting the Seminary.

Since the personal library of Dr. Forlines, consisting of four thousand volumes has been at the disposal of Seminary students for many years they have suffered no lack on this score. But the accrediting agencies will not count these toward the necessary number unless Dr. Forlines gives them to the Seminary. Would it seem to you just, that one man should give his whole library to the Seminary rather than that four thousand people should each give one book, ranging in price from $2 to $5 per volume?

Although this fact has not been stated to the public, the theological journals and periodicals used in the library at the Seminary ever since he has been there, have been purchased out of Dr. Forlines' private funds, because he considered it necessary for ministerial students to keep abreast of the times in their field—and there were no other funds available for this purpose.

From the time Dr. Forlines graduated from the Seminary in 1901 until Methodist Union has placed him in the conference in which he now serves, he has been an honored member of our North Carolina Annual Conference, giving unstintedly of his time and energy to activities here, when called upon, although he was a teacher in the Seminary all these years, and its president for the past four years.

In a jocular mood he said at our 1938 Annual Conference, "I've been a member of this conference, training your men for the ministry for years, and you have never paid my salary, but you are now paying the salary of a member of this conference who is a missionary to India." Some of us realized that we ought to take him seriously, and do something to remedy our seeming partiality in the distribution of our funds.

I am sure we North Carolinians have not meant to be selfish, but if we would see ourselves as others see us we have acted selfishly, in that eighty-four of our pastoral charges paid their full assessment for our own college at High Point, while only twenty-seven charges paid the full World Service apportionment, out of which our Seminary was to receive a proportionate part.

We have established and maintained a Student Loan Fund for our own college students, but have never extended the use of this fund to North Carolina students at the Seminary.

On the other hand the Seminary has put into the education of the twenty-one ministers of our Conference who have graduated there, and others who were there for a time but did not graduate, $6,500 more than these North Carolina men and other North Carolina contributors have put into the Seminary. This of course means that North Carolina has benefitted from scholarships furnished by people outside of North Carolina.

Does it not seem that we should begin to think in terms of scholarships for others at the Seminary!

The total income from invested scholarship funds, and other gifts for scholarships last year was $3,000. Figure for yourself how much was available for each of the forty-five Seminary students.

The great majority of ministerial students come from poor homes and have already exhausted their resources before they enter the Seminary. All worthy and needy students are aided. Two High Point College graduates now at the Seminary will have received a total of $600 when they graduate.

Most theological seminaries make no charge for tuition, in fact our own High Point College gives free tuition to ministerial students during their college life; but the Seminary has no non-ministerial student income upon which to draw, and its endowment is far too small as yet, to give free tuition to all. However, missionaries on furlough and Japanese and Chinese ministerial students at our Seminary are given free tuition.

Scholarships may be established with amounts varying from $1,000 to $5,000, only the income from which is used annually.

But there is a greater need even than scholarships, and that is a permanent endowment. It is always easier to get money to help a particular student any given year than to get money to be invested as endowment, only the income from which may be used on down through the years.

The less than $50,000 of productive endowment of our Seminary does not compare very favorably with the endowments of the neighboring seminaries with which we have to compete; for instance:

The Baptist Seminary at Philadelphia, Pa., has more than $2,000,000 endowment.

The Crozer Seminary (Baptist) at Chester, Pa., has more than $1,000,000 endowment.

The Lutheran Seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., has more than $660,000 endowment.

The Reformed Seminary at Lancaster, Pa., has more than $730,000 endowment.

Union (Presbyterian) at Richmond, Va., has more than $1,600,000 endowment.

In the new Methodist Church there are nine theological seminaries and they will all be needed. There will be almost a million people for each of the nine seminaries to prepare ministers for.

The Presbyterian Church has twelve theological seminaries and only 2,000,000 members, but they are not turning out enough ministers for their churches, because they demand a better educated ministry.

The new Methodist Church has set a higher standard and will need better educated ministers.

Our Seminary at Westminster, Md. has a fine location, a fine constituency and a bright future. President Forlines has attended meetings of the presidents of all the Methodist seminaries and there is every indication that all the seminaries shall work for the whole church.

It is very important that our Seminary shall have the right start.

The question for us to settle is: Are we willing to make some sacrifices in order that we may help our Seminary off to a good start in the Methodist Church?

So may it be!

DRUGGING THE CHINESE

This is a tale of ancient paganism brought down to date, a story of "blood and iron." From good authority we have at least an authentic summary of the devastation wrought by the Japanese in the sack of Nanking. Twelve thousand civilians, including many women, children, and aged men, were killed; nine tenths of them were murdered apart from military operations. An average of one member out of every five families was killed, injured, or taken away never to return. More than 30,000 military prisoners were mercilessly butchered, most of them tied in long lines and machine-gunned on the river bank. The most conservative estimate of the number of women who were raped by the Japanese is 8,000.

Twenty-four per cent of the buildings in the city were burned—more than 4,000 street numbers. An additional sixty-three per cent of Nanking's buildings were looted, primarily by soldiers of the Japanese army. These figures come from the Nanking International Relief Committee's survey, printed under the title "War Damage in the Nanking Area."

In a wide area of country, moreover, forty per cent of the farm buildings were burned, nearly half the implements and animals lost, and one resident in every seven families was killed.

"Blood and iron"! Nero is being outdone in these modern days of so-called civilization.

But even worse than the ruthless burning of property, the raping of women, and the murdering of innocent civilians by these war-drunk Japanese is the systematic and deliberate debauching of living men, women, and children by the widespread distribution of opium and heroin. The Japanese have set up in Nanking an "Opium Suppression Bureau," have enacted by-laws for the "regulation" of the traffic through licenses and for the proper conduct of retail stores and smoking dens. On the face of it, these provisions appear to represent an effort to cope with the evil and to bring it under control; but, under cover of all these high-sounding official "regulations," what is actually taking place is that the sale of opium is increasing in the city by leaps and bounds and the number of addicts is multiplying in a way that would horrify the whole world if the truth were known.

The city of Nanking in the years immediately preceding its fall to the Japanese had known neither a large consumption of opium nor its open sale in a way to attract the poor and ignorant. It is especially noteworthy that for five years the use of opium had been slight and that of heroin practically nil. Today, both these drugs are abundantly supplied by the public authorities or by persons who enjoy their favor and protection. Literally tens of thousands of persons have become addicts, and thousands are engaged in the business of distributing these narcotics.

What is the Japanese system? Nanking was divided into five districts, and each one was supposed to have an "Opium Supply Establishment" authorized to sell up to 750 ounces a day. In each district, according to the law, five retail stores and ten smoking dens might be set up. These dens were taxed according to the number of lamps employed—nine, $150; six, $100; three, $50. But recently the original regulations have been modified to allow ten stores and thirty dens in each of the five districts. The daily sales under official oversight are in principle limited to 6,000 ounces, which in our money are worth $66,000 on a wholesale basis, or approximately $2,000,000 a month. At this writing it is estimated that 50,000 persons in Nanking have become heroin addicts.

Commenting on the spread of this terrible drug evil under the so-called "Opium Suppression Bureau" and the various "regulations" of the Japanese Government pertaining to the traffic in narcotics in Nanking, an authority writes:

> To make cheap supplies universally available, and to increase their use by advertising and the building up of a vast public and private financial interest in the extension of sales, is a policy based either upon supidity or upon inhuman greed. Do either Chinese or Japanese interests require for the future a drugged people, short-lived and infecund, physically indolent and morally irresponsible? That is the kind of people who are being developed in the Nanking Area today by the Opium Suppression Bureau and by the heroin merchants of all types.

The Japanese, of course, would deny the charge that they are deliberately debauching the Chinese nation in order to subdue it, but Victor Hoo Chi-tsai, Chinese representative on the League of Nations Advisory Opium Committee, openly charged, a few weeks ago, that the Japanese were deliberately encouraging the opium habit in the regions of China now under their control, and Stuart Fuller, United States representative on the committee, at the same meeting said that the increase in addiction in the Japanese-controlled areas of China last year was so great that enormous quantities of Iranian opium had been imported. He added that the Mitsuvishi Company had received instructions from Tokyo to purchase more than 41,000 tons of opium from Iran to meet the demands in the Kuantung leased territory and that, in addition, nearly 240,000 tons were reported as being purchased this year by Manchoukuo. Mr. Fuller also stated that the Manchoukuo budget contemplated an increase of opium receipts from 71,045,200 yen in 1938 to 90,908,400 yen in 1939. These figures, he said, do not indicate that any serious effort is being made to eradicate the opium evil.—Zion's Herald.

HOPE THAT TURNS THE TIDE

During the Sepoy rebellion in India, a large group of English men, women, and children fled to the garrison of Lucknow for protection against the bitter rage of those native Indian soldiers who had killed their officers, and were running amuck all over the country.

The Sepoys surrounded the town and settled down for a long seige. Day after day and week after week, the Britishers bore the unaccustomed heat of their confined quarters, the sickness and terror, and the slowly increasing danger from hunger and thirst, while they waited for reinforcements. They were confident in the hope that one of their messengers had gotten through with the news of their plight, but day after day and week after week passed by, without any sign of succor.

Things went from bad to worse in Lucknow. Death stalked in the midst. The carefully guarded food supplies gave out. But still the little garrison refused to surrender. After every reasonable hope was gone, they hoped on and held on, waiting for reinforcements and help.

In their company there was a young Scotswoman named Margaret. Early one morning she lifted her head and listened, her face shining with the glory of a great light. "Dinna ye hear it? Dinna ye hear it?" she cried. "The pipes o' Havelock sound!"

Nobody else heard the sound. Everybody thought the girl was delirious as so many others had become in that fever-stricken hole. And yet, with renewed hope, they took courage and waited eagerly to see if Margaret could be right. Nearer and nearer came the reinforcements. Louder and louder sounded the pipes, until, at last, all heard them—the bagpipes of Havelock's highlanders which only the keen, accustomed ear of Margaret had recognized at first. Their hope was rewarded, the garrison at Lucknow was saved.

Such is the sustaining, transforming power of hope, one of the three enduring gifts which God has granted to man. How often it has stemmed defeat and death and turned the tide of victory, all down the years! As long as men have hope, they have courage to fight on. When hope is gone, all else is dead.

It was a marvelous thing, then, which God did for the sons of Adam, back there in the beginning of the race, when he made the first promise of the Saviour which gave them hope. All down the years, that promise, many times renewed, sustained the Hebrew people and gave them courage to go on in their darkest hours. No matter how hard their lot, they look forward to the coming of the Promised One and found that hope turned the tide.—Willie Jean Stewart.

We have got no government in Washington, and we have got no government in some of the states, because government has surrendered to mob violence.—Senator Glass.

A PLEASANT EXPERIENCE

On the morning of the thirteenth of June, Mrs. Bethea and I left Asheville for a trip across the state to Ocracoke. While it is nearly six hundred miles, that did not seem long compared with our journey across the continent this year when we went to California.

Stopping in Statesville that morning we picked up Brother and Mrs. Cowan, as they had come from the Pastor's Conference to visit among his people. We had a pleasant stop in Greensboro for lunch and there we were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kirkman and little daughter, Joan. We made Brinkleyville for the first night, our party driving up there between the parsonage with Brother Howard, my wife and I staying over with our daughter, Mrs. Wilcox. Wednesday morning we were up with the lark, eating breakfast in Rocky Mount. We reached Atlantic in time to catch the boat, Aleta, for Ocracoke. It was a fine day for a water trip and all the party were happy in making the voyage without any one getting sick.

Landing at five in the afternoon, we were glad to find that the neighbors, the good women of the church, had supper prepared at the parsonage, and from there we went to the church to begin the revival which followed.

The services were held in what was the M. E. Church, South. That is where they have their preaching services, while the Sunday school sessions are held in what was the M. E. Church.

The services were interesting from the beginning. Cottage prayer meetings had been held in advance, thus getting the folks ready for what followed. The attendance was good throughout the meeting, and it was a pleasure to preach to them. Practically all the folks from both churches are cooperating in the union that has taken place in these two churches. There are about six hundred people on the island and about half of them belong to this united church. I suppose all are familiar with the way it came about of getting a former Methodist Protestant pastor. The leaders in both churches thought that was the wise thing to do, and it has proven so; for Mr. and Mrs. Cowan are doing a fine work there. The folks speak so well of his preaching and the effective work his wife is doing among the women. Surely it is a fine example of what can be done with three denominations joining into one when they have a mind to work.

Mr. and Mrs. Kirkman proved to be good helpers in the meeting as they worked with the young people and Mrs. Kirkman added much in solo work with her splendid voice.

They have a fine Sunday school there with an attendance of nearly two hundred. And from these young people there were several professions. There were nineteen names given for church membership for the following Sunday, the meeting closing on Wednesday evening, June 24th.

This was a great experience, and we thank Brother Cowan and his people for giving us the privilege of working with them. It was a new thing to have the opportunity of helping to get two churches together as they are there.

Ocracoke Island is being called the Bermuda of the United States, and from what is being planned now to take that into the great National Park by the Federal Government, with fishing, bathing and many other attractions, it bids fair to be a place where many more visitors than are now going will be found in al lseasons of the year; and the people are as hospitable as can be found anywhere, and it was a great pleasure to visit in their homes, many of which were as fine as any homes to be found on the mainland.

One place in particular where we took a meal had everything nautical. You could go in no part of this spacious home without seeing something that reminded one of the sea.

God bless the pastor and leaders in this great work down there, for we feel as they work together for the advancement of the Kingdom of God with the advancement they are making in a material way, much will be accomplished of which North Carolina will be proud in the days that are to come.

Thank you again, Brother Cowan, for this invitation.

N. G. Bethea.

Sidney Crumpton, student at Duke University, School of Religion, will be present and will teach in a one week Vacation Church School at Chestnut Ridge beginning Monday morning and a one week Training Course at Efland beginning Monday evening at 8:00 o'clock. This training course is open to the public and should be of special interest to young people.

MASCOT OF BOULDER DAM, RETIRED

By GRACE BERNARD

"Nig" is not a friendly dog, nor is he especially handsome. He's old and half blind, and if he ever meant to be a German Shepherd, his chances were spoiled when some unthinking person cropped his black ears short. Still, Nig maintains a dignity and aloofness unusual to a dog on the loose. For nowhere in Boulder City is there anyone who claims to own this strange old fellow.

Nig shuns all tourists, and any amiable overtures or offering of food at the hands of an "outsider" leaves him totally unmoved. But between him and the few remaining government workers around Boulder City, there seems to be a kinship—a feeling of fraternity.

What connection had Nig to that army of workers who erected the most massive piece of engineering in our modern times—the great Boulder Dam? What part could a mere dog have played in the erecting of that 726-foot steel and concrete barrier across Black Canyon, which impounds the waters of the great Colorado River, some thirty miles southeast of Las Vegas, Nevada?

Each day this veteran dog waits by a stop sign where the main highways leads to Boulder Dam, seven miles away. He looks up expectantly at any government worker passing by, and sometimes those clipped ears of his flicker slightly before he settles back in a resigned attitude.

A gleaming inscription on his collar reads, "Boulder Dam Mascot," and we guess that his job as companion and friend to hundreds of workers is now done. There are just a few of the khaki clad boys left to handle the visitors.

One of them gave us Nig's story.

"We met Nig about the time construction of Boulder Dam began, around in June, 1931. Some say that his master was killed while doing dangerous preparatory work for the Dam, but anyway here was this big black dog at the corner one morning, just begging to be taken along on the truck. We took him up to the Dam site, and all that day he looked and sniffed around as though looking for someone.

"We tried to make friends with him, but he wasn't ready for that just yet.

"Next morning, here he was again right at this stop sign, and we never could turn him down after that.

"Finally, it seemed like Nig realized that there was work to be done, and he stopped his moping and began to notice what was going on. He got interested in what the boys were doing, and all workers won his respect.

"Someone got the idea of packing his lunch, and he'd carry it in his mouth and put it away where the fellows put theirs. Then he'd get it out when it was time to eat, just like the rest of us.

"We soon made him our mascot, and chipped in to buy this collar for him. He deserved the name of mascot if ever a dog did, for he was on the job all of the time. He'd check out with one crew and ride back into Boulder City. Then he'd hop on the truck there with the fresh crew and check in again at the Dam. He made every shift.

"Nig thought he had to supervise each phase of the construction work. He'd even ride the lifts and never bat an eye when they swung up hundreds of feet.

Nig's former co-worker rubbed the dog's black head musingly. "You're through now, old fella. But don't think that a one of us will ever forget you"

Turning to me, he brought Nig's story up to date.

"Nig's not allowed up at the Dam anymore, with all the tourists around. Besides he's too old to hop on and off of trucks. Se we've sort of pensioned him off around here. He sleeps and eats in the back of the poolroom, and never wanders very far away from this last pick-up station. Too bad, Nig, old mascot, but we all become obsolete some day."

The proud dog continued to look off into space, and we were left to guess at his thoughts. He seemed to realize that he was "on the bench" for keeps now, but how could he know that we shall always remember him as a symbol of fortitude in a great land of endeavor and accomplishment? —Our Dumb Animals.

"DUKE" LIKES OLD HOME

By ERNEST E. VERNON

A coal-black Great Dane puppy, "Duke," owned by the Range West Kennels at Oldham, S. D., was recently taken to his new home at Schuyler, Nebraska, but memories of his old home in South Dakota were too vivid in his dog mind.

He leaped through a window and in five and one-half days he had covered more than 300 miles and was back in his former home in Oldham, averaging more than fifty miles a day. He was hale and hearty on his return but a bit thirsty, for he drank a gallon and a half of water but refused to eat before having a long sleep.

Although he was taken by automobile through Sioux Falls, Souix City, Omaha and Lincoln to Schuyler, he evidently passed around these cities on his return trip, for no one seems to have seen him pass through them.

Duke, whose full name is Duke von Reimthursen, is only 20 months old and weighed 176 pounds. He lost about 15 pounds on his return trip. He stands 33½ inches tall at his shoulders. Duke's father weighs 200 ponds. His mother is one of the finest Great Danes in the northwest and has won many prizes at dog shows in the country.—Our Dumb Animals.

The professor was trying to demonstrate a simple experiment in the generating of steam. "What have I in my hand?" he asked. "A tin can," came the answer in concert. "Very true—is the can an animate or an inanimate object?" "Inanimate." "Exactly. Now, can any boy or girl tell me how with this can it is possible to generate a surprising amount of speed and power almost beyond control?" One little fellow raised his right hand. "Tie it to a dog's tail." —Border Cities Star.

LOOKING BACKWARD, THINKING FORWARD TO OUR IDEAS ABOUT JESUS

Talk No. 3

By MRS. FRED G. HOLLOWAY

A child's conception of Jesus is much more adequate for its religious development than a child's conception of God.

This is true because Jesus came in human form as a little baby. All babies are sweet, and all normal children love babies. So that, in the little Lord Jesus who laid His sweet head on the hay of the manger, is found an understandable object of love for little ones.

Further, the boyhood of Jesus, that is, the little factual knowledge that we have of it, seems to be an adequately inspiring idea of what a truly good child should be like. No child, of whom I have ever heard, has regarded Jesus as "goody-good," no matter how much He may have been held up as an ideally good boy.

Jesus' kindness and helpfulnes as a man endear Him to all, including children and youths.

But as I said in regard to our conception of God, ideas that are attractive when held by children may be insufficient in adults. So that grown-up Christians who conceive of Jesus ONLY as a lovely baby, an obedient boy, and a tender and helpful man, have, to say the least, a totally inadequate idea of the real Jesus.

We need, therefore, to look backward, to our own conception of Jesus, and then think forward toward making it more adequate for our adult needs.

First, we need to think carefully on the fact that Jesus is our most complete and perfect revelation of God.

Second, while Jesus reveals God's kindness, mercy and love, He just as clearly reveals God's keen sense of justice, love of truth, and displeasure at hypocrisy. We should not expect to find these latter ideas about Jesus as we look back into our childhood, but we need to think forward very purposefully indeed if they are not included in our present portrait of Him.

Exactly what do we mean by the Christian revelation? With the help of the dictionary I made a definition for myself which, at least, suits my need, viz., "the Christian revelation is the act of disclosing AND discovering the truth pertaining to God through Christ and His religion." I like especially about this definition the fact that revelation is partly a DISCLOSING on God's side, and partly a DISCOVERY by man. The truth about God and eternal things is revealed in many ways, some of which we mentioned in our last talk; but the truth is most clearly disclosed and discovered through Christ and His Way of life.

As in other revelations of God, the revelation of Christ is only to those with eyes to see. "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us." But not all received Him, nor have they yet. However, the revelation of God through Christ is not yet done, nor will it be, until He has been perfectly revealed to all His children everywhere.

I have heard expressed the theory that we need another revelation of God in this hectic world of today; that God ought again send His likeness among men to save them from their sins. To me this seems a foolish idea. And I found an excellent refutation for it in Dr. Roberts' book (previously mentioned), although the thought I shall quote is not used in the book in connection with the idea I have mentioned. Dr. Roberts says: "One of our difficulties in dealing with the gospel story is that we have sentimentalized it; and have forgotten that it is tragedy. If it be true that the Word became flesh, then we have to accept the fact that deity was born into this world in obscurity, lived in lowliness and poverty, and died in defeat. He came unto His own and His own received Him not. He was a stranger in His own creation. He had no place to lay His head in a world where foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests. He was homeless in the world He had made. In the kind of world men had made of it, for Him there was no standing room, no resting place, save in the homes of a few simple, devout folks. Nowhere in that civilization was there a place into which He fitted. In church and state He was an outsider; and at the end was treated as an enemy. Even among the rebels of this time He was not welcome. There was no society in which He was not an anomaly; and even they who knew and loved Him best did not understand Him. If He came to this world today, to any part of it, the STORY WOULD BE THE SAME STORY." This last sentence, to my mind, sums up the paragraph in an excellent refutation of the idea that by a new revelation in the flesh God could save the world.

No, we must not expect a new revelation, but we must make the tragedy and triumph of Jesus' life real to ourselves by living it over and over. The incarnation is as real as it ever was through the Holy Spirit. And we still have the choice of crucifying Jesus anew, or of making His life and death the means of saving our world.

We must make the gospel as real to ourselves as it was to a group of Chinese to whom a missionary was reading the first chapter of Romans, in which Paul tells of the dreadful moral conditions of his day. As the missionary read, one of the hearers jumped to his feet crying, "He is reading about us!" In some such way we must make ourselves a part of the gospel story as we read it.

We have come back in these latter years from the Jesus of theology to the Jesus of history. And it was time that we should. As one writer says, "It is always possible to lose a definite Jesus in a nebulous Christ."

But we can swing back too far the other way. We do not want to make Him only "a dear young preacher of Galilee," as Lewis Browne calls him; only knowing him after the flesh. As St. Paul says, "We must know him after the Spirit," too. God, through His spirit can alone give us the eyes to see Jesus —to see Him for all that God means Him to be to us.

To be able to say, "I believe Jesus is the Word made Flesh" is indeed something. But to be able to say, "I KNOW, within myself, however dimly, of what that statement means," is much, much more.

There is a difference between saying formally, "I believe," and in being able to say, "I really believe with all my heart." To illustrate this, I recall hearing the incident of a superintendent of a church school and his wife, whose only child had died a week before Easter. And yet, on Easter Sunday they were in their accustomed places in the church school; their faces grave, yet shining with a faith that was unquenchable. After the session a little boy walking home with his mother said suddenly, 'Mother, do we believe the Easter story?"

"Why, yes," she replied.

"But I mean, do we believe the part about dying and then living again?"

"Yes," she said again, "of course, we all believe it."

"But I don't mean THAT way," he persisted, "I mean do we REALLY believe it, like Mr. and Mrs. S—— do?"

How do we acquire this perception of the revelation of God through Jesus? Go to the Jesus of the gospels and LIVE with Him there.

Not long ago, I heard a Christian educator say that if parents and teachers would thoughtfully and imaginatively read the Sermon on the Mount every day, they would be able to transform the lives of the children committed to their care. And I believe that if Christians everywhere read the gospels thoughtfully and imaginatively every day the transformation in their own lives would be sufficient to transform the world, even in these troubled days.

Dr. Roberts says: "When you read them" (the gospels) "imaginatively and in a mood of devotion, something happens to your mind —a kind of penetration takes place—and one may fairly say in Paul's phrase that one is acquiring the mind of Christ. Which is another way of defining the supreme wisdom by which we recognize the eternal Word in Jesus. Jesus becomes for that man the mirror of God."

Far, far away in Bethlehem,
And years are long and dim
Since Mary held the Holy Child
And angels sang to Him.
But still to hearts where love and faith
Make room for Christ in them,
He comes again, the child from God,
To find His Bethlehem.

Beyond the sea in Galilee
And ways which Jesus trod,
And hidden there are those high hills
Where He communed with God:
Yet on the plains of common life
Through all the world of men,
The voice that once said, "Follow me,"
Speaks to our hearts again.

Gethsemane and Calvary
And death and bitter loss,
Are these but echoes drifting down
From a forgotten cross?
Nay, Lord, for all our living sins
The cross is lifted up,
And as of old we hear Thee say,
"Can ye too drink my cup?"

To the Leader

This topic is the first of a series of three on the general topic, "The Christian and His Leisure Time." These topics provide for more than a listing of possible amusements for young people. Beginning with a community survey, and using comparisons and standards of measurement based on positive effects, each Christian should come to grips with his own leisure-time program. This should lead to particular development in at least two fields, the church and the home.

This meeting should provide for an evaluation of the facilities for making use of leisure time in the community, noting those which have growth in character as an end and those which exist for financial or institutional profit. Discuss the many types of recreation which build up the participants and point out their disadvantages.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. What is the Christian's idea of recreation?
2. Of what value is recreation?
3. What do you consider wholesome recreation?
4. What do you mean by the enrichment of a life?
5. What factors contribute to the enrichment of one's life?
6. In what ways, if any, does recreation enrich a life?
7. What character traits should recreation foster?
8. What vital Christian standard should we apply to amusements?
9. What amusements are obviously un-Christian?
10. What outdoor study has helped you? How?
11. In what modern amusements would Jesus indulge?
12. What recreation does our society sponsor?

The Poet

I believe in the fellow that lives on the square,
That plays the game straight and tries to be fair,
That keeps himself clean in body and mind,
That does a good turn and seeks to be kind.
I strive to be like that as near as I can,
For Jesus, I think, was that kind of a man!
—Author unknown.

Little Gems

Innocent recreation will help me, but any pleasure impairing my moral and spiritual energy is wrong and should be avoided.—Prof. J. Agar Beet.

Cultivate health instead of treating disease, said Ruskin. Diseases are nearly one hundred per cent preventable.—H. M. Walters.

The man that does not study some phase of nature, botany, geology, and so on, is missing much joy in life.—James Marron.

The great danger is not that the Endeavorer will choose the bad as opposed to the good, but that he will be satisfied with the average instead of the best.—Carlton M. Sherwood.

Play a little, pray a little, be a little glad;
Rest a little, jest a little, if the heart be sad;
Spend a little, send a little to another door;
Give a little, live a little, love a little more.
—Anon.

A Work-Chart

The following chart may prove to be very interesting and profitable for the meeting. In the chart we find two columns. The first column represents rules for recreation, and the second column represents desired character traits. The first and second column are not matched. The first is in order but the second is to be matched to the first.

1. Working together	:	Skill.
2. Common interest	:	Self-respect.
3. Steadiness of mind	:	Fellowship.
4. Ardently attached	:	Balance.
5. Masterful technique	:	Fondness.
6. Considering others	:	Honesty
7. Regard character	:	Wholesomeness.
8. Good morals	:	Co-operation.
9. According to rules	:	Unselfishness.

Answers: Working Together equals Cooperation; Common Interest equals Fellowship; Steadiness of Mind equals Balance; Ardently Attached equals Fondness; Masterful Technique equals Skill; Considering Others equals Unselfishness; Regard Character equals Self-respect; Good Morals equals Wholesomeness; According to Rules equals Honesty. (Suggested by the C. E. Quarterly.)

Aims of Recreation for Character Development

1. Substitute participation for "looking on."
2. Substitute amateur recreation for commercial.
3. Substitute neighborhood recreation for centralized.
4. Substitute organized recreation for unorganized leisure.
5. Harmonize recreation with health, safety and economy.
6. Provide the greatest possible variety of recreational opportunities so that every one has a chance to do many new things.

—Suggested by The National Recreation Association.

Tests for Good Recreation

1. Is it recreational?
2. Is it social?
3. Is it educational?
4. Is it spiritual?
5. Is it practical?

—Lynn Rohrbough in "Handy."

Enrichment of Life Through Hobbies

1. Doing things—activity to exercise mind and body.
2. Making things—not so active, but developing an artistry.
3. Acquiring things—collecting curios with a wealth of tradition and history behind them.
4. Learning things—studying and exploring.

—Earnest Elmo Calkins, in "Care and Feeding of Hobby Horses."

Our Task: "Some day, when religious people take religion seriously, we shall have a society in which the production of amusements as well as the production of goods shall be on the principle of use rather than gain. When that time comes we shall have more fun than we do now. Until then we can look about us and search out those who are trying to provide us with amusements that build up and do not destroy, and we can relax with them."—Literary Digest.

HOME-COMING AND MEMORIAL SERVICE AT CHESTNUT RIDGE

On Sunday, July 9, there will be an all-day home-coming and memorial service at Chestnut Ridge Methodist church (formerly Methodist Protestant church) located in the heart of Orange county, four miles south of Efland. Rev. J. D. Williams, D.D., of High Point, formerly of Orange county, will be the memorial service speaker at 11 o'clock. The afternoon service will be in the nature of a home-coming, and the speaker will be Rev. S. F. Nicks, of Cedar Grove. Many of the former pastors are expected to be back for the occasion, as well as non-resident members, former members who have moved out of the community, and friends. It is expected that at least several thousand people will be present.

Chestnut Ridge church is one of the oldest churches in Orange county, and for more than 100 years has been serving the surrounding community. The present building was erected in 1907 and is the third to be erected on the same site. In former years, camp meetings were held, with preaching under a large arbor. People came from all over the county to camp and join in the services. In 1881 the church entertained the N. C. Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church. Many of the leading ministers in the conference have gone out from this church to become preachers in the conference, and one, Rev. J. F. Minnis, is now serving as a missionary in India. The church now has 319 members, many of whom are scattered over the state and do not get back but about once a year. A great concourse of people throughout the state and other states have relatives and friends in the large church cemetery.

Rev. C. P. Morris, the present pastor, will preside over the service, which will begin at 11 o'clock. Rev. Sidney Crumpton, of the Duke University School of Religion, will also be present and will teach in a one-week Bible school, beginning the following Monday morning.

The public is cordially invited to come and bring their dinner and enjoy the day together. CICERO H. JONES.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Yarborough's Chapel, Yarborough's Charge.—Our church activities are moving along nicely. The attendance at Sunday school and church is increasing. Our pastor has filled all of his appointments since my last report with a new and more interesting message each time.

There has been a marked attendance in our young people's meeting also. Our programs have been interesting and are looked forward to each week by the young people. We have a social each quarter which is enjoyed by everyone.

We gave a Children's Day program the fourth Sunday night in June; it was a wonderful program, each child seemed so eager to do his humble part.

Our summer revival will begin the fifth Sunday in July. We pray that much will be accomplished for the advancement of God's Kingdom at this time, and we also ask for the prayers of you good Christian people.

Our third quarterly conference will be held the first Sunday in July at Tabernacle church (on Cross Anchor charge) where home-coming day will also be observed.

We ask an interest in the prayers of all those who want to see the Lord's work prosper; even as you shall ever be remembered in ours.

Christ Methodist Church, Henderson, Rev. T. J. Whitehead, Pastor, July 3.—It seems good to be back in old North Carolina, although it has been a pleasure to do the helpful things in another state.

The last Sunday in June was a red letter day for our church and Sunday school because it was the annual Children's Day. We are justly proud of our children and congratulate them and their faithful and efficient teachers who made it possible for them to present a most pleasing, interesting, and helpful program. In the absence of our pastor the 11 o'clock hour was given over to the children. A large number of friends were present to enjoy the program.

The evening worship was a fellowship service in which the members and friends of the Presbyterian, First Methodist, and Christ churches united. The service was held at the First Presbyterian church, with Rev. Mr. Whitehead bringing the message.

The first of the union services for the summer was held at the First Baptist church Sunday evening, and this service took the nature of a welcome to the new minister of that church, Rev. E. Norfleet Gardner, who preached the sermon.

The Philathea class sponsored a Chinese Checker party recently. Miss Agues Harris and Mr. Charles F. Tankersley, Jr., have been chosen as delegates to the Philathea-Baraca convention which will be held in Richmond, Va., July 12-16.

The Philathea class and Circle No. 4 will hold a joint meeting Thursday evening at the King's Daughters park. A picnic supper will be served.

The Auxiliary, the Circles, and Girls' Mission club have been meeting regularly with a splendid attendance.

Rev. and Mrs. Whitehead and a group of our young people spent last week at High Point College, where they attended the 18th annual Leadership School for the young people of the former Methodist Protestant conference, statewide in its scope. Rev. Mr. Whitehead is president of the Conference Council.

Mr. R. G. Kittrell taught the men's Bible class last Sunday.

Quite a number of our boys and girls attended the World's Fair recently, and with the Henderson High School Band participated in the exercises of North Carolina Day. C. L. Finch, Jr., and Billy Hight are members of the band.

We are glad to have with us for the summer so many of our young friends who have been attending college and teaching in this and other states.

Our pastor reminded us Sunday that the annual conference would be held October 18, and there was much to be done between now and then.

ANNIE C. LASHLEY.

Canaan-Denton-Mt. Ebal—On the second Sunday of June the annual home-coming service at Canaan was observed. Quite a number of those who had once worshiped here but now live elsewhere returned for the day. Among these were Rev. Atlas Ridge and family, and Rev. C. E. Ridge and family. Special music was furnished by the Ridge brothers, C. E. and Ira, and the Central Carolina quartet of Asheboro. This is an annual affair with this church and is always one of great pleasure and profit. We always look forward to the home-coming service. Dinner is always served in picnic style, and these Canaan people certainly know how to prepare a great dinner, and then they know how to enjoy the eating thereof.

The Denton church has just closed its Vacation Bible School which was really an achievement. The attendance was fine, running from 60 to 65 each day. The children all took great interest in the work. They learned much about the Bible and did some very interesting work in the industrial line. Mrs. Arthur Lanier was the principal of the school and deserves much credit for its success. There were ten teachcers and helpers, and each of them deserves credit for doing fine work.

The Mt. Ebal church building has recently been recovered and a new brick flue built. This church, because of certain conditions, has been so depleted that regular services are no longer held, but there are those who so love the church and its rich history that they are determined that it shall be cared for and so kept that when there are special occasions there will be a place, comfortable and attractive. Mt. Ebal church has meant a great deal to this community.

A class of Oxford orphans gave a concert in our town on Saturday night, June 17, and attended our church on the next day. They rendered some beautiful numbers which added very much to our worship service.

Mr. and Mrs. James Massey of Bristol, Tenn., worshiped with us on last Sunday. This fine young couple were recently married in the Denton church in one of the most beautiful marriage services ever in our midst. The decorations were beautiful and the house was crowded. They immediately went to Bristol where Mr. Massey is in business. Mr. Massey is the son of Mr. J. J. Massey of Pleasant Hill, N. C. Mrs. Massey is the daughter of Mrs. Wade Hill of Denton. They are both graduates of High Point College, and are most excellent young people. We wish for them a long and happy journey through life.

Fountain Place, Burlington, Rev. R. E. L. Moser, Pastor, July 3.—Sunday, June 18, was Children's Day at Fountain Place. The children of the Sunday school gave a very interesting program. Mrs. Dewey Hargrove, Miss Deloris Nicholson, and Mrs. Aubrey Amick trained the children.

The Ladies' Auxiliary held its June meeting with Miss Emma Baldwin with a large number attending. Mrs. Dewey Hargrove conducted the devotions, and Mrs. M. P. Nicholson gave interesting news of the mission fields gleaned from the Missionary Record. In recent months the Woman's Auxiliary has had increased attendance, and of course this means greater interest.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society under the leadership of Mrs. Aubrey Amick is having interesting prayer meetings. Each Sunday night after the regular program the superintendent tells a Bible story, the series having begun with the story of the Creation. In this way the Juniors hope to go through the Bible.

On Sunday, June 25, the Senior Christian Endeavor society held a devotional service at the county jail. Miss Deloris Nicholson, society president, was leader for this service. A good number of the Christian Endeavor members attended this meeting. This society too is doing good work.

Mountain Valley, Democrat Charge, W. C. Clark, Pastor.—As I have not sent a report from Mountain Valley lately, I will try to make a short report.

As the church building has been torn down and moved in the last year, we have organized Sunday school and are having a good attendance. People of all denominations seem to be taking an interest, and things appear to be moving along nicely; although it seems our pastor has just about forsaken us since conference, as he has only preached five times.

We ask the prayers of all the Christians that we may continue to build and grow in our church.

Bethany Church, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—The Children's Day program was well attended Sunday night.

The annual revival meeting will start the third Sunday in July. Rev. Mr. Shelton, pastor of Saint Paul church in Greensboro, will be the pulpit help. There will be an all-day service on Sunday and services of afternoons and nights throughout the week. Everyone is cordially invited to come and worship with us.

We were glad to see Mr. D. T. Gaster back at Sunday school Sunday, after being absent for a few Sundays on account of poor health. For 30 years Mr. Gaster was superintendent of our Sunday school.

Miss Lois Caudle and Miss Alese Julian returned to their homes Saturday after spending the week at the Leadership Training School in High Point.

The Helpers' class held their June meeting at the home of Mrs. Carl Redmond June 24. They will meet this month with Miss Gladys Pugh the fifth Saturday in July.

The Christian Endeavor society elected the following new officers: Richard Garner, president; Lois Caudle, secretary, and Doris Wood, assistant secretary and treasurer. Miss Ruby Johnson will be in charge of Sunday night's program.

Mrs. Clarence Baldwin is much improved after an illness of several months, and was able to attend preaching services Sunday.

THE POET

Once when my heart was passion-free
  To learn of things divine,
The soul of nature suddenly
  Outpoured itself in mine.

I held the secrets of the deep,
  And of the heavens above;
I know the harmonies of sleep,
  The mysteries of love.

And for a moment's interval
  The earth, the sky, the sea—
My soul encompassed, each and all,
  As now they compass me.

To one in all, to all in one—
  Since Love the work began—
Life's ever widening circles run,
  Revealing God and man.

—John Banister Tabb.

ACCIDENTAL DEATHS

Last year one person died of accidental injuries every 5 minutes—a total of 111,000 deaths. Accidents in the home caused the greatest number of fatalities, 39,000; autos were second, with 37,500.

Hot Weather is Here—
Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. Trial package ten cents, family pkg. twenty-five cts. At drug stores. (Adv.)

The Second Phase of Methodist Unification

Notwithstanding the success of the Uniting Conference where the plans for unification were set up and the spirit of cooperation of the delegates was so manifestly fine, let us not conclude that the churches are all united as the tumult and the shouting dies; for it is now time for the local leaders and pastors to perform their tasks, beginning where the delegates at the Uniting Conference concluded.

The local churches are to be merged in several communities; new circuit boundaries are to be formed where this is done so that the pastors shall have adequate support and the churches have adequate pastoral supply. Several of our boards and institutions are to be coordinated, and the method of the maintenance of the Children's Home is to be agreed upon; the M. P. Herald with its interests is to be taken care of. And that these tasks are by no means lilliputian those who perform them will discover. Those who accomplish this second phase of Methodist unification therefore, will surely need infinite patience, great wisdom, the diplomacy of mighty statesmen and the abounding grace of God.

We doubt the wisdom of much agitation by anyone. But a frank discussion of the situations as they now are and of what they may be ought ever to be in order. Let us ever remember that we Methodist Protestants are not being absorbed by one or two churches larger than ours. It is a union of Methodism that still faces us. And in this union the forms in many instances are not yet set. While we shall be guided by certain general principles, the techniques by which these changes shall be determined must be agreed upon by the participants. We most assuredly will often find it difficult to merge two local Methodist Churches, not because they should not be merged, but rather because of the attitudes of the members of the churches and the pastoral supply which they shall require when the mergers are completed. It may be some time before we forget that we came out of the M. P. Church, and forget the policies and methods employed by that Church, and it may require more readjustment than some shall be ready to make in the first deal. We greatly fear what may result from an impatient leadership in either group. The Conference authorities are trying to preserve the conference standing of the pastors—that none be demoted. So it is noised abroad that former M. P. Churches may expect former M. P. preachers from the approaching conference. However we have heard it stated that this plan will simply continue the suspense now in the minds of many and may create unrest instead of satisfaction. There is a feeling in the minds of some former M. P. pastors that the sooner there be a general inter-change of pastors of the former M. E., M. E. South and M. P. Churches, the more speedily will union progress. The objection urged against this, and the only objection we have heard, is because the salaries paid by former M. E. and M. P. Churches are so much lower than those paid by the M. E. Churches South, it would be tantamount to demoting those pastors assigned to churches where the salaries are lower. Therefore, it is urged that more time be given so that the churches paying lower salaries may be lifted into higher brackets. There is also the destiny of the Children's Home at High Point yet to be determined. Some there be who would discontinue it; doing it gradually, of course. Others want to see it continued under the care of the Methodist Church. What shall be done with the M. P. Herald and how it shall be done, is yet to be decided, etc. No, we are by no means fully united, therefore let us be patient, prayerful, perservering and always participating with those who seek the final consummation so splendidly begun.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Not Able To Write Last Week

What seemed to be a severe case of summer flu, attacking me rather suddenly on Monday of last week kept me from writing my weekly letter to the HERALD and prevented my attendance at two Trustees meeting, that of the Children's Home and of High Point College and kept me from going to State Street on Wednesday night as well as cancelling my appointments on the Mt. Pleasant charge for Sunday. But I am hoping these unpleasant experiences are about over and that from now on I may not be hindered.

Our Mid-Year Meeting

It is now too late for me to give any further publicity concerning our Mid-Year Meeting at Thomasville tomorrow to reach our people before the meeting convenes and too early to tell anything about what happened at the meeting. I will say, however, that Bishop James H. Straughn was invited to attend but had another engagement for that time and could not accept. We are hoping, however, to have Bishop Straughn in North Carolina to help us handle some of our problems before very long.

What Has Been Done Financially

In order that we might know just what we had done financially this year I wrote Treasurer Allen for certain information and here are the facts. They speak for themselves: Amount raised for World Service, $8.563.16; amount raised on Annual Conference Expenses, $1,058.04; amount raised for High Point College, $444.64; amount raised for Church Extension, $250.90; amount raised for Delegates' Expenses to Uniting Conference, $1,342.91. Those who will study these figures will observe that in some things we have done better than usual and in others poorer than usual. On World Service and Delegates' Expenses we made a fairly good showing and especially so on the latter, while in the case of the other interests there remains much to be done.

A Sunday Morning At Randleman

Sunday morning, July 2, was spent with Mt. Lebanon Church at Randleman, Rev. C. L. Spencer, pastor. This was my first time to preach to this congregation since I was elected president of the conference although I had held a quarterly conference there last year. This is one of our more mature churches. It is situated on top of a rather high hill across Deep River from the main part of the city. Those going to this church from the direction of Greensboro find the going comparatively easy but those going from Randleman proper have a right good climb to get to the church. The congregations here are not large but there are some very faithful ones in this church. Recently some Sunday school rooms have been made in the basement of the church and this adds considerably to the usefulness of the plant. The building is kept in good repair and shrubbery has been planted on the grounds in recent years which adds considerably to the attractiveness of the place. This is Brother Spencer's second year with this people and he seems to be doing his part well. Mrs. Spencer also is a good worker and the two do good team work. It was a pleasure to be with them in the morning service and in the parsonage at the noon hour. The parsonage is a reasonably good building with modern conveniences. The pastor's family is carefully looked after by the women of the church from time to time.

TO METHODIST VISITORS

The ability of New York to absorb the hundreds of thousands who are expected to crowd the metropolis during July and August remains open to some question, according to experts on such matters. And because of that fact the famed Actors' Church—Union Methodist—has added still another function to its unique list of services.

The church, of which the Rev. C. Everett Wagner is minister, has long been a focal point for visitors, due to its situation in the Times Square area. Now the information bureau has expanded its activities to render aid in finding accommodations of any sort, and in making reservations for visitors. The reservations may be made in hotels, private homes, rooming houses or church club residences, upon deposit of one day's rent in advance. In hotels, rates will vary between $2.50 and $3.50 per person, while homes and rooming houses will average $1.50 per person.

The church, located on the edge of the Great White Way, is continuing its regular information service as to trips about the city, economies in sightseeing and eating places, and shopping advice. Its World's Fair experts have accumulated a mass of data concerning the big show, and are ready to serve any visitor with all possible information.

Inquiries or reservations should be addressed to the Union Methodist Church at 229 West 48th Street, New York.

MORBUS SABBATICUS OR SUNDAY SICKNESS

1. The symptoms vary, but it interferes with the appetite.
2. It never lasts more than twenty-four hours.
3. No physician is ever called.
4. It is likely to prove fatal in the end—to the soul.
5. It is becoming fearfully prevalent, and is destroying thousands every years.

The attack comes on suddenly on Sunday; no symptoms are felt on Saturday night; the patient sleeps well; eats a hearty breakfast, but about church time the attack comes on and continues until services are over for the morning. Then the patient feels easy and eats a hearty dinner. In the afternoon he is able to take a walk or read the Sunday papers; he eats a hearty supper, but about church time he has another attack and stays at home. He retires early, sleeps well and wakes up Monday morning refreshed and able to go to work and does not have any symptoms of the disease until the following Sunday.

A Message In Verse

"Thou hast sent the trackless winds
Loose upon their way;
Thou has reared a colored wall
'Twixt the night and day.

Thou hast made the flowers to bloom
And the stars to shine,
Hid rare gems of richest ore
In the tunnelled mine.

But chief of all Thy wondrous works,
Supreme of all Thy plan,
Thou has put an upward reach
In the heart of man."

Dr. N. G. Bethea goes on the air again at Asheville, Monday, July 17 to Friday, July 21st.

They are very unwise who neglect their church, who permit other interests to come between them and daily prayer. For "It is not by might nor by power but by My Spirit, saith the Lord." The frustrated hopes which cast their shadows before us and darken our way are to find their rejuvenation by the Spirit of God. The absentee from the worship service loses his sense of the presence of the Lord and soon finds himself among the doubters of the reality of religion.

These are very busy days for many pastors. The revival season is getting underway in the rural church; the Daily Vacation Bible school is being held in both the rural and urban community, activities in which the pastor must take the lead. But when was it that a zealous pastor did not have much more on his hands to do than it looked like an ordinary mortal could do?

We were about to decide that such species of fraud as circulating letters claiming to have been written by our Lord and imposing upon those who failed to copy and send on to another some clamity as punishments for that failure was at an end, but not so. This week's mail brought one such. Superstition dies hard because ignorance its mother is not easy to destroy. Any Christian who knows his Bible and reads such letters can sense at once that our Lord would never have written a letter of this type, neither would He have imposed upon the reader the task of transcribing the thing that it might be sent to another.

Listening To God

Among the facts which stand out in the Bible too plain to be overlooked is that God speaks His mind to His own. The records of these occasions when the Lord spoke to me appear as though they were regarded as mere commonplaces at the times they occurred. Adam did not seem at all surprised that God spoke to him, nor Noah, nor Enoch, nor Abraham, nor Moses, nor Isaiah and others. The content of the message many times surprised them or made them unhappy, but there appears to have been a feeling that God could and would speak to men. And so the writer of songs have used this practice of Jehovah to impress upon us that we should be ready to listen, a thing it is not always easy to do. How impressively these lines remind us of the need for listening:

"Lord, speak to me that I may speak
In living echoes of Thy tone;
As Thou hast sought, so let me seek
Thy erring children lost and lone.

O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things Thou dost impart;
And wing my words that they may reach
The hidden depth of many a heart."

SOME MUSTS

This is the day of "must" legislation and in keeping with the times, here are a few "musts" from the preacher:

He must distinguish between prejudice and principle.
He must not accept remuneration without work.
He must not mistake motion for progress.
He must not mistake knowledge for character.
He must distinguish between faith and superstition.
He must not professionalize, but humanize his ministry.
He must not encourage worship without sacrifice.
He must not mistake emotionalism for spirituality.
He must not mistake soliloquy for prayer.
He must not confuse presumption and faith.
He must be a voice and not an echo.—C. B. Miller in Alabama Baptist.

WHERE ARE THE "COMMON PEOPLE"?

By GEORGE Q. FENN

Pastor, Chandler, Oklahoma

It is recorded of the Master that "the common people heard Him gladly." It has been recorded of the people called Methodists that "the common people flock to their meetings," but that can hardly be current history.

While attendance in many churches has been declining, there has been a large increase in the number of people who attend the services of the so-called "off-brand," or smaller, and newer groups, which we describe as "fanatic," "erratic," "extremely emotional" and "holy roller." The present writer is unwilling to accept any superficial explanation or invented alibi as the reason for these conditions. There must be some real explanation of this situation.

I stood at the vestibule entrance of a well equipped, modern church building and counted 122 junior and intermediate pupils leaving at the close of the Sunday school period. When asked why they did not remain for the worship service, they said: "Why should we? We've already been to church," and the fact that we had actually created a competitor for the regular services of the church stared me in the face.

We chanced to camp one night in a village where members of one of the smaller sects were conducting a revival in a tabernacle. We improved the opportunity to listen, on the outside, for there was no room inside. The preacher did not speak exceptionally good English, but the people seemed absorbed in what he said. When the altar call was made, there was a generous response, not accompanied by any unusual demonstation of an emotional nature. On another occasion four "off-brand" groups were visited in one day and evening, in each of which very plain language was used by the speaker, and there were some rather extreme emotional demonstrations.

Self-discipline and control seem to be results of higher learning, while persons denied the privileges of education are moved to action almost wholly by their emotions. Very few preachers in the older denominations, at the present time, pay much attention to the emotional appeal while, among those groups which have been making marked gains, much is made of it.

One Sunday mornnig the writer was preaching in a neatly built brick church, to a congregation of people above the average in intellectual attainments. They were as wholesome and kind-hearted folk as we have had the privilege of meeting. They would have been glad to welcome a stranger if they had had a chance, but one stepped inside, halted near the door, looked the congregation over, looked at his own clothing which was clean and neat, though cheap, turned and walked out. A few days later when this man was invited to return he replied, "I thought the folks here wouldn't be so well dressed that they would make me ashamed of my clothes, but I found I was mistaken, and, since I was wearing the best clothing I had, I don't think I will come back." The next week he was seen entering heartily into the services at "The Tabernacle," made of rough lumber, attended by people who, for the most part, had no clothes to wear except those which they wore at their work.

Shall we tell our people not to wear their good clothes to church? Maybe not, but one thing is sure, from bishops to house servants, we will have to dress less expensively if we expect the needy of our communities to attend our services. How do I know? I've been told so dozens of times by people who used to attend our services, but who can't afford good clothes any more. It won't do any good to say, "Anything good enough for school is good enough for church." They don't think so.

Again, and having been the pastor when and where one of the most beautiful churches of my conference was built, I approach this matter with no small hesitation. We have in recent years built up a great architectural barrier between our churches and the common people.

I am well aware of the arguments, but, in the town where I am now pastor, as the older denominations have built finer churches, the people who are content with the plainer type build more, and the people attend them. People who are accustomed to live in plain, poorly built houses do not feel at home in a finely built brick or stone church, with art glass windows in the walls and plush carpets on the floors.

One prominent preacher of a well attended church, when asked why his denomination had so few really good church buildings replied, "We prefer to have plainer churches because it gives us more money to spend in evangelistic and missionary enterprises." Maybe there's a hint in that for other folk too.

But here's the situation which breaks my heart. Our Methodism went into a hill country and created a hunger for the gospel we were preaching, among the nearest to pure Anglo-Saxons on earth, and then went away from dozens of communities, leaving them hungry, but unfed. In nearly every such community the so-called "holy rollers" are the only people who are ministering to the religious needs of the people.

I am not now writing in a critical spirit, but in one of deepest humility, hoping that the use of these facts and conclusions may have some effect in the greater Methodism which is about to be, which will help us to lead people to Christ, train them in Christian service, and persuade them that the Sunday services of the church are not intended as occasions for dress parade, but rather as occasions for humble worship, that we may again follow the Wesleyan admonition that our places of worship shall be "decent and plain" rather than expensively ornate, and that there may be re-born in us such a passion for the lowly that we will be willing to use the difference in cost between expensive living, expensive dress, and expensive overbuilding of churches, in evangelistic and missionary enterprises in behalf of those who were in the Saviour's mind when He said, "And to the poor the gospel is preached."

Or, shall we turn wholly to the highly educated, and well-to-do?—Pastor's Journal.

Sunday School Lesson

By O. L. EASTER

REHOBOAM: A MAN WHO MADE A FOOLISH CHOICE

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, July 16

Lesson Text—I Kings 12:1-5; 12-17, 20.

Shakespeare, who made it his purpose to know and reveal both the greatness and weakness of human lives, has this to say of the crisis of choice in one's life: "There is a tide in the affairs of men which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." With our present study of Rehoboam we find him at this flood stage of his career: "And Rehoboam went to Shechem: for all Israel were come to make him king." He faces the crest of the flood that offers to ride him to greatness and he vacillates for three days and thus lets the tide turn leaving him stranded upon the rocks of a foolish choice.

Rehoboam as the son of King Solomon had a promising background in making him a great king over Israel. It is true that his father had set forth a very bad example for his son to follow and the only advantage of his royal background was to be in the negative. That is, he could profit greatly by his father's mistakes if he would so choose. The people reasoned with him and pointed out to him that the presence of unrest in Israel was caused by the heavy yoke of his father's tyranny, and suggested that he reverse this condition by making the burden lighter. Thus they offered him success as a king, for they said, "Then we will serve thee." Torn between two powerful forces—a father's example and a nobler and higher ideal—Rehoboam stands in indecision for three days and throws open the gates of his heart to the advice of others in making his decision. Such a moment in any life is its greatest crisis, and its greatest privilege. God has so fixed his moral world that we must ultimately choose over destiny but gives us the chance to listen to the counsel of the "principalities and powers" of our spirits, so do we decide over fortune.

To every man there openeth
A way, and ways and a way,
And the high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.

But to every man there openeth
A high way and a low
And every man decideth
The one his soul shall go.
—John Oxenham.

The sad tragedy of Rehoboam's life was caused by his choosing the low road of his father. He had the privilege of seeing that Solomon's platform of government was unwise and self-damaging and had the opportunity to profit thereby. Mr. Romanes, who has specially studied the minds of animals, says that we may infer intelligence in an animal whenever we see it profit by its own experience. But it is the sign of a higher intelligence, the sign of human intelligence, that we are able to profit by the experience of others. Rehoboam then, left to the responsibility of using his powers of higher intelligence, went down in failure by ignoring the lessons of the past. This lesson is made pertinent by us in that the tendency of human nations still is to sin the sin of Rehoboam. History teems with warnings for man and nations and yet both are seen on every hand to be disregarding these solemn lessons. In the 49th chapter of the Book of Psalms David observes that the wicked know that "this their way is folly: yet their posterity approve their sayings." "Like sheep they are laid in the grave." This is painfully true of many lives. We seem to be able and anxious to profit by these lessons in our material history more readily than in our moral history. The secret of our marvelous scientific progress rest largely in our taking the known and by and through it discovering a bit more of the unknown. First, someone learns the principle of the wheel; then another builds a wagon on the principle of wheels. However, in the realm of moral progress man has been slow to utilize this procedure. Here with all our boasted "higher intelligence" we have often shown ourselves lower than the animals. Darwin tells us that animals learn from expereince, imitating the caution of each other, and no animal can be caught long in the same kind of trap. Some how in the realm of the spirit man is far less cautious. The devil keeps on using a few old smelly traps, reeking with the blood of ruined generations, and without hiding or changing them very much he is still making abundant hauls. God standing in the shadows hoping for a wise decision continues to lament: "I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

NO INTEREST

"I have no interest in missions," exclaimed a petulant young lady.

"No, dear," said her aunt, "you can hardly expect to."

"It is just like getting interest at the bank; you have to put in a little something first; and the more you put in —in time, or money, or prayer—the more the interest grows."

"But something you must put in, or you will never have any interest."—Spirit of Missions.

EXCERPTS FROM AN ADDRESS "FOR SUCH A DAY AS THIS"

By Rev. Jos. R. Sizoo

There is no form of government which so needs the leadership of the best as ours. In monarchy nobody needs intelligence except the king, and oftentimes the less the people know, the better for the king. In autocracy nobody needs intelligence except the sheriff or the executioner. In anarchy nobody has intelligence. But democracy is a form of government so high and so exalted that it requires a high level of intelligence to appreciate and a high standard of character to maintain. Yet many people suppose that democracy is the rule of the mediocre, a government which involves a leveling down process. Robert Ingersoll once said that a college is a place where pebbles are polished and diamonds are dimmed. I do not propose in this place to debate the correctness or error of that judgment, but I do know that in the current attitude toward democracy that same opinion all too often prevails. There are two kinds of democracy: There is a democracy of mud and there is a democracy of the stars. Ours is a democracy of the stars and it requires adventurous souls to maintain it. Unless we have the leadership of the best we are lost.

One of the grave perils of our generation is crowd-mindedness. An age that has gone in for mass production has come to the dreadful counterpart of mass thinking. We are content with the regimentation of ideas, cultivation of intellectual security, and the surrender of personality. Things have come to such a pass that it is no longer in good taste to advance an individual opinion. It is not patriotic. If you do not think with the majority, you are not a good citizen. The glamour of crowd-mindedness has us spellbound. We have learned to follow, not to think; to drift, not to swim. Everything is being standardized today, including thinking. Individual judgments are warped or obliterated by an avalanche of postcards, a wheelbarrow of telegrams, or the decree of a selfappointed Caesar. We are rubbing out the marks of selfdom. We are content to become passive copies of the current mind. We send up trial balloons to find out which way the wind is blowing and teach children accordingly. We want to know what public opinion is before we outline a course of instruction. The individual is terrorized by the majority and hypnotized by the state. We are afraid of the black mark of majority disapproval.

There is a sentence written of Jesus of Nazareth which always grips me. I cannot read it without a lump rising in my throat. It is this: "He dismissed the crowd." That is the hardest thing to do. We are unable today to live apart from crowd-mindedness. Public opinion haunts us like a vise and follows us like a shadow. Whether in the economic world there is room for regimentation I do not know, but in the realm of mind and spirit we cannot keep our selfrespect by goose-stepping. In a day of ready-to-wear clothing, predigested breakfast foods and philosophies, we need to remember that the first business of the teacher is the cultivation of the individual. The words of warning which Jesus raised to His disciples, "Come ye apart," have a strange significance for us. It is imperative to recall that before God gives a man a great task He always takes him away from the crowd. He sent Moses into the desert, Elijah into the Kedron, Jeremiah into the meadows of Anathoth, Amos to the plowed fields of Tekoa, Paul to Arabia, and Jesus to the wilderness.

It is time that we take fresh hold of the Magna Carta of Christianity's conception of personality. It is so easy to conform, but the test of civilization lies in its ability to create the individual and develop him as a person. A different world will never be a better world until that day comes.

> To thine own self be true,
> And it must follow, as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

There is another contribution which education must make for such a day as this if a different world is to be a better world. The second objective of education is the integrating of the individual in a society. To personal initiative there must be added social responsibility. After all, rugged individualism must not degenerate into ragged individualism. It is all very well to talk about the philosophy of selfexpression; obey that impulse; let yourself go; but one is always thrown back upon the question, Have we a self worth expressing?

For this reason there is a word which holds increasing emphasis among us. Without that word we shall never come to a braver and better tomorrow. Without that word no cause in all the world is quite so hopeless as the cause of peace. It is the word understanding.

It is so easy to play the role of the Pharisee and, seeing a world bloody and broken lying by the wayside, to pass by on the other side. But you never solve problems by calling people names. We all accent different syllables. We are all mysteries to one another. One drop of dew, no matter how large, cannot hold all the glory of the morning sun. Because I have certain political, economic, and social convictions is no reason that other people should hold those same convictions. I may be right or they may be right. If I am right it is my duty to convert them, but I have no right to slander them or to shoot them. Among the Sioux Indians there prevailed in the days of the frontier a strange custom. If one of the tribe determined to travel for a little while in areas guarded by other tribes, always on the night before he left his camp the traveler would be required to sit with the chiefs of the Sioux tribe around a campfire and then before it fell back into gray ash he would be asked to arise and, silhoutted against the flames, would lift his prayer, "Great Spirit, help me never to judge another until I have walked two weeks in his moccasins." If only now and again in this world we could walk in one another's shoes, how much better would life be and how much more hopeful our tomorrow! The business of education is to create understanding.

Whatever else culture may do for you, always first it should make you sensitive to the needs of the world. To know all is to forgive all. Culture should always lead to compassion and the end of education is understanding. The purpose of knowledge is not to make one arrogant, but considerate; not calloused, but compassionate; not unconcerned, but understanding; not indifferent, but interested.

Bigotry and intolerance are always the inevitable earmarks of ignorance, while the first fruits of education are sympathy and understanding. Education may make you skeptical, but it can never make you cynical. A skeptic is a man who has lost faith in the power of truth. A cynic is a man who has lost faith in the power of virtue. A skeptic maintains it makes no difference what you believe, while a cynic affirms it makes no difference how you live. Education may make you skeptical, but never cynical. To know all is to forgive all. To talk about culture without compassion is like talking about a crooked-straight line.

There can be no true culture without the cultivation of selfreverence and selfrespect. Individuality must come to the fore. We must champion again the right of personal judgment and of personal initiative. Man is not a pawn in the lap of kings or a tool in the hands of political charlatans. Have you ever thought that to whatever God has given life, to that He has given individuality? There are millions of spring-tinted leaves in the forests of the hills about us, but every leaf differs from every other leaf in outline, texture, and color. A thousand stars shine out of a winter night sky, but every star differs from every other star in glory. So it is with personality. God casts each life into a different mold and when He has made that life, He breaks the mold. We are not born so much to conform as to bear witness to a fire that burns within us. Man is an individual inbreathed with purpose, endowed with genius, and enswathed with high adventure.

SUCCESSFUL LEADERSHIP EDUCATION SCHOOL HELD

The eighteenth annual gathering of our young people was held at High Point College the last week in June, in the form of a Leadership Education School, with more than two hundred persons in attendance. The first of these youth gatherings was held under the direction of Rev. N. M. Harrison at Weaverville in 1921, and the one just closed under the leadership of Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, dean, may be the last.

All features of the gathering were up to the high standard of previous meetings. This is said with assurance since the writer has been in attendance, with one exception, to the last fifteen. In addition to the classes conducted in the First and Second Series courses, other features included discussion groups, morning addresses, evening programs, morning worship, free and directed recreation, a gala fellowship banquet, and personal conferences.

The morning worship services were very helpful—the message being brought out of the personal experience of the speaker on the general subject, ''The One Way In Which Christ Means Most To Me.'' The four morning speakers included Revs. J. Leo Pittard, Sidney R. Crumpton, Joseph F. Coble, and William M. Howard, Jr.

The morning addresses were built around the idea of youth adventures in ever widening fields of activity beginning with personal religion, and expanding through the church, society, into world affairs. The excellent messages on these topics were brought by Rev. T. J. Whitehead, Dr. J. E. Pritchard, Rev. J. Clay Madison, and Rabbi Fred I. Rypins, of Greensboro.

The time when young people really lay aside their timidity and begin to dig for reality comes when the discussion periods open. And did those young people enter into the discussions this year! For the first day the topic for discussion was ''Leisure Time and Recreation'' with Revs. J. T. Bowman and J. F. Coble as leaders. The following days Rev. Oscar L. Easter directed the exchange of ideas on ''Religious Problems of Youth,'' Rev. Jabus W. Braxton on ''Young Peoples' Relationships,'' and Rev. T. J. Whitehead the final day on ''Our Future Youth Program.''

The evening messages were stirring and educational. On Monday night Mr. Bowman and a group of young people from First Church, Thomasville, presented a very fine play. This was especially enjoyed. Then on Tuesday evening Rev. J. A. Vache, of Greensboro, delivered an excellent message to young people. Rev. W. E. Wisseman, also of Greensboro, brought a challenging message on Wednesday. Dr. F. L. Gibbs arrived Thursday and brought the message that night and directed the consecration and communion service Friday night. At the consecration service practically all our young people who had not already done so in previous meetings signed a life declaration card stating that they would, under God's guidance, not drift into life but choose their way.

Course credit awards this year were the highest for several years. Twenty-seven young people completed 54 credits in the First Series Courses, and 103 young people completed Second Series Courses. In addition to the credits received, twenty persons having qualified received the First Certificate of Progress, indicating that they had either attended two Leadership Education Schools or completed at least four First Series Courses, were actively engaged in their local church, and were practising some plan of private devotions. Those qualifying were Lula Pearson, Lillian Compton, Ralph Coltrane, Johnsie S. Curry, Mary Gene Falkner, Ethel L. Harrison, Florence Hightower, Lucy Lowdermilk, Virginia Massey, Waydene Morris, Carrie Tucker McFarland, Geraldine Rash, Wanona Rash, Melda Scarborough, Josephine Sykes, Philip Taylor, Glenna Teer, J. L. Trollinger, Annie Belle Wensil, and Sue Elaine White.

The banquet on Friday evening was a gala affair, presented in the likeness of a circus. The program opened with an ''animal'' parade and kept moving for most two hours with the five ring features, many of which were spontaneous and extemporary, adding zest and excitement to an already exciting evening. The banquet feature was planned and presented under the direction of Revs. J. W. Braxton, J. T. Bowman, and J. Elwood Carroll.

At the luncheon Tuesday the annual meeting of the Conference Council of Religious Education, under whose sponsorship the annual gathering is held, was conducted and officers for the coming year were chosen. All former officers were re-elected, which includes Rev. T. J. Whitehead, president, Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, vice-president, Rev. J. Clyde Auman, treasurer, and Mrs. E. Lester Ballard, secretary.

Other members of the Council as chosen by the Annual Conference include Rev. Jabus W. Braxton and Dr. P. E. Lindley.

Teachers in the courses offered included Revs. W. M. Howard, Jr., T. J. Whitehead, E. Lester Ballard, S. R. Crumpton, J. L. Trollinger, E. O. Peeler, Jabus W. Braxton, J. T. Bowman, Dr. T. M. Johnson, and Mrs. J. Elwood Carroll. Miss Elizabeth Booker ,of Greensboro, had charge of the books; Mrs. J. Millikan was counsellor for the young ladies, Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, dietician; J. Clyde Auman, business manager; Revs. J. T. Bowman, J. F. Coble, S. R. Crumpton, J. W .Braxton, counsellors for the young men and directors of recreation.

We are especially indebted to the Duke Endowment for sending us S. R. Crumpton, who took such an active and helpful part in the entire program. Plans for the future will be under the direction of the Board of Education of the Annual Conference of the new church.

A MINISTER'S INFLUENCE

By John R. Scotford, New York City

In the average parish the good pastor is remembered longer than the great preacher. His ministerial standing is a distinct asset to a man when he becomes pastor of a new church. Because he has been vouched for by his denomination, he is accorded a hearty welcome and finds awaiting him a group of people who wish to be his friends. Few newcomers enter a community with more prestige.

But the official position of a pastor is also a barrier between him and a host of people. He is regarded as one who has been "set apart." The popular supposition is that he is different from other men.

Occasionally a minister is tempted to rebel against the artificiality of many of his contacts. Jesus went about doing good without benefit of ecclesiastical standing, and thereby became the friend of publicans and sinners. Many a minister has wondered if he could not do more real good talking to the people in the market-place than preaching from a pulpit.

Unfortunately most of us lack the personal winsomeness of Jesus. Not many would give up their fishing to follow us. We may regard the institution of the church as a good deal of a nuisance, but it is through its organized life that we make most of our human contacts. One of the great justifications of the church is that it draws people together and thus exposes them to the personal influence of the minister. Many of us would have a hard time finding a following, if it were not for the religious organizations which we have inherited from our predecessors. But every minister wants to be something more than a cog—or a carburetor—in an ecclesiastical machine. What steps he will take to avoid such a fate depends upon the temperament and training of a man.

Titles are a dangerous commodity. One of the most inane salutations ever invented is that of "Reverend." It means little and is rarely used correctly. Strictly speaking, it is not a title but an adjective, which may be placed before a title. "Reverend Jones" is incorrect, and makes most intelligent ministers writhe. If people cannot be weaned from the "Rev.," teach them to make it "the Reverend Mr. Jones." "Rev." undoubtedly helps the postoffice to deliver mail correctly, but otherwise it is a hindrance and a nuisance. About once a year it is helpful to talk to the church school about the proper way to address a minister in the hope that the children will take the news home to their parents.

As for the title, "Doctor," that, too, is of questionable value. When a man of ample stature and ripe experience is called "Doctor," whether properly or improperly, it probably does no harm. But, for ministers who are either young or not naturally impressive, such a title sets up a hurdle which must be negotiated before real friendships can be established. There is much to be said for the custom of the army, the navy, and the more sophisticated college faculties of discarding titles in ordinary convesation in favor of plain "Mister." The minister's family might well set the congregation a good example in that respect.

The same principle applies to a minister's appeal. Clerical garb is an effective muffler of profanity, and it gets a minister certain advantages. For young men it is dangerous, as it tends to frighten people away. On the other hand, S. Parks Cadman wore clerical clothes with much gusto, and it hampered him not at all. Before deciding on a clerical outfit be certain that your personality completely overflows your clothes—which was the case with Cadman.

An air of much learning will always separate a minister from common folk. He can't know too much, but he should not talk as though he had swallowed the dictionary.

Curiously, the appearance of great piety will effectually separate a minister from the mass of men. Frank Buchman once said, "You may not like it, but it is really our sins that draw men together!" Most people are rather painfully conscious of their shortcomings. They know that they have made an abundance of mistakes and blunders. In the presence of a minister who seems to be quite saintly they feel just plain uncomfortable.

On the other hand it is not necessary for a pastor to simulate that sorry creature, the ministerial sport, just to prove that he is human. But he can so conduct himself that people will feel that he is facing the same problems which confront them.

A pastor needs to be careful lest the institution which he serves come to cloud his vision of life. It is very easy to live behind stained glass windows and see everything from an ecclesiastical angle. One becomes very busy about many thing, some of which do not really matter. Recently I heard of a prominent pastor who said to a parishioner seeking counsel, "I'll give you ten minutes." People quickly sense whether we are more concerned with the building of an institution or the helping of men and women. It is very easy to become priests and Levites when we see human need—and go by on the other side of the road.

Nothing helps a man to win the confidence of people like years of continued service in one church. When we come to a community as "the new minister," the emphasis is inevitably upon our ecclesiastical standing, but, if we stay around long enough, our ordination will be forgotten and we will be accepted for what we are. In times of trouble people tend to seek counsel of one whom they have known for a long time. Their lips open more readily for an old friend than for a stranger. One of the contradictions of church life is that the longer a minister remains with a church the poorer his statistical record is likely to become, but the greater is his personal influence in the community.

In our youth most of us ministers were more or less hampered by our ecclesiastical swaddling clothes. As a man matures his human characteristics usually become more prominent. His wife chastens him and his children educate him. He meets defeat. The mysteries of human experience are gradually revealed to him. The church ceases to be an end in itself and becomes a channel through which he can work with individual men and women. As his personality mellows, his influence grows.—Pastor's Journal.

WHEN PARENTS AND CHILDREN LIVE IN THE SAME HOUSE

By James D. Rankin, DD., LL.D.

Because parents and children live under the same roof it does not follow that they live in the same world. Too often parents are so engrossed in business and society and their children in school or play, that they live in different worlds. Each class thinks of its own interest and has little care for the other. There is no sadder sight than the wide gulf which this indifference to each other's interest, digs between parents and children. A happy home demands reciprocal accommodation to each other's tastes; both must surrender something of their desires, to the rights of the other. The evening hour is a critical one. Probably the parents wish quietness, the opportunity to converse over their interests or to read, while the children, home from the restraints of the school, want play, action, laughter. Alas, too often this type of home is the separating of the ways between parents and children. Too often this enforced quietness drives the children from the home to seek pleasure elsewhere. Dissect the human body and you find 450 muscles made for laughter. The finding is significant. God intended them to be used. They are flexible and work easily in youth, but like other things, muscles stiffen with age. This makes laughter more difficult for adults. It is very important that children shall find the play element met in the home. Screw down the safety valve and there will be an explosion. The writer knew a little girl overflowing with life, who in the evening was chasing her pet dog through the house. She was laughing in wild glee and the dog was expressing its joy by frequent barks. At length one of the older members exclaimed impatiently, "Marie, can't you be quiet for a single minute?" The child stopped for a moment, looked with wonder upon the older group, and exclaimed, "It can't be did." On the other hand parents and older members have their rights in the home, and these should be respected. But love and the future of children should bring a compromise. A little girl overflowing with life, said to her grandmother, "No other person ever entered my life as you have done. You take me to places where children like to go, and laugh with me. You join me in my 'make-believe' play. I would rather play with you than with any other person in the world." Then, with a mischievous laugh, she said, "You must have reached your second childhood, for you know what children like." A father pointed with pride to a handsome young soldier embarking for France, and said, "That is my son." After a moment his eyes filled with tears and he added, "I do not know my son, and I do not know how to get acquainted with him." A busy lawyer discovered that his boy was getting into bad company and drifting away from his home. He recognized the necessity for quick action, and said to those in his office, "I am going away for two weeks. I will leave no address for I do not want to be called back." Then he asked his boy to go with him on a fishing trip. For two weeks they were alone, they did their own cooking and slept together in their little tent. The father gained the boy's confidence and they discussed many problems of young life, and also the vision of a larger future. They caught some fish, but the father's great catch was his boy. He hooked him so tightly that the boy forsook his evil companions for the comradeship of his new "pal." The father in turn placed the boy above his business and had the joy of seeing him grow into fine Christian manhood. —The United Presbyterian.

NOT SIZE, BUT SPIRIT

"Open the gate, my boy," said the rider who headed the hunting party.

"I'm sorry, sir," answered the boy, "but my father sent me to say that you must not hunt on his grounds."

"Do you know who I am?" demanded the man gruffly.

"No, sir," answered the boy.

"I am the Duke of Wellington," came the dignified reply.

The boy took off his cap to the great man. But he did not open the gate. "The Duke of Wellington will not ask me to disobey my father's orders," he said quietly.

Slowly the man took off his hat and then smiled. "I honor the man or the boy who is faithful to his duty," he said, and with that he and his party rode away.

The spirit of one's deed is more important than the deed itself. The spirit of the thing reaches out and takes hold of the onlooker, and his own spirit responds. The greater the man, the more surely and the more quickly will he respond.

Not the size of the doer, nor the size of the deed, but the spirit that moves in both—this matters most. It is this that God sees, and this that determines character.—Clifford W. Berg.

LOOKING FORWARD — THINKING BACKWARD TO OUR IDEAS ABOUT HIS CHURCH

Talk No. IV

By MRS. F. G. HOLLOWAY

As I look back on my own childhood there was only one church. That was the one to which I was sent. I was a Presbyterian!

The way things were done in my church were to me as inviolate as the way things were done in my home. There was a peculiar sanctity about them, and other ways seemed strange indeed. I do not believe my feelings in this regard were peculiar to a Presbyterian.

Of course there were certain values in this intense if narrow view. Habits of loyalty to church affiliation were established. My church and its services became very precious to me. For these things I owe a debt of gratitude to my parents who set the habits of my church-going, and to those within the church who helped to establish my life there.

But perhaps I owe a still greater debt of gratitude to the circumstances which took me from the Presbyterian to the Methodist Protestant Church. At first the ways of the latter seemed unusual, and a little odd. But the members of that church seemed devoted to their ways as I had been to mine. And apparently they were kindly Christian people too! So I conceded that they were probably headed in the right direction as well as the Presbyterians!

Still looking back, I am willing to admit today that I now believe the Methodists, as a church, were a little further ahead on that heavenly road than the Presbyterians! You see my conversion to Methodism has been complete!

I hope you will forgive this lengthy personal testimony. I have given it because I have felt that to a greater or less degree my view backward is that of all of you who were brought up in a day when denominationalism was stressed.

But now, if we take the right thought forward, it will not have to be our look backward which faces our children or theirs.

We can give them what is most desirable of our look back without the undesirable. We can give them the intensity of devotion without the narrowness. For surely, if we think forward, we realize that every sign of the times points to the fact that the days of denominations are numbered. Even the large denomination of Methodism of which our church is happily a part, will, I believe, gradually unite with other groups to eventually form the Christian Church. If we think forward clearly, we know that this is both necessary and right.

The Christian Church must be united, must be able to act as a unit, in order to effectively function in a world containing great bodies of anti-Christian forces.

This does not mean regimentation of churches and church groups, nor of individuals. It does not mean that each Christian must think and speak and act like every other Christian individual, except that each must have a truly Christian attitude toward the other and toward the world.

In essence we say something like this: As followers of Christ there is more to unite us than there is to divide us. Instead of being suspicious of each other's motives and methods, instead of arguing over non-essentials, instead of pulling against each other, and overlapping in our work, we will all unite, and cooperate to make God's Kingdom come in this world.

Look back again to 1891 to what Samuel Longfellow thought about the Christian Church when he wrote:

"One holy church of God appears
Through every age and race,
Unwasted by the lapse of years,
Unchanged by changing place.

From oldest time on farthest shores,
Beneath the pine or palm,
One unseen Presence she adores
With silence or with Psalm.

Her priests are all God's faithful sons
To serve the world raised up;
The pure in heart her baptized ones,
Love her communion cup.

The truth is her prophetic gift,
The soul her sacred page;
And feet on mercy's errands swift
Do make her pilgrimage.

Oh living church! Thine errand speed,
Fulfil Thy task sublime;
With bread of life earth's hunger feed,
Redeem the evil time."

How true, but when we look back, not a great many of us were trained to think in such broad terms. Had we been, the Kingdom of God might be nearer than it is today. But think ahead to what might come to pass if we were to live the spirit of that poem of almost fifty years ago.

I began this talk by looking back on my own life, and perhaps yours. Now, look back with me, most briefly of course, way, way back more than 1900 years to the beginning of our church. As we look back over that panorama, there is a noble view. There is exquisite beauty. Yes, and there is tragedy too, bigotry and sin—ugly spots we'd gladly take out, but we cannot. They are necessarily part of a backward look on the history of the church. It began way back there with Christ, our head. We follow down throuh the early Christian church, then the Roman church, and there stands Luther to mark the great dividing point. From that point denominations branch and branch until we come down to Methodism and then Methodist Protestantism and the Southern Methodism.

Now it is time to turn from a backward look and think ahead. A different direction we'll take. Forward through a process of uniting — Methodism, then other denominations — forward to recapture the unity and

The Text: I Cor. 12:1-14.

To the Leader

Remember this is the second of a series of three topics on the subject, "The Christian and His Leisure Time." Begin where you left off last week and end where you should begin next week. Provide a place in this discussion for the items of leadership, equipment, and finances, with emphasis on the fact that the time and money now being spent on commercial amusements, if given to a cooperative church enterprise, will solve many social problems. In building a program of recreation for the church, make sure it is free from the objections now applied against much of the secular and commercial recreation. Spend much time in discussion of an ideal program of recreation for your local church. Endeavor to make the suggestions practical and try to arouse interest in promoting some definite program of recreation in the local church. Ideas and ideals are fruitless until they are put in action.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. What Sunday recreation do you think is acceptable to Christ?

2. What amusements in your community are below the standards of Christianity?

3. What should be the Christian's attitude toward questionable amusements?

4. What suggestions can you make for improving the leisure time facilities in your community?

5. What is the program for recreation in our local church?

6. What program of recreation does our society sponsor?

7. What does our church need to promote an acceptable program of recreation?

(a) What are we able and willing to provide for an acceptable program?

8. Is a program of recreation necessary in the church? Explain.

9. What is your favorite indulgence? Its qualities?

10. What should be the objectives of a Christian program of recreation?

11. What program of recreation can our society promote?

12. What feature would you like to have in such a program?

Little Gems

A Christian's amusements must be blameless as well as ingenious, safe as well as rational, moral as well as intellectual. . . . They should not imitate the besetting sin against which he is struggling.—Hannah More.

The Sunday amusement "worship" and the automobile "worship" are two kindred religions that kill "spiritually" more of our young people who worship at their altars, and empty more churches and Sunday schools than perhaps any other religion except the movie "worship."—D. E. Lepley, in the Gospel Messenger.

Life is a great game. It takes all the grit, all the good cheer, all the hardihood, and all the determination that a boy or man can muster to play it right. It takes self-control, hard training, fair-mindedness, unselfishness. But it pays back good dividends in friendship, gratitude, honor, and happiness. The way you play your games is the way you will wage your battles. Master your appetite, control your temper, see a great goal, hit the line hard, never give up: that's the way to play the game.—Arthur W. Spalding.

Topic Hints

Our Fellowship: Christianity is a Christian fellowship. The supreme goal of this fellowship is the perfected spiritual life of each individual member resulting in a true spiritual community, the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. We find many people in this glorious race and among them we find individual differences. These many differences can be harmonized by a wholesome and all-inclusive program which will result in a well balanced mental, moral, spiritual, and physical growth. Among the many needs of a growing Christian, is the need of a wholesome program of recreation. Such a program strengthens the individual's life. and makes stronger the fellowship to which he has pledged allegiance.

Our Present Situation: Many of our modern amusements have been commercialized. Sponsors are not interested in the moral or spiritual welfare of the nation and her citizenship. Their only interest is a huge income from a meager investment. In recent years the law of the land has been on their side. One by one the laws which were made for our moral welfare have been repealed. Every hour in the day, the enemies of Christianity are endeavoring to legalize what they call sports regardless of their evil effects on the youth of our nation. Their cunning words and ways not only succeed in legalizing questionable "so - called sports," but persuade thoughtless and Christless people, young and old, that the sponsors are saintly and the sponsored is harmless. It remains for us to be strong in the Christian faith and refuse to patronize those things which bring shame on Jesus Christ, disgrace on our honest fore-fathers, and destruction on ourselves. We must not be tricked by the tricky.

Our Present Need: Our first need is a recreational program created and fostered by a Christian leadership. We can never depend on the world for such a program. We cannot always depend on church members without a spiritual board of governors for recreation which leads to spiritual growth. At present, it seems that the spiritually-minded church is the only safe and sound institution to which we can turn. Our second need is a willingness of our people to support a program of recreation provided by the church. We have seen many churches provided with excellent recreational facilities and have heard them begging for the interest and support of the membership. Dust covers their equipment because it has not been used by members who prefer amusements tainted with practices which the Word of God clearly denounces. We need a church with a recreational program and we need a church membership which will turn from the programs of the world and take part in the programs provided by the church.

Our Aim: W. Edward Raffety in "Church School Leadership" suggests ten aims for the recreational leader in the local church. They are as follows:

1. To set forward the health interest of children, young people, and adults.

2. To plan such recreations as will develop the minds as well as the bodies of all participants.

3. To satisfy the love of play, and the social instinct for fellowship under wholesome influences.

4. To insist on the maintenance at all times of high ethical standards in all games and all good time sociables.

5. To educate the church as a whole on the value of play in the development of an all-round program of religious education.

6. To keep his head and to use it to work out a well-articulated program of recreatonal activities for the whole church and school for the whole year.

7. To work definitely, persistently, and consistently for spiritual results with all age groups served.

8. To discover leaders and develop them through special classes and in supervised practice.

9. To keep in friendly, helpful relations with pastor, parents, church-school associates, and with recreational leaders in the community.

10. To give himself whole-heartedly, conscientiously to his task, seeking as his highest reward the Christ-controlled life for himself and others.

fellowship of the early Christian Church. Forward, united, to come again into the presence of Christ, our Head.

For my part, I am infinitely grateful that my church is part of the uniting process. And if anyone had asked me to suggest a motto for these days of uniting, I think I should choose the statement made to his congregation by one of the most Christlike of our Methodist Protestant ministers. He said: "However we may have thought or felt about Methodist union, this union is now an accomplished fact. As I see it, the one thing now for us to do in relation to it, is to be sure that everything we say and everything we do is entirely and completely Christian."

Keep It Up!

If you want to succeed, begin right, then keep it up. . . . The failures in the world have been the quitters—those who began all right but did not hold out.—Harold Thorpe.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Kistler's Union, Cleveland Charge, Rev. T. G. Madison, Pastor, July 10.—Our church activities are moving along nicely. The attendance at Sunday school and church services is increasing. Our pastor has filled all of his appointments since my last report with the exception of one while he was attending the uniting conference at Kansas City.

The third quarterly conference was held at this church on Saturday, July 8, with good attendance.

The revival meeting will start at this church on the first Sunday in August. Rev. W. L. Harkey, pastor of Bess Chapel, will be the pulpit help. There will be morning and night services. Everyone is cordially invited to come and worship with us.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is meeting once each month, with the usual attendance and much interest being shown.

We ask an interest in the prayers of all those who want to see the Lord's work prosper, even as you shall ever be remembered in ours. REPORTER.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointments Sunday, bringing two very helpful and touching messages. His subject was on worship and communicating with God.

The Children's Day program which was to be held last month was postponed on account of the new disease, "polio." There was a committee appointed for the older classes to plan and have the Children's Day program yet.

We were indeed glad to have Horace Watson of the Fairview church community to visit with us Sunday.

A wedding of much interest to our community was that of Miss Elaine Harrison and Mr. Mack Compton, both of Greer. The marriage was solemnized in June by Rev. T. M. Johnson at Easley, S. C. Miss Harrison is the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Harrison. Mrs. Harrison will be remembered as Miss Jewell Burd of Macon, Ga. The bride is a graduate of the Duncan high school and for a number of years a member of Liberty Hill Methodist Protestant church and a very active worker in all the church work. Mr. Compton is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Compton. He attended the Reidsville high school, a progressive farmer of this community, but now holds a position with the Pacific Mills of Lyman, S. C. The groom is also a member of our church and a very active worker in all Christian activities. He is the teacher of the young men's class. At present the young couple are making their home with the groom's parents.

Rev. T. M. Johnson was the Sunday dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. Hobart Smith.

Our Sunday school has declined considerably since the infantile paralysis has been in our community. The children under 12 years of age were asked to keep away from other children. This has hurt our attendance greatly and we do pray that they can return back to Sunday school real soon to worship with us. Dr. Johnson mentioned Sunday for the parents to have home worship and prayer and that we should be more reverent now than before. We ask the prayers of all for our church, community and loved ones.

Misses Lula Pearson and Lillian Compton, with Dr. Johnson, returned from High Point, N. C., with a splendid report about the Bible Educational School that was held the last of June. Miss Compton gave an outline of what was carried out while there, and the name of speakers and their subjects. Miss Pearson gave a splendid and very interesting talk on the subject they took. Miss Compton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Compton, and is a great worker in our church. She is the president of the Willing Workers class. Miss Pearson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Pearson, and is the teacher of the Junior Sunday school class and the treasurer of the Sunday school. Both young ladies are among the outstanding workers of our church and are always ready to lend a helping hand. They both reported a nice trip while there. Dr. Johnson brought a splendid message on Worship after they reported about the trip.

The class meeting of the Willing Workers class will be held July 10 at 7:30 o'clock p.m. at the home of Mrs. Ruby Davis. A shower will be given for Mrs. Mack Compton.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Brannon visited T. J. Brannon and family Sunday.

We are sorry to report that Mrs. O. N. Poole has been sick. We ask the prayers of all for her and all others on the sick list.

Of much interest in this territory is that Mr. Sam Morris of Texas will be at Fairview church Monday morning at 10 o'clock to speak on Temperance. A large crowd is expected to hear Mr. Morris, as he is a man of God and is widely known all over the nation. He has broadcasted for some time over radio, but now is in field work for the Lord. May God bless him and his work while traveling and striving to help our nation against the liquor traffic.

There have been several in our church to receive certificates from the Board of Christian Education for attending the Bible school taught by Mr. Johnson a few weeks ago on the Old Testament, and the younger group by Mrs. Bennett Wilson. The young people who did not have the opportunity to take the course of the New Testament last year wish to take up the study soon. Dr. Johnson plans to teach the course soon if further notice is given. We trust they can take it, as it is a grand study for all and especially the younger class of our church.

We ask the prayers of all for our church and friends.

MRS. JOHN D. McCLIMON, Reporter.

Shiloh Church, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—The third quarterly conference was held at Gray's Chapel, Sunday, July 9. It was announced at the meeting that Mr. Reggie Underwood of Gray's Chapel would be the delegate to conference from this charge.

The annual revival meeting will begin here at Shiloh the second Sunday in August. Rev. Mr. Strickland of Charlotte will assist in the meeting. We understand he is a very able messenger of the gospel. Let us all be very much in prayer for the coming revival, that we ourselves may be revived. and others may be saved.

Mrs. G. L. Whitaker is sick at her home in Julian.

Mr. and Mrs. Murphy Brown are planning to move into their new home this week.

Perhaps some of our people will be glad to learn of Mr. Joe Kennett being able to be out again . He is one of the oldest men of this community.

Weaver's Chapel, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—I haven't seen a report from our church in a long time, so I thought I would make a short report.

Our Sunday school is as good as usual, and we are going to have a Children's Day program Sunday, July 16, at 11 o'clock. There will be all-day services with dinner on the grounds; everybody is invited to come.

Two of our young people, Miss Alice Mae Whitby and Miss May Shearin, attended the Leadership Training School at High Point College this summer. They have already made a report at three of the churches on this charge, Hawkins Chapel, Vaughns, and Weaver's. They will get to the other churches soon. Our auxiliary will meet next Wednesday night with Miss Alice Mae Whitby. We are expecting all members to be present.

We are sorry to hear that one of our members, Miss Annie Laura King, is in Park View hospital at Rocky Mount. We hope she will soon be well.

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—We are indeed sorry to learn through the Herald that our president, Dr. Pritchard, is ill. We hope for him a speedy recovery.

Brother Broome filled his appointment the fourth Sunday evening with a message to the young people. Second Sunday morning his text was St. Matthew 7:7, "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Before starting the service, Mrs. Williams, Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Earl Harper were voted on to see who would be delegate to annual conference. They will be counted at the third quarterly conference, which will be held at Littleton church Saturday, August 5, at 2:30 o'clock. We were fortunate in having Miss Alice Mae Whitby and Miss Mae Shearin from Weaver's, who attended Leadership Training School at High Point, to worship with us and give us some very helpful thoughts of their trip.

Fourth Sunday evening Brother Broome will not preach for us as his meeting began at Chase City.

Second Sunday in August our meeting will begin with an all-day service.

The Ladies' Aid met with Miss Clara Hawkins for the last meeting. Mrs. Claude Hawkins and Miss Esther Hawkins had charge of the program. Clara's mother and sister, Mrs. C. F. Porter, served the refreshments. Our next meeting will meet with Mrs. Willie Grey Mitchell, July 13. Miss Margaret Pittard has charge of the program.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Collum are proud of a son, Mr. and Mrs. Willie Pepper, also.

Brother Broome and family, Mrs. M. J. Morris, Misses Alice Mae Whitby and Mae Shearin were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hayward Glasgow, Sunday.

MRS. CLAUDE HAWKINS, Reporter.

Randolph Circuit.—Our third quarterly conference was held at Gray's Chapel last Sunday afternoon. Rev. R. E. L. Moser delivered an interesting, brief address on "The Laws of the Kingdom." The business was transacted in harmony. Reports from the different organizations were gratifying. It was found by comparing the vote that Brother R. H. Underwood is delegate-elect to the next annual conference.

The members of Gray's Chapel church voted last Sunday morning to build Sunday school rooms, not a single vote being cast in opposition. A building committee was appointed, consisting of Washington Brower, T. E. Routh, R. H. Underwood, R. E. Routh, and Roy Davis.

We are grateful to Messrs. C. C. and Tyson Hemphill, John Stout and Mrs. Ellen Brower for donations for the pantry.

It appears now that in a very short time each church will have all claims paid in full except pastor's salary.

Ann Street Methodist Church, Concord, Rev. E. O. Peeler, Pastor.—Our Vacation Bible School ran two weeks with a very good attendance, and the last Sunday in June the children gave us a beautiful program. It made our hearts thrill to see and hear the children in this splendid program. We are sure all of the teachers and helpers enjoyed working with their children. The hand work that was on display was pretty and the children were proud of their work. After the program our committee on getting a new name for our church called a membership meeting. Several names had been suggested to the committee, and a vote was taken which gave the name Ann Street Methodist church. We hope everyone is pleased with our new name. Last week our pastor and several of our young folk attended the Leadership Training School in High Point. Miss Melda Scarboro made a very good report in Sunday school. The B. and S. class sent Miss Melba to the school, the Young People's class sent Miss Lena Hatley, and Miss Analede Wensil also attended the school. We hope this training will mean lots in the future for these girls. Sunday was observance of the Lord's Supper and that is always a service that we enjoy so much.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD

Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts

The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.

Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for Indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

We were very happy to have some visitors with us for this service. Very happy to have Mrs. Pittman with us, Miss Margie Pittman's mother.

Our hearts are sad with Mrs. Lottie Brown Litaker and family, as her small grandson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Brown, is seriously ill.

Next Sunday we are expecting Rev. Mr. Pritchard with us, and in the afternoon we will hold our quarterly conference. At the night service we are expecting Dr. Forlines with us. We are hoping to have a teacher's meeting this week; we have tried several times and can't get our teachers together, but we hope to have a real meeting this time. If there is anyone that ought to be interested in their work, next to the pastor, we think it ought to be the Sunday school teachers.

Flag Springs Church.—The Ladies' Aid society of Flag Springs church met with its president, Mrs. E. C. Cox, Friday night. Mrs. C. T. Luck had charge of devotions, using the theme "Our Father's Holy Name." Mrs. C. A. Lewallen read a poem.

Mrs. Cox presided over the business session, during which two new members were welcomed into the society. There were thirteen members, two visitors, and six honorary members present.

The collection, which amounted to $5.95, finishetd the payment of the $90 debt for painting the church.

During the social hour refreshments of ice cream and cakes were served by the hostess. The next meeting will be with Mrs. C. T. Luck. Mrs. C. A. Lewallen will have charge of devotions.

Pine Grove Church, Kernersville-South Winston Charge, Rev. C. B. Way, Pastor.—It has been some time since sending a letter from our church, but the work has been going on as usual. The attendance at church and Sunday school is fair for the hot weather, but not as good as it could be. The attendance at Sunday school for the last few Sundays has been in the 60's and 70's.

Our annual special meeting, which we hope to be a revival, will begin next Sunday, July 16. Rev. W. L. Harkey, of Lincolnton, is to be the evangelist. We pray that our church will be revived and many souls be born into God's Kingdom at that time.

After being discontinued for about three years, Christian Endeavor was reorganized at our church on June 18. Miss Rachel Ingram is our new president. The meetings are held each Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, and although the attendance is not so large, it is growing from time to time. The members are wide awake and active, and doing a good work. Last Sunday a very good program was led by Miss Lucy Ingram. The topic used was, "What Jesus Said About Praying" and a series of prayers were made for our coming meeting. May God bless these fine young people in their work and may we never let Christian Endeavor go down again.

The Ladies' Aid will meet at the church on Saturday, July 15, at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Hugh Ingram is program leader for this meeting.

Kernersville's Fourth of July celebration was a big success this year, even if there were many refreshing showers of rain during the day. All the church stands made good profit by feeding the hungry crowds on that day. Our stand made about $120 above all expenses.

We invite all to the opening day of our meeting next Sunday; services at 11 o'clock and in the afterenoon, and dinner on the grounds: and to the services of the coming week. We ask the prayers of all for the success of the meeting.

Canaan Church, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—It is a pleasure to report that we are moving along nicely in our Sunday school and church work. The attendance and interest are growing.

The young ladies' and young men's classes entered a contest at the beginning of the quarter in a drive to increase the enrollment and interest of the two classes which we hope will be a great success.

Our Sunday school and community enjoyed a nice loan party given by the Ladies' Aid society of our church.

Our revival will begin Sunday, July 23, with the Children's Day program in the morning and preaching in the afternoon. Rev. W. L. Harkey, of Lincolnton, will help in the revival with services in the afternoon and evening.

Pray for us that we may have a great revival and that many souls may be brought unto Christ and into the church.

Union Chapel, Mocksville, N. C., Rev. K. G. Holt, Pastor.—Miss Essie Mae Charles of West Columbia, S. C., is visiting relatives in this section. Miss Charles spends a while with us every summer, and is always welcomed. In the absence of our superintendent, Mr. R. L. Barker, Sunday, July 2, Miss Charles opened our Sunday school and made a very interesting talk to all present.

Rev. Mr. Holt filled his regular appointment at our church the second Sunday night. He announced that our revival meeting will begin the fifth Sunday in July and continue on through the week. Rev. J. T. Bowman of Thomasville will be the pulpit help. Every-

ALLIED YOUTH POST

Classes of both adults and young people, in planning for the teaching and discussion of National Temperance Sunday, October 29, can give a very practical touch to the subject by definitely promoting the Allied Youth movement. They are urged to secure a special packet filled with facts and teaching and discussion suggestions.

Nationally, Allied Youth is a federation of young people's groups that are engaged voluntarily in modern and active forms of alcohol education and of other phases of good citizenship and useful living. The national organization provides for its chartered Posts and for other interested groups in churches, church schools, communities, and institutions, detailed program and recreaton helps, such as will make alcohol education "come alive" in our day. National publications of the movement, which makes its headquarters in the National Education Association Building, Washington, D. C., include: "The Allied Youth," monthly magazine; "Alcoholfax Educational Service," a digest of alcohol education materials, surveys, and other data, for teachers, librarians, church leaders, youth workers, parents, and others; study pamphlets, five short plays, organization and program bulletins, etc.

Locally, an Allied Youth Post is typically organized in a public high school, where it influences and helps a real cross-section of the youth of the community. Membership is entirely voluntary, and active membership and the holding of office is restricted to abstaining young people. The entire program is built around this platform of Allied Youth: "We stand for the liberation through education of the individual and society from the handicaps of beverage alcohol."

In many instances, the Post came about because church people and the other wholesome agencies of the community realized that "something must be done" about the alcohol problems and choices that were facing young people in their own neighborhoods, even in their own families. Classroom teaching, sprinkled through ten to twelve years of public schooling, would not greatly help. It does not seem to equip most of those exposed to it to say No and mean No—and have a fully satisfying set of reasons for saying No—when drinks are offered to them by some friend, or at a wedding, or by a chum's mother. Something must be added to youth's equipment where day-school classroom and the occasional temperance lesson of the church school now leave the matter.

In scores of communities, the answer to the dilemma has been Allied Youth. The Post has the strong endorsement of school administrators and teachers. Its active membership in many schools includes more than a third of the student body, with student government officers, members of championship teams, outstanding students in general, as officers and members of this voluntary alcohol-free group. Practical observation flanks text-books and graphic helps in the Allied Youth program. Discussion panels, drama, social observation tours, consultation with specialists, are among the training media used. And in the Post's alcohol-free social events, crammed with original ideas and good fellowship, there is to be found a satisfying alternative to the drinking party and "all the fun" to be had there. In Allied Youth's good times, obstaining young people no longer feel sorry for themselves; it is the drinker that is missing the real fun of the season.

Allied Youth, Inc., National Education Association Building, Washington, D. C., has prepared a packet of materials containing materials that will open good discussion on the alcohol problem and also showing the details of Allied Youth organization and program actually in operation today in many communities.

Should your community be less favored? Should its young people encounter more knocks and be deprived of helpful aids to obstinence, when so practical a plan is available in practically any school district? Ten cents in stamps will bring to any inquirer Allied Youth's National Temperance Sunday packet. Address Allied Youth, Inc., National Education Association Building, Washington, D. C.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Alfred Justice Self

On the afternoon of June 7, 1939, God saw fit to remove from our midst Alfred Justice Self. He was drowned in an effort to save one of his comrades. Both were Carolina Coach drivers. We cannot understand why he was taken in early manhood; but He doeth all things well, and sometime we will understand.

Alfred was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Self of Chatham county. He leaves a wife, the former Georgia Jones; a daughter, Mary Ellen; his father and mother; one sister, Mrs. M. C. Cook, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn his passing.

He was a member of Sapling Ridge Methodist church. His personality won many friends and these remained steadfast and true. The news of his passing came as a profound shock. To his home to which he was greatly devoted, to his church which he loved, to Carolina Coach Company of which he was a part, his death represents a great loss which they feel most keenly.

His pastor, Dr. George R. Brown, was in charge of the funeral, with the Revs. Isley, Burgess, and R. R. Gordon assisting. A crowd of sorrowing friends attended the funeral and there were many beautiful flowers.

MRS. T. M. CLARK.

Surviving are her husband, A. G. Campbell; six sons, Duley, Ward, and Howell, of Burlington, and Edd, Walter Hugh, and

Mrs. Campbell was an earnest Christian and loyal member of Sapling Ridge M. P. church. She was intensely interested in everything that concerned the upbuilding of the Kingdom of Christ. Her life was rich, beautiful, strong, and inspiring to others. The influence of her exemplary life as a Christian, as a mother, grandmother, and friend to all will live on and on.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to those near and dear to her, and we commend them to the One Who alone is able to comfort.

Funeral service was held at Sapling Ridge church on June 21 at 11 o'clock by her pastor, assisted by Rev. H. L. Isley. The Woman's Auxiliary had charge of the flowers. Pallbearers were I. E. Self, M. H. Woody, D. B. Woody, H. K. Webster, John Glenn and Ruby Stone. Burial took place in the church cemetery.

We, the members of Sapling Ridge Auxiliary, recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Missionary Record, M. P. Herald, the Chatham News, and the family.

MARRIED

Lackey-Royster

Beauty and dignity characterized the wedding ceremony held at 5 o'clock in the afternoon of June 13, in Friendship Methodist church in Fallston, in which Miss Nathalie Lackey became the bride of Wyte D. Royster. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. D. Reid, of Greensboro, grandfather of the bride, and the Rev. R .L. Hethcox, pastor of the church, assisted with the service.

Church decorations consisted of cedars, regal lilies, large baskets of Queen Anne's lace, tinted blue and pink, and cathedral tapers in branched candelabra.

Before the ceremony a program of wedding music was presented by Miss Mary Frances Warlick, painist, and Miss Elizabeth Lee, vocalist. As opening numbers Miss Warlick played "The Sweetest Story Ever Told" and "Because," by D'Hardelot. Miss Lee sang "O Promise Me" by DeKoven, and "Sweethearts" by Irving Berlin. During the ceremony Miss Warlick played "I Love You Truly," by Carrie Jacobs Bond. The traditional wedding marches were used. The Bridal Chorus from "Lohengrin" by Wagner being played as processional and the Wedding March from "Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn as recessional.

Miss Warlick wore light green lace. Miss Lee was dresed in orchid, embroidered organza, and both wore shoulder sprays of gardenias.

Miss Imogene Lackey attended her sister as maid of honor, and her bridesmaids were: Mrs. Wayne Harris, of Asheboro, also a sister, Mrs. W. J. Wortman of Morganton, sister of the bridegroom, Mrs. A. A. Lackey, and Mrs. W. J. Lackey. Little Misses Coy and Ellen Peeler, cousins of the bride, were junior bridesmaids, and Billy Wortman of Morganton and Dale Lackey were pages.

The maid of honor wore an imported lace dress of delphinium blue, fashioned on the same lines as the bride's dress, and carried an arm bouquet of pink and blue double larkspur, tied with pink satin ribbon. The bridesmaids' dresses were of Versailles pink imported lace, made princess style with flaired skirts, and they carried arm bouquets of blue and pink double larkspur, tied with blue satin ribbon. The junior bridesmaids wore pink net frocks with ruffled skirts and carried nosegays of mixed flowers. All the bride's attendants wore hats of shirred net, topped with forget-me-nots in shades to match their dresses. The pages wore white trousers with blue flannel coats.

W. J. Wortman, of Morganton, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, served as best man. Groomsmen were Dr. Walter Lackey, Dr. Austin Lackey, D. S. Hamrick, and Ralph Royster.

The bride came to the altar on the arm of her father, John Robert Lackey, by whom she was given in marriage. She was exceptionally pretty in her wedding gown of white French lace made over white bridal satin. Her dress featured the sweetheart neckline, long pointed sleeves, and circular train, and her veil of illusion fell from a coronet of seed pearls. She carried an arm bouquet of white sweetheart roses and valley lilies.

Mrs. G. S. Royster, mother of the bridegroom, wore dusty rose lace and a shoulder corsage of gardenias and valley lilies.

Immediately following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Royster left for a motor trip, and after their return they will be at home in Fallston. For traveling Mrs. Royster donned a sports model frock of ice green, with which she wore white accessories and a shoulder bouquet of gardenias.

The bride, daughter of J. R. Lackey and the late Buna Reid Lackey, of Fallston, was graduated from High Point College in High Point, and since her graduation has been a teacher in the Fallston high school.

The bridegroom, only son of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Royster, of Fallston, received his education at the University of North Carolina, and is now connected with the Stamey Company of Fallston.

Out of town guests attending the wedding, in addition to those in the wedding party, were: Mrs. C. R. Reid and Bobbie Reid of Greensboro, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Putnam, Jimmie and Hugh Putnam of Lincolnton, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Wortman, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Wortman, Mrs. M. E. Wortman, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Johnston, and Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Cornwell, all of Morganton.

NEW LAW FOR THE LOCAL CHURCH

This article is an editorial by Dr. Hartman, editor of the Zion's Herald. It is so timely and in many respects well done that we are giving it first position, in this issue of the M. P. HERALD. We all should acquaint ourselves with the laws which govern the new church we find ourselves in at the earliest possible moment. —EDITOR.

Upon the success or failure of the new legislation of The Methodist Church as it is applied in the 42,726 local churches scattered all over the world will largely depend the future of the merger consummated at Kansas City last May. Here—in the local church—will be found the acid test of unification. Bishops are important, boards and commissions are important, institutions are important, church papers are important, but the efficiency of the general organization is directly dependent upon its local units. No chain is stronger than its weakest link. We are in the habit of saying that "the pastor is the key man" in all this work of the church and the kingdom of God. The statement is undoubtedly true. True also is the assertion that upon the local Methodist Church depends the power, influence and achievement of Methodism in general. That this fact was recognized by the delegates at the Uniting Conference is borne out by their deep interest in and close attention to the legislation bearing upon local church organization and activities.

In this field nothing done at Kansas City was more encouraging and prophetic of the growth and progress of Methodism than the whole-hearted recognition of the part youth is to play in the future of the church. In an article, "Youth in the New Methodism," which appears in the June number of the National Council Newsletter, published by the National Council of Methodist Youth at 740 Rush Street, Chicago, will be found an excellent summary of the legislation enacted by the Uniting Conference as it affects the young people of the church. Every young man and woman in United Methodism should write for a copy of this Newsletter and study the new set-up for youth.

As the Quarterly Conference is the center of authority in the local church, we are naturally interested first of all in the provisions affecting its organization and powers. In the discussion of the report on this subject at Kansas City, efforts to modify the report in such a way as to make it conform to Methodist Protestant legislation were made with partial success by representatives of that church. But in the last analysis the report was adopted without much change. The district superintendent or a minister (elder) appointed by him is the presiding officer of the Quarterly Conference, which is composed, generally speaking, of those leaders who have heretofore been included in the Quarterly Conferences of the three churches. A first and fourth Quarterly Conference are ordered to be held on each charge every year; the second and third are discretionary with the district superintendent. The Quarterly Conference is to elect the stewards, on nomination of the pastor, or on nomination of a committee of which the pastor is to be the chairman, as the Quarterly Conference may direct. There is another provision whereby stewards may be elected by the church membership without confirmation of the Quarterly Conference. Church officers likewise may be elected by the Quarterly Conference or by a vote of the church membership. One lay delegate and one reserve to the Annual Conference may be elected "annually or quadrennally," as the Annual Conference may determine, either by the Quarterly Conference or by the Annual Meeting of the church, composed of all church members, if the Quarterly Conference so directs.

Provision also is made for a "Church Conference," which may act on such matters as are referred to it by the Quarterly Conference and may review the work of the church and adopt plans for its promotion subject to Disciplinary provisoins.

There is to be an Official Board, as in the former Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Protestant Church. In charges where there is a "Board of Stewards," as the executive body in the local church of the former Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was known, that body will constitute the official board.

"Report No. 7" of the Committee on Education, which was adopted by the Uniting Conference, gives an excellent set-up for the general promotion of religious education in the local church, including "Sunday church schools, week-day church schools, vacation church schools, leadership educational agenies." In another report, No. 12, of this same committee, specific instructions are given concerning the organization and program of the church school. A "Church Board of Education," composed of the pastor, the church school superintendent, the director of Christian education, the three assistant superintendents, one representative each of the women's societies, the Board of Stewards, and other agencies in the church, and not less than two or more than four young people elected by the young people, is provided in the new legislation. This entire report, by the way, will repay a thorough reading by all persons interested in lifting the religious educational standards not only for children and youth but also for adults.

Since the adjournment of the Uniting Conference, the question "What has become of the Epworth League?" has frequently been asked. The answer will be found in a report of the Committee on Education. The young people of the three churches themselves at Kansas City made certain recommendations after long discussions which, broadly speaking, were adopted by the committee and later by the Conference as a whole. There is to be a "Youth Division" in the educational set-up in the local church which will include, roughly, all persons between the ages of twelve and twenty-three. This division may be subdivided into departments. Two alternative plans are offered for this division and its departments, one providing for a unified organization, the other for two or more correlated organizations which may carry on the activities outlined for the Youth Division. It is clear from the foregoing provisions that local churches have a choice of a unified or a correlated program for

Bishop Straughn Here Next Monday

A letter from Bishop James H. Straughn of Baltimore informs me that he is to be at Lake Junaluska next Sunday and that he can stop over in High Point for a meeting Monday. Therefore I am asking our ministers and any laymen who can do so to meet at our First Church in High Point next Monday morning, July 24th at 11:00 o'clock. I have asked Bishop Straughn to tell us at the morning hour how the union is being put into operation throughout the various annual conferences. And then in the afternoon I am asking the Bishop to hold a family conference with us and discuss with us problems which vitally effect the ministers as they enter into the new church. This meeting is being held at our First Church partly because it is close to the restaurants for the lunch hour. Not knowing how many will be present I could not ask any organization to furnish lunch. Let just as many of our people as can, be present Monday. There are many problems coming up as a result of merging the conferences and the local churches which our people are interested in. Now is a good time to talk it over. Those who arrive at the meeting late and do not find us in the auditorium will go to one of the Sunday school rooms. It all depends on the number present as to what part of the of the church will be used.

A Committee Appointed

At the mid-year meeting last week I was asked to appoint a committee to boost the raising of the Church Extension, Annual Conference Debt and Superannuates. Inasmuch as only two other interests remain which have not been in some campaign this year I am adding Annual Conference Expenses and the High Point College Assessment. The committee appointed last week has been enlarged and now consists of Dr. S. W. Taylor, Rev. G. L. Curry, Rev. T. J. Whitehead, Mrs. D. S. Coltrane, Mr. A. J. Koonce and Mr. L. F. Ross.

A. C. Expenses Far Short

Those who will look at the paragraph in my letter last week dealing with the amount raised so far this year will see that comparatively little has been raised on A. C. Expenses. This is due in part to the fact that at the time designated for the raising of this fund the whole church was in the midst of the Appreciation Year Campaign and we encouraged churches to finish that campaign and to raise the appreciation year fund but have not yet raised A. C. Expenses. But I cannot believe that these churches mean to neglect this fund permanently.

The Mid-Year Meeting

It is not possible for me to review the entire day of the mid-year meeting last week but I will say that the most serious discussion of the day was on the question of the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD. The overwhelming sentiment seemed to be that it must be kept going until conference if possible. At that time it is generally agreed that it will have to be merged with some other paper. But the most of those present seemed to feel that it ought to go on until the work of the conference is completed. This can only be possible by the ministers and laymen working for the paper just like they will be supposed to work for the new paper after the papers are merged. What we do in the next few weeks will determine this matter.

A Sunday In the Mountains

Last Sunday was spent with our churches in the Western part of the state, the morning appointment being at Mt. Zion on the Weaverville charge, Rev. W. C. Clark, pastor, and the evening appointment being at our church in Asheville, Dr. N. G. Bethea being pastor.

This was my first visit to Mt. Zion and I was pleased with what I saw. This church is located some eight miles or more northwest of Weaverville. An all-weather gravel road leads right by the church building which is located on a knoll. Only a couple of miles away is a good consolidated school. The Sunday school was in session when we arrived and there seemed to be considerable interest manifested. A splendid congregation was present for the morning services and it was a pleasure to preach to them. One thing which is helping this church is the presence of the school faculty, some of whom are being used as teachers in the Sunday school. Now that our church in Weaverville has voted to merge with the former M. E. South church this fall there is somewhat of a problem to know what is best to do with the five rural churches. It occurrs to me that if some young man could be sent to these churches who would live in the community with the people he might do good work. This phase of the work is being given serious consideration. This is Brother Clark's third year, I believe, among these people but he has decided not to take work next year so it is necessary to find some other supply if we keep the charge together.

The congregation in the Asheville church Sunday evening was not large but was very much interested. It is said that the morning congregations are exceptionally good these days but as at most of places it is difficult to get many people out for an evening service. Dr. Bethea, the pastor, is one of our hardest workers and always gets things done. He has received a goodly number into the church this year and has the finances of the church well in hand. The HERALD quota has been raised and the last ones are to go in immediately. This is setting the pace for some of our larger churches. It was a great pleasure to preach to this congregation. In addition to other friends of other days there were present those two faithful servants, Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Williams, who have rendered such outstanding service to the city of Asheville for more than twenty-five years.

A Message In Verse

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide;
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side,
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

For humanity sweeps onward: where today the martyr stands,
On the morrow crouches Judas with the silver in his hands;
Far in front the cross stands ready and the crackling fagots burn,
While the hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return
To glean up the scattered ashes into History's golden urn.

One of our leading pastors writes when sending a goodly list of subscriptions: "I came home from the Thomasville meeting convinced that it is the pastors' job to get the Herald out of the red, and went out and found these subscriptions." The editor believes that the same conviction and equal effort on the part of other pastors would have as happy results.

Those who have sent in their dollars for the Herald will doubtless get six months subscription to a good church paper, receiving the Advocate for the unexpired period of the subscription to the Herald. Your interest will be taken care of by the Special Herald Committee.

It is not three months until annual conference and we want to receive several hundred three months subscriptions to keep us out of the "red" during this period. Fifty cents for now until annual conference meets. Will not both pastor and Herald agents get busy now.

Bishop Straughn's Visit

President Pritchard announces in his letter this week that Bishop Straughn is to spend a part of or all of next Monday with us in a meeting at High Point. We presume that all who can get to High Point will take advantage of this opportunity to hear our Bishop; especially since he has been appointed by the board of bishops to assist all former M. P. conferences to close up the work of these conferences this year.

We hope that all of our readers will read carefully the article on the front page this week. The author of it is well informed upon the affairs of the Methodist Church, the editor of one of the leading papers, Zion's Herald, in the Methodist Church, was a delegate to the Uniting Conference and has served on important committees and is conversant with the details of the plans to merge the three Methodist Churches. Until the Disciple, which is off the press in September is in our hands, we do well to give careful attention to such articles for our guidance.

The Thomasville Meeting

There was considerable discussion of the M. P. Herald by the brethren at this meeting. Many voiced their sense of the importance of the Herald in closing up the work of the conference, among them were Rev. J. E. Carroll, Chairman of the Special Herald Committee, Dr. A. G. Dixon, Superintendent of the Children's Home, Mrs. J. T. Bowman, speaking for the N. C. Branch of the Woman's Work, and President Pritchard. It was the opinion that the Herald MUST go on until the annual conference meets October 18th.

The editor has tried to maintain as nearly as possible, a neutral position in this matter. It is not a personal matter with him as to what is done with this paper, i. e. he is not concerned about the effect it has upon his status as editor. It entails much labor each week to get this paper to our subscribers. And all this year your editor has been pastor of a church and endeavoring to be faithful to that church as pastor while he has tried as hard to be faithful to the subscribers to the Herald.

Most of our readers, we presume, are unacquainted with the time taking details this or any other such paper imposes upon one to fill sixteen pages every week. Many members of the church do not read any printed page and an uncounted number have yet to see a copy of the Herald. Some pastors even are not among the readers of this paper; of course, all such are absolutely unaware of the task imposed upon the editor to publish this paper fifty times a year.

But that we might avoid the appearance of seeking the position as editor, we have refrained from taking part in the discussion except as questions are asked. And we want to reaffirm a statement made at Thomasville that these pastors now so indifferent to the circulation of their annual conference organ will be expected to do something to extend the circulation of the N. C. Christian Advocate next year.

Special Orphanage Committee

Tuesday of this week a Special Committee appointed by the board of trustees of our Children's Home met with like committees from the Winston-Salem and Raleigh orphanages. It was called to get a better understanding of the status of each institution. The meeting was largely informal in fact finding, and a friendly attitude was exhibited by those present. The Committee is to meet at a later date to make recommendation at the approaching annual conference session. It is expected that arrangements will be made at that time to set up a plan or plans by which our Children's Home will continue to operate next year.

MINISTER AND LAYMAN LOOK AT EACH OTHER

A Debate for the Promotion of a Better Understanding

Layman—LEWIS G. WESTGATE

What does a layman look for in his pastor? Speaking for one layman I would say:

1. Friendliness, an interest in folk. All kind of folk—saints and sinners, young and old, bores and cranks—for themselves. This develops insight, tact and good taste; makes for helpfulness.

2. One who is lost in his job. No climber or schemer. Ambitious? Yes, not for promotion, but to do a good job. Any advancement must come unsought, as the natural result of work well done.

3. One who lives on the higher levels, cultural, intellectual, religious; and who makes those he touches want to do the same.

4. A sense of humor. Not necessarily a wise-cracker, but one who is alert to the incongruities of daily life, who has a sense of proportion, and an amused and, generally, tolerant awareness of its violation. He will not take himself too seriously, nor the old ladies (of both sexes) who exclaim "wonderful sermon." This caution will keep him from assuming too easily the "thus-saith-the-Lord" attitude. Yet he must never be so light-hearted as to fail to see the tragedy of life.

5. Intellectual honesty and courage. Knowing how difficult it is to come by the truth, our pastor still seeks it, and stands by his insight even if it be unpopular. He will be tolerant of the differing insights of others, but not tolerant of intolerance.

6. As to preaching, we are satisfied if he has something to say which stirs thought, provokes heart-searching and renews courage, says it in the fewest possible words, and quits.

The great issues of life can be stated in simple language—witness the prophets and the gospels. We would, of course, prefer a liberal to a conservative, but if economics, science, or philosophy are brought in, we want the preacher to know what he is talking about. We attend a church where a good number of college professors are in the audience, but we have a hunch that what is good for the carpenter and the widow is good enough for the professor. If we want scholarship, we can always go to the library. Of course a preacher should be a scholar in his own field, and an intelligent interpreter if he enters other fields.

7. We should want him to have an ever growing familiarity with the best thought an action of the past, and to be the possessor of an open mind, always expecting new light to break. I do not see how the minister can apply the Christian message to the present age without knowing both the message and the age. This means a good understanding of business, and of current trends of thought, and also of the recent historic past from which they have emerged. He should have enough philosophy, psychology (including abnormal psychology!) and science to keep him from making a fool of himself. And he should know and know well a few of the world's great writers, especially English authors.

I find I am demandnig more of my pastor than I am of myself. We ask much; what do we give? Usually a low salary, on which we expect him to be generous to all good causes, to get necessary books, and to send his children to college; apparently also to save enough for old age. Of course it is understood that we hire the wife's services too! We criticize him, usually behind his back, for numerous minor matters. After middle life he is commonly sent to "less desirable" appointments, and when he is too old to work we turn him out like a spent horse on a pitiable retiring allowance.

A young man asks, "Shall I go into the ministry?" I say, "Yes, if you can 'take it.' It is a great calling, with large opportunities for unselfish service. But go into it with your eyes open to what it involves.

"You and your family will likely find it hard going financially, especially toward the end.

"You will have to be your own self-starter, furnish your own driving power. It is easy to think that being busy is working. Often it is but an excuse for not working. You must remain a student to the end; keep growing. 'The times have been that, when the brains were out the man would die, and there an end.' Others than Banquo have passed the dead line without dying.

"You will have active opposition from some if you are rash enough to apply Jesus' gospel of love to the present social situation. Forget 'I came not to send peace but a sword,' and preach 'the good old gospel' that hurts no vested interests.

"If you have an open mind you will be seeking new truth, perhaps finding it. But you are supposed to have been properly indoctrinated in the theological school. New wineskins for new wine was all right in Jesus' day, but it won't go with some of the worshippers of the old wineskins, not today. You will be criticized.

"And even in the church organization you will find politics. It was the genial Charles M. Stuart of Garrett, who, returning from a session of his Annual Conference, after an election of delegates to General Conference, said he had to take a bath to get rid of the ecclesiastical dirt.

"In the ministry you will have to fight for your intellectual and moral integrity and freedom; but if you are any good you will not wish to be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease. Most youngsters like a fight for something that is worth while, and if you are of that kind you will find the ministry an invigorating calling. The ministry gives a man a philosophy, a (very modest) meal ticket, the most helpful of human contacts and an audience for preaching an ideal of life not measured by standards that drag men down."

Minister—ARTHUR R. HOVERLAND

The grass always looks greener and more luscious on the other side of the fence. People who have no children to raise seem most confident about how to raise children. I suppose that most laymen, if they freely spoke what was in their minds, would frequently say something like this:

"Now if I were the minister, I should . . ." You, being a layman, may finish that sentence for yourself.

And the minister, if he spoke out freely, would also have something to say on the subject: "Now if I were the layman . . ."

As a general rule, the minister does not feel disposed to make any personal criticism of the layman. If the church member does not attend the church worship, and most of the time he doesn't, the minister does not take that as a personal insult. If he is any good at all, he knows better than that. Nor does he take it as a personal affront if the member refuses to contribute to the support of the church, teach a class, or help in the ushering.

Now it may be true that the layman's lack of cooperation has an origin closely related to the personality of the minister. He may, for some reason or other, have taken a dislike to him. But the layman should not absent himself from the church merely because he doesn't like the minister. Nor should he withdraw his support if the preacher should, either inadvertently or deliberately, say something with which he disagrees. If all laymen did that, every church would be completely empty within a very short time. No preacher can preach a half dozen sermons without at some point expressing an opinion with which you will disagree.

After all, there are a lot of things about the church that the minister doesn't like either. Probably he is dissatisfied with more things than any one else in the church. If anyone is entitled to withdraw support because he can't have his own way, it is the minister. Yet he supports the church about as liberally as the average layman. But regardless of the reason for the lack of cooperation on the part of the church member, the minister is concerned, not because his personal pride is hurt, but because he is personally interested in that layman. And he realizes that a church member who is failing in his obligation is losing one of the very best opportunities that he has in this world. That layman himself suffers most through any defection on his part in his relation to his church.

And not only does the individual lose something that is priceless when he departs from an active relationship to his church. The world also loses. The church loses. The hope of God's kingdom on earth loses. Insofar as the church is necesary to establish justice and righteousness on this earth, insofar as the church is the one bulwark against the paganism of the totalitarian spirit, just to that extent will be the loss when any member, through any cause, becomes indifferent to the church.

Now let us look at the layman's obligation. Just what is the ordinary church member obligated to do? Can it be put into words? Yes, it is pretty definitely outlined in the confession of faith and declaration of purpose which the member makes when he joins the church. He says: "I confess Jesus as my Saviour and Lord, and pledge my allegiance to His kingdom. I receive and profess the Christian faith as contained in the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ. I will be loyal to the church, and uphold it by my prayers, my presence, my gifts, and my service."

This statement of loyalty to the church ought to be regarded as a minimum essential. One's loyalty is expressed in terms of prayers, presence, gifts and service. If only this were done consistently by a sizable majority of the membership, there would be a marked advance in the life of the church. Of course, if the layman did all that, and stopped there, he would not be doing enough. It is not a good stopping place, but it is a good starting place.

From this good starting place he will move forward to become a well-informed churchman. Surely he will begin with his own local church and not be satisfied without knowing something of its set-up and the personnel of its organization. It is not an easy thing to become acquainted even with one's own local church, with its intricate organization and leadership. But it is very important that one make the effort to become so informed. Then there is the denomination, with its various boards and its wide range of philanthropies. Particularly the Methodist in these days should be interested in the new united church. To the minister it is almost inconceivable that the layman should not be willing to spend the few cents each week required to have his church periodical on his reading table.

The ordinary lawman should not be expected to possess all the information which a course in a school of theology can give; but if he is to be the most helpful layman he should know something of the movement toward a world church. He might have some knowledge of biblical literature, current thought trends, and the best that is issued in periodicals and books. One should not be too hard on the poor layman, but it is notorious that those who are least informed are often most dogmatic about what they believe. And sometimes the person who insists most strongly that he "believes the Bible from cover to cover" demonstrates the most appalling ignorance of its contents, and in his daily life shows himself to be far, far removed from the spirit of Him who asked in painfulness of soul: "Why do ye call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

And finally, how can the active Christian and church member escape the obligation to be social? There is no fellowship that equals "the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love." The church has been defined as "a society of the friends of Jesus." What a glorious company to which we are called! Truly "our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ."—Zion's Herald.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

ASA: A LIFE OF TRUST

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, July 23

Lesson Text—2 Chronicles 14:2-12.

Golden Text—Help us, O Jehovah our God; for we rely on Thee.—2 Chronicles 14:11.

Among the lives of the kings of Israel thus far the story has been that of more or less failure and disappointment. A failure brought on by their failure to trust and obey God completely. So it is quite refreshing to come to Asa's life—a life which did that which was good and right in the sight of God. The secret of his success as a king was found in the attitude expressed in his prayer, "Help us, O Jehovah our God; for we rely on Thee." Carlyle says that "no nobler feeling than this, of admiration for one higher than himself, dwells in the breast of man. It is to this hour, and at all hours, the vivifying influence in a man's life." No one is high enough to produce the influence other than God Himself, and the success or failure of any life is accomplished or lost just at these hours admiration.

"There's nothing in man that is perfect,
And nothing that's all complete;
He is nothing but a big beginning,
From his head to the sole of his feet!

There's something that draws him upward,
And something that drags him down,
And the consequence is he wobbles,
'Twixt muck and a golden crown."
G. A. Studdert Kennedy.

Asa was thus crowned by success in that he yielded himself to this upward pull of the true and living God. He came to Israel when the downward drag was heavy, when all his environment was against him. His predecessors left him temples filled with dead gods and foreign altars. Also he had received a kingdom in which the cities were exposed to their enemies with no walls of protection. Infidelity to God has always done just that. Whole nations this day are clamoring for an atheistic society as an ideal state for freedom and well-being; yet the tyrants of every age have been the products of infidelity. In the age of Rome we can observe a commonwealth not burdened with much religion and not at all with the true religion of a Christian God, and what do we find as to well-being? In this age in which Livy said that "neglect of gods" had come and when its poet Meander sung that "the gods do not care for men" we see millions of men lanquishing in slavery, womanhood debased to sexual slavery, the practice of infanticide in every home. In the sports arenas of Rome was to be seen not the American sport of baseball but rather that of the gladiators who made wet with their own blood the playing fields of the arena. The women and timid girls of Rome gave lightly the sign of death to the conquered victim and the bleachers shook with applause as the bloody body was dragged by hooks into the death-chamber. A further sample of such a state is presented by Lucian when he said of Rome, "If any one loves weath and is dazed by gold; if any one brought up among flatterers and slaves has never had a conception of liberty, frankness and truth; if any has wholly surrendered himself to pleasure, full tables, carousals, lewdness, sorcery, and deceit, let him go to Rome." God help Russia and our whole world to see that such a Utopia as that shall be the product of our present godlessness.

Drummond in a sermon has said, "When the outlook is bad, try the uplook." That is exactly what Asa did before all Israel. Truly his outlook was bad; yet when he accepted the fact of God in his life to rely on Him things began to happen to that condition. For when we become God's then God's program becomes our program and when the will of God is done on earth Utopia is here. Here is Asa's testimony to this fact, "because we have sought Jehovah our God; and He hath given us rest on every side. So they built and prospered." Oh, how the world today needs rulers like him to command it to keep the Lord and to do His law. Asa set right to work on his bad outlook and the foreign altars were heard falling in the temples and the sound of hewing was heard against the pillors of the idol gods. Mark Twain sums it up thus in his clever remark, "When some men discharge an obligation, you can hear the report for miles around." We need just such faith today. We have many lives who say they believe in God but somehow their confession does not lead them to the point of performance of God's program, and our world has an awful quiet for the lack of resounding reports like unto that of Asa's.

Be strong!
Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely,
In God's name.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long,
Faint not, fight on!
Tomorrow comes the song.

"THE STRAWBRIDGE COUNTRY"

By REV. W. A. LEDFORD

For several years, I have attempted to share some of my experiences with the readers of the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD. The editors have passed along my articles, and the readers have been generous in their approval. I can not recall describing any of my charges, in any of these articles. They have been average Methodist appointments, ranging from the tide water regions to the tall mountains; and from the congested city streets to the wide open spaces. Now that it is my happy lot to be pastor of what is known among Methodists, as "The Strawbridge Country," I shall depart from my usual custom.

The New Windsor charge has a nice church in New Windsor, and two chapels. Bethel located about four miles south of New Windsor, built in 1821 and is the successor to "The Log Meeting House on Sam's Creek," built about 1761. The monument marking the spot of the first Methodist Church in America stands about a mile north of Bethel Chapel. Between the two stands the Alexander Warfield house, where Bishop Asbury wrote most of his journal, and Bishops Whatcoat and McKendree often visited. The Stone Chapel built in 1783 is the successor of the Poulson Chapel, and is located some five miles southeast of New Windsor, near Medford, Md. The John Evan's home is in the same locality. About a mile and a half south of New Windsor stands the famous Strawbridge home, still in good repair, as is the Warfield home.

These venerable shrines, attract pilgrims from all over the Methodist world. Some times large groups of mere sightseers come through. I can recall when almost the entire Baltimore Conference came in a body, when it was meeting in Frederick, Md. But most of the visitors are those interested in Methodist history, origins and priority. I was agreeably surprised yesterday to find that among the last to sign the visitor's book at the Strawbridge home were Drs. Forlines, President of the Westminister Theological Seminary, and Gilbert T. Rowe, teacher of Religions in Duke University. Apparently, along with these were Mrs. W. C. Hammer of Asheboro, N. C., and Mrs. R. M. Andrews of Greensboro, N. C.

New Windsor is a nice, clean, growing, prosperous town of about six hundred population, and is known more as being "The Home of the Blue Ridge College," than for its association with "The Strawbridge Country." This small independent college has just celebrated its first hundred years of existence. Taking all in all, I count myself fortunate in being located so that my own boy, who enters college this fall, can stay at home and attend Western Maryland College. I can imagine the lovers of Western Maryland, either congratulating, or envying me on my present good fortune.

THE CHURCH

The Church is the living body of Christian men and women who associate together for public worship and for service to one another and the world. But it is also the saints, the martyrs and apostles, the cloud of witnesses that enfold us.

It is the great hymns of peace and gladness that we sing to ourselves on hospital beds of pain.

It is the New Testament, written by the early Church to preserve precious memories of our Lord and to guide the conduct of the faithful.

It is the spires one sees across the landscape testifying to man's belief that he has a soul.

It is the new-born child brought to the altar of the Church for dedication to God.

It is the friendships that endure across the years so that when a pastor returns to his first parish after a lapse of decades it seems as if he had never left it.

It is the carols of Christmas and the flowers of Easter.

It is the long line of men and women who have gone out from friends and kindred to live out their days in service to strangers in foreign lands.

It is the mysterious figure of One who stood by the side of His followers in the long ago, and who said as He faded from their vision, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

It is the last low whispers of the dead which are burdened with His name.

The Church is history, it is philosophy, it is a heritage of art and music, it is a standard of morals, it is a conserver of progress, it is redemption and fulfillment for the individual human soul. And now, as the fellowship of Christians widens, it promises to become the living sacrament of the Christian social hope.

All this the Church is, and it doth not yet appear what it shall be.

WINNING FINANCIAL FREEDOM

The Layman Company's pamphlet, "Winning Financial Freedom," has proven to be so popular and effective that once more we are offering it to any pastor free of charge. On request we will send, postage paid, enough copies to supply all the lay officials of his church.

The pamphlet describes a simple method by which the pastor may carry on, quietly and steadily, the education of his people in the principles of Christian giving, without interfering with his other work, and at a cost purely nominal.

For $1.00 we will send to any address, on approval, 40 pamphlets, 32 four-page bulletins, and 20 two-page tabloids, by about 40 authors. This includes a Tithing Account Book, two playlets, and "The Scriptural Basis for the Tithe." It contains everything we publish, making over 560 pages on the subject of Tithing.

When you write please mention the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD, and give your denomination.

OUR STORY PAGE

A LESSON FOR MARJORIE

It was Saturday night, a time Miss Alice was usually going happily about her final preparations for tomorrow's teaching. Tonight, though, she was discouraged. How did really good teachers, she wondered unhappily, deal with problems such as hers? Then she reflected that good teachers didn't let such problems develop in the first place. If you really taught, some of your lesson truth was bound to go out of the class on Sunday morning and show up later in personal conduct.

Up until today Miss Alice had thought rather well of herself as a teacher.

Since this morning, though, all pride in her class had vanished. This morning she had talked with Addie Peek's grandmother. And there hadn't been one minute all day that she hadn't ached as she remembered the look of sorrow in the old woman's eyes as she gravely answered Miss Alice's sympathetic question about Addie's absences: "No'm, Addie's not sick. But she's not coming back to Sunday school any more."

And under Miss Alice's shocked questioning the story had come out. Addie wasn't happy in Sunday school. The other girls didn't treat Addie right. Marjorie Mays—she was the worst—said things to Addie. About her clothes, about her having to ride the milk truck to church. Grandmother could make Addie come, but—

"Please," Miss Alice, distressed, had broken in. "Could I see Addie some time? Maybe, if I talked to her—could I see her tomorrow afternoon?"

And very briefly had come the old woman's reply: "Addie's always home afternoons."

And now Miss Alice sat in her room and faced her problem—how to teach Marjorie to be friendly and kind in a world so needing her kindness and friendliness. It was going to take some special kind of teaching.

For the first time Miss Alice began thinking of her girls without any of her customary affectionate indulgence. She'd been so blind. So confident you "didn't have problems teaching girls." Now she remembered little things. Marjorie carefully arranging together the chairs of her own special friends in class—a little removed from the others. Marjorie out in the church yard drawing around her a few intimates with an air that said pointedly to everybody else, "Stay away."

And there was another thing she'd pretended not to notice. The recently developed consciousness of self. The whisperings about parties, boys. The eager interest in compacts, mirrors, adornments of all kinds. Just a Sunday back a fine lesson had fallen flat because Marjorie, having borrowed the rings of several friends, had sat displaying and admiring her jeweled hands.

Pretty things, gay things, bright, glittering things—all these growing in importance for Marjorie. And it was, Miss Alice admitted, an attractive world for young eyes just becoming aware of it. Why shouldn't it be? Unlimited money, effort, talent being spent to make it attractive for twelve-year-old Marjorie everywhere.

And then, in her mood of clear, fearless thinking, Miss Alice faced the other side of the picture. Where were her twelve-year-olds getting spiritual training to meet the attractions of their new world? Honestly she faced the question—honestly answered. In that little hour with her on Sunday morning! It was all they got. All they got! This suddenly became a tremendous, a frightening thing. Miss Alice dropped her head in her hands and prayed the most earnest prayer of her life: "God, make me big—for this big job. Give me strength to teach."

And then, as sometimes happens when we pray, Miss Alice didn't recognize her answer when it came. It was on Sunday morning, as she and her girls filed into class that Mrs. Bangs, the superintendent's wife, rushed up to her, much excited. "Alice, can you be ready at two? We're going down to Greenville this afternoon. And we're taking you with us."

For one minute of blinding joy, Miss Alice's heart sang. She'd see her mother, her brothers! Just hearing the name of the home town made her sick with longing. But the next instant she remembered. That was the afternoon she'd promised to see Addie. Oh—but could she miss this chance to go home? Her opportunities came so seldom. And Addie was "always home afternoons," her grandmother had said.

But remembering the old grandmother made her remember Addie, helped her see Addie. Her little scuffed shoes, her formless, colorless clothes, her big-eyed wistfulness. Addie needed her, Addie must come first. And so she said bravely to Mrs. Bangs, "I'm so sorry, but little Addie Peek's been absent. I sent her word I'd be out to see her this afternoon. If you see mother—give her my love."

When the mistiness passed and she could see again, Mrs. Bangs was gone and Marjorie was standing close, looking at her teacher curiously, intently. "Miss Alice," she said wonderingly, "you wanted to go home awful. But you didn't. You're going to see Addie."

Marjorie's face was thoughtful. She was considering something new to her. Then Miss Alice saw what was happening and her heart lifted. "Marjorie is thinking," she whispered to herself. No—no, it was something more than that. Marjorie was learning. She was being taught.

And then it was that Miss Alice remembered her prayer. —Lillian Moore Rice, in The Junior Teacher.

A CHILD'S CONCEPTION

A four-year-old girl who was in a cemetery for the first time, looked at the mounds of earth and said: "What are these for?"

Somewhat puzzled how to give an answer, her father said: "They belong to the people who have gone to heaven."

"To the angels?" asked the child.

"Yes," said her father.

"Then," said the child, "this is where they have left their clothes"—which was exactly right. — Richmond Christian Advocate.

MINUTES OF FIRST QUARTERLY MEETING OF WOMEN'S WORK 1939-40

Mrs. R. M. Andrews, president, called to order the first quarterly meeting of the North Carolina Branch of Women's Work of the Methodist Protestant Church at 10:00 a. m., Wednesday, July 12, 1939, at the Community Church, Thomasville, N. C.

After a piano prelude, the audience joined in singing the hymn "Ye Servants of God, Your Master Proclaim," and Mrs. E. O. Peeler, Secretary of Spiritual Life, read from Acts the story of Pentecost. This was followed by prayer by Mrs. J. T. Bowman. A second hymn closed the devotional.

All officers, six Departmental Secretaries, and three District Chairmen answered the roll call.

Mrs. R. M. Andrews opened the session with greetings and explanatory remarks, concerning changes in the program, announcing that reports from the Women's Convention in Westminster, Md., the last meeting of that body, would precede the business session.

Mrs. J. T. Bowman gave the first report, her subject being "Acts of Worship" at the convention. She emphasized the fine, thought-provoking meditations of Mrs. S. W. Rosenberger, who used variations of the theme, "Thy Kingdom Come," as the basis of her remarks. Mrs. Bowman summarized the development of these topics concisely and beautifully, bringing to us the inspiration she received from Mrs. Rosenberger.

Mrs. J. M. Millikan followed with a report on "Home Mission Emphases" at Westminster. She told of the many excellent talks at the convention, which gave an idea of what Methodism will do for Home Missions. She gave the essentials, the meaning, and the approaches to Home Missions.

Before Mrs. J. T. Bowman, who represented the women at a meeting of Methodist Protestant ministers in the Presbyterian church opposite, left the auditorium, Mrs. Andrews asked for a rising vote from those who thought the women need the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD. A large majority voted for it.

Mrs. J. N. Hauss, of the former M. E. Church, South, was asked to speak on Zone meetings as they have been conducted in the women's work of that church. She explained the organization of the women's work from the Council at the top, down to the auxiliaries. The principal objective of the Zone meeting is a free discussion of all phases of the work; discussion rather than inspiration being stressed. In area, it may embrace several counties and one is held each year—more, if desired—under the direction of the district secretary, who thereby develops leadership among her people.

The "Foreign Mission Emphases" of the Westminster convention were given by Mrs. George C. Haltom. Mrs. Haltom prefaced her report with her impressions of the convention. A missionary from each of our foreign fields was present and gave a report based on the coming of the Kingdom in that field. The other speakers she mentioned were a native Indian girl and Miss Sallie Lou McKinnon, each speaking on "Madras Points the Way to the Kigndom," referring to the Madras Conference, an international meeting held last year in Madras. Mrs. Haltom also mentioned a very beautiful and comprehensive pageant which was given.

At this point Mrs. Andrews introduced Dr. C. E. Forlines, President of Westminster Theological Seminary. Dr. Forlines presented the needs of the Seminary, the most pressing need being four thousand volumes for the library. Dr. Forlines said he would like to see North Carolina give at least one thousand of these volumes, which would mean a minimum of two thousand five hundred dollars. He explained the financial situation at the Seminary which has four sources of income: students, who have low incomes; appropriation from the Board of Christian Education, which has been curtailed; endowment, which, small to begin with, has been diminished recently; and special gifts, which have been hindered by the depression. In the united church, it is necessary for the Seminary to become an accredited institution and the library is the one thing lacking which is essential to becoming accredited.

Mrs. Andrews asked the finance committee to meet during the lunch hour and prepare a recommendation relative to aiding this library fund.

Mrs. D. S. Coltrane spoke on the "Educational Emphases" at the Westminster convention. An interesting lecture, Dr. Forlines' presentation of the needs of the Seminary, and the report of the Secretary of Christian Education comprised the special emphasis on Education, though Mrs. Coltrane thought the entire convention should be considered educational, missionary, Christian, and generally.

Mrs. J. T. Bowman read her report as Corresponding Secretary, interesting and replete with details of work among the auxiliaries. The report was accepted. A courtesy committee was appointed as follows: Mrs. J. R. Dodson, Chairman, Mrs. W. F. Redding, Jr., and Mrs. George L. Curry.

Mrs. C. W. Bates announced that Histories of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society were available at fifty cents each and Mrs. D. S. Coltrane offered Literature on Christian Education for distribution.

Dr. G. I. Humphreys dismissed the session with prayer.

Afternoon Session

A piano prelude called the delegates together at 1:15 p. m. After singing "Come Thou Almighty King," the group prayed the Lord's Prayer in concert.

Mrs. Andrews opened the business session by calling on Mrs. Coy L. Kearns, Treasurer, for her report, which, as usual, was an excellent one and was accepted with a rising vote of thanks.

Mrs. J. H. Allred, Assistant Treasurer, also read a splendid report which was accepted.

Mrs. J. M. Millikan, Secretary of Student Loan Fund, reported that 115 students have been assisted and a total of more than $16,000 paid into the Loan Fund since it was established.

Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Secretary of Missionary Education, suggested that representatives of auxiliaries go home and arrange for their Mission Study courses this fall. The Home Mission book is "Homeland Harvest" and the Foreign Mission book is "Women and the Way." "Through Tragedy to Triumph" was also recommended.

Dr. G. I. Humphreys was recognized. He pleaded for the continued support of High Point College. He urged finishing the apportionment of the last Branch year. In the set-up of the united church, the college will receive no money from the General Conference Board. Therefore High Point College must depend on the Annual Conference Board and the Women's Branch. The problem of becoming accredited, or meeting the standards of the Methodist University Senate, faces the College as well as the Seminary. He asked that all that has been promised to the college be paid this year.

The report of Mrs. W. H. Neese, Secretary of Scholarships and Native Workers was read by the recording secretary.

Mrs. E. O. Peeler, Secretary of Spiritual Life, read her report, stressing the importance of developing spiritual life in our local churches. The report was accepted.

Mrs. T. L. Speas, Secretary of Literature, reported a very active quarter in her work.

At this juncture, Auxiliary Presidents, Corresponding Secretaries, Delegates, and Officers of the Branch, were asked to stand for recognition. A large number of visitors was welcomed.

Mrs. W. F. Redding, Jr., stated that Mrs. Hammer has no Thank Offering boxes at present and that Mrs. Hammer recommended the pageant given at Westminster.

The recording secretary read the report of Mrs. J. M. Stone, Secretary of Stewardship and Benevolence. This report was accepted by common consent.

Mrs. Andrews stated that there will be no change in the Branch work until next spring at Branch Meeting.

Mrs. R. A. Hunter, Secretary of Memberships, asked permission to mail her report to the secretary. She has about twelve Life Memberships.

Mrs. J. C. Madison, Secretary of Exhibits, reported that three churches have used the costumes this quarter.

Mrs. D. S. Coltrane moved that the Branch send a note of sympathy to Mrs. E. L. Ballard who lost her father last week. The secretary was asked to write this note.

Mrs. J. E. Carrol, Missionary Editor, made a brief report of the large amount of material printed in the HERALD.

Mrs. C. W. Bates, Chairman of Districts, asked that district chairmen concentrate on the Minnis Fund. As Custodian of Records, she offered to aid in collecting files of the HERALD and Conference Journals for the Seminary.

It was voted to donate a copy of the "History of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society" to the Seminary.

The Finance Committee, Mrs. Kearns, Chairman, presented the following recommendation:

We recommend that we support Dr. Forlines in his plan to make the Seminary an accredited institution by helping supply the needed volumes for the Library.

That in order to find a way by which this may be done, we recommend that books be given in honor or in memory of people and that a sticker be placed in books indicating in whose memory or honor they be given.

That the promotion of the plan be put in the hands of the Secretary of Christian Education and the District Chairman.

The recommendation was adopted.

An invitation for the October meeting was extended by the First Church, Winston-Salem. A discussion of the attitude of the auxiliaries toward the Quarterly Meeting followed, emphasizing the importance of the meetings. The invitation was accepted.

Mrs. J. R. Dodson read the report of the Courtesy Committee, after which the minutes of the day were read and corrected.

Following a prayer, led by Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, the First Quarterly Meeting was adjourned.

MRS. S. S. HOLT, Recording Secretary.

CHILDREN'S HOME HISTORIES

Dear readers. Lest you forget—we still have a few more of the Children's Home Histories. If you do not have yours you may get them at 15c, 12c of which will go to the Home.

We are still getting calls from other states for these booklets to use in getting the young people interested in the Home, therefore we hope they have meant more to this institution than the profits we have been able to put into useful articles and cash.

We thank you for your help in this project and if you can help us dispose of what we now have we will appreciate it. Please let us hear from you who have copies on hand.

An SOS Call

There is a dear, good man who runs a large peach orchard in the sandhills, who has donated about 70 to 75 bushels of peaches each year to this Home. He is not a Methodist Protestant, but it has seemed to give him joy to give these peaches.

In answer to our solictation this year, he writes: "I regret to say that peaches are so scarce here that we will not be able to accommodate you this year." We are sure he would if he could, and he would get joy out of it.

We have been getting 480 to 500 half-gallon cans filled each summer out of the peaches he gave us. We will be short that much in our own canning this year.

To the Leader

The best place to spend leisure time is in the home. If this is not true, there is something wrong with the program of the home or something wrong with the discontented members. This generation should give more attention to building up a home in which the true spirit of home-life prevails. Youth is the age to begin the planning and building of a home after the fashion of God, the perfect Creator of a perfect home. Among the programs which may include all members of the family are the formation of a family orchestra, rug-making or other handwork, caring for pets, maintaining collection hobbies, study of the masterpieces of art, reading-evenings, game-evenings, evenings with invited friends. Discuss these programs and their spiritual as well as their recreational value. Recall that this topic is the third of a series of three on the general topic "The Christian and His Leasure Time."

Questions for the Open Forum

1. What are the characteristics of a real home?
2. Do we enjoy evenings at home? Why or why not?
3. What do you do when you have an evening at home?
4. What home-program do you suggest for enhancing home-unity?
5. What program can you suggest for a profitable evening at home?
6. Do the members of the average home work and play together? Should they? Explain.
7. Do the members of the average family go places and do things together? Why not?
8. Do you think most members of the home work and play for individual improvement or for the improvement of all members of the home and the home itself? Explain.
9. What is the value, if any, of a reading circle in the home?
10. What is the value of a round-table discussion of modern problems in the family circle?
11. What problems would you discuss in the round-table conference?
12. What games would you suggest for the family circle?
13. Of what value is the study of music in the home?
14. Do you think that the radio programs have been substituted for personal culture?

The Poet

I turned an ancient poet's book
And found upon the page,
"Stone walls do not a prison make Nor iron bars a cage."

Yes, that is true, and something more
You'll find where'er you roam,
That marble floors and gilded walls
Can never make a home.

But every home where love abides
And friendship is a guest,
Is surely home, and home sweet home,
For there the soul can rest.

—Van Dyke.

Little Gems

The modern home is the place where nothing can be accomplished if the electric current goes off.

Americanism: Trying to make hotels more like homes; trying to make homes more like hotels.

Topic Hints

The Home: The home is not only the oldest and most sacred institution of man but it is his best place on earth. The home was created by God and was adorned by His Son, Jesus Christ. It is the most important institution of any generation yet it is the most sadly neglected of any of our modern institutions. E. H. Chapin said, "Home is the seminary of all other institutions." Yes, when the home ceases to be a seminary, the world will have no preachers of righteousness. Most of the unrighteousness of the present generation can be traced to the neglect of home-life. Any Christian pastor will tell you that the problems of the youth in his church are very largely the result of little or no Christian program in the home. Who's to blame? Parents blame the children; children blame the parents. The honest answer is this: It is six to one and a half-dozen of the other. If we want to build a new world, the place to begin building is in the home.

The Age: The spirit of the age in which we live has little to offer in building a real home. Some one has suggested that we are born in a hospital, married in a church, and die in a car. The suggestion is followed by the question, "What do you want a home for?" That's the spirit of the age. The utilitarian ambition has fancied the home as a hotel. The social climbing spirit has centered amusements and entertainments outside the home and each member goes in a different direction to seek the satisfaction of a personal passion. Madness for money works as many members of the family as the law will permit and exquisitely furnishes a home in which little worthwhile happens. The radio takes the place of the piano, the moving picture takes the place of the book-self, and the automobile takes the place of the fire-side. Such a spirit has wrecked the spirit of home-like which we inherited from our forefathers. It is time we analyze the condition in our home and dedicate oursleves to the worthy task of rebuilding the home, the foundation of all worthwhile institutions.

Home Programs: The modern home is sadly in need of a program with spiritual and recreational features. It needs a program which will meet the needs of the entire family, from the youngest to the oldest members. It needs a program in which every member can take part; a program which will build up a unity in the family; a program which will contribute to the spiritual welfare of every member. There is much to be accomplished in the members of the home doing worthwhile things together. The lack of an ideal home-program is not because the market has nothing to offer. It is not because we lack time nor because we lack facilities. It is because we do not care to do it. Parents are interested in their lodges and chapters and children are interested in their fraternities and sororities. So the termites destroy our foundations while we polish the door-knobs. Why can we not see the importance of a program in the home!

Good Times At Home: The home should be the best place in the world to have a good time in our leisure hours. It affords the best opportunity not only to have good times but to enjoy leisure time profitably. Profitable good times enhance the beauty and increases the power of character. The home can provide good magazines and books, games for the entire family, pets for the children, worthwhile hobbies, and interesting conversation. Last night the editor of this page visited a home in which one boy is confined for one year because of an automobile accident and another boy is being confined for eighteen months because of a physical affliction. With these afflictions including the suffering and trouble, the family was happy. The mother was beautifully patient, the little daughter cheerfully serviceable, and the boys delighted with their most recent accomplishment in airplane construction, while the father was working hard to win their bread. They were having good times in that home because the home had a worthwhile program. But providing a program is not the whole of the story. We must have an interest in the program planned. The needed interest will never be created by the program alone. That must come from within a vision of what it will mean to the family and the individual members when they work and play together.—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Midway, Haw River Circuit, Dr. C. W. Bates, Pastor.—The fourth Sunday in June our revival began with a Children's Day service at 11 o'clock, dinner on the grounds, and in the afternoon Rev. Mr. Ballard of Reidsville preached for us. On Monday night Rev. C. E. Ridge came and preached for us the remainder of the meeting, which closed Friday night. Brother Ridge gave us some soul-stirring messages, the church was greatly revived, and 16 were converted. The doors of the church were opened Friday night, and five joined the church. We hope more will join later. We appreciate the work Brother Ridge did for us, and hope to have him with us again some time.

Dr. Bates filled his appointment yesterday with a good message. The Sunday school is moving along nicely with an average of more than 100. A contest has just ended in which the senior class won. They are to be given a party soon by the superintendent, R. P. Butler.

Last month our prayer meeting was conducted by two young men from Greensboro, Huber Dixon and William Crowder; am sure all enjoyed their talks.

The Ladies' Auxiliary met the first Sunday with a very good attendance. This meeting was conducted by Mrs. Sallie Turner, the president.

Pray that our church may end its year's work successfully.

MRS. G. W. APPLE, Reporter.

Spring Hill, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—The Ladies' Aid society met July 15 at the home of Rev. and Mrs. O. B. Williams. The program was conducted according to the outline in the Ladies' Aid handbook. After the program tickets were distributed to sell for a bedspread. Each member agreed to try to sell ten. Heart sisters were revealed and names were drawn for new heart sisters. Those present besides the members of the Aid were those who assisted in the program and at the stand at Eagle Hill on Easter Monday, also present were the husbands and children of the Aid members. After the society adjourned to meet in September, every one went on the lawn where ice cream and cake was bountifully served. REPORTER.

Community Church, Thomasville. — Our church had as its speaker last Sunday, Dr. C. E. Forlines, president of the Westminster Theological Seminary. The subject of his talk was the Good Samaritan. He emphasized the difference between having and sharing. Your neighbor is not the people that live next door to you and that you like, but the countless numbers of this earth are your neighbors. Black or white, rich or poor, our Father loved them all and asked us to do likewise. Dr. Forlines ended his talk with a plea for funds for the Seminary. Their budget has been greatly depleted this year, and we would like for our school to have a good start in the first year of United Methodism.

Dr. Forlines spoke to us again at the first quarterly Branch Meeting of Woman's Work at the church on Wednesday. There was an unusually good attendance and dinner was served to the entire crowd by the ladies of the church. Mrs. J. N. Hauss and Dr. Humphreys also made interesting talks to the ladies at the meeting.

Our pastor, Rev. J. Clyde Auman, is attending the Leadership Training School in Atlanta this week. He will be gone the entire week but will be back for services on Sunday.

Mrs. Frank Gardner is confined to her home by illness.

Mrs. Bessie Harrison is at the City Memorial Hospital where she underwent a major operation. Her friends will be glad to know that she is improving rapidly.

Bethesda, North Davidson, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor. — Our church and Sunday school attendance has been quite good; we are hoping to raise our average to 200 in the near future.

Children's Day service was held the first Sunday in July.

The death angel has visited our community and taken three of our members in about a week's time: Mrs. Lindsay Thomason dying suddenly; Austin Reed Latham, the 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Latham, had a severe foot infection and died in a short time; Phillip Lanier, Jr., sin of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Lanier, died of a motorcycle injury. All three families have our heartfelt sympathy.

The Auxiliary held their monthly meeting with Mrs. Herman Brinkley, with Mrs. H. H. Brinkley, Mrs. Lacy Brinkley, and Mrs. R. L. Grubb as co-hostesses. The meeting was opened with the singing of "Blessed Assurance." The Scripture was read by Mrs. J. O. Everhart. Meditation, "Hallowed Be Thy Name," by the president; guide book being used. The song, "He Keeps Me Singing," by Annie Belle and Wilma Lanier, Maggie Foust and Doris Brinkley. The minutes were read by Doris Brinkley in the absence of the secretary. A goodly number of sick visits and flowers sent were reported.

Delicious refreshments were served to all present.

Mt. Ebal, Home Coming.—For reasons in which the public would not be especially interested, the Mt. Ebal Home Coming service was not for this year observed in June, the regular set time. This occasion will instead be observed on the first Sunday in August. The friends of this historic old church and especially former pastors are invited and urged to be present. There will be an all-day program beginning at eleven o'clock. A good progam is being prepared. This has been one of the finest old churches in this part of the country, being one of the oldest and being the mother of many of the other churches. Let us attend this service and do honor to this grand old church and in this way serve the Lord.

Because of circumstances of the community the membersship of this church is now very small but there are those who very greatly love it. Recently a new roof has been placed on the building and a new stove flue has been built by the side of the building instead of running through the roof as formally. These improvements will mean much for comfort and preservation of the property.

Come to Mt. Ebal on the first Sunday in August and spend the day. You will find a beautiful place to have a good time.

GEO. L. CURRY, Pastor.

Pleasant Grove, F. R. Love, Pastor.—Since our last report the activities of Pleasant Grove have been moving along nicely both in attendance and in interest. Our Sunday school has an average attendance of 205 and offerings average $10 each Sunday for the past quarter. The spiritual interest is continuing to deepen in the life of the people through each of our services.

Our oganizations continue to do splendid work. The Auxiliary has paid the superannuate fund of $33.00 and $10.00 on North Carolina Women's Work with the remaining part on hand to complete our budget of $30.00. They have also paid for the painting of the parsonage both inside and outside which cost $140.00.

The Ladies' Aid has also been working very hard. Their project is improving the church yard, which begins this week.

Last Sunday we observed Children's Day. The morning service was turned over to the children who rendered a very interesting program. We were glad to have our pastor back with us Sunday after being away for a week in a revival meeting.

Our community was saddened very much by the death of John Hilton and Joe Murphy about two weeks.

Joe Murphy was a members of our church and will be missed very much by all. His funeral was attended by a large number of people and the floral offerings were many and beautiful. The service was in charge of the pastor, Rev. F. R. Love, assisted by Revs. Sam Wiley, W. R. Jenkins and J. Clyde Auman, all of Thomasville.

Joe Murphy was loved by everyone. Happiness shown in him like a light, and after knowing him, one found that one had a spark of it glowing in himself.

"Far from his kind he neither sank nor soared,
But sat an equal guest at every board,
No beggar ever felt him condescend,
No prince presume, for still himself he bore
At manhood's simple level, and where'er
He met a stranger—there he left a friend."

Rehoboth, Creswell Charge, Rev. Forest Wagoner, Pastor.—It has been sometime since we had a report from this church, although we have been moving on as usual. Brother Wagoner has filled his regular appointments which is always a joy to him. The second Sunday in June we had G. J. Cherry and wife from Charleston, S. C., with us, also Wilmer W. White of Easton, Md. Holy Communion was observed at the close of the services which were very impressive, it being the first time I had ever communied with G. J. Cherry, my brother, and will be the last time in the old M. P. church. Last second Sunday, Rev. W. F. Ashburn preached for us; he was on a visit to Brother Wagoner, he also preached once at Mt. Hermon, I believe. Our revival started that night; the stormy weather prevented services, but during the week we had services each night with very good congregations. Much interest was manifested. There were no accessions to the church, but all were spiritually revived. Brother Ashburn was with us the night it closed. I hope God will spare him to make these annual trips many years. He was our pastor in the old Edenton church, more than 40 years ago. We all loved him then and do now.

We also had Mr. V. L. Everett and family with us, our members from Norfolk; we were so glad to have them. We were all invited to O. L. Everett's to dinner. Mrs. Lillie Everett, who was too feeble to attend church, is there and it was good to have a family reunion.

Brother C. V. White is doing remarkably well, he and his good wife, Sallie, were at church and their sons, wives, and children.

Guess my report is already too long, but will say, I had about laid my crutches by till I had a fall sprained my ankle, and had to go back on the crutches, then my tear ducts closed and I went to Norfolk for treatment have to returned there again next week. I hope to be finally relieved. I am well, happy, and hope if God spares my life to go to the Annual Conference this fall.

Enfield, Whitaker's Charge, Rev. W. L. Loy, Pastor.—Since my last report there is not much of unusual interest.

Our organizations are doing fairly well. Right now there is a drop in attendance at Sunday school on account of vacationing and some sickness.

We have been favored by having our district superintendent with us on two day services and his sermons were very much enjoyed. We had our third quarterly conference on the first Sunday in July. Our pastor has filled all of his appointments up to date and always gives us good spiritual messages.

In June our Sunday school had a splendid picnic which was enjoyed by a big attendance.

The Men's Bible class and others almost outdid themselves in generosity; many thanks to them. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. REPORTER.

Friendship Church, Fallston Charge,—A large crowd attended Sunday school and church services last Sunday. The annual revival for the Methodist churches of Fallston began here. Rev. Mr. Hethcox, pastor of the M. P. church is doing the preaching. service begins at 11:00 o'clock in the morning and at 8:00 o'clock in the evening all through this week. A people in and near this vicinity are cordially invited to attend these services. The subject of Rev. Mr. Hethcox Sunday morning was "War in Heaven that is still going on," and he used as his evening theme, "How to become a genuine Christian."

Rev. Mr. Goforth, pastor of the M. E. church, South, in conducting a vacation church school this week. Classes began Monday morning at 9:00 o'clock. All parents are ured to cooperate with the school, and bring the children to these classes each day. The school will be held only one week.

The quarterly conference of the M .E. church, South held its meeting at Friendship church last Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock with the Rev. Claud Moser doing the preaching. A large crowd from the charge attended this meeting.

The members of the Ladies' Auxiliary of this church are canning fruit for the Children's Home. They will meet with Mrs. T. B. Torey next Wednesday afternoon.

Please remember to attend our revival services this week.

Rankin Memorial Church, Rev. Edw. Suits, Pastor.—Our pastor has occupied the pulpit at both morning and evening services since conference, and during the next ten days he will be away on vacation. Our congregation is still off some but is unusually good considering that it is vacation time.

On Sunday, June 26, we observed Children's Day in our church. The children gave a very interesting program at the evening service, which was well received by those in attendance.

The Workers Council met in regular session, Tuesday, July 11, at the home of Mrs. M. J. Setzer. Much interest is being shown in these meetings.

We have received two new members into the church recently. They were Mrs. Elizabeth Clary and Mr. E. B. Montgomery. We have lost a member by death since our last report, Mrs. M. H. Griffith.

Our revival will probably begin the last of the next month and we want to be much in prayer for these services. REPORTER.

Baltimore Church, West Forsyth Charge.—We have just come to the close of our revival meeting. God has poured out His Spirit upon the Christian people of our church. Our pastor, Rev. G. B. Ferree, chose as his pulpit help, his son, Rev. Sulon Ferree, a young man just out of school. He gave us a new version of a loving Heavenly Father and of the beauty of religion and of the joy to be derived from the Christ-like way of living. His sermon appealed to the intellectual as well as to the spiritual nature of his hearers. And our prayer is that they may sink deep into the hearts of the sinners and cause them to think upon their way. There were unsaved people attending this meeting, yet they hardened their hearts and would not let Jesus come in.

We took 17 new members into the church Friday night. Which were mostly little children who wanted to give their hearts to Jesus while they were young and tender. In Isaiah 11:6 we find these words, "A little child shall lead them." I feel the church has a great responsibility upon it now to feed these lambs and nourish these babes in Christ.

I pray God the tongues of those who are ready to critcize may cleave to the roofs of their mouths and only those who are filled with the Spirit of Christ may speak, for they alone can give encouragement and show sympathy with all long-suffering gentleness and love. These are they that must feed His little lambs who have just started their Christian walk in life. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His."—Romans 8:9. No man can give to others that which he does not have himself.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD
Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts
The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.
Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for Indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

The annual revival meeting began at Tabernacle M. P. church on Sunday, July 16, and Rev. Sulon Ferreq is also assisting his father there as his pulpit help. We pray that he may have much success and many years ahead in serving his Master.

The monthly meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary will be held at the home of Mrs. Paul Cornelius, July 22. We hope that every member can be present.

The Children's Day program was observed in the afternoon on the second Sunday, July 9, was greatly appreciated by all present and the services were properly classed as a success. Besides recitations and songs, special music was furnished by the Garner Children, which was greatly enjoyed by all.

Death entered our community Friday night when the death angels called one of our good citizens to his reward. Mr. W. H. Smitherman was a good man and was loved by all who knew him, especially little children. He was 73 years of age and had been in a critical condition for two weeks. His funeral was conducted from Baltimore M. P. church by Rev. G. B. Ferree, the pastor.

Lindsey Street, Reidsville.—Yes, we are now the "Lindsey Street Methodist Church," instead of the "First Methodist Protestant Church," as heretofore. This action was taken by the third quarterly conference on July 12, after having given the membership a chance to express itself a short time previously. We would like to have just removed "Protestant" and remained the "First Methodist Church," but since the Main Street Methodist church is the oldest organization by some twenty-odd years, that would have been a misnomer. Some favored "Kernodle Memorial," as Mr. and Mrs. Geo. S. Kernodle were largely responsible for its beginning. The chief objection raised to this title was its difficulty to remember and perhaps to pronounce, on the part of those unfamiliar with the name. This partial explanation may help interested readers to understand why other names than Lindsey Street were not chosen.

The work at the church is progressing encouragingly. The weakest factor is the finances, which characterizes many of the other churches in our conference, especially those who raised their Appreciation Year quota in full. That was a big undertaking for our Reidsville church. Our people worked prayerfully and perseveringly to raise the $500.00 assigned to them, and they succeeded! Besides this, $30 was paid for delegates' expenses to the Uniting Conference.

Our first Vacation Church school, operating for two weeks following the close of the public schools, was a signal success. With six faithful workers and 45 pupils a schedule and curriculum was followed which proved both pleasant and profitable. Proportionately this was the largest school in town.

Despite the summertime heat and vacations, when church folks get "scattered to the four winds," our Sunday school and church attendance has been encouraging. The pastor's personal schedule, previously planned but intercepted by unforeseen occurrences, is responsible for some irregularities in services. The most shocking interruption was the sudden death of his father-in-law, Mr. Geo. R. Martin, of Patrick county, Va., on July 6. Permit us here to express our sincere gratitude to our church folks and friends elsewhere, who so kindly expressed sympathy in floral designs, cards of condolence, letters of solace, and by word of mouth. Truly, no human blessings are greater than understanding and sympathizing friends.

The first quarterly conference set a goal of a new member a month which may seem meager to churches in communities of large opportunities. It is small—to small, perhaps, but within reach of our church constituency here. Although the year is three months from its close, eleven new members have been received. A revival effort is planned for the last two weeks in August, which we hope and pray will more than double this number.

Our Reidsville church folks are a fine membership to serve. They are comparatively few in number, but consecrated. There are not many leaders among them, but they are willing to be taught and led. They are busy with their family and business affairs, but they have time for consideration of each other, and especially for the occupants of the parsonage. We are happy in our service of these good people.

Hollister, Halifax Charge, W. M. Howard, Jr., Pastor—We are glad to report that the attendance and interest have been good thus far, in the Sunday school and preaching services, during the spring and summer. The average attendance in Sunday school is between 65 and 70.

A Children's Day program was given here on the fourth Sunday morning in June. The pageant "Children in the Midst," was presented with Mrs. J. J. Williams as director. The little children did their parts well. Our pastor also had a part in the pageant, and he was good. Mr. Howard is not only a good preacher but he is a good speaker.

The Methodist and Baptist people held a week's Vacation Bible school together at Hollister during the fourth week in June. The enrollment was between 90 and 95. Much good was accomplished by this school and we are looking forward to having a better one next year. The children have been organized into two classes: The Sunshine Circle and Willing Workers. They meet every Thursday afternoon after the first Sunday in each month. They seem to be very much interested in their work.

The auxiliary met in the home of Mrs. Fannie Ellington on Tuesday afternoon, July 11. A very interesting meeting was held with the president, Mrs. Mae Alston, presiding. We have added four new members to our roll recently. There are others we hope will join our auxiliary soon. Our next meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. R. I. Pullen, on Tuesday afternoon after the second Sunday in August.

Our revival meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in August.

Greensville Charge, J. M. Morgan, Pastor.—We are glad to report that Hobbs has a very interesting Sunday school at present. The church has been presented a piano by the Sunday school which adds much to the singing. Thanks to the leadership of Miss Corine Phillips and Mr. Spruce Mitchell, who are teachers in our Sunday school. The next project is to paint Hobbs on the outside; we hope to get this done before our special meeting begins. This date has been set for the fourth Sunday in August. Remember us in your prayers for a spiritual awakening in the church and community.

Greensville Charge now has a new, up-to-date parsonage with modern conveniences for pastor and family to live in, located near Mathews Chapel church. This was made possible by selling the old parsonage and lot at Triplet, by individual work and gifts, also by the persistent and hard work of pastor and family. The parsonage at Triplet and the present parsonage were built during the pastorates of Brother Morgan. Quite an accomlishment for such a small man!

Some said, "It couldn't be done."
Others said, "It could." The work was begun.
Now it is finished outside and in,
And the pastor and family are living within.
Some says, "The small endebtedness left will be hard to get."
Whitby says, "Come on, folks, we will collect that yet!"
So, we will continue to work, pray, and pay with vim,
And sing while we work: Praise Him, Praise, Him!

Concord, Saxapahaw Charge, Rev. M. C. Henderson, Pastor.—We are doing some real good work at this church even though it has been sometime since there has been a report.

Children's Day services were held Sunday, July 16, at the eleven o'clock hour. The children did real well with their part. They furnished all the singing which was commendable for children. At the close of the children's services we were glad to have visiting singers from Concord and Burlington; their selections were greatly enjoyed. We appreciate very much them singing for us and give them a cordial invitation to come sing for us again.

Our revival services begun last Sunday night and has continued during the week. Rev. C. G. Isley, of Albemarle, is our pulpit help. There has been prayer meeting held each Sunday evening in connection with the C. E. meeting prior to the beginning of the revival.

The Christian Endeavor society held a social at the church Saturday evening which was enjoyed by those present.

The Ladies Auxiliary met with Mrs. Loy Roberson for their July meeting,. A very interesting program was given on church union. At this meeting two of our members are on the sick list: Mrs. R. L. Mann, and Mrs. T. H. Moore.

This church had a record attendance at Sunday school on Sunday morning. They can boast of 100 per cent perfect attendance and there were others present for Sunday school. We are especially glad to have some visitors.

We were glad to have the Pleasant Hill Christian church C. E. society to come down and put on a program for us the second Sunday night of this month. The program was much enjoyed.

Corinth Church, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor. — The Union Sunday school is being held at our church this quarter. The attendance at Sunday school and church service is increasing but there is still plenty of room for others.

Our pastor filled his regular appointment here on the first Sunday morning. At the close of the service the "Lord's Supper" was observed.

We were very glad to have Miss Alice Mae Whitby and Miss Mae Shearin from Weaver's Chapel, worship with us on the third Sunday night, and give us a lecture on their trip to the Leadership Training school at High Point. We noticed that there were several Vaughan Church, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—There has not been a report from our church since April, but that is no sign we are not working. Our pastor has been filling his regular appointments with real good attendance.

On the fourth Sunday afternoon in June at 3:30 o'clock we gave our Children's Day program. It was gotten up by one of the Baptist members of Vaughan Baptist church, Mrs. Ray P. Reavis. And we certainly do appreciate the help and cooperation of the Baptist people of the Vaughan Baptist church.

Some of the people of the Vaughan community started a meeting out here at the Methodist church to get money to repair the church. So! at our last meeting we decided to turn it in to the Christian Endeavor society. We have already elected the officers. They are Wilton Duncan, president; W. I. Porter, vice-president; Mrs. Bobbie Tucker, secretary; Miss Daisy Porter, treasurer. We had our first meeting last night, July 16, at 8:00 o'clock. We had 13 members present, and several visitors.

Our Sunday school is going on nicely. Gradually increasing every Sunday.

On the fourth Sunday afternoon in July, Brother Broome will not preach for us as his meeting begins at Chase City.

Mrs. W. C. Porter, one of our Methodist members, was taken to Roanoke Rapids hospital Monday morning, July 17. We hope that she will soon be well and back at church for we certainly do miss her.

Hot Weather is Here—
Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

Last year we sent out over 2,000 empty half-gallon cans, at the request of our good people. These were filled and returned in the fall.

This year we have only had calls for about 1,500. It is getting rather late to take them now, but our storage room shelves will not be filled unless a few more respond. Please respond quickly if you can. We will greatly appreciate whatever you can do.

We thank you and may God bless each of you. Yours in His service.

youth. Under the unified plan the whole department becomes the youth organization, but under the correlated plan the Epworth League or other organizations for youth may continue as heretofore, provided a council is set up to correlate the whole program and all the activities of the component organizations.

In each local church there is to be a Council of Missions and Church Extension whose membership shall include the pastor or pastors, general and missionary superintendents of the church school, two youth representatives, at least two laymen, and at least two laywomen elected by the Local Church Women's Society of Christian Service. This council is charged with the coordination of all phases of missionary activity in the local church, the diffusion of missionary information among the members of the church and congregation, the church school and youth organizations, and in general in every possible way to further missionary education in the local church.

The Need of Vision

In a current issue of a magazine, Walter Lippman, writing on ''The American Destiny'' said, ''The American spirit is troubled not by the dangers, and not by the difficulties of the age, but by the lack of clear purpose and confident will . . . have no vision of their own future . . . are oppressed by doubt.'' We believe a casual reading of this article will convince the reader that there is pointed out to him the source of much of our trouble.

For who can be in greater distress than those who only know they are in a muss and do not know the way out, and who in the consciousness of their despair are unwilling to trust others to lead them out?

We find a record in Genesis in which the people are greatly disturbed. They felt sure their project had failed and so they were giving themselves over to bewailing their lot. All their strength was spent in weeping as they pitted themselves. Jehovah speaks through Moses that they go forward. Deliverance was not to come by crying, but by marching. The way out, required a most tremendous exercise of faith. And they were so inexperienced in freedom, it all seemed so new and hazardous, that they preferred to endure the lashings of their cruel taskmasters to their present lot. How terribly did the thought of the untried journey to Canaan frighten those timid souls! The unknown has ever inspired fear; that is why such heroic souls as Abraham and Moses appear to be so great in their day. A Columbus at the wheel of a storm-battled ship keeping its prow pointed to the west in the face of a mutinying crew was of more value to world progress in 1492 than all the peoples on the globe whose greatest act was to bewail their distress.

Events have a way about them as they clash and crash in world affairs, of lifting up some Moses or Luther, or Columbus, or Washington, to a place of leadership when the hopes of the multitudes die, and their efforts at progress bog down; ''For where there is no vision the people perish''; there must be leaders with vision, or human progress will cease and man will return to the caves for his dwelling place.

Was there ever a time since the days of the early Church when leaders with great vision were needed more than today? The local Church is greatly in need of those who can somehow ''forecast the years and find in loss a gain to match''; people who can visualize their task and relate it to the task of unborn generations; for these only can build the Church as it ought to be built. It is a pathetic sight to see a Church with buildings, with organizations, a membership with sufficient means to transform the community life; stumbling over the mounds of their unbelief, or mired deep in the ruts of a dead past. We have seen pastors grow old before their time, tugging at such organizations; trying to rekindle the flame of a dead hope, and to inspire enough faith in the former leaders of the church to get their group out of ''Doubting Castle.'' Yes the leader of the Church must see the way out or the Church will become of interest only to students of history.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Bishop Straughn's Visit

On Monday of this week Bishop James H. Straughn of Baltimore, one of the two new Bishops elected by the Methodist Protestant group at the Uniting Conference paid us his first visit as a Bishop and spoke to a fine group of ministers and laymen in our First Church, High Point. Bishop Straughn's visit was especially timely just at this time in view of the many adjustments that must be made in connection with the merging of the conferences this fall. At the morning service on Monday Bishop Straughn spoke on how the Union is being worked out in other conferences, bringing an encouraging report from most places. Of course in the readjustment period there would naturally be a few things not so pleasant. In the afternoon the meeting was more in the nature of a question and answer period. While the discussions were timely and very important it is impossible to pass them on to our readers with the same emphasis that they received by the group. One thing which might be said which has an important bearing on our group is that Bishop Straughn's interpretation of the legislation at Kansas City is such that it will make it necessary for our conference to make the appointments this year in the same way that this has been done in the past. That is, that our conference will elect a stationing committee as usual who will make the appointments by the aid of Bishop Straughn. It now seems clear that our conference will have before it this year practically all the things that have been before it in other years, plus many extra things growing out of union. Those who have been wondering what the conference could find to do to occupy its time from Wednesday morning to Saturday at noon may have no more worries along that line. Inasmuch as our appointments must be made by ourselves it becomes doubly imperative that we hold just as many of our charges together as possible for if we do not there simply will not be places for all of our men. To my mind this is the most serious problem that is before us these days. Usually when you merge two charges you do away with the need for one man.

The Revival Season

We are now in the midst of what we usually call the revival season. In some sections of the country most of this work is done in the winter and spring months, however, in our section almost all of our rural churches use this time of the year. And it is usually the case that the most of the new members received during the year are received during this period. In view of this fact it is doubly important that our churches make the most of this revival period. While we have not emphasized evangelism much this year yet it is one of the most important phases of our church life. I trust that our churches and ministers may be very diligent in these next few weeks that there may be a fine ingathering into our churches of those who are saved in these revival services. Let all of us be much in prayer whether we are holding services or not that great good may be accomplished in these meetings.

A Sunday At Concord

Last Sunday was spent with our church at Concord, Rev. E. O. Peeler, pastor, with two services, the morning church service and the quarterly conference in the afternoon. This was my first morning service with this congregation. I was with them in an Aldersgate service one week night last year. To say that it was a pleasure to worship with this congregation in this beautiful new building is to put it mildly. This building which was finished and dedicated little more than a year ago is as neat and as beautiful as any that I know anywhere. And while the auditorium is not extra large yet it is large enough for this congregation and perhaps will be for a number of years. Brother Peeler had prepared a splendid worship service and everything moved like clock work. The congregation was very attentive and seemed to enjoy the message. Just before the sermon the treasurer of the church made some statements concerning the finances preparing the people for the quarterly conference in the afternoon. This statement indicated that while the church was up-to-date with its finances at the end of the past quarter that since then it had gotten behind something like three hundred dollars. He appealed for cooperation in order that the Stewards might make a good report in the quarterly conference in the afternoon. When the time came for the Treasurer's report in the afternoon the statement was made that pledges payable within the next week or so had been received to the extent that the church would be up with all of its finances. To my mind this was one of the most remarkable come-backs I had seen anywhere. The church has made a fine showing in the raising of the Annual Conference interests. In fact when this money referred to is paid in all interests except two in the A. C. B. will be paid in full. These can be taken care of easily during the next quarter. The people speak very highly of Brother Peeler and his talented wife. In fact they are among the very best workers in the conference. They are thoroughly consecrated and are deeply interested in the work. The quarterly conference by a unanimous vote requested Brother Peeler's return to this charge next year.

These Busy Days

The problems growing out of Methodist Union have made it necessary for your executive to fill many engagements these days in the way of conferences with District Superintendents and with church groups that cannot always be reported in this weekly letter. I can assure all of our people that I am trying with all my might to safeguard every interest of our conference and to enable our people to go into the union in the best frame of mind possible.

Rev. J. W. Braxton was the guest speaker at the evening service of West End Church last Sunday. He brought a good message which was greatly appreciated.

Bishop Straughn made a brief visit to North Carolina, speaking at the Junaluska conference on Sunday and to a group of ministers and layworkers in First Church, High Point, Monday. Those attending the High Point meeting were given a brief review of the progress Methodist unification has made since the adjournment of the Uniting Conference, with especial reference to the acts of the former Methodist Protestant Conferences.

DEVOTIONAL ADDRESS BY BISHOP C. W. FLINT AT THE UNITING CONFERENCE

I suppose the best, certainly the best known, description of a good man is found in the first Psalm, a poem centuries old but still a fairly good yard stick by which to check up on ourselves. The key-clause reads, ''In His law doth He meditate day and night.''

Now, if some prose-minded Occidental protests that in strenuous modern life, we are so preoccupied by business, engrossed in recreation or drowned in sleep that the suggestion of meditating on any one thing day and night is absurd —your Bible scholar replies, ''But this is poetry, even more, oriental poetry,'' which is true. But while it explains the form of expression it does not explain away the thought expressed. What is that thought? I am asking that you be generously indulgent as I dig for it, but be as exacting as you may choose in applying it as a yardstick.

The Idea

What's the idea? I wonder if he is not suggesting that the good man must necessarily live under limitation; circumscribed not merely in conduct as any righteous man must be, but circumscribed in the inner self, in the consciousness, where values are discovered, weighed and selected.

The good man's religion has ''gone in on him''; way back inside, where possible courses of conduct or alternatives are recognized, way back where motives are ripened, the good man is hedged about by the will of God which sifts through only a certain class of possibilities and screens out all others.

It is a case of remote control, not at the outgo but at the source of conduct, not merely where law operates, but where it originates.

There, the will of God, raising the question of consideration, excludes some possibilities without debate.

Can an ordinary man attain a condition where the higher, or the spiritual, is not the intruding, the unusual or the occasional, but where the spiritual is the normal and natural, and anything contrary to it is the intruder?

God's law, that is, His will, His wishes or what He wants, marks out the boundaries, fences in the territory in which our fancies may roam. Within are the only possible choices open to us. Within this territory we are free, but ouside its pale we are not free to go.

Football players go onto the gridiron under limitations, not only the white boundary lines of the field within which the game must be played, but under rules, rules not prescribing what each play, the next and the next, must be, but defining the conditions to which all plays must conform. As long as the player keeps within these limitations, he may play with might and main and resourcefulness, but if he steps outside the chalked boundary, or transgresses the rule, he is dead as a player, temporarily disqualified.

The good man's playing field is the will of God. Within, what pleases God; outside, what displeases or offends, therefore disqualifies and separates.

But Further

But further: A well-trained football player might play a whole game without once thinking of the rules, meditating on them, or having them consciously in his attention. He has been so disciplined under the rules that they have become a part of himself. He does not weigh each possible next play over against the rules, he just plays freely and spontaneously, within their subconscious and instinctive control.

Only a suggestion to transgress from within or without would lift the rules into direct attention.

A control may be functioning best when it works subconsciously, is least in the attention, or when only its failure to function thrusts it into the foreground of attention. Having made due provision for heating the room, as long as the temperature is what it should be, we give it no thought; only when it becomes too hot or too cold does it obtrude upon us.

To the well-trained Christian, God's will or wishes need not be a subject of direct attention or conscious concern, as he carries on normally under them. Though not meditating upon, he does his meditating within. Only when a suggestion comes to consider possibilities outside the pale, a clash, arousing the delicately adjusted conscience, disturbing the harmony, automatically switches on the attention. He is allergic to discordant suggestions.

How Attained

This delightful state comes not by accident; the good man does not drift into goodness, into righteousness, into saintliness or into character. These are to be achieved only by continuous cooperating response to Divine Grace.

First he chooses as his rule and practice God's will, then diligently cultivates confining himself within it, at first not an easy task but through persistence it finally becomes second nature and his response is automatic. He adopts a life purpose and principles, establishes these as regnant and regulative, then just "lets himself go."

The bearings taken at noon control mechanically the course of the vessel for twenty-four hours. In moments of clear personality, high and lifted up, visions are seen and decisions are made which determine life's course through the prosaic stretches of the routine of the ordinary life.

"Tasks in hours of insight willed
Can be in hours of gloom fulfilled."

Three or four results:

1. The Limitation Differentiates

The limitation differentiates. We are all familiar with two types of Christians.

For one, the law is written on tables of stone or leaves of paper; for the other it is written on the heart.

For one, the precepts or will of God are external, controlling from without; they are of the very soul of the other, unfolding from within.

One conforms by constraint and with effort; the other without strain or effort.

One makes himself do what pleases God; the other does as he pleases.

For one, life is an endless series of struggles and decisions; for the other life is a spontaneous flow under a once-for-all decision.

The activity of one is perpetual self-discipline, of the other, free self-expression.

One puts Christ into his conduct, the other has Christ in his character.

One aims at correctness; the other at Communion.

For one, the Christian life is cross-bearing; for the other it's a joy and delight.

Stewardship for one is a mechanical method of a more or less painful parting with what he regards as his own; the other sings—sings: "We give Thee but thine own."

One seeks the Christ way, to be related to a formula; the other seeks Christ, to respond to a person.

One, John Wesley in 1737; the other, John Wesley in 1739.

2. It Channels Life Into Habits

The limitation channels life into habits.

Can character become a habit?

Some years ago William North Rice spoke of the magnificent possibility, by a process of right decisions in critical instances, of establishing a character which will spontaneously and naturally practice the good. Recently Dr. Richard Cabot, after paying his respects to the open mind proposed three cheers for the mind which shuts itself at the right time. Thermostatic control. Automatic safety devices.

The ever-present ideal of what he should be automatically regulates the good man's conduct; the ever-present and pressing ideal of what society should be automatically elicits and directs his service.

"Automatic!"—this may suggest something mechanical, impersonal, without moral quality, but actually it is the natural response to any situation of my integrated self, all that I have become by God's grace, my concurring response and constant diligence.

3. It Sets Free

The limitation sets us free. What! A limitation, a bondage, setting free? Yes, real freedom comes that way. Have you read about Tagore's violin string? laying loose on table, wholly free, to be moved by touch of breeze or of hand; twist one end of it and it squirms and flops freely about; free to do anything—except to sing. Bind each end to the violin; stretch it taut over the bridge, and when thus bound, it is for the first time free—free to sing, free for the purpose for which it was created.

Being able to choose equally among all alternatives, to become or to do any one thing equally with all others, is a kind of freedom, but it involves perpetual struggle, tension and decision.

The highest freedom, ever selective and restrictive, is attained, or rather achieved, where I am free to be only that for which I was intended, to become only that for which I was destined, to do only that for which I was chosen by God.

Christian Perfection

I wonder if that isn't getting close to Christian Perfection. Last week a Methodist criticized Bishop McConnell's book, because he gave a whole section, a tithe of the book, to Wesley's search after perfection. A symptom, perhaps? Is it possible that we modern Methodists are not even minoring where John Wesley majored.

Bishop McConnell reminds us of John Wesley's constant striving for the best. Are we too easily content with present attainments, with the level on which we now move while aware of higher levels? Too complacent before our recognized imperfections, complacent knowing the gulf between what we both should and could be and what we are, complacent knowing the gulf between what society could be made and what it now is? Unwilling to become all God intended us to be! Unwilling to be too different, preferring to live half way between the world and the Kingdom! In the early church and in early Methodism, they did not need to use billboards or full page ads in the newspaper. Attention was focused by changed lives. What God did through human instruments made men different, different from what they were before and different from those about them. That spread Christianity.

We are not bad, but we are not good enough, so many of us are not good enough to make folks about us want to like us, to have what we have.

We are not going on to perfection or to the best possible, we are not even earnestly striving after it. Too many do not want to become the best possible. They do not want to be more than they are now.

Some of us are so engrossed in the ecclesiastical machinery, working it in the local church and tinkering with it in Annual General or Uniting Conferences, that we forget to check up on our own personal growth in grace and power.

The limited amount of fruit brought forth in season, the limited measure of prosperity attending our doings indicate that not yet are we as trees planted by rivers of water.

If these nine hundred delegates will make "the best possible" for self and society, the first plank in the platform will follow Christ with abandon and eagerness, counting not their lives dear unto themselves, earnestly seeking for self and others constant progress toward what we may become, the new Church will not become known for its size, but for its power, and the power loosed through it.

New Testament Translation

Centuries after the Hebrew poet wrote the line "In his law doth he meditate," that law was enfleshed, the will of God became a person and dwelt among us. Translated into New Testament ideology, it becomes—"companionship with Christ," "fellowship with God," "practice of the Presence."

Since then many testify to the blessed experience of a life so related to His life, its activities so atmosphered and enveloped by his presence, that, even when the fellowship is subconscious, the presence silent, the companionship unobtrusive, the least threat of interruption throws vividly onto the screen of attention the face and form of him in whom we live and move and have our being.

"In ihs law doth he meditate day and night" was freely translated by Paul to read, "I live yet not I,—but Christ liveth in me, and the life that I now live in the flesh, among things, with folks, an ordinary human life, I live by faith in the Son of God who loved me and gave himself for me."

"O God,
And shall we then forever live,
At this poor dying rate?
Our love so faint, so cold to Thee,
And Thine to us so great!"

As we consecrate ourselves and our new church in this hour, sanctify us for the task of the days ahead. In the name of Christ. Amen.—The Daily Christian Advocate.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

JEHOSHAPHAT: A LIFE OF OBEDIENCE

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, July 30

Lesson Text—2 Chronicles 17:1-6, 9-12.

Golden Text—Seek ye first His Kingdom, and His righteousness.—Matthew 6:33.

In our present studies of the lives of the king of Israel we readily see that the dominant motif back of them is the part played by Jehovah their God. The writings of the Old Testament are in reality the history of the Hebrew race but it is a history written with the judgments and providence of God in mind. The distinction and religious strength of the Hebrew race which has led it to be called a chosen race of God lies in the fact of this recognition and trust in the God that is in history—past, present and future.

And as long as Israel could live in accord with that God and His will for the world they were invincible but when they broke faith with Him then they were defeated invaraibly. This fact is just as true today in our twentieth century history and those who see God as a Ruler of nations are wise. "What we need is a profound faith in God's ruling all things" said General Gordon. John Wesley had that faith when he said, "I read my newspaper to see how God governs the world." The great Cromwell had that faith when he asked, "What are all our histories but God manifesting Himself?" Our own beloved president, Abraham Lincoln, had that faith. "No human council hath devised nor any human mind worked out these great things," he declared. "They are the gracious gifts of the most high God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins, hath nevertheless remembered mercy. Again he said: Now at the end of three year's struggle the nation's condition is not what either party or any man desired or expected. God alone can claim it. If God now wills the removal of a great wrong and wills also that we of the North as well as you of the South shall pay fairly for our complicity in that wrong, impartial history will find therein new cause to attest and revise the justice and goodness of God." Thus men need to recognize the Ruler of destinies that they may be found on the side of victory and success.

God of our fathers, known of old
Lord of our far-flung battle line—
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

In the life and success of Jehoshaphat we see what happens on the other side of the picture when a human heart does not forget the God of his fathers. The text has it that Jehoshaphat sought the God of his father, and walked in his commandments. Therefore Jehovah established the kingdom in his hands. And Jehoshaphat waxed great exceedingly: and he built in Judah castles and cities of stone. Thus far we have been observing the failure of kings as the vengeance of an angry God who had been disobeyed, and without such glimpses as this of the goodnes of God bestow on them that obey Him we would grow to fear God as a fearful God. The railroad from Cripple Creek to Colorado Springs, we are told, drops more than four thousand feet in forty miles. All along the line are to be seen signs marked "Derailing Switch." If you should ask the conductor the meaning of such a sign he would say that the purpose of such switches is to prevent great disasters. If an engine should lose control of itself and come plunging down this fearful grade it might destroy a whole trainload of people below; so we are always ready to wire to the first derailing switchman to throw the switch and derail the runaway into the ditch, for it is better to wreck one train than many. Thus in the case of these kings who have broken lose from the will of God these has had to be all along the tracks of history "derailing switches" into which such men or nations have had to be thrown. Even a fool can observe this fact about history as well as the wise Seneca who said, "An avenging God closely follows the haughty." However this is the negative side of God's nature and we need to seek the positive. We need to know that if we seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness all these other things will be added. The reason the haughty go astray and fail is that their pride causes them to ignore God who holds the key to the storehouse in which all their desires are stored.

Thus Jehoshaphat waxed great simply because he started at the right end of the horn. His first concern was to get the long look that beheld the God of history who determines the destiny of men and by this glance he saw the kingdom of God and his most strategic place in it and all these other things, that had caused others to sin, were added unto him. The irony of these fallen kings is that they deserted God's will that they might obtain these other things of life, and that by deserting his will they missed them. Thus by multiplying worldly things they let them obscure the more important spiritual and heavenly things that must come first.

"A finger's breadth at hand will mar
A world of light in heaven afar,
A mote eclipse a glorious star."

One of the remarkable facts about the history of the Christian faith is that the elements of scientific progress that have brought in a new era of better living conditions are to be found almost exclusively in lands where Christianity has become established. Health-giving medical and surgical practice are among the direct blessings that seem to follow when men seek the kingdom of God through the divine truths of life as brought by Christ. It has thus been literally observed that if we seek first His kingdom all these other things will naturally follow as fruits of history. The example of Asa and his son Jehoshaphat remains as a cry to us to seek God and His will for our world if we would wax great and build castle sand cities of stone in our land. Let those nations like America who have reaped such blessing by heretofore obeying pray Kipling's prayer for England:

> "If drunk with sight of power, we lose
> Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—

CHURCH AND STATE IN AMERICA

By Robert A. Ashworth, D.D.

There appears to be a stirring of anxiety and misgiving in various quarters in this country today over the question of the relations of church and state. We had thought it to be forever settled here, and that the principle of separation was firmly established by both tradition and practice. But we have not escaped certain repercussions from events abroad, where this is a live and contested issue, and it appears, particularly to Protestants, that the principle is imperilled by pressures from within the country, consciously or unconsciously applied, that threaten to dislodge it.

Baptists of North and South are not always in agreement but they have recently adopted an identical pronouncement on Church and State by unanimous vote of both Northern and Southern conventions. They assert that "no issue in modern life is more urgent or more complicated than the relation of organized religion to organized society" and that there must be "Free Churches Within a Free State." Baptists conceive themselves to have been pioneers in this issue in the new world and they are invoking the spirit of Roger Williams afresh in the face of what they think to be new dangers to the cherished principle.

Asserting that religious liberty is an "essential part of our fundamental law," the pronouncement declares that "a Baptist must exercise himself to the utmost in the maintenance of absolute religious liberty for his Jewish neighbor, his Catholic neighbor, his Protestant neighbor and for everybody else." This would appear to accord not only with the best Baptist tradition but with the American tradition now long established and accepted.

But Baptists are not alone in their concern. The Presbyterian Church in the United States of America at its last General Assembly expressed official resentment at "any intrusion by the church into the sphere and responsibility and service of the state," and equal resentment against "any intrusion by the state into the realm of the church." The Central Conference of American Rabbis, the largest rabbinical body in the world, had before its annual convention held recently in Washington a recommendation that the conference appoint a special committee to study the problem of church and state.

The question of most current interest which has raised this issue anew has been that of the application of the Social Security Act to the employees, clerical and lay, of religious organizations. Though inadequate or no provision has been made by some church bodies for the pensioning of their ministers, and though few have made any provision to care for their lay employees, the fear of state interference or domination in church affairs through subventions of a financial sort has been sufficient to produce a large degree of unanimity on the part of Protestants in opposition to any sharing in the provisions of the act. Church employees are therefore to be excluded.

This would appear to be an acid test of the sincerity of those Protestant bodies who protested, since it involved the sacrifice of emoluments which in themselves would have been helpful and imposed upon them the necessity of themselves raising the funds which they have foregone and of making an equally adequate provision for their employees out of their own pockets.

But the threat to religious liberty and to the principle of separation of church and state goes much deeper, and is much wider than are any of the considerations thus far mentioned. The general assault upon all human liberties that has made such headway in the world is a direct and immediate threat to freedom of worship. All the freedoms are interrelated. They must hang together or they will hang separately. Anti-Semitism leads to anti-Christianity and, finally, to anti-democracy. Restriction of freedom of speech, or of the press, or of assembly culminates in suppression of the freedom of the pulpit. The destruction of religious liberty in Germany and other countries abroad has caused church leaders everywhere "furiously to think" and to put their heads together to plan for its preservation where it is still employed.

It is no accident, therefore, that church, community and state was the theme of the World Conference at Oxford two years ago, or that it occupied so large a part of the deliberations at the conference at Madras last year. It is the most insistent question that affects the perpetuation of civilization and the progress of humanity at the present hour. The maintenance of democratic institutions would appear to depend upon its intelligent solution. For when religious freedom goes all the freedoms go with it.

Nor is this question only or mainly a concern of Protestants. It is equally the concern of all Americans who love their country, whether Protestant, Catholic or Jew. Governor Lehman of New York, in his address before the International Christian Endeavor convention, said truly that "in the struggle to fortify democracy through strengthening our spiritual life, the ideals and purposes of all faiths are identical."

This lends significance to the fact that the National Conference of Christians and Jews, which includes those of all three faiths in its constituency, has chosen as the subject for the Williamstown Institute of Human Relations which is scheduled for Williams College the last week of August, "Citizenship and Religion: A Consideration of American Policy with Regard to the Relation of Church and Synagogue to the State."

Pronouncements of a sectional or sectarian character on the subject of religious freedom and church and state have their place and value. But no section or sect will determine for America the course that it will pursue for the preservation of its liberties. That will be done by the people as a whole and religion, not this or that religion, but religion must supply the leadership.

To quote again, Governor Lehman, himself a Jew, "It is significant that among the first agencies to realize the danger to democracy from dictatorship have been our great religious organizations. Truly they may be said today to constitute democracy's greatest bulwark against the menace of anti-democratic ideologies." So it has been, and so it must continue to be. Religion must lead the way.

For the first time, at least upon so broad and inclusive a scale, at Williamstown leaders of thought and action, among them some of the most distinguished in the land, drawn from the three dominant faiths, will share their insights and define their convictions upon the question of vital importance for every American—what should be the relations of church and state to one another to insure the perpetuation of the liberties equally cherished by all our citizens?

Out of it should come something resembling a common voice, something constructive and formative, not only to guide our thinking but to shape the common life.

ALCOHOLISM AND MENTAL ILLNESS

Drinking Is a Symptom of a Deeper Problem

By Carroll A. Wise

The psychiatrist in a mental hospital has learned that in every case of alcoholism there are deep psychological factors, and that the discovery of the particular factors in each individual patient is essential to the adequate treatment of that patient. An understanding of these factors also forms a valuable and essential background for the formulation and execution of programs of prevention on the part of the church.

The church has very frequently appealed to the alcoholic to overcome his affliction by the use of his own will-power and has sought to reinforce this will-power by religious faith. Using this method, it has failed more often than it has succeeded because of the inadequacy of the alcoholic to exert sufficient will-power and his inability to achieve an effective religious faith. This brings out the basic psychological condition of the alcoholic—inadequacy. The fact that he cannot stop drinking, however, is not his fundamental inadequacy; it is only symptomatic of failure to make adequate adjustments on deeper levels of life. This failure to make adjustments which yield needed and legitimate satisfactions creates in him severe tensions, the source of which he may or may not be aware. His tension finds expression in such emotional states as depressions, gloominess, anxiety, loneliness, irritability, insomnia. Some persons experiencing such inner tensions commit suicide, others go into a psychosis or a neurosis, still others commit crime. But there is a large group who, unable to find a constructive solution, solve their problem by means of alcohol. Such drinking is a symptom, and not the root evil.

In some alcoholics, the failure to develop a healthy sense of self-importance is very evident. On the other hand, there are some whose normal need for self-importance is crushed by deep feelings of inferiority. Others experience a need to show that they are grown up, or that they are independent. Tensions arising from the frustrations of such needs may be released through alcohol, and a temporary and much needed feeling of self-esteem and self-confidence may be experienced.

Inadequacy in the vocational and economic areas of life is common in the life histories of alcoholic patients, although it is seldom, if ever, the sole reason for drinking.

Inadequacy in sex adjustments is a very frequent source of tension leading to alcoholism. Such inadequacies are rooted in the failure of the emotional side of the sexual life to attain its proper development, or they may be related to other unsolved emotional conflicts. One such source of tension is homosexual tendencies of which the person may or may not be aware, but which usually produce profound feelings of guilt and anxiety. These are usually found in the person who always drinks with others of his own sex. Another type is found in the person, married or unmarried, who feels himself inadequate to members of the opposite sex.

Basic to the successful treatment of the alcoholic person is recognizing the fundamental fact that drinking is a symptom of a deeper problem, and that treatment must be directed at removing or solving this problem. If and when this is accomplished the need for alcohol is removed. From one point of view a process of reeducation is involved. The technique of the church in attacking alcoholism in the individual directly has been well intentioned but based on a lack of understanding of the real nature of the disease. Alcoholism is a disease even though the persan may not be in a mental hospital, and it must be dealt with as a disease. This means that such methods as condemnation and punishment are to be discarded. Such methods as pledges are, with few exceptions, ineffective, because they do not solve the fundamental problem.

Successful treatment of the alcoholic must be directed toward the removal of the sources of tension and the reeducation of the person in the art of achieving healthy, wholesome satisfactions. Such treatment necessarily involves technical problems which only rare clergymen are adequately trained to handle. It is far more complicated than this brief statement of it might lead one to suspect. It also requires much more time than the average clergyman can give to one person.

In the opinion of some, the church's largest contribution may be made at the point of prevention of alcoholism rather than at the point of cure. Certainly its main emphasis should be here for obvious reasons. The goal of a program of prevention should be the development of the kind of persons who do not need to take refuge in alcohol. In other words, it means that the church must give more adequate and spiritual maturity. Alcoholism is not an isolated problem. It is one of the many indications of the failure of our culture to provide persons with conditions necessary for their healthy growth, emotionally and spiritually, and for the attainment of legitimate and needed satisfactions. Some of the other symptoms of the same underlying problem are the increased use of drugs, crime, other types of mental illness, broken homes, unhappy marriages, suicide, social and economic strife, general low morale and unhappiness. All of these are external manifestations of deep emotional and spiritual maladjustments. Religion cannot fulfill its real function without meeting the problem on its deeper levels. Two approaches must be made simultaneously, the social or cultural approach and the individual approach. But the goal is the same for each—a person-centered culture, rich in the variety of opportunities but scarce in the obstacles which it offers to the wholesome development and expression of persons.

This is a problem of tremendous size, and it has unguessed implications for every phase of the ministry of the church. It has many phases which can and must be approached separately. Some of these may be suggested from the discussion of the psychological factors involved in alcoholism. Unhealthy home situations and family relationships, unsatisfactory social and vocational adjustments, and situations producing unhealthy attitudes toward sex are among the most important. Lack of space prohibits adequate discussion of these problems here. On all of these questions, however, the church has frequently taught attitudes and ideas which are unhealthly. Reexamination and revision of its own attitudes and ideas is the first step on the part of the church in the task of saving persons from spiritual inadequacy.

In regard to specific programs against the use of alcohol, one point at least should be mentoined. In overemphasizing the evils of alcohol with a strong emotional appeal the church is in danger of defeating its own purposes. Such over emphasis tends to disgust many stable persons who would not drink anyway. More dangerous than this, it may act as a negative suggestion on many unstable persons and thus arouse in them the desire to drink. A positive program of temperance education, based on the facts presented unemotionally will not produce this undesirable result.

Another specific program worthy of mention is the fostering of research projects by persons with special scientific training in the problems of alcoholism. Such research could not be done by clergymen alone; it would need the cooperation of clergymen, psychiatrists, physicians, social workers and others. If the church were to divert some of the money it is now spending on propaganda to such a project for an experimental period of five or ten years it would find its money yielding increased returns.

One more important suggestion. The church has spent huge sums of money and much energy fighting the evil of alcohol. But to date it has not awakened to the fact that a more adequate preparation of the clergy is a prime essential to an intelligent approach to this problem. To meet modern problems clergymen must have a modern type of training. Such training must be based on clinical, not classroom methods. In other words, it must be given in these institutions where persons suffering from alcoholism are being given continuous scientific study and treatment.

Alcohol takes a tremendous toll each year, not only economically, but especially in terms of the waste of manhood and womanhood. Though a gigantic problem in itself, it is also a symptom of a deeper problem. The church can forever battle against alcoholism, but it will do so unsuccessfully. Modern knowledge of the psychological and cultural factors which produce the kind of persons who must drink demands a change in strategy on the part of the church.

WHOLESOME RACKET

The tide against gambling is receding in some places and rising in others. In some localities certain church groups are among the worst offenders. In Passaic County, N. J., a ban was recently placed on bingo games. Not to be thwarted even by the law of Rev. Aidan Burns, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church in the community of Pompton Lakes, announced that the bingo game conducted in his church every Tuesday evening would be held just across the county line in Morris County.

In Bergen County, N. J., Prosecutor John J. Breslin disclaimed any intention of starting a crusade against bingo games, but displaying a hand bill announcing such a game to be held in that county by a popular operator of bingo games at the Knights of Columbus Hall in Passaic, the prosecutor said, "There will be no such game."

Last September six attaches including the manager of a New York City theater were arrested and charged with operating a "numbers" game. It was a test case in a drive by the Society for the Prevention of Crime and others against what are known as "banko," "screeno," "bingo," or "numbers" games carried on in theaters and certain churches.

At the subsequent arraignment of the alleged offenders before a magistrate the investigator for the Society swore he had seen prizes distributed to persons in the theater who held "winning numbers." Based on a certain section of the penal law the first count charged the defendants with operating a lottery and the second of unlawfully selling "chances" in a lottery.

The magistrate accepted not guilty pleas from the defendants and sent the case to a special court to be tried. The judge in a general court granted a motion of counsel for the defendants to shift the case to the general court for a jury trial. There the case was lost, for it meant an indictment would have to be voted by the Grand Jurors on the misdemeanor charge which the Grand Jury refused to do.

Now because the New York County Grand Jury contends that the playing of "bingo," "banko," "screeno," or "numbers" games are not subjects for indictment the 500 neighborhood theaters in New York City may carry on their games of lottery wide open and unmolested.

In the State Legislature of Connecticut a bill is pending for legal authorization of bingo games when the same are conducted by churches, fraternal organizations and similar non-profit agencies. Observers feel certain that a report recommending the rejection of the bill will be defeated in the senate and the house.

By the prevailing attitude of certain church groups toward gambling when they should be crusading against it, is it any wonder, ask some, that cynics are increasing in numbers these days? But there is hope. History reveals that in many periods when the people finally become surfeited with the vicious effects of gambling they did away with it. It is believed that the saturation point of the hellish effect of gambling on the moral thinking of people in nearly all strata of society is about reached in this country and reform is not far away.—Supreme Council.

SINGING ALONE

"Why the big rush?" called Aunt Beulah. "Come and sit down a minute and tell me about it."

"Oh, dear!" sighed Marjorie, dropping down on Aunt Beulah's cool, shady porch, "I'd like to sit here forever; but I have so much to do I don't know which way to turn. There is that picnic for the junior society; then I must get those two intermediates off to summer camp, teach my Sunday school class, think up sports for the Sunday school picnic, make posters for the young people, and—"

"Whoa!" laughed Aunt Beulah. (Aunt Beulah was "Aunt" to all of the children and young people in Crapptown, and they confided in her and loved her as much as though she had every right to that title, as indeed she had). "That program sounds too complicated for me. Couldn't you cut down a little? There must be others to whom you could give a part of the work, and take it just a little easier until you get rested."

"I don't see how I can," mused Marjorie, a little anxious pucker coming between her brows. "I have my plans and it is hard to get others to carry them out. You see, I have had special training at college and know just how to do these things," she finished a little importantly.

"But, Dearie, haven't you ever heard it said that the real leaders are not the ones who do all of the work themselves, but the ones who can get the most people to work? Couldn't Mary Jones take your Sunday school class a few Sundays and let you have a little rest?"

"Ye-es, I suppose so; but she's old-fashioned and wouldn't understand my methods."

"The children like her, don't they?"

"Ye-es. Oh, she's all right. I just like teaching my own class, I guess." Marjorie was loath to admit that she feared that the children liked jolly Miss Jones even better than herself.

"I've heard that Hilda Stearns was a bit hurt because you never asked her to help you with the juniors, and Esther Johnson would love to make posters for the young people's society," continued Aunt Beulah, gently.

"Ye-es, they're both good workers, I guess. I just have my own ways and hate breaking someone else in," confessed Marjorie uncomfortably.

"How was the church service, last Sunday morning? I had a sick head-ache and couldn't go."

Marjorie laughed, "Oh, it was the funniest thing I ever saw! Mr. Hobson was away and a man from Bridgton preached in his place. Some of us girls went up in the choir; but he had such a great, big, deep baritone voice that no one could hear us sing, nor anyone in the congregation, for that matter. There we stood, singing away for dear life, and he might as well have been singing alone, for all the good it did."

"It was funny for once; but would you like it all of the time?"

"No-o-o. He was a good singer; but we like to 'make a glad noise unto the Lord,' too. Now, Mr. Hobson has a sweet, tenor voice; but he sings with us. He doesn't overpower us, as this man did."

"Maybe he liked doing all of the singing, himself," laughed Aunt Beulah.

Marjorie shot her a suspicious look, as she went on, "That reminds me of a woman we had in the little church where I belonged when I was your age. We called her 'Our Martha,' because, like Martha, she was 'troubled about many things.' No matter who was president of the ladies' aid or the missionary society, Martha was president, in fact if not in name. No matter who was superintendent of the Sunday school, she ran it. If you put her on a committee, she did the planning, no matter who was chairman. After a while, no one else wanted to try to do anything. Martha had to do it all. Like that man, last Sunday, she found herself 'singing alone.' "

"Why!" gasped Marjorie.

"One day, Martha moved away," continued Aunt Beulah, apparently not noticing the interruptoin. "She was sure that the church would go to pieces without her, but, strange to say, it didn't. A retired missionary—let's call her Mary—had moved into the neighborhood, but had seemed to find no place where she could fit into the church life. She quietly slipped into Martha's place as leader, but what a change! Mary seemed to know just what each person's talent was and she coaxed him or her to use it. Almost before we knew what was happening, we found that, instead of one leader, we had a number of leaders, attending to the work for which they were best fitted. No one was slighted. Everyone who wanted to work had a chance. More and more got to wanting to do things; and the church grew and everyone was happy. When 'Our Martha' came back for a visit, she couldn't understand what had happened. She never found out that singing together was far pleasanter and more profitable than 'singing alone.' "

"Say," mused Marjorie, "Am I like that? Yes, I'm afraid I am getting a little that way. I'm going to try to learn to be like Mary, right now. I'll try to encourage others to do things instead of discouraging them because I like to shine, myself. No more 'singing alone' for me! There goes Hilda. I'm going to ask her to tell the juniors a story next Sunday. She can tell stories better than I can."

"That's my girl!" smiled Aunt Beulah approvingly, as Marjorie hurried away.—Hazel L. Whitney, in Watchman-Examiner.

LOOKING BACKWARD, THINKING FORWARD TO OUR IDEAS ABOUT HIS WORLD

Talk No. V

By MRS. FRED G. HOLLOWAY

Since the World War we have heard and read statements to the effect that in the years immediately preceding that dreadful event, men confidently believed that the world was rapidly approaching ideal conditions—conditions which would practically bring in God's Kingdom. For instance, peace societies flourished, and people generally were optimistic about world peace, saying that never again would nations resort to war to settle disputes. In 1892 Nobel invented dynamite, which he claimed was a better insurance against the possibility of another war than any peace conference. In 1893 Maxim invented the gun which bears his name. His discovery he heralded as another achievement for peace, "because," he said, "it will make war too horrible to exist." Dr. Fosdick in quoting these two illustrations in a recent sermon, commented dryly, "That's all THEY knew about human nature."

In that era the church was growing—at least denominations were. It was unquestionably in good taste to be a church member. Various missionary enterprises flourished. Of course the poor were with us, but, after all, that was scriptural.

But now, looking back, we know that something was definitely wrong with our world. We can all see it now—a few saw it then.

There was political intrigue—secret alliances and treaties between governments, and diplomatic maneuvering of which the ordinary citizen was ignorant. Nations were building or maintaining empire in the name of democracy. Internatoinal discord was being fostered by minds far from Christian.

Religion had too much form (in the sense of organization) and too little content. It had too much complacency about its own state and the state of the world in general. In a phrase to become familiar to us later, there was too much religion ABOUT Jesus, too little of the religion OF Jesus.

Then came the horror of the World War. The whole world was shell-shocked, stunned, and shaken out of its complacency. As far as I have been able to discern, all the good the war ever did was to disillusion us as to conditions in the world before it occurred. The phrase was coined which became so famous that it has now become trite; namely, that we had confused Christianity with Western civilization.

Even then, after the war had dragged itself out, only a few prophetic souls saw what was best to do. But when has the world ever listened to its prophets? A few hundreds, perhaps a few thousand saw that a beaten and starved Germany would grow like a beaten and starved child to have sullen resentment in its heart and criminal tendencies in its mind. But what are the voices of a few hundred as against thousands crying for revenge? So we had it. And now we have—today. We are sick at heart. We are afraid to look ahead, much less think ahead. We are afraid for our future security. We are more afraid for our children.

Remember this: we are ALL afraid, whether we are of the totalitarian countries trying to make something great out of a start of nothing, or whether we are of the democracies (so-called) trying to hang on to something we have never fully understood, appreciated or developed.

Remember this too: they, the totalitarian countries, are just as sure that they are everlastingly right as we are.

But fear won't help. It will hinder tremendously in thinking ahead. And there is a ray of hope. I found it well expressed in a book to which I have already referred, written by Dr. Richard Roberts. He says:

"There are two histories of mankind; for man is divided against himself. The professional history of the schools seems chiefly to be the history of man's failure to be a man. There is another history of man which is not a chronicle of kings and warriors, of bloodshed and conquest, nor a record of human ambition. This better history is mostly unrecorded and anonymous (except for John Richard Green's "Short History of the English People"). But in the main it is the story of the love and labor of an untold company of nameless folk, who have carried on the burden of life from one generation to another; a history of the spiritual and moral achievement of man. In the events of conventional history God suffers as on Calvary. But in the hidden history of mankind, God lives."

GOD LIVES! There is our hope. God lives in the lives of all the millions of nameless folk of EVERY race and EVERY nation, who carry the burden of life, and lift it higher through their moral and spiritual struggles and achievements. God lives and works even yet in this world, through simple, just, kind, everyday folk.

If this be true, then, as we think forward, we must purpose to use ourselves—everyday folk that we are—to our fullest capacities to make this world His world.

You may be thinking that this seems hopeless. Well then, perhaps you can appreciate a little how a few disciples felt when Jesus left them to carry on God's work in a world proportionately smaller than this present world, but equally militant, selfish and cruel. That is, they felt hopeless until they allowed the Holy Spirit to enter their lives to their fullest capacities. Then they were invincible.

This way of saving our world is not as exhilirating nor dramatic as though God were to make this His world by striking down all evil in a mighty, devastating blow. But I do think it is the way he means to use to make this His world. And had Christian people given their lives and wills completely to Him in a past era, it might already be His world.

I do not mean for a moment that we can work ONLY as consecrated individuals. There is a most important place for groups—large groups—of like-minded people working together in churches, in peace and other civic organizations. But primarily I believe God means for each one of us, quietly, thoughtfully, resolutely, to give Him our whole heart and our entire will; to live His way all our lives, and to pass the legacy to those who will take our places.

If we were REALLY to do this, the leaven of Christian lives everywhere would work through the entire world, until in every sense it would become God's world.

Listen to the words of one who follows Christ as closely as any one in history has followed him. Listen to Kagawa, that Christian Japanese, who has expressed in one of his lovely poems his thought as to how he can help make this world God's World. He calls his poem "Discovery."

I cannot invent
New things
Like the airships
Which sail
On silver wings;
But today
A wonderful thought
In the dawn was given.
And the stripes on my robe,
Shining from wear,
Were suddenly fair,
Bright with a light
Falling from Heaven—
Gold, and silver and bronze
Light from the windows of Heaven.

And the thought was this:
That a secret plan
Is hid in my hand:
That my hand is big,
Big
Because of this plan.
That God
Who dwells in my hand
Knows this secret plan
Of the things He will do for the world.
Using my hand.

TABERNACLE AUXILIARY MEETS

The Tabernacle Auxiliary, Tabernacle charge, met in the church Saturday afternoon, July 15, with the president, Mrs. T. Worth Trogdon, presiding. Circle No. 2 conducted the devotional, using as a theme "Prayer." The thought of more earnest prayer and closer communion with God was stressed. This meeting was under the direction of the Life, Memorial Secretary, Mrs. Tom Reynolds, and was held in honor of our Life and Memorial members. We have of our Life Members Mrs. O. L. Trogdon, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Coble, and Winifred Laureta Lamb.

We had present at this meeting our oldest member, Mrs. I. L. Trogdon, aged 77, and our youngest member, Winifred Laureta Lamb, the two-months-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Eugene A. Lamb. We are very proud to claim as a Life Member of our auxiliary the youngest Life Member in the North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Missionary Work. Winifred Laureta Lamb was made a Life Member by Circle No. 3 of our auxiliary.

Mrs. John Kirkman, of Pleasant Garden, presented to the auxiliary a hand painted and framed memorial scroll containing the names of our Memorial Members, Miss Lucille Hardin and Mrs. Cora John Kirkman.

To the Leader

This is the first of a series of two topics on "Opening Our Eyes to Beauty." This is the objective: By illustration and by group searching, to point out the beautiful things by which our lives are surrounded. Useful methods in discovering beauty and of getting the most from it should be described. Relating ourselves through beautiful things to the Author of beauty should result in impressive worship.

The purpose of this meeting is to call attention to the impressions that may be made by the most ordinary objects around us. Consider the stars, rocks, fields, flowers, snow and ice, brooks, sea and rivers, soil and sands, mountains and valleys, highways and trails, the commonplace things in our homes, in the office, in the shop, in the market, and other commonplace things which pass before us for observation. Show how the eyes, ears, and minds may be opened to beauty wherever found and lead the group to the point of deciding to be more diligent in observing the beautiful in commonplace things.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. What are some commonplace things whose beauty we should consider in this meeting?
2. What beauty do you see in the commonplace things mentioned?
3. Is the beauty of an object in the object itself or in the person who sees it? Or both?
4. What do you mean by one having an appreciation of an object?
5. How may one cultivate a sense of appreciation for the beautiful?
6. Must a life be beautiful to see the beautiful in the commonplace? Explain.
7. Do you think the habit of a beautiful look will cultivate a beautiful life? Explain.
8. Is the beauty in the commonplace a means to an end or an end within itself? Explain.
9. How did beauty get in the commonplace? Why there?
10. Does one need to travel far to find the beautiful? Explain.
11. To what extent do you think we have explored the commonplace in search for beauty?
12. How do you account for the lure of the remote? The neglect of the near?
13. What resolutions should we make in this meeting?
14. How and when should we begin to put into practice these resolutions?

The Poet

In May, when sea-winds pierced our solitudes
I found the fresh rhodora in the woods,
Spreading its leafless blooms in a damp nook
To please the desert and the sluggish brook;
The purple petals fallen in the pool
Made the black waters, with their beauty gay—
Here might the red-bird come his plumes to cool,
And court the flower that cheapens his array.
Rhodora! If the sages ask thee why
This charm is wasted on the marsh and sky,
Dear, tell them, that if eyes were made for seeing,
Then beauty is its own excuse for being.
Why thou wert there, O rival of the rose!
I never thought to ask; I never knew,
But in my simple ignorance suppose
The self-same Power that brought me there brought you.

—R. W. Emerson.

There's beauty all around our paths, if but our watchful eyes

—Felicia D. Memans, in "Our Daily Paths."

We thank Thee, Lord, for this fair earth,
The glitt'ring sky, the silver sea;
For all their beauty, all their worth,
Their light and glory come from Thee.

Topic Hints

Beautiful Life: Jesus lived a beautiful life. His beautiful life was the fruit of a beautiful character. The secret of the Master's beautiful character was His intimate contact with His Father, Who is perfect beauty and the Author of everything beautiful. God sent His beautiful Son into the world and kept Him beautiful throughout His earthly mission to point men to the Beautiful that they might be like the Beautiful. Human eyes have never looked upon a more beautiful life than that of Jesus. Our hearts leap with joy when we think of looking unto Him and we are transformed into His likeness.

Beautiful Workmanship: The man of beauty has made all things beautiful. Could He do otherwise? If the beauty of the world has been marred it has been done by the inartistic touch of an ugly world. The preacher was right when he said, "He hath made everything beautiful in his time." The beauty in nature and the beauty in man were made by Him. "Without him was not anything made that was made." The beauty in the commonplace is the handiwork of God. He has given man the capacity to behold that beauty. We must not let the fog and dust in life blur our vision.

Beautiful Purpose: The beauty in God's creation is a means to an end. Man should never consider it an end within itself. The beauty in nature is not the voice of nature but the voice of God through nature. The Creator never intended that man should worship that which He made but that man should worship Him. His eternal purpose does not end in man becoming better acquainted with what He has fashioned, but by His visible works man might be fashioned after the physically invisible Worker. If the beauty in the commonplace lures one from divine worship, the beautiful purpose of God is limited and the redemption of man is incomplete.

Beautiful Eyesight: Much of God's beauty in the commonplace is lost because men do not develop and use their powers to see the beauty. Surface ugliness hides deep beauty; the beam in the eye veils the beauty of God. We are anxious to make everything in life beautiful, but we must not neglect to adjust ourselves so that we can practice the beautiful look. When the heart is adjusted to the Creator, all creation looks beautifully different. When we let God take from our eyes the dark eye-glasses, the beautiful in all nature and in all men charm our very souls.

Beautiful Commonplace: Jesus saw and spoke about the beauty in the commonplace. There is beauty enough in the commonplace to entertain the dullest mind and to inspire the most despondent life. When Jesus spoke a parable, He did not go to some distant scene to find a setting. He looked about and chose the commonplace. In the commonplace He saw the message of His Father and He used the commonplace in His deliverance. He did not go out of His home to find an appropriate word for God whom He called Father. The sower in the field suggested the parable of the sower; the fishermen by the seaside suggested the parable of the dragnet; the making of bread in the home suggested the parable of the leaven; the marketplace suggested the parable of the children at play. He could see the beautiful in Simon, Levi, Zacchaeus and all the rest. Not only did He see the beautiful but the possibilities of a growing beauty under proper conditions. He provided the desired conditions and invited all to profit by them. We can and should see the beauty in the commonplace.—From the Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Concord, Saxapahaw Charge, Rev. M. C. Henderson, Pastor.—Our revival came to a close this past Friday night. This was a great week for the Master. Much lasting good was accomplished. We appreciate all the work the good people did in making this revival mean something. Brother C. G. Isley of Albemarle was the pulpit help for the week. We certainly enjoyed the fine gospel sermons that he delivered to us. We are hoping that he may come back to be with us again.

We were glad to have Mrs. Isley, mother of Mr. Isley, to worship with us the latter part of the week. This church welcomes 21 new members into its membership. A great number of these came to us by letter from other churches.

The Ladies' Auxiliary plans to have a supper here next Saturday evening, and following the supper the C. E. society will give a program. The two young people's classes plan to have a picnic Saturday afternoon.

Mt. Pleasant Church, N. Davidson Charge.—At this time we are very happy to report a very good revival which closed last week, with Rev. T. Glenn Madison, of Cleveland charge, assisting. It is of course fortunate that we can report a number of converts, and several who joined the church. However, that is far from the whole success of the meeting. Every message which Brother Madison brought to us was splendid, and brought everyone who heard closer to the work, whether Christian or not. We shall not soon forget these splendid sermons or Brother Madison's very friendly fellowship with us.

In his regular Sunday morning sermon, our pastor brought to us a wonderful message, as he constantly does. His subject was "Making Light of Jesus Christ," and the thoughts that he left with us make everyone of us want to take the matter of salvation more seriously, and to walk in closer communion with the Master.

It is a privilege to pay tribute here to Miss Lizzie Clinard, one of our beloved and faithful members. It would seem impossible to say too much for Miss Clinard, for she was faithful in spite of her long suffering. Even after she was confined to her home with illness which seemed at times unbearable, she gave liberally toward the purchase of new pews for our church; pews which she never was able to occupy. These are not the only splendid things for which we remember her, but they do reflect her unselfish devotion to her church.

The paint on our church building had become pretty thin in places, so the Woman's Auxiliary took the lead in having new paint put on in order to restore it to its beauty, and the painting is already in progress. A great deal of praise is due the women of our church, for it seems that most of the things of this nature start in the auxiliary. Of course the men help, but the ladies deserve a great deal of credit for starting them and working on through until they are finished.

Our Sunday school is still holding up; in fact, it appears to be growing. We are proud of this fact, and solicit your prayers that we may continue to grow and to do an even greater work.

Love Joy, Seagrove-Love Joy Charge, J. H. Trolinger, Pastor.—Since sending in our last report, we are glad to say that our church and Sunday school activities have been moving along nicely. We have had an average of 100 for Sunday school during the past few months.

Our pastor has filled each appointment during the months of June and July, bringing an interesting message each time. We pray God's richest blessings upon him as he goes to assist in revival services in various places during the next few weeks.

Our Children's Day program was observed the second Sunday in July. The morning service was taken up with the children's recitations and songs, which were greatly enjoyed by all present. After the recitations our pastor brought us a splendid talk on "Jesus, the Altogether Lovely." A pichic dinner was enjoyed in the grove, after which we assembled back in the church for the afternoon service, which was spent in singing. We were glad to have the Holt quartet of Asheboro and the Tabernacle quartet of Hemp present. Their singing was greatly enjoyed.

The Friendship Circle met with Mrs. Trolinger at the parsonage in Seagrove for the July meeting. Eighteen members answered to the roll call with a good deed. The devotional was by Mrs. Ruby Gillis. Mrs. Trolinger led the prayer. After the program the hostess served delicious refreshments of ice cream, cake, and tea . Mrs. Grady Russell and Miss Grace Kirk invited the circle for the August meeting.

We are glad to have C. T. Russell, Jr., back in Sunday school again after recovering from an appendix operation.

The third quarterly conference will be held at Macedonia church Wednesday night, August 9. We hope several members of our church will be present.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR RELIGION AND WELFARE RECOVERY REPORTS

Loyalty Days in churches, annually sponsored by the National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery, in association with other religious, educational and character-building institutions, will be observed Saturday, September 30, and Sunday, October 1.

This yearly call to church is intended not only to mobilize all citizens in houses of worship on the two days, but to maintain a higher average of attendance on subsequent Sabbaths throughout the year, it was said by Charles V. Vickrey, executive chairman of the committee, whose headquarters are at 60 East 42nd St., New York.

"Every citizen is cordially invited and every member is confidently expected in a house of worship on Loyalty Days" is the invitation to be proclaimed throughout the nation, with "Every member present or accounted for" as the slogan.

Any pastor, priest, rabbi or layman may take the necessary initiative in a community effort to gather the people in churches and synagogues on Loyalty Days and throughout the year, Mr. Vickrey said. The committee will assist through national cooperating organizations and will supply helpful suggestions and working plans to local committees as desired.

The Loyalty Days movement is part of a Religion and Welfare Recovery program to be continued throughout the year by the committee, composed of Protestants, Catholics and Jews. Among major objectives are the following:

To call all citizens to recognition of God and the ministries of religion as basic, in any program of permanent national recovery;

To educate the American public in the underlying principles of stewardship through regional conferences, national magazines, the daily press, motion pictures, radio and other educational media;

To broaden the base of giving by enlisting, as nearly as practicable, "Every citizen as a steward of life and property for the welfare of mankind";

To develop more businesslike methods of systematic giving, proportionate to incomes;

To lift the present level of giving from approximately two percent to the unprecedented figure of three percent of income and as far as practicable toward the Biblical tithe and the fifteen percent which the government exempts from income tax if given privately for public welfare;

To seek the religious, social and moral welfare of the donor as more important than the material value of the dollar.

The National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery is composed of approximately 750 recognized leaders from the major religious faiths. All are cooperating, Mr. Vickrey said, "for the purpose of meeting the present-day sweep of secularism, and racial and religious prejudice by bringing the minds and hearts of men back to the consciousness of the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the sanctions of religion, the services of worship and more adequate support of our religious, educational and character-building institutions." The committee held its first national convention in Chicago last November 1, 2 and 3, attended by more than 1,000 reresenting every state and practically every field of welfare service.

Officers of the committee include: Judge John P. McGoorty of Chicago, chairman; Dr. E. Graham Wilson, chairman, and Rabbi David de Sola Pool, vice chairman of the Executive Committee; Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, chairman of the Administrative Committee; Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, chairman of the Council of Executives; Dr. Herman C. Weber, chairman of the Survey Committee; Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, chairman of the Pastors'

A Call to Stewardship

Slogan: "Every citizen a steward of life and money for the welfare of mankind."

1. OBJECTIVES:

(a) To replenish the treasuries of our religious, educational, character-building and welfare institutions.

(b) To broaden the base of support for all philanthropy by enlisting every citizen as a systematic, proportionate giver.

(c) By surveys and consensus of judgment, to arrive at a reasonable standard of giving for persons of various income brackets and economic relationships.

(d) to establish higher levels of giving through

(1) the encouragement of tithing;
(2) the giving of the full 15% of income from taxation by the government; and
(3) the acceptance of world brotherhood and Golden Rule principles in the stewardship of life and substance.

2. THE IMMEDIATE GOAL is to raise the level of giving from the present average of 2.033% of income to the unprecedented average of 3%, and as far as practicable toward the biblical tithe and the 15% which is exempted from income tax if given through private philanthropy to public welfare.

3. METHODS:

(1) Nationwide publication of survey findings from income tax reports, from federal census, and from supplementary surveys.

(a) Press release of official U. S. Internal Revenue figures of income tax deductions for contributions to philanthropy in 1937, as related to total taxable income and comparison of percentages in 1937 with similar percentages of preceding years.
(b) Continue preparation of charts, pictograms and graphs for publication in daily papers, magazines, religious periodicals, church bulletins and elsewhere.
(c) National magazines—special articles by nationally known writers popularizing the above educational material.
(d) Regular press releases of stewardship material to be continued to all leading dailies, weeklies, and news syndicates.
(e) Cartoons to be prepared and released to the press as funds permit.

(2) Radio—addresses by outstanding business men and industrialists, as frequently as practicable, and a series of radio programs near the end of the year, emphasizing: (a) stewardship review of benevolences before the close of the year, (b) stewardship adjustment, (c) review and revision of wills.

(3) SPEAKERS' BUREAU:

Members of our own committee and other prominent pastors and business men to be offered as speakers on Stewardship to: (a) National Conventions, (b) Men's Service Clubs, (c) Women's Clubs, and (d) Radio Stations.

(4) LITERATURE:

A committee on literature to prepare new, vital, practical literature including: (a) Stewardship Handbook, (b) Standards of Stewardship, (c) Every-Member Canvass, (d) Annuities, (e) Wills.

A Call to Service

A challenge to laymen, laywomen and youth to accept standards of service, personal devotion and sacrifice comparable to that which we witness and expect from pastors, teachers and religious leaders.

Acceptance of the principles of brotherhood and democracy implies a single standard of devotion for priest and people, clergy and laymen.

Conditions Essential to Success

1. National Cooperation:

The sole purpose of this program is to fill the empty pews and depleted treasuries of our religious and welfare institutions. To insure even moderate success, there must be a moderate degree of sacrifice or adaptation of institutional programs to provide:

(a) the moderate budget which, though substantial, is negligible in size when compared with the goal.
(b) contributions of service of the executive officers.

2. Local Cooperation:

The National Stewardship Campaign will chiefly create atmosphere and favorable conditions facilitating local harvests. Practical results, however, will fail to materialize except as local committees organized to reap the harvests, made possible, or easier, by nationwide, cooperative, publicity and education.

Hot Weather is Here—
Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. Trial package ten cents, family pkg. twenty-five cts. At drug stores. (Adv.)

III. Conference Boards

Article 1. Each Annual Conference shall elect, on the nomination of the Cabinet, a Conference Board of Temperance consisting of not less than ten members and not more than eighteen members, with equal representation of ministers and lay members, two of whom shall be young people under twenty-five years of age, and the remainder of the lay membership shall consist of an equal number of men and women, whose duty shall be to promote the work of the Board within the bounds of the Annual Conference, and with power to elect its own officers and raise its own funds, provided that no General Funds collected for the General Board shall be allocated to the Conference Board, except by action of the General Board.

IV. The Local Church

Article 1. Each pastor should actively promote a vigorous program of temperance education in all departments of his church or churches, and members of both the church and the church school should be pledged to total abstinence.

Article 2. Each pastor should present the cause of temperance on or near World Temperance Sunday and take a freewill offering for the General Board of Temperance.

THE ACCIDENT

"How did it happen? Well, they met head on,
Rounding a curve. Going too fast, I guess.
A quarter of an hour, more or less,
Was hardly worth a broken neck. He's gone.

"The road too narrow? No, the road was wide,
The other driver gave him half the road
And something extra—for the wheel marks showed
He swung his car well over to the side.

"Drunk? Oh, I wouldn't say that he was drunk—
He had been drinking. Yes, it's very sad.
A fine young man—the only son they had.
The other; Cripple. Both the cars are junk.

And something, too, the preacher couldn't say.
'De mortuis nil nisi bonum, eh,
Why hurt his people's feelings, when he's dead?

"And who's to blame? God knows. The government?
The trade? The boy? His parents? You and I?
We're in the business! People are content
To let it flourish. Yes, we voted dry."

OPPOSE TRADE WITH JAPAN

The Northern Baptists ,closing their convention in Los Angeles on June 26th, extended sympathy to Czechoslovakia, China, Christians and Jews in Germany and Russia, and to "all oppressed nations and minority groups."

Charging in a resolution that the Chinese were "victims of an undeclared war," the convention asked the Government of the United States to take steps to stop shipment of iron and raw materials to Japan.

Another resolution called upon Americans to "prove themselves Christian neighbors and friends to our Oriental population," and condemned the Japanese exclusion act, urging in its place a quota immigration clause for Japanese.

The Rev. Rufus W. Weaver and the Rev. W. H. Allison, Washington, D. C., were elected vice presidents of the American Baptist Historical Society.

According to St. Paul

The Apostle Paul as an interpreter of the mind of Christ takes highest rank among Biblical writers. His influence upon Christianity has been so great that some have even called him its creator. But it was not Paul's desire to displace Jesus Christ, it was to exalt him. For in Christ Paul's personal love and loyalty are centered and perfected. The secret of his own marvelous life is found in Christ Jesus. ''For me to live is Christ. . . . I am crucified with Christ . . . the life I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave himself for me. . . . I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.'' This is the secret of my ilfe, the Apostle is saying. Self and all its fleshly yearnings—its greed, malice, lust, hatred, have been crucified with Christ. As Christ on the cross was dead to the world, so am I dead to the wooings of sinful flesh. For now having ''put on Christ'' and put off the ''old man'' of the flesh, he is ''a new creature'' in Christ Jesus.

But lest some one might think him boasting, Paul declares, ''Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God as it is in Christ Jesus, my Lord.''

The Apostle had fully realized the meaning of the words of Jesus as He said, ''If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me.'' It was no easy victory he had achieved. Let any who think so read Paul's spiritual biography in his epistle to the Romans. Let him understand what the Apostle meant as he described his state of soul as one bearing upon his own person the loathsome corpse of another; seeking deliverance and finding none who is able except Jesus Christ. And so with similitude and symbol he leads us on to the declaration of his triumphant faith, ''For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.''

Is there any reason for surprise that the mature Christian finds so much food for thought in Paul's epistles? Should any be surprised to discover so many sermons preached from passages of Paul's writing? The gospels have been greatly illuminated and enriched by the interpretations of Paul. And while he by no means settled all difficult questions in those records, he has so emphasized the truths of many of them that the humble may rejoice in a fuller understanding of them because of Paul's interpretations.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

St. Paul Sets the Pace

One of the finest bits of news coming to me this week is from Rev. A. D. Shelton, the pastor of St. Paul's church in Greensboro. Brother Shelton says that his church launched a drive last Sunday for the Annual Conference budget and received pledges to be paid right away, sufficient to cover the entire amount. Now if this church can do this thing I am persuaded there are many others who can do it also. What a fine thing it would be for a number of our churches to put the emphasis right now on raising the annual conference budget in full. Brother, this ought to be done. The conference has obligations it must meet and it has no money except as it gets it from the churches. And it is especially important that we raise our budget this year for this is our last chance as a conference. And so we say to Brother Shelton and to St. Paul's church, thank you for setting the pace and starting the ball to rolling.

The Why Not Quarterly Conference

On last Saturday afternoon I accompanied Rev. C. H. Hill, the pastor of the Why Not Charge to Flag Springs church for the third quarterly conference. While the attendance was not extra large yet all three of the churches on the charge were represented. The quarterly conference was very harmonious and everything was very pleasant. The reports showed that the churches were within easy reach of their goal in the manner of conference assessments. When it came to the matter of canvassing the vote for delegate it was found that for some reason the vote from one of the churches had failed to arrive. The vote was canvassed for the other two and a committee was appointed to find out the number of votes from the other church and to make the announcement of the election. This charge is now finishing a new parsonage on the highway about eight miles south of Asheboro. This building is within about a half mile of Flag Springs church, the church not being on the highway. During his pastorate Brother Hill has lived at his own home near High Point, giving such time to the charge as the salary would permit. Now that the charge has a parsonage it will be possible for the pastor to live in the community near his people. The three churches are not far from the parsonage so it ought to be easy for a pastor to find his people. Brother Hill is serving his fifth year on this charge. He has done good work and the people speak highly of him. I trust this charge may finish with good results the conference year.

A Sunday Morning At Lebanon, High Point

Last Sunday morning was spent with the Lebanon church in High Point, Rev. O. L. Easter, pastor. I was there in time for Sunday school and found it very flourishing. While the attendance was not quite up to the mark set a year ago yet it seemed to be well organized and things moved along nicely. It was my good fortune to sit in the Men's Class and to hear a discussion of the lesson by Brother Victor Hammer, the teacher. Brother Hammer's wide contacts while holding for many years a government position in Washington has given him an insight into the life of the people which is good training for teaching. At the eleven o'clock hour the auditorium was reasonably well filled with people for the service. It was said that there were several visitors in the audience. It really was a pleasure to preach to them. This is brother Easter's second year with this church and already his ministry has been productive of good results. Not only is he making a good impression on his own congregation but on the people of the city generally. His devotional services over the radio and his assistance in revival services in the city are bringing him face to face with a goodly number of people. He reported the church in fine financial condition. This church seems to have a good field as it goes into Methodist Union. It is located in the extreme northern section of the city with no other Methodist church near enough for there to be any problem. In recent years Sunday school rooms have been added and they now have a very good plant. The auditorium is of brick construction and is very neat.

A Sunday Evening At First Church, Thomasville

Last Sunday evening was spent with the First Church, Thomasville, Rev. James T. Bowman, pastor. The rather heavy rain of late Sunday afternoon continued to some extent until time for the evening service but the people came anyway. In a conversation with the pastor last week he was rejoicing over his fine Sunday evening congregations. As it continued to rain Sunday evening I thought it would be a severe test, however there was a congregation present which a great many large churches would like to have at the evening hour. Having served this church for one year in my early days in the ministry I have always been peculiarly interested in its welfare. And I was glad to know that it is still measuring up to its opportunity. Finances are in good condition and all seems to be doing well. The parsonage has been greatly improved since the days when we lived in it and it now seems to be a comfortable place. While it was a pleasure to be in the service Sunday evening there was one disappointment in the absence of our dear Brother D. R. Connell. A severe illness last year in which his life was almost despaired of has made it necessary for him to be careful about going out in unfavorable weather. But his interests have always been manifest in this church. This church, too, seems to be well located to meet the requirements in the adjustment period following Methodist Union. It is located in the southeastern corner of the city in a section where there is no other Methodist church. Quite a good many of the people who are in places of leadership in the church now, grew up in this organization. The church has been doubly fortunate during the years in being able to hold so many of these people in the community. This is Brother Bowman's second year and he and his talented wife seem to be fitting into the work splendidly. I trust the work may continue to go well and that this may be a good year.

Message In Verse

LET ME BE KIND

Let me be brave to scorn the easy lie,
To hold fast to the truth, serene and high,
Nor fear its consequence. Let me be kind.
So understanding that I shall not mind
The hurts that come from careless words, the slight
That otherwise would grieve me for a night.

Make me too gentle to wound others so;
Give me a keen insight that I may know
When loved ones' hearts are burdened. Let me share
The heavy loads of those for whom I care.
Teach me to say the fitting word that brings
Solace or joy—the word that soars on wings.

Give me compassion, sensitive and sweet.
On deeds of mercy send my eager feet,
Swift to bring aid. The kindly act warms thee—
Thou, high in heaven must glow in sympathy,
My neighbor's soul is gladdened, and delight
Fills my own spirit with effulgent light.

In little ways let me add happiness;
Quick to rejoice when others win success;
Remembering to speak the word of praise,
Forgetting what would darken shining days.
Let me be gracious, tender, pure in mind;
Wherever I may go, let me be kind.

West End Sunday school is holding its annual picnic at Greensboro Country Park Saturday, August 5.

A note from Dr. Dixon informs us that Mr. G. J. Cherry is dead and was buried in Charleston, S. C., where he had made his home for many years. His only living sister, Mrs. Sallie Cherry Davenport resides at Mackeys, N. C. Brother Cherry was a trustee of the Children's Home and was until recent years a most liberal supporter of the Home.

My Church

There is something differentiating and suggestive in the little pronoun MY. Whenever I can say this is My house, My car, My country, all these things at once change their relationship to me; before this that house, that car, that country were the same they are now, but then they did not belong to me and I to them. And so when the church on the corner of the street or along the highway becomes My church, it to me is no longer foreign, and I am no longer indifferent to what happens to it. All that is of value in it and in its program now appeal to me because it is My church. Its programs, its projects, its services being My programs, My projects and My services in My Church I am gripped by them as never before. I find My heart warming up to the history of that church now. Its founders, pastors, lay leaders, are of vital interest to me now. And thus My Church becomes for me the best church in all the world. And so when I discover it has need for me, needs My influence, My service, My financial support, I glady respond to its appeals because it is My very own, and I am its very own; we two are joined in one. It is a part of My life and My life becomes a part of the history of that church. The causes of the church therefore cannot suffer without making me suffer any more than I can suffer without causing My church to suffer. My church is me in My superlative mood. But however splendid its doctrine and ideals, My church is never better than those of us who make up its membership. It is good or bad or indifferent as we are good or bad or indifferent.

Open Windows

We read that Daniel worshiped the Lord in his Babylonian home by opening the windows toward Jerusalem. Through the open window he had an outlook to aid his yearnings as his vision searched the horizon which shut out the holy city to his gaze. It is a narrowed vision and a starved soul that can not look upon the world beyond the small area in which its daily activity lies. To Daniel, the open window was an aid to his longings; it intensified his desire to worship Jehovah in the holy place where loyal Jews for generations past had worshiped Him. Everyone who prays should have a place where he can kneel, and see beyond all the affairs which trouble him daily; a place from which his vision can stretch to the holy of holies, where heaven comes down his soul to greet and glory crowns the mercy seat. It is so easy to live a cramped life, to be motivated by restricted visions, to allow our interests in life to end with ourselves. Daniel realized what his loss was; carried away as a youth from Jerusalem where all that was sacred to him, the place around which clustered holy memories; he could pray with his face toward Jerusalem as he could in no other way. The windows opening upon the past and those opening upon a larger, more glorious future, should ever stand ajar, so that those who pray may have an outlook upon a world in which they live. The psalmist realized the holy influence of the outlook as he declared, "I will lift mine eyes unto the hills from which cometh my help; my help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and the earth."

Our National Debt Now Forty Billion

Speaking before the Charlotte Rotary club this week, Robert M. Hanes of Winston-Salem, declared that our national debt is now forty billion dollars; an inconceivable sum. But the astounding thing about it is, twenty-four billion have been piled up in nine years. At the outbreak of the World War our national debt was less than one billion dollars. During this war it climbed to twenty-six billion, but between the close of this war and 1930 the indebtedness was reduced to sixteen billion; it is now forty billion. So in nine years our national government has spent twenty-four billions more than it has received. Who is responsible for this? How can this destructive spending be stopped? Mr. Hanes correctly states that the American people as a whole are responsible, that we are the only ones who can stop the treasury raiders from throwing the nation into bankruptcy. It is not a matter of party politics. but of a whole nation endorsing an orgy of spending which if continued at the present rate will force the country into financial ruin. Who is ready to deny himself to help save his country? The vicious practice of one community taking all it can get from Washington because others take all they can get must be stopped or all that we now have will have no stable value.

FRANCES E. WILLARD CENTENARY

Evantson, Ill.—Hundreds of women's leaders will gather at Chautauqua, N. Y., on Friday, July 28, to pay tribute to Frances E. Willard, whose Ninteenth Century efforts were largely responsible for the entry of women into American public life.

A Willard Centenary year program will be held throughout National W. C. T. U. day. The idea for a united temperance movement was conceived at Chautauqua in 1874 at the first National Sunday School Assembly. Because of this early connection with Chautauqua, that institution sets aside a day annually for W. C. T. U. observances.

Much of Miss Willard's adult life was devoted to temperance. She was for many years president of the National W. C. T. U. in addition to being a leader in woman's suffrage and other fields of social reform. Selection of Chautauqua as the site for this memorial program is considered especially fitting.

The Willard program will include an address on "Everybody's St. Frances" by Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith of Evanston, Ill., national president and World's W. C. T. U. first vice-president. There will be an afternoon reception in Auditorium Hotel. The evening's feature will be the dramatic monolog "The Uncrowned Queen" by Harriette Warner Whiteman of Winona Lake, Ind. A new section of the monolog will relate Miss Willard's connections with Chautauqua.

Many outstanding women were at Chautauqua in the summer of 1874 at the Sunday School Assembly. An account of the birth of a strong temperance force, written by Miss Willard in her book "Woman and Temperance," quoted Mrs. W. A. Ingham of Cleveland. Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown of Alliance, Ohio, on August 14, 1874, suggested to other church leaders present an union of all temperance groups. Many of the women had taken part in the temperance crusades of that spring, including Mrs. G. W. Manly of Akron, Ohio, who had led Akron's praying band.

A meeting was called for August 15. Among the 50 who attended were: Miss Emma Janes, Oakland, Calif.; Mrs. H. H. Otis, Buffalo; Mrs. W. E. Knox, Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. W. D. Barnett, Hiawatha, Kans.; Miss Auretta Hoyt, Indianapolis; Miss Jennie F. Willing, Bloomington ,Ill.; and Mrs. Frances Crooks, Baltimore.

As a result of their meeting circulars were sent to all woman's temperance leagues asking that one woman be elected from each for a National W. C. T. U. organizing convention in Cleveland, November 18 to 20, 1874.

Alcohol education was included last summer on the Chautauqua summer school program, under the auspices of New York City University. It has been included again this year and from July 24 to August 4 a two weeks' course will be offered by Bertha Rachel Palmer of Evanston, head of that department for W. C. T. U.

From July 24 through July 27 the Youth's Temperance Council and the Loyal Temperance Legion, W. C. T. U. young people's groups, will have leadership training conferences at Chautauqua.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

ELIJAH: A LIFE OF COURAGE

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, August 6

Lesson Text—I Kings 18:30-39.

Golden Text—"The Lord is far from the wicked; but He heareth the prayer of the righteous." Proverbs 15:29.

How glad we are to come to such a life as that of Elijah in which we can see the virtue of courage so gloriously dominant. Every human heart leaps up at the first sign of courage in some other, for it is one quality that has a long history of acceptance. Since the law of "survival of the fittest" dates back to man's earliest wilderness life courage has been, of necessity, one of the crowning virtues of life. It has not been so with that of love, for instance. Almost until the life of Christ the attitudes of love and gentleness were regarded as weakness and even the marvelous example of the strength of love as exhibited by the Master Himself has had its struggle in the minds of many. Our present world is on the march under the cruel banner of might makes right, and one virtue is held out to the Christian when perhaps that of the higher virtues of meekness, love, kindness will not be received by this age of demagogues and the rattle of force—courage and boldness.

Elijah, faced with a whole nation of people who were opposed to all he believed and preached, commanded them to take notice of him when he challenged them and their gods to a contest of valor. Theodore Roosevelt once exclaimed: "Aggressive fighting for the right is the noblest sport the world affords." Elijah is very aggressive in this conflict with the prophets of Baal and his courage in standing up for the right marks him as a noble hero even among his former enemies. The Christian of today would like to insert into the picture more of the quality of love, but we must remember again that Elijah had not experienced as we the incarnation and glorification of love as seen in the earthly life of the Christ. God had to use the virtue of courage to accomplish His ends against such ungodly and unfeeling men. Today when mad dictators are walking rough shod over the precious virtues of love, brotherhood, kindness that only centuries of Christian development could foster, it is the virtue of courage that is coming to the rescue of persecuted Christians who stand for the God of such attitudes. The German pastors who are languishing in prisons and bearing the wrath of Nazism have won notice and esteem from even Nazi's themselves by their courage to preach and obey God rather than men. Now it remains to be seen whether or not their Christian faith is of the kind that will produce results which will win Germany back to the ways of the true and living God.

Elijah had courage but he had more. He had faith in a God of power and operation, a God that is above all gods. This gave him his superb courage over men. History is full of bold speaking Christians of the type of Elijah who believe as our text, "The Lord is far from the wicked; but He heareth the prayer of the righteous." This faith gave William Tyndale boldness to say to one of his powerful opponents of his translation of the Bible, "If God spare my life, ere many years, I will cause a boy that driveth the plough shall know more of the Scripture than thou knowest." A Christian named Milliard in the days of Louis XI was ordered by him to quit his preaching or be thrown into the river to drown and he boldly replied, "I'll get to heaven quicker by water than you can with all your fast horses." In Nero's day it gave timid women boldness to face the fierce teeth of the hungry lions, who ordinarily would flinch at the presence of a little mouse. It allowed Jesus of Nazareth, the carpenter's son to say in the face of imperial Rome, "I shall build My kingdom and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Thus history unfolds a host of such lives who fling scorn upon weapons of the flesh and the gods of false might and yet who talk with unbelievable courage. There we see them standing alone, unsupported, unarmed, threatened and opposed by innumerable foes. That is all very admirable and their stalwart courage strikes a note of sympathy and acclamaiton in even their enemies' but what about that courage. Were they, like many others, just blind fanatics; or were they trying the art of the bully?

Someone has well said that difficulties are things which show what men are, and if such difficulties as Elijah had here on Mt. Carmel have any virtue they are simply to give him the chance to make good his courageous boasting. If then he fails to get an answer from his God, he is self-condemned as a braggard or bully. The secret of the success of God's kingdom in this world has not been in the bold speaking of His prophets but rather in His power to make good these boastings. A humble Scotchwoman was once introduced to a stranger by a friend as "a woman of great faith." "No," she said, "I am a woman of little faith but with a great God." Experience has proven by one medium or another that the God of Elijah and Jesus is one that sends down the fire of His power to effect the prayers of His followers and as long as this is true the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. When we remember Elijah we should forever remember that there is an omnipotent defender for the right and too, that there is a corresponding omnipotent antagonist to the wrong. "The Lord is far from the wicked; but He heareth the prayer of the righteous."

SOME THOUGHTS ON PASTORAL EVANGELISM

By Dr. S. A. Maxwell

Nothing is more alien to the mind of both the pre-Christian and the present world than the notion of a working God. That God can experience any sense of achievement through planned, purposeful activity is a thought so far removed from the traditional conception that when Christ declared, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," He set in motion an idea far more disturbing than the concept of God as a father. The view of God at work, so prominent in the teachings of Jesus and so evident in the life of the Saviour, carries far-reaching implications for pastoral evangelism.

In announcing His part in the plan of God, Christ staggers our very imagination. He assumes universal sovereignty and with moral calm He presses that authority into every sphere of the universe. He is to now shape and fashion human thought and conduct on a world-wide scale. A mighty movement is being initiated. The implications of it are more stupendous than any leader of humanity ever dreamed of in the wildest moments of his unbridled ambitions. Suddenly Christ moves to the center of universals. A race-wide, earth-wide, time-wide brotherhood was the goal of His ministry. Even beyond the reach of time's wavering course He disclosed a brotherhood resplendent in immortal glory. What a foundational and enduring encentive for pastoral evangelism. Work without limits or stint or respite will be involved.

How would He play His part in pursuing this purpose and in initiating the greatest works program ever known to humanity? As the supreme administrative center He would share both the energy and mode of His character with men. Every effort must contribute to this irresistible fact. For this reason He consistently denied Himself some common tools of service, available to us, lest these hinder or divert the force of His life. Techniques are to reveal and impart His own life and not to reduce or obstruct it. What a high norm for pastoral evangelism. Surely His pen could write pungent paragraphs on current events, but only once and then in the sand did He write. He had an eloquence that was overmastering, but only as a quiet teacher confronting men with truth did He persuade them. With unlimited wealth at His command did He try to influence men with it. He refused to possess it or to use it except by the common means available to any other man. Did He gather a group of technicians to promote His cause? He called simple fishermen from their craft. Would He resort to force, stoop to tricks of the trade, or offer unworthy rewards to popularize His movement or protect His program? He admonished His followers to lose their lives in humble service and to forever fear the sword as an instrument by which men perish and lose causes.

Burning with a mission universal in its concern, but always filled with a message for the individual, Jesus sought to realize His aims. What a stern rebuke to shallow propaganda made in the name of His cause today. Beyond a doubt He is the center of many crowds, but never there under the urge of the passion for popularity or the craze for promotion. He was stirred and moved and filled with compassion for groups. The common need of congregated thousands touched Him to all His heights and depths. He fed them, taught them, and healed them. His supreme command to service, "Go yet into all the world and preach My gospel to every creature," forever differentiates Christianity from any of the ethnic faiths of mankind. With a measureless purpose but always an individual scale Jesus sought to bring His kingdom. What a searching norm for pastoral evangelism!

Just as the unit of any organism of life is always simple, and the divine order works this way throughout all nature, so it is in the kingdom of God. No group ever received richer, deeper, more direct or significant instruction than that given to Nicodemus. The companionless woman of Samaria at the well was as effectively taught as if all of her neighbors had been with her. Instruction may be given to groups but it is always received by the individual. We may secure crowds for economy of effort but all Christ-like work is done on the scale of one. Companionless men were born of earthly parents and when born again in the spirit it will never be by throngs. The man void of spiritual purpose and engaging in no spiritual enterprises is the lost man regardless of his social, economic or educational status. Jesus sought such. How many sheep did the shepherd seek when the ninety and nine were secure in the fold? Just one! How many pieces of silver were lost before the woman began a diligent search? Only one! How many sons came home from the far country before the father brought out the robes and killed the calf and called for the feast of rejoicing? Just one! We talk of armies in terms of companies, regiments and divisions, but they were all formed by individual enlistment. The recruiting officer may deal with crowds, but enlistment is an individual matter. Advancement and progress requires social forces and a community life, but enlistment demands personal decision. The kingdom will be composed of a numberless throng, but pastoral evangelism seeks to secure this numberless throng through individual enlistment. This is the only way. Christ did not work on a scale of a thousand, or even on a scale of ten, but always on a scale of one. With Him a universal aim is best achieved and can only be achieved in a redemptive way by an individual approach. What a rich suggestion that pastoral evangelism go directly after the individual.

Is it not possible that today we are in peril of reversing the process? Can we do it by groups or armies any more than Christ could? Can we reverse the whole order in nature and life? It is not pressure but appeal, not drive but drawing, nor impulsive power but understanding love, not the display of authority but the experience of sharing we need to recapture in pastoral evangelism today. Just a word may change a life. It did it for the Philippian jailor. A brief but meaningful interpretation may give redeeming guidance. It did it for the Ethiopian Eunuch. Sometimes a look may revive lost loyalty. It did it for Peter. A brief dinner hour may turn a man from greed and dishonesty to unselfishness and liberality. It did it for Zaccheus. With a matchless mission and a personal method, Jesus challenges us to bring in the kingdom. No hobbies, no shibboleths, no traditions to defend. To all He says, "Follow Me," and with effective earnestness He discloses the redemptive way when He says with guiding tenderness "Learn of Me." How sublime, how adaptable, how universal—just by learning of Him. The learning process then is the divinely selected and exclusive route into the kingdom of God. Jesus staked His measureless purpose on our capacity for learning the life of the kingdom. What a significant, though often misunderstood, emphasis and example for pastoral evangelism! Wedded to no method and bound by no tradition Christ allowed His discovery of the individual to determine the nature and form of His effort and emphasis. To the pastor Jesus is still saying, "Come and learn" before He commands him to "Go and teach." Anything short of this will mean a fragmentary evangelism and its converts will constantly face the peril of perishing with the partial. Viewing clearly the manner of Jesus and looking into His teachings it is evident we must change our techniques and shift our emphasis. Pastoral evangelism must avoid the spirit of commercial propaganda and the methods of mass production so utterly foreign to the gospel. Only changes wrought in persons will guarantee changes needed in domestic, social, economic and political life. How shall the pastor then tackle his inescapable obligation to evangelize his own local church constituency? Surely not by delegating it to lifeless committees or merely holding a series of formal religious services and designating that the evangelistic program of his parish. It must not be dodged with such incriminating ease nor avoided in such irresponsible farce. Year after year hundreds of local churches report no additions on profession of faith. Why is such record constantly repeated? It does not inhere in the nature of any community. Let it be observed that the record of any local church is always the record also of some pastor. We are not called to kill time or just to get by or even to please men, but to win men for Christ and eternal life. An aroused heart and conscience in the pulpit will spread to the pew.

Let the pastor begin with a scale of one; let him see a rich variety of individual difference; let him feel the impact of hungry hearts; let him employ a suitable appeal; let him lift Christ always as the exclusive source of redeeming and saving righteousness to be received by the life giving yet variable processes of Christian nurture; let him understand that the will to righteousness is the one essential response that all men at all times must give to the gospel; above all let him discover no rest until men have been enlisted with Christ and set to worthy tasks in His church and the community. Such evangelism will bring honor to the church and will center in the all-sufficient Saviour and never in theories of any type, and such a faith will not dissolve itself in dreams nor dissipate its dynamic by dealing either in trifles or belief or conduct. To such an effort we are now called. May it soon be felt in a warmer spirit, a more vital program, and a larger membership in thousands of local churches throughout the land. Dare we pastors stand still and continue to repeat our failures of the past? A new day, a new world and a living Christ challenge us. It must begin in our parishes. Everything waits for the pastor to advance. The day of march has come.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

MICHIGAN'S MILITANT GOVERNOR INVITED TO SPEAK AT WORLD'S FAIR

Good Templars Slogan, "A Dry America By 1950!"

New York, July 25—Governor Luren D. Dickenson of Michigan has been invited to be principal guest speaker on Good Templars Day, Saturday, August 26, at New York World's Fair, officials of the Good Templars National Grand Lodge of the United States announced today.

Since his recent assault upon drinking and its attendant evils in high places, many members of the Good Templars, Anti-Saloon League, W. C. T. U. and other bodies have expressed a wish to hear the Michigan moral crusader. It is hoped by the promoters of the meeting that the World's Fair platform will provide an opportunity for Governor Dickinson to launch the nation-wide reform movement which he wishes inaugurated. The general public is invited to attend at the Hall of Special Events, for which there is no charge beyond the ordinary admission to the fair grounds.

August 26, say the Good Templars, inaugurates a forward movement for their fraternal temperance organization, founded in 1851. Enrollment of an additional 100,000 Templars and effectuating the slogan of the order, "A Dry America By 1950!" is the announced aim of this and other rallies planned throughout the country. Michigan Good Templars are being asked to personally reinforce the World's Fair invitation sent to Governor Dickinson from New York today.

Young People Are Drinking Less

"We are greatly indebted to the World's Fair authorities for permission to hold our rally there, in common with other national societies," today said William Band, chairman of the Good Templars committee of arrangements for August 26. Mr. Band has long served as Grand Chief Templar of New York Grand Lodge, and in other positions of honor. "This courtesy, with expected broadcasting facilities, provide the finest sounding board which our order has enjoyed, perhaps, during its entire 88 years' existence. Temperance workers and other friends of our cause in many states are preparing to attend, while other multitudes listen in," said Mr. Band.

"We anticipate that the results of this gathering will be far reaching, especially among the youth of America with whose welfare I am primarily concerned as National Superintendent of Juvenile Work. Young people generally are drinking less nowadays, and they show a keen desire to know the scientific, physical and civic facts on alcohol," said Mrs. Martha von Gegerfelt, secretary of the World's Fair special committee.

"As Governor Dickinson was prevented from making his home broadcast last week, our Good Templars have offered him the hospitality of the nation-wide broadcast planned for our August 26 meeting, which promises as a whole to be the most important Prohibition pronouncement made in many years," said Captain Ed. Page Gaston, military man and member of the Templars fair committee.

Five Thousand Local Option Victories

Good Templars and other Prohibition and temperance advocates claim increasingly that Repeal is a monumental failure and that the swingback for suppression of the legalized liquor traffic is gathering strength rapidly throughout the country. The liquor interests officially concede 5,000 dry victories out of 7,000 local option elections, and they give evidence of great concern over this rising public anger from the existing conditions of vice and general lawlessness linked with their operations, say temperance advocates.

Good Templars and other reform leaders estimate that a total of 10,000 rural and other communities will vote dry before the end of this year. They hold that this is but the beginning of the movement which gives them a substantial basis for asserting that the country will be really dry within the next eleven years, with a national administration pledged to enforce the measure in whatever form it may be finally enacted.

A Great National Organization

In addition to the three mentioned, members of the arrangements committee for the Good Templars World's Fair gathering include C. W. King, Newark, N. J., Vivtor Carlson and Bertil Mattison, Bridgeport, Conn., D. W. McNeil, Paterson, N. J., John Ericson, New York City, and A. E. Thulander, Bloomfield, N. J.

Officers of the powerful Good Templars National Grand Lodge of the United States are John Graff, Chicago (National Chief Templar), George F. Cotterill, Seattle, Wash., Gosta Carlson, Gardner, Mass., D. W. McNeil, Paterson, N. J., J. Raymond Schmidt, Washington, D. C., Mrs. Martha von Gegerfelt, Brooklyn, N. Y., Gordon H. Payne, Medina, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Abrahamson, West Hartford, Conn., Ben D. Wright, Lockport, N. Y., Rev. John P. W. Peacock, Mattapoisett, Mass., John Josephson, West Hartford, Conn., Mrs. Agnes Hatlen, Chicago, Ill., Mrs. Lillian Lindgren, Youngstown, Ohio, A. E. Thulander, Bloomfield, N. J., and Mrs. Jennie Wilkes, Paterson, N. J.

THREE TIMES A METHODIST!

By Amelia Howell Fowler

As a tiny baby I was baptized a Methodist Protestant. As a twelve-year-old, I joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on confession of faith. As a college freshman I transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Three times a Methodist!

The Methodist Protestant Church—"How Firm a Foundation": I remember myself as a little girl riding with my minister father in a buggy drawn by a red-brown horse. For miles we rode, often in silence; he thinking of his sermon, I feeling him think. The road was of Alabama red clay, with two deep ruts. Interesting to watch the narrow wheels stay in those ruts! Fun to wonder what the red-brown horse was thinking as he walked sedately! Exciting when on level stretches he broke into a faster pace and tossed his mane a bit! Red clay banks sloped back from the road, and "piney" woods stretched still farther back on each side. Pine needles smelled spicy. Sometimes a squirrel or a partridge ran across the road. Sunshine was warm. It was easy to think of God and love Him.

When we arrived at the small frame church, warm welcomes awaited us from others who had come almost as many miles as we had come, some on horseback, some on muleback, some in buggy or wagon. Then the climax of the morning: those people singing unaccompanied, "As thy days may demand, shall thy strength ever be." Then my father preached. Over my head were the words he used, but the sureness entered by being. I gazed out the window through the pine branches into pools of sky, and dreamed dreams. Listen! My father is praying now. I cannot follow the petitions, but I can sit still to feel the joyful sureness again. I listen for the sentence that will end his prayer. I cannot write the words now, after many years, without the sympathetic prickles that little girl used to have as she heard: "Speed the day when Thy kingdom shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea!" Sureness! They are singing again: "That soul, through all hell should endeavor to shake, I'll never, no, never, no, never, forsake!"

Methodist Episcopal Church, South—"Jesus Paid It All": Easter! In a white frame church in Florida. This time it is a Southern Methodist Church, for in the town to which we moved because of my father's health there is no Methodist Protestant Church. The minister's daughter is quivering in an ecstasy of excitement. Twelve years old and full of dreams, she walks with the others to the chancel as the congregation sings its favorite hymn. To the girl it is the Voice of God Himself. He is saying, through that hymn, "Child of weakness, watch and pray. Find in Me thine all in all." It is plain to the girl that the refrain is her own personal response. She is thinking, "They sing it as though they really meant it. I mean it too!" She knows in her heart she must find a place of service because "Jesus paid it all. All to Him I owe!"

Methodist Episcopal Church—"Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult": Ohio Wesleyan and a transfer by letter to the Methodist Episcopal Church. This time my church was stately and dignified, in red brick. Here I heard a pipe organ for the first time and trembled with its vibrations, which I could feel even through inanimate wood as my hand lay palm down upon the arm of the pew. William Street Methodist Episcopal Church and Dr. Ernest F. Tittle in the pulpit! His prophetic voice became for me the Voice of God. There it was again—the church the Voice of God! Things happened to my spirit life those Sunday mornings as I sang with that church full of students, my contemporaries, the hymn we loved best, "Jesus calls us o'er the tumult of our life's wild, restless sea!" Those were growing days, and the Voice of God through His church grew more insistent. No longer was it saying as to the child, "All is well"; nor as to the twelve-year-old, "Center your life in Christ." Now it was saying, "You must be willing to go to the farthest ends of earth." The greatest struggle of my life occurred then; and the greatest exaltation when I surrendered.

For twenty years the Methodist Episcopal Church has helped me in the hardest search of all—to find and know myself. Through struggle, gropings, sometimes despair it has helped me. Always I've been steadied and inspired by God's Voice speaking through it. Always simple, direct, unyielding. Always there to come back to—"Christian, follow me!"

The New Methodist Church—"Are Ye Able": What is the new church primarily to be? Big? Rich? Efficient? No. It is still the Voice of God. His Voice should be more clearly heard because the unified church will be less and less cluttered with non-essentials. We cannot foretell what words He will say. But we know His message will come with authority. And we know that He will use tones of love.

It is true that each of the three churches gave up some distinctive traditions. The spirit of gracious compromise has been touching, because it has sometimes covered a feeling of grief within some of our leaders. If any such feeling still remains, it is a pity. For the new church need not surrender the giving of religious security to little children! In new power it can throw protecting arms around all the children of the world! It need not give up the steadying of turbulent adolescence! With added poise it can go on helping young people keep their balance in a dizzy world! It need never give up the pushing out of horizons for everyone! In a still mightier way it can inspire us all to answer, "Lord, we are able!"—Zion's Herald.

FALSE COMFORT FOR SINNERS

I have often had professors of faith bring anxious sinners to me and beg me to comfort them. Then when I have probed the conscience of the sinner to the quick they have shuddered and have sometimes taken his part. Sometimes parents do this when their children are under conviction. Similarly a husband will tell his wife, or the wife her husband, "How good you are! Why you are not bad. You have just been to that frightful minister who frightens people."

No sinner ever has an idea of his sins greater than they really are. No sinner has an adequate idea of how great a sinner he is. It is not probable that any man could live under a full light of his sins. In mercy God has spared all of His creatures that worst of sights, a naked human heart. the sinner's guilt is much more deep and damning than he thinks and his danger is much greater than he thinks; if he should see his sins as they are, perhaps he could not live one moment. True, he may have false notions on the subject that create distress and that are without foundation. But to tell the most moral and amiable person in the world that he is good enough is not giving him rational comfort. It is deceiving him and ruining his soul.

The sinner is on the verge of hell. He is in rebellion against God and his danger is infinitely greater than he imagines. What a doctrine of devils it is to tell a rebel against heaven not to be distressed! He is not comforted because he refuses to be comforted. God is ready to comfort him. You need not think to be more compassionate than God. He will in an instant fill the sinner with comfort, on his submission. There stands the sinner struggling against God and against conscience until he is deeply distressed. But he will not yield. For someone to tell him then that he ought not to feel so bad is horrible!—Charles G. Finney, in "Finney on Revival." (Marshall, Morgan and Scott, Publishers, London, England).

PERCEPTION

It is said that when Leonardo da Vinci completed his painting of the Last Supper he called two monks in to view it. They at once began admiring the beautiful colorings of the tablecloth. The artist took his brush and dashed it across the object of their regard. Turning to the monks he said in effect, "I brought you to look upon the face of the Master, and you see only the cloth which I had painted upon the table."

The poet sings:

"Two men looked out through prison bars,—
The one saw mud—the other saw stars."

Somewhere between the table and the Master, between the mud at our feet and the stars beyond our reach, the measure of our appreciation and utilization of life is found. One might suggest that earth has as much utility as stars, and that a beautiful object has as much value as a beautiful character. But those who do suggest such a view fail to appreciate that life approximates to the thing or ideal that engrosses its attention. Jesus puts it, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." And the implication is, that the things upon which we set our affection determine the quality and extent of our treasure.

Until we learn to view life with eyes that glimpse the eternal and focus upon qualities of spirit rather than quantities of things, our discernment will be as partial and unsatisfying as the experience of the Hindus who went to see the elephant. Life is inherently richer than its possession of dollars, and infinitely greater than its size of body and length of years. Happy the man whose inner vision can penetrate beyond the limitations of his eyes; whose spirit seeks its basic riches in the appropriation of a great ideal. —F. C. Crossman in "The Maritime Baptist."

When a deed is done for Freedom, through the broad earth's aching breast
Runs a thrill of joy prophetic, trembling on from east to west,
And the slave, where'er he cowers, feels the soul within him climb
To the awful verge of manhood, as the energy sublime
Of a century bursts full-blossomed on the thorny stem of Time.

Careless seems the great Avenger: history's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne—
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

OUR STORY PAGE

WE WANT RAIN

What makes the flowers hang their heads?'' Doris asked her mother as she looked at the pretty asters by the door.

''They want rain. That is the only way they can ask for a drink,'' answered her mother.

''We don't want it to rain!'' pouted Doris.

''No, indeed!'' spoke up Bobby quickly. ''Then we'll have to play indoors.''

''Very well,'' said their mother. ''Since it is not raining now, you may take your sailboat down to the brook and play.''

''Goody! Goody!'' Doris clapped her hands.

They ran across the lawn and down the hill. But when they reache dthe brook there was no water in it. Not the tiniest drop.

Bobby scowled and so did Doris.

As they stood there a mother robin flew down from the willow-tree. She walked up and down in the brook and looked about. Then she lifted her head and gave a low, ''Chirp! Chirp!''

''She must be very thirsty!'' said Doris.

''Yes! That is her way of asking for water. But she is looking for worms also,'' said Bobby.

''Where is she going?'' asked Doris.

''Oh, she'll fly to some place where there is water.''

Doris wondered if there were little eggs up in the nest, and if they would get cold while the robin was hunting for food and water.

Then they ran back up the hill to tell their mother that the brook was dry, and also that the robin was thirsty.

''Then you may come with me,'' said their mother. ''We will get some things for dinner.''

They hurried off to the garden, Bobby running on ahead and Doris trying to catch him.

''You may pull some beets,'' said mother to Bobby.

Bobby tugged and tugged at a beet, but he could not pull it out of the ground.

''Pull hard!'' said his mother.

So he pulled again. He pulled so hard that the top of the beet came off and he rolled over.

It was funny to see him with his heels up in the air and Doris laughed. That made Bobby very cross and he cried out, ''You try it, then!''

Doris did try very hard. She wanted to show Bobby that she could pull a beet. But the ground would not let the beet go.

''Try again!'' teased Bobby.

''What makes it pull so hard?'' asked Doris.

''The ground has been baked for many, many days by the hot sun. It takes rain to make the earth soft,'' explained mother.

''Oh, dear!'' sighed Doris. ''The flowers want water.''

''The brook is dry, and the robin is thirsty,'' added Bobby.

''And the ground is very hard,'' said Doris.

Mother picked up the pan of beets, which she had pulled, and started for the house.

''I think,'' and Doris spoke very low to her brother, ''it would be better if it rained.''

''It surely would!'' whispered Bobby.

Later, as they carried small pails of water and sprinkled the flowers by the door, they shouted together, so that their mother, who was washing the beets in the kitchen could hear, ''We—want—rain—too!''

Then they ran down the bill to the brook, taking some fresh water for the thirsty robin, and again they sang out happily, ''We—want—rain—too!'' — Louella Killian, in ''Story World.''

LITTLE FUSSY CLOCK

''Tick-tock, tick-tock,'' slowly spoke the tall grandfather's clock in the corner.

''Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock,'' fussed the little clock on the shelf, as fast as it could talk. ''You're so slow, Grandfather Clock. Why don't you speed up a little? You'll never get anywhere at that rate.''

''Oh, I'm not so slow,'' answered the old clock. ''I get ahead just as fast as you do.''

''Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock,'' ran on the little fussy clock. ''What do you think about it, Wristwatch?''

''Tk-tk-tk-tk-tk,'' replied Wristwatch. He spoke so softly that you could hardly understand what he was saying unless you put your ear close. ''I'm going faster than either of you are. I shall reach noon first, of course.''

''But why do you talk—I mean tick-talk—so fast?'' asked Grandfather Clock.

''Because we must get to noon by twelve o'clock,'' fussed the other. ''We have only three hours in which to get there. It will take you five hours, at the rate you're going.''

''Don't worry about me. I shall get there as soon as you do,'' promised Grandfather Clock.

''Not at the rate you're going, you won't.''

''We'll see,'' replied the old clock. ''Remember, it is the keeping steadily at it that really gets you somewhere.''

''Yes, I must hurry,'' said Fussy. ''When I reach noon, I'll tell folks you're coming.''

By and by Whoooooo went the noon whistle. Grandfather Clock spoke, ''Ding-dong, ding-dong,'' twelve times. When he had finished speaking, ''Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock,'' he heard. It sounded as if the little clock were all out of breath. Grandfather Clock smiled at the little clock.

''You see,'' he said, ''I just kept steadily on, and I reached noon at exactly twelve o'clock. But you, my dear, are one minute slow. You see, friend, it is work that counts, not words.''

''Yes. I believe you are right,'' replied little Fussy.

''Tick-tock, tick-tock,'' answered good old Grandfather Clock.—Ethel M. Rice, in ''Story World.''

To the Leader

This is the second of a series of two topics on "Opening Our Eyes to Beauty." The development of this topic will necessarily include a call upon the memory. The group should have at the very first part of the meeting a fair understanding of the meaning of worship, the value of worship, and the methods of worship. Worship is the most important act of a Christian. It is the most important part of a church service. It is too often developed and neglected in the present generation which is intoxicated with utilitarian ideas. To the understanding of worship should be added an appreciation of beauty as an aid to worship. Make it clear that beauty in worship is a means to an end. Profitable enjoyment of the beautiful should lead to a deeper sense of God's presence and a greater desire to have fellowship with Him. Discuss the value of beauty in the worship service and invite definite suggestions for improvement.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. What is worship? Its purpose? Its value?
2. In what sense, if any, does beauty help one in worship?
3. What beautiful things have helped you in worship?
4. How may one cultivate the taste for the beautiful?
5. In what ways may the beauty of nature contribute to worship?
6. Do you think beautiful architecture aids one in worship. Explain.
7. What is beautiful music? How does it serve us in worship?
8. Does poetry help one in worship? If so, how may it be used?
9. Of what value, if any, is art in worship?
10. What physical surroundings should be provided for worship?
11. Of what value are prayers, Bible reading, and sermons in worship?
12. Can one worship in silence? Explain.
13. Is it possible to substitute the admiration of the beautiful for the adoration of God?
14. How may the foregoing substitution be avoided?

The Poet

Labor in the path of duty,
Gleamed up like a thing of beauty;
Beauty shone in self-denial,
In the sternest hour of trial;
In a meek obedience
To the will of Providence,
In the lofty sympathies
That, forgetting selfish ease,
Prompted acts that sought the good
Of ev'ry spirit; understood
The wants of ev'ry human heart,
Eager ever to impart
Blessings to the weary soul
That hath felt the bitter world's control.
Here is beauty felt such as ne'er
Met the eye or charmed the ear,
In the soul's high duties, then I felt
That the loftiest beauty ever dwelt.

—C. P. Cranch.

Beauties of Nature

Those homelier wild flowers which we call weeds; yellow japanned buttercups and star-disked dandelions lying in the grass like sparks that have leaped from the kindling sun of summer; the profuse daisy-like flower which whitens the fields, to the great disgust of liberal shepherds, yet seems fair to loving eyes, with its button-like mound of gold set around with milk-white rays; the tall-stemmed succory, setting its pale blue flowers aflame one after another; the red and white clovers; the broad, flat leaves of the plantain ("the man's foot," as the Indians called it) —those common growths which fling themselves to be crushed under our feet and our wheels making themselves so cheap in this perpetual martyrdom that we forget, each of them is a ray of the divine beauty.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Topic Hints

Worship: What is worship? Professor Weigle has accurately answered this question in this brief line, "Worship is a personal approach to God." Whatever means may be to inspire and induce worship, the ultimate must be a personal approach to God if the individual worships. The program of worship is only a proposed spiritual stimulant; the materials in worship form only the steps which lead to God. One can never reach God by merely bathing in the stimulant or by parking on the ascending stairway.

Beauty: Beauty is the work of God. There is beauty in the universe and God's ultimate purpose is to make beautiful individuals who will make and maintain beautiful relationships. The beauty in the rose should be a challenge to any one to seek and find the source of such beauty. The beautiful butterfly should inspire us to search for the perfect Artist Who painted those wings without blemish. The beauty in nature charms the attention of the spiritual aspirant who longs to be like Him Who made all things and who is willing because some communicants have been ignorant of its value or to have God's spiritual laws within and without.

Beauty and Worship: God, who has made all things beautiful, can be approached through the beautiful. For this reason, beauty can be used as an aid in worship. It must be remembered that our worship services should be designed to create an atmosphere in which worshipers may find God. Their attractiveness should lead worshipers to the Attraction. Persons engaged should lead people to the Person. Art employed should lead the interested to the Artist. Music should be the translation of a pure heart purifying the air so that the ugliness of men might be tranformed into the beauy of holiness. Beauty should accompany worship programs and communicants should use the beautiful in their search for the Most Beautiful.

Appreciating Beauty: Since beauty is the workmanship of God, people should learn to appreciate the beautiful. Beautiful elements in worship have often been laughed out of court because some had not learned to appreciate beauty. Some of the most beautiful music cannot be used in some churches because the worshipers have not trained the soul to appreciate it. Beautiful art has been forbidden a place in some churches because the beam of prejudice has not been removed. In this world we always have to make allowances for individual differences. If individuals would give more attention to personal culture, many allowances would not be necessary and the group as a whole would live on a much higher level. Every high school and every college student should take at least one course in the appreciation of some art.

Created Beauty: God created the beautiful. The best illustration of God's created beauty is in the life of His only Begotten Son, Jesus Christ. Every day we see some of His beauty in the lives of devout Christians. God's house should be a beautiful place of worship. If we mean business we will make it so. To this extent we can create the beautiful. Dirty floors, dingy walls, and scattered trash in the house of worship is hardly the work of God through us. A dusty altar, a poorly hung picture, a broken stained-glass window, an unprepared message in speech or in music represent an unforgivable carelessness on the part of God's people. Such ugliness is not in keeping with the Christian's profession. It is not conducive to worship. Beauty is an aid to worship. We should seek beauty and seek to create beauty that through it the Author of beauty may be found and the beauty of holiness experienced.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

"Unless Thou lead me, Lord,
The road I journey on is all too hard.
Through trust in Thee alone
Can I go on.

"Yet not for self alone
Thus do I groan:
My people's sorrows are the load I bear.
Lord, hear my prayer—
Make Thy strong hand
Strike off all chains
That load my well-loved land—
God, draw me close to Thee."

The student's allowance had run out, so he wrote home for more money. Feeling a bit nervous about the impression it would make, he ended his letter: "P.S.—I did not like writing to you. In fact, I ran after the mailman to get this letter back, but he had already mailed it."

A week later he received the following reply:

"You will be glad to know that I did not receive your letter."

THE OLD WITCH DOCTOR

Dr. Walter E. Strangway, of Chissamba, when he was home on his last furlough from Africa, told an impressive story. Many of his friends had asked him why he and Mrs. Strangway were returning to the field, and in answer he told of the conversation of the old blind witch doctor. Let us repeat the story in Dr. Strangway's own words:

"When we first went out to Africa we heard a great many stories about the witch doctors. I began to wonder if I met one on the road some day whether he would harm me.

"One morning, as I sat examining patients in our hospital, one of the helpers came in and said, 'There is a witch doctor at the door wanting to see you.' I think he saw me trembling a little, for he hastened to add, 'Don't be frightened, because this witch doctor is blind.' I told him to show the patient in, and he brought in an old man, who sat down and told me the story of his life. And as he went through that story he told me of all the things he had done in opposition to us, and of all his magical work. Then he said: 'As my blindness came on, I went to other witch doctors to see if I could get help, but our medicine was of no avail; so I have come asking you to help me.'

"After examining him, we found that he had cataracts. I said to this old witch doctor: 'We cannot help you unless you are willing to consent to an operation.' I shall never forget his answer as he said, 'I am in your hands; do as you wish with me.' In a few days he was operated on. He was one of those fortunate ones who are able to see when the bandages are removed. Then he left the hospital. I wondered when we should see that witch doctor again. Nearly all our patients come back from time to time. Twelve months do not pass without them returning and telling us how they are. They are really the most grateful people in the world.

"In church on Sunday morning—there was a congregation of about a thousand people—about halfway through the minister's sermon I saw the front door of the church opening slowly, and there stood the witch doctor, carrying in a bundle wrapped in skin everything that was dear and sacred to him. He carried his divining basket over which he had prayed every morning and every evening. He also had all of those charms with which he had practiced 'medicine' during his career as a witch doctor. He had never attended a church service before. He did not understand what it was to sing hymns. He looked about him, and then walked slowly right up into the pulpit. He touched the minister on the shoulder and whispered to him as if to say: 'You have said enough for this morning; let me say something.' The minister, without a word of explanation, sat down and the old witch doctor put his great bundle in front of him.

"He stood before that congregation and gave them that morning a sermon they will never forget. He told them how with that divining basket and those charms he had practiced medicine; how he would not treat anyone unless he had first brought him a handsome fee; how his world's goods had accumulated until he became the wealthiest man in the whole community; and then of how his blindness came on, and how he went to the witch doctors himself, and each one of them said, 'If you pay me sufficiently I can cure you.' So he began to hand out again all the things he had accumulated during his lifetime, and continued doing so until he had visited every native doctor in the whole community. When he had spent all he had, and had nothing left, and was still blind, someone said, 'Why don't you try the mission hopital?' He told the congregation about the mission hospital, how he went through the operation, and of his joy when he could see again. Taking up his bundle, he put all those things sacred to him in the pastor's arms, and said, 'Do as you like with these. Burn them and destroy them; I shall never require them again.' He then took his seat in the front row among the church elders. That morning he condemned every native doctor carrying on witchcraft in Africa.

"I watched as the weeks passed to see if that witch doctor would be faithful. Each Sunday morning he was there in the same pew, and one Sunday he rose up and publicly asked that he might join one of the catechumen classes. He remained for a year studying, and at the end of the year he was received into the membership of the church. As the weeks passed he still continued to attend all church services.

"I want to go back to Africa to see if that old witch doctor is still in the front pew of our church. I want to go back to see the others who have been brought into the church and who are filling those pews. I want to go back again to help and to talk with those who have not heard of our Lord so that Jesus shall reign in their lives, bringing them healing for body, mind and soul!"

* * * * * *

It was my privilege to be in Chissamba a few months ago. At the morning service one of the first questions I asked was: "Where is the old witch doctor?" "Right there in the front row you will find him," said Dr. Strangway, his face all wreathed in smiles which revealed his pleasure that his hope had been realized.—Denzil G. Ridout, in "The Church School" Magazine.

MY STRENGTHENER

Here in my workshop where I toil
 Till head and hands are well nigh spent,
Out on the road where the dust and soil
 Fall thick on garments worn and rent,
Or in the kitchen where I bake
 The bread the little children eat,
He comes, His hands of strength I take,
 And every task grows sweet.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Harmony Church, Yarborough Charge, Rev. J. F. Farr, Pastor.—We have been enjoying some fine messages delivered by our pastor, who has filled each appointment since our last report.

There has been a decrease in our Sunday school attendance for the last two months due to the fear of polio.

The Woman's Auxiliary has been meeting regularly. It met with Mrs. W. J. Page last month and with Mrs. Henry Balentine this month. At the conclusion of the programs delicious refreshments were served.

The third quarterly conference for the M.E. Church, South, was held April 2 at Harmony church, with the usual attendance of officials. The presiding elder, Rev. R. F. Morris, was in charge. The regular routine of reports and incidental business was followed. Nominees for delegate to the next annual conference were selected. Ralph Hughes of the Harmony church was chosen. The following churches compose this charge: Kings Chapel, Lebanon, Harmony (M. P.), and Mt. Bethel.

The Christian Endeavor society has been meeting each Sunday night with an average attendance of 15. The society has recently presented the church with new carpet.

Spring Church, Spring Church Charge, Rev. J. E. Garlington, Pastor.—On the fourth Sunday morning in July the young people presented "The Unlighted Cross," which was a complete success. Everyone enjoyed not only the play but the music rendered by the choir. Mr. Tar Clark, of Roanoke Rapids, sang a solo at the morning service, and Mrs. Miller sang in the afternoon. Rev. W. M. Howard, pastor of Halifax charge, brought us a wonderful message in the afternoon. He used as his text a part of the 15th verse of the 14th chapter of Exodus, "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward." Mr. Howard left with us thoughts that will help us to go forward in our Christian duties in building the Kingdom of God. We hope he will come back and preach for us again. We are grateful to the large audience for a nice offering.

We want to thank Mr. Garlington, Miss Virginia Massey and Mrs. Ellis Crew for training the young people in getting up this play; especially Mr. Garlington, as he not only helped to train them, but took part in the play.

On the second Sunday evening in August at 8 o'clock our Auxiliary is having a program in our church. We are hoping to have a large audience. The Junior Choir from the Methodist church in Weldon has consented to come sing for us. Mr. Clark and Mrs. Miller will also sing, with numbers from our own choir and Pleasant Hill.

Our revival will begin on the fourth Sunday in August, with Rev. Mr. Larkin, district superintendent of Rocky Mount district, as pulpit help. We feel we are indeed fortunate in having Rev. Mr. Larkin come to us. There will be two services on Sunday, with dinner on the grounds. The services during the week will be afternoon and night. We invite our many friends to come worship with us.

We are delighted to have Mr. Garlington's mother, father and sister in our community. They came from Louisiana several weeks ago to visit him, and will stay until the first of September.

We are glad to report Mrs. G. W. Massey able to be up at home in a rolling chair. She broke her knee cap several weeks back.

We have choir practice once each week, with Mrs. Miller as director. The singing is much improved. The choir will meet in the home of the writer Wednesday night of this week.

We hope to have new pews for our church by the fourth Sunday in August.

Lincolnton, Rev. W. L. Harkey, Pastor.—Our church held a Home-Coming Day the fourth Sunday in July. We had a wonderful program throughout the day. There were many old members who attended Sunday school, and quite a few visitors were present. At 11 o'clock Hon. Charles A. Jonas, former U. S. Congressman, delivered an interesting address to a large congregation. Dinner was served on the church lawn at 1 o'clock. The tables were loaded with delicious things to eat, and everyone really enjoyed the occasion. At 2 o'clock some young folks from Bess Chapel, our sister church, gave a pageant based on missionary work. These young folks surely are getting some wonderful training.

In spite of the hot weather, our Sunday school attendance has been normal. The Christian Endeavor societies have also been having good attendance. The Junior society is planning to put on a pageant next Sunday night during the preaching hour. Our young folks are receiving splendid training also.

Our pastor has been in ill health for the last few months, but is improving now. We are hoping that he will be back to normal very soon.

Christ Methodist Church, Henderson, Rev. T. J. Whitehead, Pastor.—The union services which are held each Sunday evening in the Henderson churches are being well attended.

The service was held at Christ Methodist church the fourth Sunday evening. The pastor, Rev. T. J. Whitehead, being absent, Rev. R. E. Brown of the First Methodist church, presided, with Rev. J. Everette Neese of the Congregational - Christian church, preaching the sermon. Mr. Paul Patterson, violinist, and Miss Hallie Frank Mills, organist, furnished the special music for this service.

Sunday morning the Rosa Harris Bible class joined the Philathea class for the study period with Mrs. L. R. Gooch as teacher.

The Men's Bible class of Christ Methodist church met with the men's class of the First Methodist church recently. We are pleased with the fine spirit of cooperation, not only between these churches, but among all the churches of Henderson.

The annual picnic for the children will be held soon.

The Woman's Auxiliary had its July meeting with Mrs. L. R. Gooch. The members were asked to bring clothing to be sent to Pine Ridge.

Circle No. 1, with Mrs. Glenn Satterwhite chairman, met with Mrs. W. H. Grissom; Circle No. 2, Mrs. J. T. Whitehead, chairman, met at the church. The circles are planning to hold a joint meeting at the Kings Daughters Park in August.

Mr. J. W. Whitehead has returned home after visiting his son and daughter-in-law, Rev. and Mrs. T. J. Whitehead.

Mrs. R. M. Andrews of Greensboro and Miss Mabel Harris of Westminster, Md., have been visiting their father, Mr. S. R. Harris.

The following announcement will be of interest to a number of friends: "Mrs. James Monroe Bowling announces the marriage of her daughter, Minnie Anne, to Mr. Joe Pierce Whitehead, on June 20, 1939, Frederickburg, Va. They will be at home after September 1st in New York City.

Mrs. W. C. Lynch, of Edgefield, S. C., who has been visiting her father, Mr. G. B. Harris, has returned home.

We are glad to have with us again, Mrs. W. T. Nuckels, Misses Elizabeth Fox and Mary Young.

George Gooch has returned from New York City where he visited Mr. and Mrs. Farquhard Best and attended the World's Fair.

It was decided Sunday that instead of having the annual picnic, the young people and children would be taken for a hay-ride or joy-ride, after which they will meet the older people at the Kings Daughters Park, Wednesday evening, where a Brunswick stew will be served.

Friends of Mrs. S. M. Hicks, who is the mother of Mrs. H. O. Falkner, will regret to learn of her serious illness. May our Heavenly Father be very dear to her and the family during these trying hours.

Sunday afternoon Rev. Mr. Whitehead made an address at Louisburg. Mrs. Clyde L. Finch also spoke at this meeting.

Sunday, 21 local churches in seven pastoral charge of the denomination in Vance county met to celebrate Methodist Union, consummated a few months ago. All of the churches came together in the service in the First Methodist church in Henderson in

He was elected Bishop at the uniting conference and was assigned to the Richmond, Va., area, which includes the North Carolina conference . Bishop Peele is a native of North Carolina and as pastor served some of the outstanding churches in North Carolina, and was presiding elder of the Greensboro district at the time of his election.

Rev. R. E. Brown presided at this service. He presented Rev. T. J. Whitehead, who in turn introduced Bishop Peele. This service was also the union service for the Henderson churches.

Sunday was indeed a happy day. A large congregation helped to celebrate Methodist Union.

Central Church, Asheboro.—Twenty-two members of the Young People's choir, under the direction of Tom Houts, director of religious activities at the church, gave a program of sacred music at Maple Springs Methodist church on Friday evening in connection with a series of services which is being conducted by Hout's father, Rev. T. R. Houts of Leaksville. Accompanying the group were Miss Virginia Lowe, Miss Esther Ross, Mrs. R. W. Wood, D. D. Almond, and Jack Pugh.

The Junior and Young People's choir is contributing greatly to the church program, and interest is increasing daily among the youth of the church. There was a hay ride for the group on Monday evening, with Garland P. Pritchard furnishing the wagons and teams. Rev. and Mrs. N. M. Harrison had 35 of the boys and girls at the Sunset Cafe (Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Trollinger, of Central church, owners and managers) on Sunday evening after the worship hours, for refreshments. Miss Martha and Miss Cynthia Mendenhall entertained the group on Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Redding, Jr., with a melon feast. The L. F. Rosses were hosts during the week to the Young People's division at a melon party at their home on Wainman avenue.

Plans are being formulated for the series of meetings at Central church beginning on September 20.

Mrs. J. J. White and Mrs. John R. Brown were hostesses to the Women's Bible class on Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. White. Miss Leona Wood and Mrs. C. M. King entertained the Friendly S. S. class at the home of Miss Wood on Friday evening.

Mrs. A. R. Lowe was honored on the occasion of her birth anniversary Thursday with a fish fry at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Phillips. There was enough fish, due to the fact that A. R. Lowe and Bud Phillips caught the two fish which weighed ten and six pounds. The guests were members of the Lowe and Phillips families.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Lamb, South Park street, announce the marriage of their daughter, Mildred, to Phalti Shoffner, on Thursday afternoon, June 29, in Central church, with Dr. Taylor reading the marriage vows. The couple are living in Asheboro where Mr. Shoffner is employed in a textile plant.

Miss Elizabeth Phillips and Miss Kate Hammer recently attended a presentation of Paul Green's symphonic pageant at Manteo.

Dr. Worth Ross of Detroit, Mich., was the guest in Asheboro the past week of the members of the family of the late R. R. Ross. Dr. Ross's late father, Dr. George Ross, was for several years a practitioner at Randleman.

Miss Thyra Wright, Miss Opal Giles and W. F. Redding, Jr., have recently returned from a visit to New York and the Exposition.

Caroleen, Rev. H. D. Garmon, Pastor.—Although there hasn't been a report from our church for some time, we are still working for the Lord. Our attendance for Sunday school and church service has been extra good, during these hot July days.

Our pastor was in his meeting in Shelby on the third Sunday of this month, and Rev. Cecil Cothran filled his appointment here. Cecil is a student of Greenville Academy, and being a home boy, a good crowd was present to hear him.

The former M. E. and our church had a union service last Sunday. Our pastor gave us the fifth Sunday because he couldn't be with us on the third Sunday. So the former M. E. members asked us to have the service in their church with our pastor bringing the message. A packed house enjoyed a fine message. On the second Sunday in next month the former M. E. pastor, Rev. Elzie Myers, will preach for us. Our pastor will be gone during the month of August conducting revival meetings.

There are some on the sick list. Mrs. J. M. Radford is real sick at this time.

We can't make a report without mention of the great interest of our young people, both juniors and intermediates. The young ladies' class is working on our church budget. We desire the prayers of each Christian that we may all keep the interest up of these fine young men and women.

Ann Street Methodist Church, Concord, Rev. E. O. Peeler, Pastor, July 31.—Since our last report we have had two very pleasant honors. One was the privilege of having Dr. Forlines speak for us on a Sunday night. Mr. Peler said he had looked forward to having Dr. Forlines with him in a service for some time. Some of us older folk remember Dr. Forlines, as he had visited the Concord church some years ago. We were so glad to see him again and to hear him preach. We hope he comes again some time. And the other was the pleasure of having our President, Dr. J. E. Pritchard, with us on a Sunday morning, and then for the quarterly conference in the afternoon. The reporter could not be present for this service because of illness in the family, but we have heard much from the service and everyone enjoyed both services; so glad to have Dr. Pritchard with us.

As conference is coming a little sooner this year, our stewards are very busy, that we may have everything ready when our pastor and delegate goes to conference, that they may be able to make a good report.

On Thursday night of this week the Sunday school teachers will hold their regular monthly meeting and then go on a picnic.

Our Ladies' Aid society and Missionary Auxiliary are cooperating very well and they hope to have a good report for conference.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Brown as death claimed their little son. Also Mrs. A. M. Honeycutt and family, as death claimed her son, Mr. Robert Honeycutt.

Pleasant Hill, Spring Church Charge, Rev. J. E. Garlington, Pastor.—The reporter and not the church has undergone a summer slump.

Children's Day was observed on the third Sunday in June, using the pageant, "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." This service was fairly well attended, though the offering was not as good as usual.

Our revival began on the first Sunday evening in July and continued throughout the week, closing on the second Sunday morning. Rev. Odell Osteen of Westminster Theological Seminary helped in the revival, and his splendid sermons seemed to have made a very deep impression upon all who heard him. Large congregations attended every service, and eight new members were received into the church—seven by transfer, and one on confession of faith. We appre-

Since our last report the church has had two coats of paint applied on the outside.

Our financial reports show that we are fairly well up with our assessments, with the exception of pastor's salary. That is somewhat behind—as usual.

Mr. Garlington's parents and sister are spending some time at the parsonage. We are very glad to have them in the community.

Guy Crew, a former C. E. president, is spending his vacation with his parents, following his graduation from Norfolk Business College on July 26. Having completed a twelve-months course in eight months, he was also awarded a typing pin, being the second student in the history of the college to ever receive this award.

We are indeed glad to report that Mrs. L. C. Daughtry is able to again attend church services after a long illness.

Hebron Church, Orange Charge, Rev. C. P. Morris, Pastor.—On the fourth Sunday morning in June at 10 o'clock Children's Day was observed at our church with a very impressive program. We were very sorry our pastor was unable to be with us, as he was prevented by sickness.

At 11 o'clock Dr. P. S. Kennett of High Point delivered the memorial sermon, the subject being "Be Unto You a Memorial." This was followed at 12:30 by a picnic dinner on the grounds.

The program was again resumed at 1:30. The memorial address was delivered by Rev. R. C. Stubbins, a former pastor, now pastor of Calvary church, Greensboro. His subject was "The Life That Goes a Little Further."

Following Rev. Mr. Stubbins, Rev. H. F. Surratt of Graham, also a former pastor, spoke of the lives of two ministers who are buried in the Hebron cemetery. First was Rev. W. D. Fogleman who served this church a number of years before his death in 1914. He spoke of the fine Christian character and his belief in the expansion of the Master's work. He was known as a great builder, and many new church buildings were left wherever he went, as a memorial to his work. His work lasted only a short time, about 20 years.

The next character was that of Rev. W. F. Kennett, who served this church at two different periods, first in the early 90's, and later in 1916-1917. He praised him as a man and as one of our leading ministers of his time. He served as president of the annual conference, registered as No. 84 on the conference roll, ordained 1887, was active in the ministry for 37 years, serving a number of charges, the longest pastorate being 17 years. The last nine years he lived a quiet life as an honored superannuate in the city of Greensboro. The end came quietly and peacefully in 1936, and his body was laid to rest in the family plot beside that of his wife and daughter, who preceded him. He is the father of Dr. P. S. Kennett, of High Point College.

A Vacation Church School was held at our church the week of July 3rd, beginning at 8:45 and lasting until 11:30 each morning, with about 40 in attendance. Each evening at 8 o'clock Rev. S. R. Crumpton of Duke University directed a Leadership Training School. We are grateful to Mr. Crumpton and Mr. Morris, who took such an interest in our church school, and we feel that we are indebted to the Duke Endowment for sending us such a leader as Mr. Crumpton.

The stewards held their regular meeting June 21, at the home of Mrs. E. N. Wilkerson, at which time the usual business was transacted.

Circle No. 1 of the Ladies' Auxiliary held their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Ben F. Wilson. The meeting was opened by our leader, Miss Margaret McAdams, using the year's guidebook.

Our revival will begin the second Sunday in August, with Rev. N. G. Bethea assisting.

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Wilson Ratledge

Wilson, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Ratledge, born August 9, 1914, joined West End M. P. church on confession of faith September 4, 1921, and entered into heavenly rest June 17, 1939.

Wilson crowded into 25 years of living more heroic endeavor under tremendous handicap than any person the writer ever knew. In his desire and efforts to achieve he exhibited the spirit of Helen Keller. Injured at the age of seven while playing on the public school grounds, and four years later suffering a complete paralysis of his lower limbs, he spent five years at the Orthopaedic Hospital at Gastonia seeking relief. When Wilson entered this institution he had completed the sixth grade in the Greensboro public schools; for the first two years there he was in too much pain to pursue his studies, but beginning with the third year he completed the seventh, eighth and ninth grades. And when he finished the grammar grades, President Chase, the head of the University of North Carolina, went to Gastonia to present him the first certificate given by that institution for completing the work of the grammar grades. Wilson was not only the first patient there to finish this work, but he made an average of 97 for the year's work.

Wilson learned while there to do beautiful handwork, and took prizes on his basket-weaving. He also had natural musical talent and learned to play many stringed musical instruments; he gave instruction on the guitar, which he played well with the harmonica.

During the years he was confined to his bed he did an enormous amount of reading: fiction, history, psychology, theology, and books in the varied field of medicine. He talked most interesterly on what he had read and kept his interest alive in present-day affairs. We have just read several poems which were written by him before he was 12 years of age, some of which were published in the North Carolina Orthopaedic Hospital, which is the magazine of that hospital. In many of these poems he breathed his ardent love of life in almost every line, together with his determination to overcome the obstacles under which he was living. Although he had the benefit of the skilful services of some of the best physicians at home and in several hospitals, has case became even more hopeless as the years came, and at times he suffered most intensely. Yet during the periods when his sufferings were less severe he conducted most succesfully an agency for current magazines, Christmas cards, etc. He greatly enjoyed the visits of his friends, was most hopeful even in his periods of greatest suffering, and appreciated everything that was done to make him comfortable.

His funeral service, conducted in West End church, was largely attended, and the floral offering was large and beautiful.

The pastor was assisted in the services by the Reverends Messrs. Reavis, Mongerson, and Bowers. HIS PASTOR.

REV. G. F. MILLAWAY

December 19, 1861 - March 22, 1939

Through the pear leaves comes a whisper of him,
As clear soft breezes blow from Thee;
Every day brings to mind a deed of him,
Done while he walked this earth for Thee.
Awed to silence, I feel the spirit of him,
And marvel at the wonders of Thee,
For once in a while there's a glimpse of him
In the tall son bereft at the tree.

"An Appeal From the Present to the Future"

Excerpts from a radio address by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick

Some of the greatest books in the world's literature have been written for a suggestive reason; men ahead of their time, facing their contemporaries disbelief and opposition, knowing that they would not live to see the triumph of the cause they stood for, have set their faith down in a book. Thus they have borne witness against the blindness of their own time and have appealed for their vindication from a hostile present to the future. So Jeremiah, despised and rejected of man, speaking the wisest words uttered in his time on public and spiritual issues only to be scorned, heard God say to him, "Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book." So Isaiah's prophecies came to be preserved. Had his contemporaries believed him and followed his counsel, the chances are that we might not have heard of him. But constrained, as he was, by the antagonism of his own time to make appeal to generations yet unborn, he heard the command, "Now go, write it before them on a tablet, and inscribe it in a book, that it may be for the time to come for a witness forever."

For such characters one feels instinctive admiration. To see a truth that your contemporaries fail to see, to believe in its victory even when you do not expect to witness it, and to put it in a book as an appeal to future generations, shows moral vigor. I wonder if ever in history there was greater need for this type of character than now.

War is wrong—that is clear. But something more than that is clear about war which was not a few years ago—war is self-defeating; it fails; it is suicidal; no one can really win a war; the bigger wars grow, the more intolerable they become; the more we improve implements of war the more they ruin those who wield them.

I do not expect to see peace splendidly victorious in my life time, but if wagering were possible I would wager with you. I would put it in a book. War will vanish along with torture chambers, religious persecution, slavery, and many another curse that once possessed the earth.

Therefore pray for eyes lest we should miss the really momentous affairs of our day. Be sure of this, they are not spectacular and noisy. They are not in the limelight on the public stage. What if the great thing in our time were not violent nationalism but the slowly emerging idea of a world community? What if the great thing in our time were not economic chaos but the slowly growing idea of a new, amazing technology, socially employed to abolish poverty? What if the great thing in our time were not our miserable religious partisanships but the slowly growing possibility of a more united Christendom? What if our children's children, looking back, should say, this was the creative movement of that age to which the future was to belong. Should that be so, our generation would be running true to history.

Some times the human river runs in smooth courses but then come rapids and cataracts and in the tumult men are tempted to cry, "This is the end of the world!" Yet commonly it is the beginning of a new era, with new prospects and new courses. . . . Use your imagination in retrospect on this strange, human river. Suppose you had been a Hebrew in Egypt under Pharaoh trying to make bricks without straw when Moses rose up in indignation against an intolerable situation and killed the taskmaster—how could you have guessed what would come of that. Suppose you had been a Jew in Palestine when the great prophets taught, who, far from seeming great to their contemporaries, were derided and scorned; when Jerusalem fell before invading armies and all the prophets could do was to keep a small remnant true to their spiritual heritage—how could you have guessed what would have come of that? Suppose you had been at Calvary when the terror of the Roman Empire was concentrated on the fearful business of putting a glorious life to a disgraceful end! How could you have seen what would come of that?

In a thousand troubled eras, when the hearts of men turned to water in them for fear, how could we have previsioned the outcome? Yet always the outcome has been a new epoch with larger prospects, new hopes. I tell you, our human life is a river; rapids and cataracts do not stop it." . . .

The world is a cosmic pipe organ, on only a few of whose stops we have played while hundreds more are waiting. That is as true spiritually as it is plainly true physically. There is no telling what divine surprises lie ahead of us. But, whether or no, the conditions for the divine surprises are here waiting. What a universe it is! How unworthy we are to live in it. How it calls for intelligence, for faith, for character—those three—without which the world will give us nothing good but with which it will become indeed a bundle of progressively occurring miracles.

More Good News About N. C. Expenses

A card from Rev. H. L. Isley, the pastor of the Randolph Charge says that all churches on his charge raised Annual Conference Expenses several weeks ago and that the charge is almost out on all Annual Conference claims. Good for Randolph and Brother Isley! Now let others do likewise. It will not be much of a burden for the charges to do this and it will help the Annual Conference tremendously. Who will be next to report the amount raised in full?

Good News From Our Ailing Ministers

A quick business trip to some of our churches in the Eastern part of the state last Friday and Saturday enabled me to see Rev. D. R. Williams at Enfield and Rev. H. S. B. Thompson, one of our honored Superannuates, both of whom have been ill for some time. Brother Williams is considerably improved although he is not yet able to do much work. He preached one Sunday morning a couple of weeks ago and is able to go down street and look after some things. The pastor of the Enfield M. E. Church, South, Rev. W. L. Loy, has largely carried on Brother Williams' work during his illness.

I found that Brother Thompson had improved considerably and that he was planning to go to the Littleton Circuit quarterly conference Saturday afternoon, although he is not able to do much work. He is the keeper of the Nathanael Macon Estate, four miles northwest of Vaughn, N. C., althought I believe he gets his mail from Littleton, R. F. D. 3. This estate is one of the historical spots in that part of the state and many visitors go there to see the old home of Nathanael Macon, State Legislator, member of the House of Representatives and speaker Pro Tem of the U. S. Senate. Those who are passing through Vaughn would do well to go out to this estate only four miles away and see not only Brother Thompson but the estate.

A Sunday Morning At State Street, Lexington

Last Sunday morning was spent with the State Street Church in Lexington, Rev. O. C. Loy, pastor. And it was a most delightful experience to be with this people. One pleasing feature of the service was the high percentage of nice looking young people in the service. Another outstanding thing was the way almost everybody seemed to enter into the worship service. At great sacrifice and considerable cost this congregation several years ago built the educational building of the church plant. This building has a number of Sunday school rooms and a nice auditorium large enough for a good sized congregation. The debt has been quite heavy for them to carry. Our Board of Church Extension has not been able to help as much here as the importance of the situation justified. Now negotiations are going on with the former M. E. South First Church to pay off the indebtedness and to use this as the main plant, erecting an auditorium suitable for the needs of the congregation. This church of ours is located only about one city block from the other church. This unsettled state of things of course makes it difficult to do any aggressive work. If our people had known when they built, that Methodist Union was coming they would have acted accordingly and if they had built at all it would have been further away. But none of us could see into the future far enough to know what problems to avoid. This is Brother Loy's second year with this people and they speak in the highest terms of him. The salary here is not sufficient for a family to live on and if the church should go on another years it will be necessary to supplement the salary. In a congregational meeting Sunday it was agreed that we should try to arrange for a meeting of both congregations and the District Superintendent and myself to see what can be worked out for this place.

A Sunday Afternoon At Mt. Carmel

The afternoon service last Sunday was at Mt. Carmel Church, a few miles west of Lexington. This church is served by Rev. L. E. Mabry who also serves our First Church in Lextington. Last Sunday was Home Coming and Memorial Day at this church and was also the beginning of the revival meeting, Dr. F. W. Paschall being expected Monday to assist during the week. Considerable improvements have been made on the plant during the past few months. The building here is very neat and attractive. The house was well filled Sunday afternoon with several visiting ministers, some of them being from other denominations. The audience was very attentive and it was a pleasure to preach to them. This is Brother Mabry's fourth year on this charge and he has done a good work. The people speak highly of his efforts.

A Sunday Evening At West Thomasville

On the return trip from Lexington I stopped at Thomasville to keep an engagement with the West Thomasville Church. This church is also served by Brother O. C. Loy who serves the State Street Church in Lexington. The building at West Thomasville is of brick construction and makes a splendid appearance. The church seems to be well located, there being no other Methodist church in that part of the city. I heard no suggestion of any problem here growing out of union except that it would be necessary for a regrouping in case State Street did not continue for another year for the West Thomasville church could not support a pastor alone. But there seemed to be a way out of the difficulty here and I hope all works out for the best. In the first part of the service Sunday evening a representative of the Woman's Auxiliary paid a fine compliment to Mrs. Loy for her good work among the women and announced that the Auxiliary had voted to make Mrs. Loy a life member and that they had named the auxiliary for her.

A District Picnic

M. P. ministers and their families in the Greensboro District are invited by District Superintendent Hayes to a picnic at the Battleground Lake for Friday afternoon, September 1. Dr. Hayes suggests that we come early enough for a business meeting before supper. I trust a number of our

The Annual Conference Just "Around the Corner"

Recently I was asked if our people were really preparing for this conference as they usually did? I could not answer that question explicitly. At West End Church we are trying to get ready for it. We cannot, of course, speak for other pastors, but we do know that quite a good deal must be done by many of our pastors in the last quarter, unless a great change has come over us.

Acquiring the Grace of Quietness

In one of his letters to the Church at Thessalonica St. Paul exhorts, "that ye study to be quiet." The Apostle had doubtless been troubled much by some of the noisy members of his congregation. People who set more value on speaking in unknown tongues, and in their amens and hallelujahs, than in any other means of proving their faith in Christ. Of course, these have but little, if any spiritual value since there are so few who are edified by them. Still there are some in our day who delight more in this vociferous sort of religion than in any other. But we want to think of the grace of quietness in a day when so many things occur to disturb us. Every day the printing presses of the world send millions of columns of propaganda designed to stir up bitter memories, create prejudices where there were none and cause unrest among thousands who otherwise would go happily about their daily tasks. To all such this little phrase of the Apostle, "study to be quiet," is timely and of great value. Our age is often called the nervous age; we are too busy to do any thing well, too obsessed with having a good time to enjoy the society of our family and friends; too busy trying to make a living to make a life; just torn with this and that bit of propaganda until our world is indeed a troubled world.

Let us study to be quiet. All of us admire people with paise, who are slow to speak, slow to anger, and slow to believe the world is coming to an end because some writer or speaker has a disordered stomach or a mind poisoned by falsehood and passes on his bad dreams to us. To be quiet in times of adversity when your neighbors are panicky and your national leaders are stampeded, somewhat expresses the meaning of this phrase; to feel with Robert Browning that "God's in His heaven, all's right with the world" and with the Psalmist to heard the Lord say, "Be still and know that I am God."

May we not voice the faith of the Psalmist as he cried out, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? Why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him for the help of His countenance."

Revenge converts a little right into a great wrong.—German Proverb.

ON THE CHINESE SITUATION

Poverty in its grimmest aspects is eating the hearts out of the Chinese living in Japanese occupied Nanking. Facts and figures presented in a survey which has just reached this country, and which are made by M. Searle Bates, an American professor of history at the University of Nanking, tell plainly the sorry tale of Japan's "order" in Nanking.

Since Great Britain has just recognized Japan's right to go on maintaining this "order in the Far East," the facts as to what conditions make up that "order" are timely.

"Chinese economic life in Nanking is indeed sick," Mr. Bates states in the survey. He points out that loss of employment to the Chinese in Nanking since the occupation of that city by Japanese military strategists, has been tremendous. The current 27 per cent of employed would have to be increased by half to bring employment up to normal.

He shows that there has been a great shift among the Chinese employed from middle class occupations to the most poorly paid type of labor. He shows that larger and larger numbers of women have been forced out into the wage earning world, at practically slave labor rates. He shows that employed persons are earning about 40 per cent of what they formerly earned, and that over fifty per cent of the families are unable to live even meagerly, on what their employed members can earn.

That the Japanese occupation of Nanking has most certainly brought no economic stability or order into the Chinese lives in Nanking is evident in every statistical table presented in his survey.

Mr. Bates sent his investigators into every fiftieth house in Nanking. They interviewed families representing 7,161 persons, living in various sections of Nanking. From this the figures for the entire population of the city were computed.

The figures, in Chinese currency, are difficult to translate in American terms. But when the survey states that almost half of the employed persons make less than $10 a month in Chinese currency, and that rice alone costs $8.00 a shih tan, which is 2.8 American bushels, one can make an attempt to imagine the conditions.

The survey recognizes the "inexorable injuries of the war situation." "But beyond them," it states, "are other troubles that keep men poor. It is better not to discuss here the enforced use of military notes, the havoc wrought by opium and heroin, the continual interference with personal liberty and private property, because they are so closely linked with military procedure. They are, however, important bars to economic improvement.

"Apparently less politico-military and more largely economic in their whole working," the survey continues, "are the monopolistic and restrictive controls. Chinese business men are throttled by the monopol of transportation and the discriminatory use of it to control all wholesale trade. They complain bitterly that they and their people are reduced to the status of collies and shop-boys for an alien economy. Specifically, they point out monopolies or discriminatory controls in such varied lines as the following: coal, salt, banking, cotton, metals, cement, lime, electric and water installations. Furthermore, they assert that when a Chinese business is painfully developed after the general experience of burning, looting, and confiscation of commercial sites, it is frequently threatened and hampered until it accepts a Japanese partner, who then provides the average necessary permits and a measure of security, in exchange for a first claim on returns and a managerial voice that can summon bayonets at will. Under such conditions there cannot be much revival of Chinese commercial and industrial enterprise."

This, Japan, and even Great Britain, would have us believe is the "civilizing influence" which is penetrating China.

ONLY ONE RESPONSE

If the possession of gold wasn't illegal, I think I would give a gold medal suitably engraved to Rev. H. L. Isley for being the only one who has so far responded to the request I made at High Point the other day, namely, to send me a list of books they would be willing to donate to the Seminary Library. I had hoped the brethren would do what I asked and so save me a bit of postage and extra work. But it appears I shall have to write and remind them again.

In the meantime won't you preachers look over your books and see if you have books that you can give to the Seminary Library? As I told some of you, Dr. Forlines is appealing to the folks in North Carolina to give 1,000 books. (He wants 4,000 altogether; he thinks one-fourth of that number is our share.) He is asking us to give as much as $2.50 to cover the cost per volume, leaving the selection to him. But preachers may not have that much money; they may, however, have books that the Seminary can use and that, having been read, are of little use to the present owners. Won't you send me a list of such books. I will send the lists on to Dr. Forlines. He will make a selection and get in touch with the donors.

I am asking the preachers to do one other thing: there are doubtless folks on your charge who would be glad to donate the price of a book for the Seminary Library. Won't you give them a chance by asking them to help? I'd like to have the names of such folks. Possibly we'll print a list in the HERALD. Send any money you may get to Rev. C. E. Forlines, Westminster, Md.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

ELISHA: A LIFE OF HELPFULNESS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, August 13

Lesson Text—2 Kings 5:1-10, 14.

Golden Text—Be ye kind one to another.—Ephesians 4:32.

In our study of Elijah and his great contest on Mount Carmel we singled out the dominant note in his character and held it up to the world as a vital trait for all true Christians—the virtue of courage. However, it must not be concluded that one virtue can product a godly life. The robe of righteousness, like Joseph's coat, is one of many colors. Now we can say with consistency, however, that though a true godly character must be possessed of each of these virtues, yet in each life one will come to the front as his dominant trait of character. Thus as we turn from our study of courage to that of kindness or helpfulness as seen in the life of the prophet, Elisha, it does not follow that Elijah's life would afford no studies in helpfulness or kindness nor that Elisha's had none of courage but rather that we are seeking a life in which kindness dominates.

As admitted before, courage in our own day of returning to "might makes right" is a saving virtue of Christianity, yet the victory of Christ will be ultimately won by that of helpfulness, which is to say, love. With Elisha we see how kindness to a foreign soldier made possible by his need kept down a quarrel and perhaps a war between two nations. The king of Israel, when he received the letter from the king of Syria presenting the needs of Noaman, right away began to see in that request a sign of a quarrel. "Am I God," said he, "to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? . . . see how he seeketh a quarrel with me." Can we not see in this wail of a suspicious monarch a parable of our present crisis? If we all will think soberly of the history of this present war scare it will be admitted that too long after the Versailles Treaty the victor nations turned a cold shoulder to the obvious needs of other nations who looked to them for help. Fearing like Israel's king to even deal frankly and justly with their problem these nations refuse to resort to the counsel of their Christian prophets until it now appears that the thing they feared will come because of this very insidious mistake. These defeated nations first came to us in an earnest, friendly search for help, but now some of them are coming with defiant hate and challenge to take what they need by force if possible. Now we who believe in what Elisha had to offer his king to solve his problem are asking ourselves why Elisha with his gospel of kindness and helpfulness did not appear on the scene years ago. And at the same time our rulers must work feverishly at the task of building weapons of hate because of the growing lack of weapons of love. If war does come the foot note of history will be simply this: What a pity, this fearful slaughter, when a little bit of kindness at the right time would have prevented.

"So many gods, so many creeds
So many paths that wind and wind
When just the art of being kind
Is all this sad world needs."
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.
(The World's Need).

The great truth of this lesson in kindness shows that to practice this high virtue of kindness calls in to action the other virtues of the Christian religion. They are each complimentary to the other. The lack of courage caused the king of Israel to forget his kindness to Naoman. David Garrick once said, "a fellow-feeling makes one wondrous kind," which is simply to say that kindness is lacking because men have lost the other virtue of brotherhood. We blindly neglect our brother in his needs not so much in our lack of kindness as in our lack of some of these other virtues which would give our love a chance to function. Deep in the heart of every true Christian there is stirred a deep desire to be helpful and kind to the sad-faced army of out-cast peoples who are approaching our borders for much needed help every day. Why then, it must be justly asked, if we are kind do we refuse them haven and allow them in despair to try that kindness of suicide death? The voice of Elisha would say in condemnation of us that we had sacrificed our kindness on the altar of the god of fear, selfishness and distrust, made possible by our lack of courage.

"There is no death of kindness
In this world of ours;
Only in our blindness
We gather thorns for flowers."

NATIONALIZED INDUSTRY

By REV. W. M. BOURS

While the promotion of public works toward the solution of urgent problems of unemployment is a magnificent display of national enterprise, a counter-balance of prudent conservatism is required as an equitable safeguard to the resources of the country's citizenry.

The tendencies of any phase of legislation toward the spending of money honestly earned by the sweat of men's brows, through excessive taxation, not only cheapens money in extant lawful investments, but also contributes toward a state of beggary through a dissipation of the rewards of industry in private enterprises as well as a disruption of a wholesome democratic spirit by a lowering of family pride and thrift.

Stalwart citizenry is not built upon the expectation that others than one's economic debtors will help to pay the bills for the maintenance of personal or domestic credit.—Supreme Council Bulletin.

PRESIDENT OF THE ENGLISH METHODIST CONFERENCE ON THE NEW BIRTH

It does not augur well whenever the doctrine of regeneration recedes to the hitherland and is superceded by literary groups and a keep-fit movement. No one need speak lightly of these activities, but what the fit man and woman is to do should also be our concern. In spite of the fact that infants have been baptized, young people confirmed, and Sunday schools graded the major part of the community is caught and held in the meshes of a desolating worldliness. The only hope for these people is the new birth. The thrilling implication of Jesus Christ's words to Nicodemus is not that a man must be born again but that he can be born again. There is the miracle of mercy and of grace. A man with a heart blackened by vice, or hard as pride and selfishness can make it, can be cleansed, softened, renewed—

> "A humble, lowly, contrite heart, > Believing, true and clean."

We are not unmindful of what has happened—discoveries have been made, the intellectual complexion of the world has changed—but no discovery in the physical world has robbed sin of its pervasive consequences. Nothing has made superfluous the atoning death of Christ. There is still only one way to heaven.

Some weeks ago I traveled the thirty-six miles from Exeter to Shebbear, and reflected as I did so that a greater man did the same journey a hundred years before. How different it was! He walked and I rode—instead of a cart-track a broad highway; instead of laden women trudging with heavy load to the nearest market town, well-dressed ladies who refuse to grow old, careering through the countryside at fifty miles an hour. How changed! Yes, and how much the same! The birds sang then as they do now, the lambs played exactly the same games in the fields. There was the same sun and heavenly breezes, and the same noble hills, which in a hundred or a thousand years have not grown one grey hair. And so it is with the heart of man. It is still true that the one insistent question of awakened humanity is, "What must I do to be saved?"

The church that has the answer to this question has the future of the Kingdom of God in its keeping. Methodism would be faithless to its past, its founder, and its Lord if it were content to place the outcast in a Salvation Army shelter and simply cultivate the good opinion of people who are more at home at a bazaar than in a prayer meeting.

The evangelist is sure of three truths—God's love and grace, man's sin and need, and the power of Christ to save the most sinful man on earth. There is always the danger of the church becoming a comfortable place for the once-born, and these are the inner problem of many a church. They protect their minister as long as he is reasonably tame, they support the funds, an ask only that the sermon shall be brief, soothing, and full of interest.

But early Methodist literature is the story of conversions. "The Lives of the Early Methodist Preachers" are six little volumes which would be mere rags and sawdust if the stories of conversion were taken out of them. Such stories, too, are the life-blood of missionary literature.

If, then, what I have been saying is true—and I have no doubt about it—should it not to our purpose, by the grace of God, to go back to our churches with whatever method may seem best to us but with a firm resolve to preach Christ as the one and only Saviour of every sinful man?—The Methodist Recorder.

YOUTH YOKED WITH CHRIST

George McDonald, in one of his charming books, tells of a little child who wished that he was an artist so that he might help God to paint His clouds and sunsets. We smile at this childish wish, but harbor the same desire for who does not long to help God in some part of His wide work? The joy of it is that the desire may be gratified. Paul said, "We are laborers with God."

The first duty of every young person is to acknowledge the obligation of obedience to Christ as the Master of life. The heroic old prophet Jeremiah said, "It is a good thing for a young man that he bear the yoke in his youth." The "yoke" means harnessed for service. The ox that is not yoked will pull no load, nor will the horse that is not harnessed. When the prophet said that it was a good thing for a young man to bear the yoke in youth, he was thinking of the obligation which rests upon every young life. The master of every youth is Christ; the field of effort is the Church; the purpose of labor is the building of the kingdom of God in the world. The young person who acknowledges his obligation to Jesus Christ will be obedient to that universal obligation. The ship which is under control of the helm may be driven straight to the port in spite of wind and tide, but you can do nothing with a ship with a broken helm. You can do much with one who recognizes God's obligation, but those who do not feel this restraining hand are merely driftwood, tossed by the billows and dashed upon the rock.

Life must be unified by a great purpose. A pile of steel filings may be of the finest quality, and may weigh tons, but these unrelated bits have no value until welded into a great shaft and attached to an engine. Then they will drive a steamship across the Atlantic in five days. Until a young person's life is pledged to definite work for Christ, it will be but a confused heap of impulses. But bind these together and they will make life mighty. The young person who floats along the line of least resistance, avoiding every thing that looks like hard work, is useless. He who has neither plan nor program for life, who follows a happy-go-lucky policy, is of little worth. Too many of our young people are like "Flanigan's" train, "off again, on again, gone again." Young people are red blooded, full of energy, always on the move, but until their lives are tied to a definite thing, their energy will be wasted and their lives will be but a mass of beginning and endings. They will be under full head of steam but bound nowhere.

Dean Swift had an appointment to perform a marriage. His train was delayed. It reached the city at the exact hour of the wedding. Rushing through the crowded depot he sprang into a jaunting car and shouted to the driver, "Drive like Jehu, I am late." The driver struck his horse a cruel cut and went tearing down the stony street. The Dean, a short fleshy man, had difficulty in keeping his seat, but finally noticed that they were going in the wrong direction and angrily shouted to the driver, "Where are you going?" "I don't know, Sir. You didn't tell me where you wanted to go, you told me to drive like Jehu and I am doing it."

Everywhere we find young people of splendid ability who work like Jehu, but accomplish little becauce their activities are not concentrated upon some worthy object.—The United Presbyterian.

REAL LEADERS FOR DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS

The provision made by the Uniting Conference that the second and the third quartely conference shall be held at the discretion of the district superintendent is of far-reaching consequences. This provision allows the superintendent to give one-half of his time to the first and the fourth round of quarterly conferences in the usual routine of his office; the other half he is free to show himself to be a real leader in his district. In this, he will shine as a leader, or else he will prove himself to be a "dud."

More and more our Methodist people are coming to look to the men in charge of districts to be leaders who can enterprise new undertakings and can get the best results in their work with pastors and lay leaders on their districts. Such leadership has become impossible on big districts, with four rounds to make each year, often crowding three conferences into each Sunday. Now this need not be with the "calling of questions" turned over to the pastors, most of whom can hold a quarterly conference fully as well as the district superintendent.

We are free to admit that this new plan will be more difficult than the old one of "calling the questions." It will test the real ability of the man in charge to lead in all the enterprises of his district. In former years a district was often regarded a shelf on which to place a man who had lost his ability to hold a leading appointment. But that view has passed and, with the new provision, still other demands will be made of district superintendents. Only those who can show themselves outstanding leaders, able to use their own time and the resources of their preachers in the finest and most effective way, can hope to hold their jobs. And why should they?

We favor the limited term of the Episcopacy so that it will be possible, when there are bishops who disclose to their brethren that they are not qualified for the work of the Episcopacy, they can be relieved. The same rule should hold with district superintendents. Too fine a field for great service is this to be encumbered by men too lazy or too inefficient to lead on in a great way. Only men with a passion for conquest, eager to give to God the best they have, can lead as district superintendents. This present provision certainly makes possible a new day for the sub-bishops in the Methodist church. But they must be men of good natural endowments and ready and willing to bear the cross in the forefront as they lead the laborers in the great needy fields of every district in American Methodism. — N. C. Christian Advocate.

BORN OF ADVERSITY

Some of the finest tangible gifts and most constructive influences which have enhanced our civilization were given to past, present and succeeding generations by those suffering from serious handicap, physical or otherwise, but who unselfishly looked beyond their own afflictions to the benefit, welfare and happiness of their more fortunate fellows.

An invalid Southern woman, on her way by steamboat up the Potomac River to a hospital, noted the deserted ruins of a once-great mansion, the home of George Washington, and to her came a vision from which was born, through loving labor and sacrifice, a nation-wide association composed of patriotic American women, who have made of Mount Vernon a national shrine, visited by reverent thousands of American citizens every years, and by many distinguished guests from other nations. This great shrine "of each patriot's devotion" was made possible through the foresight and unselfed labor of one frail woman whose indomitable courage enabled her to fully realize her glorious vision—to give to the hallowed home of our First President that sanctity, reverence, and constant care it so richly merits.

A God-fearing English allegorist of the 17th century, languishing in a dismal prison cell, caught a vision and penned a mighty volume dealing with Christian fortitude in the face of despair, a soul-cheering, spirit-raising work that has lived, and will live, through the years.

A young Italian music student, on the verge of starvation with not a lira in his pocket, eagerly grasped at an opportunity to compose an operetta that might, in a competitive contest, win a small cash prize. He retired to his wretched lodgings and there, hungry and ragged as he was, composed a most beautiful score of operatic music, which is widely recognized today and will live long after the now-famous composer has gone to his rest.

A little gnome-like figure of a man, a hunchback, anything but attractive from a physical standpoint, but an inventive genius in the field of electrical science, unselfishly gave to the world the fruits of his talents—and mankind has profited immeasurably thereby.

A woman, born without sight or hearing, seemingly doomed from the beginning to a pitiable existence, was nevertheless possessed of a spirit that would not admit defeat. Although her battle was most severe and fought under a terrible handicap, this woman learned to speak and, through her highly sensitized fingers, learned to "see" and "hear." Her courageous example has inspired countless thousands and today she stands out prominently among the distinguished women of America.

In view of the above, Shakespeare's oft-quoted line; "Sweet are the uses of adversity," takes on a new significance, and we are inclined to the belief that the Heavenly Father grants to our less physically fortunate brothers and sisters certain compensating blessings which the able-bodied do not possess—nor need.—Supreme Council Bulletin.

GIVING IS LIVING

By Norman S. Ream

"Go, break to the needy sweet charity's bread,
For giving is living," the angel said.
"And must I keep giving again and again?"
My peevish and selfish answer ran.
"Oh, no!" asid the angel, piercing me through,
"Just give 'til the Master stops giving to you!"

If every Methodist and every Christian would just keep giving until the Master stops giving to him, as expressed in the above verse, what a glorious future the church would have! If every Christian would just stop to think what could be done if he would share his wealth with his fellow men!

When I use the word "wealth" I am not concentrating on material possessions alone. Many people do not realize that their time and their talents are also needed to help the church to function as the greatest institution in the world. In early England a steward was a person of great responsibility. It is even so today. Every church member has a responsibility to share his time, talents, and money to help the church to spread the teachings that the world is equally waiting for and which will ultimately save the world from destruction by its own hand.

The church is analogous to a family. As the family has expenses to meet every month, so the church has its bills to pay. The family, through the payment of taxes, provides for the education of its children. The church, through its missionaries, provides for the Christian education of the children of God.

Christian giving is not material wealth for material wealth, but material wealth for spiritual wealth. If you want your heart to be in the cause of Christianity, then your wealth, too, must be there.

There are 168 hours in a week. How many of them do you share with Christ? The same logic applies to Christianity as applies to life; you get out of it just what you put into it. ". . . 'For giving is living,' the angel said." Those who share many hours a week with Christ receive a great joy and sense of spiritual security which those who live within themselves never realize even exists.

Great Salt Lake is dead. The reason it is dead is because it keeps within itself everything it receives. Just as a sea or lake becomes dead when it takes much and gives nothing, so will a personality die if it refuses to share with others the gifts that it has received. I recall what one preacher said at conference-institute last summer. He said: "What a great joy it would be if every time the preacher asks a member of the church to do something, that person would answer, 'Why sure, I'll do it and be glad to get the chance.'" The preacher would have to be a strong man to withstand the shock. Every person has something he can do better than anyone else. Why not use that "something" before it becomes a dead asset?—From a prize winning essay written for a Utah Conference Stewardship festival. Reprinted from "The Stewardship Spokesman."

WHOM SHALL WE HONOR?

At the Quarterly Meeting of the Branch of Woman's Work in July, the needs of our Theological Seminary were discussed and the following recommendation was adopted:

"We recommend that we support Dr. Forlines in his plans to make the Seminary an "A Grade" institution by helping to supply the needed volumes for the Library.

"In order to find a way by which this may be done, we recommend that the books be given in honor or in memory of people, and that a sticker be placed in the books indicating by whom they are given and in whose honor.

"That the promotion of this plan be put in the hands of the Branch Secretary of Christian Education and the Chairman of Districts."

On the same day a committee of men was appointed by the Mid-Year Conference to work in conjunction with the above committee.

The joint committee is planning to send letters to District Chairmen, Auxiliary Secretaries of Christian Education, pastors and other church leaders.

Dr. Forlines has asked the North Carolina Conference for one thousand books, or the equivalent in money, and we are sure that each of our Auxiliaries and many individuals will wish to contribute the price of one or more books at $2.50 per volume.

We suggest that the donors indicate whose name shall be placed in the books purchased with their money. Why not honor parents, friends, or faithful pastor, a Sunday School Superintendent, Auxiliary President—or one of the men who has made the Seminary what it is?

"All the world loves a lover" is an old saying which is not more true than that all women are interested in young preachers who are preparing to give their lives to the greatest work in the world. Let us show our interest by contributing to their preparation for their life work.

OUR STORY PAGE

THE GREAT STOVE WAR

Mary Deming, her feet scarcely touching the floor, sat in the high boxed-in pew of the old Litchfield Church and wished for a stove. To be sure her mother had brought their footstove, but how could a tiny box like that warm the feet of a family of five? Mr. Beecher, too, was preaching one of his very long sermons. Over an hour already, she knew from casting a wistful glance at the hour-glass and then in hopes of forgetting the cold, she gazed at the canopy hanging on a thin rod over the preacher's head. "Why doesn't it fall," she wondered as she often had wondered before. Harriet Beecher, the gay little daughter of the minister, called it a turnip.

"Oh, dear," thought Mary, turning her attention from the big turnip to the congregation, "why can't I stand up like Deacon Trowbridge and stretch my arms and legs?" But only deacons did that, her mother said. Children must sit very still. Hopefully she held out her hand to her grandmother who was chewing fennel-seeds to keep herself awake.

But even the fennel-seeds which grandmother stealthily drew out of her deep pockets would not relieve the cold feeling. Shivering, she wished she had on her heavy coat lined with rabbit's fur. Why couldn't the Litchfield Church have a stove? Her father, who had been down to the coast towns in the war of 1812, said most of the churches there had stoves. That was four years ago, and Litchfield still had none. Only the week before she had heard her father telling Mr. Beecher that he thought they were behind the times, but Mr. Beecher had replied that while he was entirely in favor of a stove, there were some of the members who were set against having any new-fangled heating invention, and said it must be that people were growing weak if they needed to be kept warm while attending church.

Mary, looking around at some of the folks who were opposed, wished that she were big enough to say something they would listen to. And so, she knew, did Harriet Beecher and all the children who had to sit with cold feet three hours at a stretch.

All the way home, riding in the stout two-seated wagon, she rubbed her feet together and considered the injustice, until finally arriving at their big farmhouse and standing before the fireplace she spoke right out, "Father," she said, planting her feet squarely together, "I speak for all the children when I say to you that we want a stove."

"That we do," backed up her brother, William, though a little taken back by his young sister's daring.

"Yes," continued Mary in her high-pitched voice, "and if these sticklers for a cold church don't want one, let them stay outside under the apple tree."

"Mary," and her mother's voice was stern, "it is not proper so to speak of your elders, but I do agree, John, that it is time to do more than argue about it. Of course, when there was no such thing as a stove, we were glad to endure the cold, but now it is quite different."

"Well," said Mr. Deming slowly, "I'll tell you a secret if you'll be sure to keep it. Some of us younger fellows are getting so tired of this stove war that we have decided to act on our own. Although Deacon Peck is as stubborn as ever, Mr. Beecher says that there have been many won over to our side. So today seven of us have decided to buy a stove and set it up before another Sunday."

"A stove," echoed Mary, and spun around the room like an animated top.

The week seemed long. Briskly the stove war was raging with many of the neighbors bringing in reports of what both sides were saying, one report stating that those opposed would throw out a stove if one were purchased.

While her father did little talking, Mary noted that he was one who made a trip to the city to buy the stove and bring it up over the hills in the big wagon with his two gray horses. But not until Saturday afternoon did they think it wise to set up the stove and connect it with the chimney that the committee had built some time before when the agitation for the stove had started.

Never before had Mary felt so excited, and for once longed for Sunday to come.

When Sunday came, it was warm. One of those late warm spells had come to the New England hills. "Indian summer," smiled grandmother archly, she being one not entirely convinced that a stove in church was proper, "sort of a joke on the stove."

"Not the only joke," laughed her father with a mysterious twinkle in his eyes.

"Maybe we'll be too hot," said mother. "Strange how last Sunday was so cold we sat shivering, and now we have the stove, it's come off hot like this."

Mary didn't worry about that. It was enough for her that the stove was there. Even before they arrived at the church, she could see the teams driving into the horse-sheds. Everybody was going to be on hand.

Tip-toeing with anticipation, she followed her father and mother in. How warm the sun shone through the many windows while there, standing in the middle with its long black pipe curving to the chimney, was the much-discussed stove, a black, oblong affair, looking solemn enough, Mary thought, for any church.

She was especially glad that they had arrived early and that from their pew she could see the precious new heater. Almost on the edge of the seat she perched as, scanning each person who came in, she tried to tell by his face whether or not he was pleased. Deacon Kilbourn in his fine buff coat was, she noted, smiling jovially. But of course he would, for he had been one of the seven who had made the purchase. Old Deacon Trowbridge, on the other hand, she noticed, was shaking his head doubtfully as he gathered the skirts of his great black cape about him in a manner which seemed to say with his every step, "A stove is an abomination unto the Lord." Then, coming in with his cane, Uncle Noah Stone muttered and scowled as he came down the north aisle as far from the stove as possible. Next came Nathaniel Bunce, young editor of the village paper. Mary felt certain from the way he was rubbing his hands over the stove, that he would write up an excellent article in favor of heat. Mr. Beecher from his high pulpit looked benignly down, while the singers in the gallery sang the psalms with fresh vim.

Mary, delighted, sat back more and more certain of the stove's acceptance. In spite of a few glowering looks and Mrs. Peck's fanning herself with an old palm-leaf, she saw Mr. Beecher striding grandly through the many sheets of sermon. Suddenly, flop went Mrs. Peck's purple bonneted head on her husband's broad shoulder.

''Overcome with the heat,'' whispered grandmother, as Mrs. Peck, with as mush confusion as possible, was led out between her husband and oldest son.

Very handsome in her limpness, Mary thought, as she looked up anxiously to her father who was at that moment exchanging a peculiar glance with Deacon Kilbourn. Mr. Beecher preached right on, not even pausing when the heavy door slammed shut.

''Why doesn't he stop?'' thought Mary. Couldn't he feel how tense everyone was getting? Even her spine tingled. No sooner did he pronounce the ''amen'' than everyone began to talk and not in low tones, either.

''Stifling,'' fumed Uncle Noah, ''that stove must come out.''

''I agree,'' sniffed Mrs. Trowbridge, ''it simply made me so sleepy I couldn't listen to the sermon.''

''Poor Mrs. Peck,'' sighed another, ''I hope she'll recover.''

Never had there been such confusion. What was her father going to do standing by the stove with his hand on the lifter. He was speaking, too. ''I'm sorry you are all suffering from the heat, but please don't lay it on the stove. See, my friends,'' and he lifted the lid, ''there's no fire here. The day being so warm, we thought we would wait until another Sunday.''

Everyone looked amazed, some chagrined, others amused, and those who had been complaining hung their heads sheepishly. A tense moment was relieved by one of Mr. Beecher's contagious laughs and he said, ''Now, let's join hands and sing the doxology.''

Mary slipped her hand into her father's. ''We've won,'' she whispered.

''Yes, Mary,'' he replied, ''and wouldn't it be wonderful if all wars begun with words could end with a handshake, and a song?''—Harriet Smith Hawley, in ''Juniors.''

WHERE THE BLUE BEGINS

By Maj. Frank M. Thompson, U. S. A.

Is the subject of a book written some time ago by Christopher Morley.

It is the story of a man who had a sufficiency of this world's goods, yet found life humdrum and unsatisfactory. He would go, as countless thousands have done, in quest of that which would satisfy.

He makes his way to New York, where he saw the lights of the town, ''paneled in gold against a peacock sky.'' He enters into the glory of that mighty city; its art and architecture. He visits its marts of trade. He goes down to the sea in ships. He finds beauty, romance, courage, conquest, but he does not find the blue. Wearied with his fruitless wanderings, he returns home, and, lo, as he opens his own door the miracle of peace and happiness floods his soul.

Where does the blue begin? In the heart of a young man when he has equipped himself for life's work; when he and another join hands; when they look with eyes of wonder on their first born; when grown old they see their dreams realized in their sons and daughters.

Where does it begin? At the end of a good day, in a little garden, in a home where there are laughing children and love.

Where does the blue begin? Within my heart
And there it ends, and there's its whole expanse.
For there it burns, a crystal flame apart
From intellect and worldly circumstance.
And where it burns most fiercely, that is art;
But when it flickers gently, that's romance.

To the Leader

This is the first of three topics on "Some Problems of Today." The purpose of this series is to call the attention of our youth to the evil effects of some enemies of the body, mind, and soul. The discussion should go beyond a survey of materials and an analysis of the situation. Youth should find and follow the way out. The leader can use to an advantage "Youth Action on the Liquor Problem" (15 cents, International Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston). Emphasize the importance of attaining right attitudes in school groups pointing out the importance of Christian youth taking significant stand against drinking at school functions. Point out the right attitude toward drinking at school functions and lead to definite decisions as to the stand youth should take. Find the desired results and the ways to attain them.

The Poet

It's a work of prevention and cure;
A work for the rich and the poor;
A work that is slow and yet sure;
A work whose effects will endure.
Then shout for it, hearer and preacher;
Shout for it, master and man;
Shout for it, scholar and teacher;
Praise it wherever you can.
Temperance lessens the stealers,
Robbing by day and by night;
Temperance adds to the kneelers
Who in religion delight.
Temperance aids the repealers
Of the infamous liquor laws;
Temperance helps the revealers
Of light on our nation's cause.
It's a work for the old and young,
It's a work for the pen and tongue,
It's a work for pulpit and pew,
It's a work for me and for you.

Topic Hints

A New Life: Temperance is a virtue. It is a virtue of a Christian, a new man in Christ Jesus. Temperance is born in the heart and grows into action. The new birth plants the seed in the heart and spiritual nurture promotes the growth. Civil law may control the liquor traffic but it can never compel the virtue of temperance. Formal obedience to the civil law or moral law may make one a good citizen and a moral creature without generating the fruits of the Spirit. The safe way out is to become a new creature in Christ Jesus.

A New Mind: A new creature in Christ Jesus will experience a transformed mind which will be renewed day by day. The transformed mind stayed on God will find perfect peace. The Christian will use his mind and become informed concerning the physical, economic, and moral results of the use of alcohol. The evangelical Church is daily printing hundred of pamphlets and articles to guide Christian readers and students. There is no excuse for the Christian being uninformed.

A New Will: Christ abiding in the heart gives to the submissive a strong will. Christ gives strength to the will that the ideals of the mind may be reached. Temptations make the will stronger if Christ leads the victor. Embarrassment in refusing to drink with friends or foes amounts to nothing when within one experiences the encouraging Spirit of his Lord. The inner urge to Christ succeeds when the outer laws of men fail.

Initial Step: If one really desires to do something about intemperance, the first place to begin is at home, in himself. He should practice temperance in thought, in word, and in action. The best way to stop the liquor traffic is by the refusal of our youth to drink. The brewers know this and make every effort to teach our youth to drink. A heap of heart-aches and heart-breaks would be averted, if youth never touched liquor, the imp of tragedy.

Royal Company: People who practice temperance should live in a closer fellowship. They should think together and work together. In union there is strength. Each member of the group will be exposed to temptation in a variety of daily toil and nightly entertainments, but time should be given and programs prepared for people of temperance to enjoy themselves freed from the enemy of their bodies, minds, and souls. In every community there can be found a group of sober-minded youth large enough to promote social activities where liquor is not served. Why not do it?

Extension Work: Temperance begins at home but it should not stay there. The glowing torch of Christianity must be swung in the dark avenues of life. The transformed life yearns for a transformed community. A democratic form of government gives to every citizen the right to voice his opinion. The Christian is a citizen and is entitled to vote his convictions without embarrassment. In community, in town, in city, and in state youth should make a very definite stand at the polls when the liquor issue is involved. A temperate citizen of the Kingdom of God should be a temperate worker in the government of man.

In All Things: Not only must one be temperate as regards the liquor question, but he must be temperate in all things. Gossip is the fruit of temperance and nonetheless is an overworked body. Minds have been emptied when stomachs have been packed. Jobs have been neglected when nerves have been "shot." There is nothing in this world quite so beautiful and effective as a well balanced life. Be temperate in all things and support all things which work for temperance.—M. P. Recorder.

NEWS ITEMS GLEANED FROM "WORLD OUTLOOK"

Historic Westminster Abbey was opened on April 13 so that the public might enter for continuous intercession for peace around the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. It is said that during the crisis of September, 1938, when Mr. Chamberlain made his historic trips to Munich, thousands flocked to the nation's shrine in the Abbey to offer prayers for peace of the world.

Devout Spanish people are flocking by hundreds of thousands back into their church since the Spanish Civil War ended with the victory of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, according to recent news dispatches from Spain. Newspaper streamers announced the close of the war with the words, "The war has ended; long live Christ the King."

Madame Chiang Kai-shek in an article published recently in "The Central Daily News" publicy deplores the "Seven deadly sins" of China which she says are (1) self-seeking, (2) false pride, (3) cliquism, (4) defeatism, (5) inaccuracy, (6) lack of self-discipline and (7) evasion of responsibility. She said, "These seven sins have long retarded China's emergence as a world power and now delay our victory in the war."

The German people buy an average of 950,000 copies of the Bible a year, according to a recent statement of the Prussian Bible Society. In the past six years they have bought a total of 5,700,000 Bibles. The Prussian Bible Society declares the Bible is still Germany's best seller, having outsold Hitler's Mein Kampf by two hundred thousand copies yearly during the six years since the Nazis came to power in 1933.

SPECIAL MISSIONARY NOTICE

Since being elected Secretary of Scholarships and Native Workers at the Branch Meeting last April I have tried to inform myself as to just what my opportunity for service in this part of the work is. Sometime ago I had a notice in the M. P. HERALD calling attention to the fact that I would be glad to contact anyone interested in my phase of the work, so far no one has written me, so here I come with a few suggestions and I am hoping these suggestions will bear fruit.

I am reliably informed that $10 will pay for a medicine unit and also that $10 will support a mountain girl of Kentucky at Pine Ridge for 20 days of the school term.

What I am trying to say is this: That 10 World Service dollars designated for a medicine unit of 10 World Service dollars designated for the support of a girl at Pine Ridge will count just as much on your World Service Budget as $10 undesignated. I am hoping we will rally to these two deserving causes and put the N. C. Branch on the map along this line this our last year as a Branch. I would like to see the N. C. Branch pay for 5 or 6 medicine units and send $30 or $40 to Pine Ridge scholarships. You are going to pay your World Service Budget anyway so why not designate $10 of it to one of these good causes?

Who will be the first Young People's Society or adult group to write me saying you want to help in this good work? Come on folks, let's put this across. It can be done if we try hard enough. Just send your $10 to Mrs. Coy Kearns, Branch Treasurer, Denton, N. C. and tell her which cause you are helping and send me a card telling what you have done. Thanks.

MRS. W. H. NEESE, Denton, N. C.

THE MARKS OF A METHODIST

"A Methodist is one who has the love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost given unto him: one who loves the Lord his God with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength. He rejoices evermore, prays without ceasing, and in everything gives thanks. His heart is full of love to all mankind, and is purified from envy, malice, wrath, and every unkind affection. His one desire, and the one desire of his life, is not to do his will, but the will of Him that sent him. He keeps all God's commandments, from the least to the greatest.

"He follows, not the customs of the world, for vice does not lose its nature through its becoming fashionable. He fares not sumptuously every day. He cannot lay up treasures upon earth: nor can he adorn himself with gold and costly apparel. He cannot speak evil of his neighbor any more than he can tell a lie. He cannot utter unkind or evil words. No corrupt communication ever comes out of his mouth. He does good unto all men; unto neighbors, strangers, friends and enemies. These are the principles and practices of our sect. These are the marks of a true Methodist. By these alone do Methodists desire to be distinguished from other men." John Wesley.—From the May "Missionary Record."

Clothing and Other Gifts

Rev. and Mrs. L. E. Mabry, Lexington, two fine young chickens.

Mrs. E. M. Brown, High Point, a box of clothing for boys.

We are thankful for these offerings of money and substance.

All is going well with us here at the Home except that we are slipping back into debt a bit for current expenses during these summer months. The August, September and October offerings will put us in pretty fair shape for conference if all our people will remember the Home liberally.

All of our children from the youngest to the oldest have had a vacation this summer, lasting from one to two weeks. This came about, for a goodly number, through the kindness of the Presbyterian Orphanage of Barium Springs. That orphanage owns and operates a splendid camp ground on the Catawba river about eight miles from the orphanage, and they kindly rented it to us for a nominal amount for one week, and we took about 60 of our children up there for that week, these being the ones for the most part who had no place to go. They thoroughly enjoyed it. And all the rest have visited friends or relatives. We are all back home now, and are on the last stretch of summer work before school begins.

Yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Kernersville-South Winston Charge.—The work of this charge has been moving along as usual since our last report to the Herald. The third quarterly conference was held at the Kernersville church Saturday, July 15, with the usual attendance. The votes for delegate to the next annual conference were canvassed by a committee and the result announced. Paul Butner, of the Kernersville church, received the majority of votes and was declared elected delegate. His "runner-up" was Glenn Ingram, of Pine Grove church, and the vote was reported to be close.

The annual revival meeting was held at Pine Grove church beginning the third Sunday in July. Rev. J. R. Hutton, superannuate, of High Point, preached at the 11 o'clock service, and Rev. C. A. Brown, pastor of the Pilgrim Holiness church in Kernersville, was the preacher at the afternoon service. A good dinner was enjoyed in the grove of the church during the noon hour. Rev. W. L. Harkey, pastor of the Lincolnton charge, arrived on Monday and did all the preaching during the week. The meeting closed on Friday night. There were two reclamations but no accessions to the church. Brother Harkey did some excellent gospel preaching during the week, which we trust will bear fruit in the years to come.

Our next revival meeting will begin at South Winston church next Sunday morning. The members conferred with each other and decided to ask Rev. W. C. Luck, a Baptist minister, to preach during the meeting which will continue during all next week, with services at 7:30 each night.

The revival meeting for Sandy Ridge church will begin the second Sunday in September. Rev. G. W. Fink, of Jamestown, a pastor in the Western North Carolina conference (former M. E.) has been engaged to do the preaching during the meeting, which will continue for one week or more.

The Kernersville church took a vote on a name for the church at the service last Sunday night. A committee headed by Paul Butner had been appointed to suggest to the church a number of names. The committee reported three names—"Robert Memorial," "Cherry Street," and "Linville Memorial." A majority of the members present voted to adopt "Cherry Street Methodist Church" as the name for the church. The adoption of a local name was made necessary because of the union of Methodism, there being two Methodist churches in Kernersville.

The annual picnic for Kernersville church will be held at the Guilford Battleground Park Saturday afternoon of this week. The members of the Sunday school will meet at the church at 1:30 p.m., and will be conveyed to the scene of the picnic in automobiles and trucks.

The pastor and family have been remembered from time to time with various gifts from members of the different churches. The gifts were such necessities as flour, meat, canned goods, vegetables, watermelons, gifts of money and grapes. We are deeply appreciative of all the gifts and thank each one for their particular gift.

The writer has accepted an invitation to do the preaching in a series of revival services at Morehead Methodist church, on the Summerfield charge (former M. E.) of which Rev. R. P. Gibbs is the pastor, beginning the fourth Sunday in August.

The annual reunion of the Lashley family and their relatives will be held at Pine Grove church next Sunday, starting at 11 a.m., and continuing for part of the afternoon. A sermon in the morning, the dinner at the noon hour, and a singing program in the afternoon will be the program for the occasion.

Dunn's Chapel, South Carolina Conference.—July 17 to 22, classes in Leadership Education were taught in Dunn's Chapel, near Columbia, S. C. Rev. E. Lester Ballard was dean and teacher of a group of eight, all earning credits, in Course 144b, "Christian Worship." Mrs. E. Lester Ballard taught a group of five, all earning credits, in First Series courses, "The Life of Christ" and "Being a Church Member."

Devotional services were conducted each day between class periods, and evangelistic preaching services each night, deepening the spiritual life of the church. As a result of credits earned during the past two or three years, plus credits earned in three classes, seven of the group were awarded "First Certificate of Progress."

It is to be regretted that the pastor, Rev. Mr. Fry, on account of illness, could not be present. The interest manifested by the people was gratifying and very encouraging. Young people would rather engage in things worth-while, if given a chance, than turn to the frivolities of life for activity.

West End Church, Dr. R. M. Andrews, Pastor.—As a climax to summer activities a picnic was held for church and Sunday school members, Saturday, August 6, at Greensboro Country Park. A large number turned out, bringing well-filled baskets, and everyone enjoyed the afternoon of entertainment and eats.

Our pastor brings us fine messages each Sunday at the 11 o'clock hour, and we have been having visiting speakers for the evening services during the past few months. On the evening of July 16, Wayne Kernodle, president of the Young People's Work of the Methodist Church in the Western Conference, spoke to us. His topic was "Choices," using the verse, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." The audience was impressed with his sincerity and enthusiasm for work in the Kingdom.

Last Sunday evening Rev. W. F. Ashburn brought us a good old-fashioned gospel message which was appreciated by each one present.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD
Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts

The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.

Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for Indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

Circle No. 1 met Monday afternoon with Mrs. Jack Kimrey and Mrs. J. K. Osborne. The devotional period was conducted by Mrs. M. H. Waynick. Prayer was offered in the interest of our coming revival. Miss Helen Saleeby spoke at length in a most interesting manner of her trip to Beirut, Syria, and other places in Europe. Follownig the business a curb market was held.

Circle No. 2 met Monday evening with Mrs. Bonkemeyer. The young people will have a busines session and picnic Thursday evening at High Point Lake. Mrs. C. C. Lemonds is in charge of this group.

We are happy to report that several of our members on the sick list have improved and are out again. There are others who are ill and in the hospital or shut in, however, for whom we wish a speedy recovery to health again.

Mt. Pleasant Auxiliary, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—The Auxiliary met in the home of Hrs. Arthur Berrier Saturday night, August 5, for the regular monthly meeting. We were sorry to have only 14 members and one visitor present, but due to circumstances it was unavoidable.

In the absence of our president, Mrs. V. G. Morris, our vice-president, Mrs. Roy Hilton, presided. Mrs. Harold Payne had charge of devotionals, using the guide book as recorded for August. Also using the Missionary Record and discussing some of our missionaries. Assisting Mrs. Payne with the devotionals were Mrs. O. B. Williams, Mrs. Thomas Hilton, Mrs. J. C. Hayworth, and Mrs. Lester Leonard.

Our members always make a splendid report of activities, having made 18 sick calls, and sending some few trays, also sending cards since last meeting.

Since Mt. Pleasant will be the host for Rally Day, and acting upon the request of our Sunday school superintendent, the Auxiliary agreed to sponsor the program. A committee was selected for this purpose: Mrs. A. R. Craven, chairman, Mrs. O. B. Williams and Miss Dorothy Hilton, assistants.

The Auxiliary is having the church painted and every member glories in her contri-

Hickory Grove, Guilford Charge, Rev. Joel B. Trogdon, Pastor.—There has not been a report from our church for some time, but our work is going on fine. Our Sunday school and church attendance has held up fine during the summer months.

Our pastor was not with us the last fourth Sunday, as the churches gave him a vacation. But he and Mrs. Trogdon were with us at our Sunday school picnic which was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Boren, Saturday afternoon, August 5. A delightful afternoon was spent with these dear people, after which a bountiful supper was enjoyed by all present. We are striving to have all claims, etc., paid by conference.

The third quarterly conference has been announced to meet at Vickery church next Saturday, August 12.

Our revival will begin the fourth Sunday in September. We still ask the prayers of all Christians that our church work will be on the upward go.

Canaan Church, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—We are glad to report that the work at Canaan is moving along nicely. We held our revival which began the fourth Sunday in July. Our Children's Day program was given at the 11 o'clock hour. Our pastor brought the afternoon message. The Rev. W. L. Harkey, from Lincolnton, joined us for the evening service and did the preaching for us. He brought some messages that stirred the hearts of our people, and which resulted in a great revival in our church—one of the best we have witnessed for some time. His messages and the prayers of the church touched the hearts of a number of those who were out of touch with our Lord. Sinners repented and came home to Christ. Church members were reclaimed and the entire church was revived.

Our pastor brought a great message at the first Sunday appointment, his subject being "Greater and Lesser Loyalty." He said that the greater loyalty was to Christ and the church. He also warned the new converts that Satan would try to deceive them, but that they should be loyal to Christ and His work.

Our Sunday school is growing in number and interest. We hope to continue to grow till all in our community are in Sunday school and church.

Davis Street Methodist Church, Burlington, Dr. Fred W. Paschal, Pastor.—Since last reporting to the Herald we have been moving along nicely with all church activities. Sunday school and church attendance has been gocd during the summer months.

Our pastor brought us a wonderful message on Sunday morning, using as his theme, "God's Love." We were so glad to welcome three new members into our church family.

Taking place of the regular 8 o'clock service Sunday evening, an "all singing" service was given by the three choirs—the junior, young people's, and senior. Several beautiful numbers were rendered by each choir, also a trio and a quartet.

On Tuesday evening, August 8, the Philathea class will picnic at the home of Miss Swannie Coble, near Kimesville lake; the Baraca class is also invited.

On Thursday evening of this week the Sunday school will have its picnic at Pastime Lake.

To date the Woman's Auxiliary is doing a splendid work, with all circles steadily adding new members; also budget paid up to date. The young people's group, which has recently been added, is very enthusiastic.

Mr. J. G. Rogers is our delegate to annual conference October 18.

We are praying for a great revival, which will be held at our church during the month of September, and we ask your prayers that God may richly bless our efforts.

Mt. Hermon Church, Mt. Hermon Charge, Rev. J. R. Anderson, Pastor.—Although it has been some time since a report came from our church, our work has been going on. The Sunday school attendance and interest have been very good. The Children's Day program has been delayed, but has been announced for next Sunday following Sunday school.

The Auxiliary is still carrying on its work. On the 17th of August the Kiwanis club from Burlington will meet at the church for picnic supper. The ladies of the church are asked to come and bring a basket. Recently the Burlington Mills officials were similarly entertained. The Auxiliary, aided by other members of the church,, raised money for the painting of the interior of the church auditorium. We think this painting added much to the appearance of the church.

We have just concluded a series of revival services, lasting two weeks. Rev. Mr. Merritt of Graham was the pulpit help. Everyone enjoyed his preaching very much and we hope it will be seed sown on good ground. There were around 35 conversions and 18 joined the church by confesion of faith and 5 by letter. We hope the church will be a help to these, and they an asset to the church.

Since our last report two members of our church have passed away—Mrs. Mary Ann Neese and Mr. Cicero Thompson. We feel that in their passing we have suffered a great loss.

May we ever press on and work together to accomplish much good.

MRS. PAGE JUSTICE, Reporter.

Congregations must justify their existence. If they only bring people together to be "very much pleased," why, the lecture bureaus will contract for all that. "Did you worship? Were you edified? Did the Lord speak to you? Did you speak to Him? Do you mean more seriously to be pure, honest, upright, generous, manly, holy, from what you did and heard today?" These are the questions . . . to which we must have affirmative replies.—John Hall.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Mrs. E. L. Johnson

On July 3, Mrs. E. L. Johnson, who has been a member of the First Methodist church of High Point for many years, passed away. Her death was preceded by months of declining health which she seemed to endure patiently. Also she seemed to face death with faith and hope.

Mrs. Johnson is survived by her husband, three sons, two daughters, her mother, three sisters and three brothers. Our sincere sympathies go out to the many relatives and friends of the family.

Funeral services were conducted from the First Methodist church by Dr. George R. Brown, Rev. M. C. Connor, and the pastor.

J. C. MADISON.

Dwiggins

Mrs. Myrtle Bell Parker Dwiggins was born August 25, 1870, and departed this life Friday evening after a lingering illness. She was the daughter of the late John S. Parker and Jennie Lowery Parker, of Iredell county. She was a member of Kannapolis Methodist church and is survived by her husband; six sons, J. H., R. L., J. V., D. R. and A. M. Dwiggins; two daughters, Mrs. R. R. Austin and Mrs. Eugene Grayson. She also left the following brothers: J. S. Parker, J. H. Parker, and one sister, Mrs. W. H. Howard. There are 30 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren left to mourn their loss.

The funeral services, which were held in the Methodist church, were largely attended. The pastor was assisted in the services by Rev. C. W. Hartman.

D. C. HUSS, Pastor.

REVIVAL MEETING

The revival meeting will begin at Brown Summit Methodist church the second Sunday in August, the 13th. Also the second Sunday in August will be observed as the annual home-coming day for Brown Summit church. Three services are scheduled for the day: the morning worship service at 11 o'clock, an afternoon service, and an evening service at 8 o'clock.

On this home-coming day dinner is to be served on the grounds and everyone is extended a cordial invitation to attend and bring a well-filled basket of food.

Services will be held throughout the following week at 8 o'clock each evening, with a consecrated preacher of the gospel, Rev. Charles Denny White, bringing the messages to us. Rev. Charles White is a pastor in the former M. E. Church. Come one, come all, to hear God speak to us through His messenger.

Hot Weather is Here—
Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. ONE IS YOUR MASTER EVEN CHRIST AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN

VOLUME XLV GREENSBORO, N. C., AUGUST 17, 1939 NUMBER 40

"Nothing but Leaves"

The incident in the earthly life of our Lord when He came to the fig tree seeking fruit and found none has become a parable of life; representing people who although they belong to His Church, render no service to Him. It is frequently stated by pastors that quite fifty per cent of the members of their churches are inactive, unfruitful, as Christians. They joined the Church, took its vows, pledged to be faithful, but cannot be depended upon to support its program in a financial way or by personal service. This great host is counted annually as Christian workers; is numbered among those who love the Lord and we are seeking to bring in His kingdom. But instead of bearing fruit daily they leave all the toil and arduous service to the faithful. Here is the greatest barrier to world redemption the writer knows. These unenlisted, inactive Church people stand between the active, consecrated Church member and spiritual progress. Gideon with his three hundred faithful, loyal, courageous men won a greater victory than he could have won with the thirty-two thousand standing around and afraid to fight. Any Church we know of would be able to carry out its program better rid of the fearful, unbelieving, censorious folk whose only contribution to the Church is to pad its membership roll, than it is now doing. Our observation of such idle people is that they never become concerned about the progress of the Church until some loyal soul proposes that something really worth while be done.

Many of these members who are unidentified with any part of the Church program do attend church services; seem to enjoy singing the good old songs and hearing the sermons, but absolutely refuse to further identify themselves with Kingdom service. During the decade we visited hundreds of churches and talked with their pastors we have often seen pastors and church officials much in the spirit of the prophet Elijah when he threw himself under the juniper tree and prayed for death to relieve him of his prophetic office. It is terribly disheartening to see a worthy project fail because some absentee member Jezebel-like sends a threatening message. And it takes more grace than the average person has to remain optimistic when no competent person in the membership is willing to accept a position of leadership when the work of the Church bogs down and fails before you. So the cry goes up from pastors, "Give us people who can lead and we will do something worth while."

Without capable, faithful stewards the finances get behind; without alert teachers and superintendents the Sunday school loses pupils; without faithful trustees the church property gets into a bad state of repair, etc.; it is a long story and often punctuated by tragic occurrences. All because—well, some one failed to do his part. Instead of bearing fruit there was nothing but leave to manifest spiritual life. It is really marvelous that the Church continues to function under such handicaps. Its progress over such obstacles must be an evidence of Divine favor for the Lord is able to raise up a Gideon's band amongst the host of the thousands who are fearful and afraid, and but for the testimony of the heroic Joshuahs, and Calebs in the crises of the Kingdom the slow of heart, cowardly majority found in the group might disband the organized Church, and Judas-like, betray it into the hands of its enemies. The Christian Church possibly never had a greater opportunity than now but it must be capitalized, and it take heroic souls, not idle, pleasure loving church members to capitalize such an opportunity.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

A Meeting of the Joint Program Committee

On Wednesday of last week Dr. Bates, Rev. J. Elwood Carroll and I met with Bishop Purcell and his committee and Rev. W. J. Plint of the Blue Ridge-Atlantic Conference in a joint meeting of the Program committees for the Annual Conference sessions. While it is not possible to give here in detail the things agreed up yet I will say that it was decided that each annual conference should finish its work Friday afternoon, October 20 and that the new conference should be organized Friday night. It was stated that in view of the large number of people to be entertained during the conference it was necessary to speed up the work of the new conference so as not to run longer than Monday, October 23. As has been previously announced all the night sessions will be joint sessions. Following the meeting of the joint committee our committee got together and made the program for our part of the conference, that is the three days that our conference will use in its finishing up session.

Some Finishing Up Meetings

During the latter part of September and the first part of October we want to have in different sections of the state a series of meetings which we might call Finishing Up Meetings at which time pastors will be expected to report on what has been done and what they think can be done for the remainder of the conference year. In order that pastors may not have to drive so far we will take a smaller territory than we are accustomed to us. When the announcement of time and place is made I trust that each pastor will cooperate.

Final Announcement of the Picnic

Inasmuch as there will be no HERALD printed next week this is my last chance to urge our pastors and their families to attend the picnic for the Greensboro District at the Battleground Lake on Friday afternoon, September 1. Dr. Hayes, the District Superintendent, has graciously invited our ministers and their families to join them at this picnic and we want to show our appreciation of the invitation. Let those who go take a well filled basket. Dr. Hayes has suggested that we arrive early enough for each of the two groups to have a check up business meeting before supper.

A Sunday On the Mt. Pleasant Charge

Finding myself without any appointment for the coming Sunday I took the matter up the first of last week with Rev. J. W. Braxton, the pastor of the Mt. Pleasant charge in regard to being there on the following Sunday. Brother Braxton replied that it would suit him exactly. So on last Sunday morning we journeyed to Pleasant Union church for the ten o'clock appointment and then flew (almost) to Mt. Pleasant for the eleven o'clock service. I heard no comment at Pleasant Union as to whether the congregation was up to the standard or not. Anyway a goodly number came and seemed to be enjoying the service. The fact that several of the people did not arrive until the service was beginning and that we had to hurry away just as soon as the benediction was given made it impossible to speak to anybody except a few early comers. While there is a disadvantage in not being able to have fellowship with the people at the close of the service yet it was said that the advantages offset the disadvantages. It is said that the people turn out better to an early morning service than they would to an afternoon service. The Sunday school follows the church services. Pleasant Union was the home church of the late Rev. J. H. Bowman who did excellent work in our conference for many years. It is also the home church of Rev. J. T. Bowman, the present pastor of our First Church in Thomasville. While the membership here has never been large yet this church has played an important part in our conference activities.

At Mt. Pleasant the pastor, Brother Braxton, announced that the congregation was considerably off for the day due in part to revival meetings at other places, to sickness and other causes. As this announcement was being made it was a great comfort to the president that the people did not know that he was to be there at that time. This church is one of our largest and best rural churches. The auditorium here is large and there are several Sunday school rooms. During the present pastorate an educational building has been erected at the rear of the auditorium which adds tremendously to the efficiency of the plant. While it was a great pleasure to be in the services here last Sunday one disappointment was the absence on account of sickness of Brother S. A. Alexander who has been one of the leaders here for a long period of years and who has been rather seriously ill for a number of weeks.

Not only the church property and grounds have been greatly improved under Brother Braxton's leadership but lights and running water have been put into the parsonage. Both the church grounds and the parsonage yard have been planted to shrubbery which adds considerably to the attractiveness of both places. Brother Braxton easily ranks as one of our leading ministers. He is very active and keeps close to his people. They appreciate him greatly and would like to keep him a long time. But there are other people who would also like to have him.

A Message In Verse

MY TAPESTRY OF LIFE

As I take up the threads of life, each morn,
Let me weave each thread with patience, and take care
That I tangle not the ends, but let me
Weave a pattern, both beautiful and rare.

And in this pattern let me weave, each day,
Thoughts that are beautiful, all that's good and fine,
Love that is pure and true, and though the way
Be some times rough, my faith in the Divine.

And as I weave the tapestry of life,
Let me, the beauty of it never mar
With threads of envy, avarice, and hate:
But love for fellowman, both near and far.

Let me weave into this pattern, and when
The threads are finished, and the ends all tied
Let me hear the Master say, "'Tis well done"
When He turns it on the other side.

—Zella May McCarl.

No Paper Next Week

The founder of the Herald established the custom of taking off a week in August for rest. We are observing the custom for the week of August 20-27; but hope to greet you again with the issue of August 31.

May we not have your renewals? As stated last week, if all the unpaid subsidy should be sent in it would greatly relieve our strained financial condition. We greatly appreciate the responses to our appeals this week and in the past, but past subscriptions do not pay present bill.

District Picnic Changed to the Jefferson Club Near Guilford College

As we are getting ready to go to press Dr. L. B. Hayes, District Superintendent of the Greensboro District, Methodist Church, requests that the above change be made. The date is the same, the hour is the same, and those invited are the same, but the place of holding the picnic is changed.

Paragraphs for Preachers

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."—Jesus Christ.

"I have a firm conviction that the most pressing need in the pulpits of the land today is for a larger measure of intelligent, discriminating, forceful and inspiring Biblical preaching."—Dean Charles R. Brown.

"The Great Business of Preaching embodies four factors, any one of which is potent, but taken together are irresistible; 1—The Lure of a Majestic Fraternity, the Comradeship of a High Calling; 2—The Charm and the responsibility of a Teaching Ministry; 3—The Witchery of a Speaking Vocation; 4—The Fascination and Wonderment of the Shepherd's Task."—Dr. Edgar Dewitt Jones.

"Our greatest object in life is to find the rest of ourselves."—Dr. Rufus Jones.

"Preaching is communicating the riches of the Christian revelation of God to the heart of man."—Dr. Raymond Calkins.

"Preaching is the communication of religious truth through personality."—Bishop Philips Brooks.

"The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."—The Bible.

Although it may be most difficult to instruct the aged in your congregation, and equally difficult to enlist them in any new enterprise you shall propose, your appreciation of what they have been and shall do will always be gratefully accepted.

BUT

Preaching even in the formal sense can never be effective without an appreciative audience. St. Paul's sermon at Mars Hill to the Athenians gathered there is generally regarded as a failure. Not because the Apostle was not an effective preacher, but because he did not have a responsive audience. Many a sermon in our day is ineffective for the same reason. There must be a certain amount of immediate preparation for an effective sermon; both the preacher and the hearer must be prepared. The worship service is intended to help prepare the audience for the message the minister brings. And when the prepared hearer and the prepared preacher meet for preaching there will be delivered an effective message that day.

The Ministerial Bachelor's Club Loses Again

Rev. J. E. Garlington, pastor of Spring Church Charge, leaves the state of "single blessedness." Last Monday, August 14, he was joined in marriage to Miss Virginia Dare Massey, Pleasant Hill, N. C. Both are graduates of High Point College and are most excellent young people. The editor of the Herald desires to join the large host of their friends in wishing them much happiness as they sail the "sea of matrimony."

◆

Rev. J. Leo Pittard, pastor of Moriah Church was the guest preacher at West End Church Sunday night. We were pleased to have Mrs. Pittard with him. They came in time to attend the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society which is just prior to the evening service. Brother Pittard brought a very timely message.

GETTING TIED UP TO THE CHURCH

I am asked by a discouraged pastor, ''Can we do anything to tie the men up to the church?'' Some years ago, when in charge of the Methodist Minute Men, I proposed a ''Win-One'' campaign, and prepared a little book called ''The Win-One Worker.'' These workers pledged to win at least one man to Christ and church membership within six months. Men all over the nation accepted the task earnestly and enthusiastically and Methodism received over 200,000 additions that year. I once organized my men to go out after new members, just after a financial visitation campaign. Some of them came back thrilled to find that they could win another to Christ and church membership. I recently found a printer who agreed to furnish 2000 embossed calling cards for ten dollars. He would change the name for each 100. That would make it possible for individuals to get 100 for 50 cents. Each card contained the name of the individual, while in the corner were the words ''member of Broadway Temple Bible Class.'' This gave members an opening to invite other men to the class, while it provided them an attractive calling card. It would greatly help a group of men to visit a mission in the city which lodges and feeds the discouraged, out of work, and lonely. They become more satisfied with their own condition and see the need of a real personal religious experience. The men can take charge of a Sunday night service. They can furnish special songs, speakers, ushers and, if possible, provide a flower for everyone who attends. One year our men attended a seven o'clock morning communion service and took breakfast together at the close. The Catholics do that frequently and make much of it. It was a beautiful hour to break bread with the Master and many men attended, who might otherwise have missed its helpfulness. We may well multiply the use of the Methodist Brotherhood lapel button. It is beautiful, signifies to others that this man is proud of the cross. Dealers can hardly provide enough crosses today for the girls. Why should the men be less proud to advertise their discipleship!—Rev. C. F. Reisner in Pastor's Journal.

SUITABLE PROFICIENCY

By Albert Leonard Murray, Lit.D.

Nature is at once an exacting and a rewarding master. She permits progress only to those plants, animals, organisms, qualified to advance. The seed, sown in the soil, emerges into new life only when properly qualified as a living germ environed by the conditions of germination. Later, the heads of corn form only when previous degrees of growth of root and stock have prepared the plant to proceed toward its destiny.

In our schools the child must learn the numerals, addition and subtraction before he can advance to multiplication, division and more complex mathematics. The teacher tests the pupil's proficiency, not to expose his ignorance, but to qualify the pupil for a forward step. This same law of emergent sequences obtains in all arts, sciences, industries, commerce, in personal biography and social history. Its strict requirements and unerring rewards are vividly demonstrated in the evolution of democracy, the emergence of the idea of liberty, in the fascinating story of transportation, in fact, everywhere suitable proficiency is the condition of progress, and Nature urges all things toward realization and achievement.

Incorporated into the very nature of life and things is this universal law. Men and things exist to attain ends. We advance step by step and only when the previous step leaves us in a position to attempt successfully the succeeding step. It is interesting that we speak of graduation from schools and colleges, for the word is derived from the Latin gradus, which means a step. Mere dreaming and wishful thinking without coordinated action does not advance us. When we grasp the significance of tests as to our suitable proficiency in the previous degree as the condition of our emergence to a further degree, we enlarge our respect for the institutions that practice Nature's wisdom, and realize that only thus are we assured of advancement.—Supreme Council Bulletin.

UNION CRUSADE WEEK

Beginning with a Fellowship Day on Sunday, August 20; the Young People of the Greensboro Union will become the first group to observe ''Union Crusade Week.'' The Fellowship Day will begin Sunday with a Morning Watch Program at 7:30 o'clock; after which breakfast will be served at Muirs Chapel. The day will then be spent with various activities centered around this lovely spot on the Muirs Chapel Road. After breakfast the group will enjoy the Sunday school lesson and then go together into the church service for another inspiration service with Teague Hipps. After the 11:00 o'clock hour the entire group will enjoy dinner on the grounds . . . everybody pack enough chicken and goodies to make the day pleasant. The afternoon will give way to discussion, recreation, a watermelon feast, and close with a vesper service. The Fellowship Day should prove to be an interesting day with which the begin ''Union Crusade Week.''

On Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock at West Market Street Methodist Church, the Union will enter in on the first Union Crusade Week ever held. Rev. M. Teague Hipps, Conference Director of Young People's Work for our Conference will guide our thoughts on problems which we are interested. The West Market Young People extend a most cordial and hearty welcome to the Union and are delighted that the Union accepted their gracious invitation to meet in their church.

Each night there will be group singing, 15 minute discussion groups, inspirational guidance with Mr. Hipps, and on two or three nights there will be recreation. All in all we are expecting a most wonderful week of Fellowship and already feel that all the groups of the Union will enjoy the entire program.

The Union Crusade Week will come to a close on Friday, August 25, 1939, but we hope the effect will be a lasting effect to encourage and guide our lives forever.

We cordially invite the young people of Greensboro and vicinity to join us in this day of Fellowship and week of special services.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

BEVERAGE ALCOHOL AND THE COMMUNITY

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, August 20

Lesson Text: Joel 1:5-7; Daniel 5:1-5, 17, 25-28.

Golden Text: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink." Habakkuk 2:15.

The problem of alcoholic intemperance is not only an individual problem of the drunkard himself but it is also a vicious social one. Joel makes a direct appeal to the individual drunkard to awake and weep, for out of their intemperance has come a nation, strong and without numbers; whose teeth are the teeth of lions. He pictures this group of individual drunkards as another nation coming up upon Israel who laid waste her vines and barked her fig-tree. Now it is left to the Christian Church, perhaps, to weep over the lost sheep of the house of Israel and to go after the one sheep who is lost and suffering because of his own sin. Many have come to feel that this matter of alcohol is a religious one entirely, and would turn it over to the preachers alone to do all the wrangling and shouting for its disuse. Joel throws it back to the statesmen and social leaders who would claim their concern for the welfare of the nation as a community, and there it is till this day although the statesmen have refused to receive it as such.

There is a very interesting manuscript to be seen in New York Library. These words are beautifully engraved in the style typical of such documents in early America:

"Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony that ardent spirits as a drink, is not only needless, but hurtful, and that the entire disuse of it, would tend to promote the health, the virtue, and the happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction, that should the citizens of the United States, and especially the young men, discontinue the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of our country and the world."

This document is signed by three great statesmen as follows: James Madison, Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams. They with Joel are admitting that alcoholism is a vital community problem to be dealt with by patriotism as well as religion. Japan is reported to be using alcohol and its drug counterparts in her frantic struggle against China. Bombs have proven powerless to break morale among the peoples of war-torn lands, so Japan turns to the weapons of intoxication and drugs to do the job by free or cheap distribution of them to the Chinese. We cry out with Habakkuk to Japan "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink." The same insidious attack is being made upon America and, ironically enough, it is being made by those who pretend to be bringing our country out of chaos. They are setting in motion, wherever blind voters will allow, traffic in alcoholic beverages. Thus they contend that by the government operating stores and giving license to others we shall receive revenue whereby America will be saved from economic distress. Oh yes, they do say that this tax on liquor will serve to control it and bring temperance. We had just as well put a tax upon the bubonic plague to regulate it. Talmage, a great preacher of another decade, exclaimed "Oh! the folly of trying to restrain an evil by government tariff! If every gallon of whiskey made—if every flask of wine produced, should be taxed a thousand dollars, it would not be enough to pay for the tears it has wrung from the eyes of the widows and orphans, nor for the blood it has dashed on the Christian church, nor for the catastrophe of the millions it has destroyed forever." The tax from a barrel of whiskey may help to free us from a few bills, but that one barrel of whiskey can enslave a host of citizens in the bondage of a habit that will take from the community their good citizenship and the ability to pay all the other vital taxes.

Herbert Hoover once wisely declared that "a nation is made great by the moral fiber and character of its citizens; nations die when these weaken." He could easily have taken his cue from this sagacious remark from reading the pages of a history book. It sounds like a suitable moral to pin at the bottom of this story of Belshazzar as told by Daniel. First Belshazzar the king made a feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank before them. That is, he legalized whiskey and made it the custom of the court to drink so that from then on every citizen of Babylon felt in style by passing liquor around on cocktail trays. He simply did in a moment what the movies are doing every day as they subtley portray the drinking of liquor in almost every picture; what the government of America does by putting bond upon every bottle. Then comes the hand writing on the wall. Of course, the poor drunken, misled people of Babylon could not read that writing of doom, just so will we in several years not be able to discern our weakness. But Daniel who had been a total abstainer easily interpreted the writing and here was the verdict, "God hath numbered thy kingdom, and brought it to and end. (Because) thou are weighed in the balance (of character, moral fiber, etc.) and art found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians." Thus in conclusion we must add to the voice of the Christian church the voice also of patriotic lovers of our noble land to cry out against those vicious traitors to all that makes our country who would give to his neighbor drink.

Dr. Bethea writes that he lent a book entitled "Those Twelve" which he values very highly, to some one in Greensboro, and would greatly appreciate it if the book should be returned to him at 165 Hillside St., Asheville, N. C.

WHAT ARE WE DOING TO OUR MISSIONARIES?

Are They Forgotten Men and Women in Methodism?

By Mildred W. Cranston

In the British Museum rests the diary of Captain Robert F. Scott, Antarctic explorer, who with several of his men died of exposure and hunger on his way to the home base after a successful trip to the South Pole. On the last page of that document are his own last words: "For God's sake take care of our people." To their eternal credit, the British people have been true to his trust.

These words have echoed and reechoed in my mind during the last two years as I have meditated about the present perils that surround our missionaries in China. They came even closer home when, six months ago, there was held not far from our home the funeral of one of these, a Methodist missionary doctor. He had tried to get back to his inland station from Hongkong with supplies for his hospital and a vast collection of articles for his friends. The roads were blocked and all his plans went awry. Ill, discouraged, and defeated, he crept back to this country and committed suicide within a few miles of friends who did not know he was on this side of the Pacific. No one can be blamed for this and other similar tragedies that have occurred to our people through the years. It is the kind of life we as a church ask them to live, which they volunteer to live, that is responsible for suicides and physical and mental breakdowns in greater number than we like to admit. The death of this doctor and its manner are not unique, but the event is only more tragic at this time because of China's need for him, for he was young, skilful, and particularly beloved by the Chinese.

The few missionaries who, in the past, thought it might be an easy job have long since passed from the scene. In China these days it is a choice between coming home to America or remaining in almost constant danger. It is possible to oversentimentalize their position, and the missionaries themselves would be the first to deplore it. If they could ask a boon, it would be not that they be removed from their situation but that the church stand back of them with its fullest moral and financial strength.

In the first place, never a letter comes from China these days but cries out in shame and indignation that the bulk of Japan's strength in war materials comes from America. Certain organizations are exerting their power to the utmost to bring about legislation to prohibit shipment from this country of the means of Japanese aggression. Too few of our church people are sufficiently aroused, however, and gatherings of Christian people are easily satisfied to stop with vague resolutions deploring the Far Eastern conflict. We can best take care of our people in China, American and Chinese, by cutting off war supplies at their source. The letter of George Fitch describing the bombing of Chengtu on June 11 and his feelings upon realizing that very probably the materials for mass murder came from this country ought to be broadcast throughout our church.

In another vein, we must take care of our people by maintaining and strengthening the financial structure which can give them a decent measure of economic security. Bombing from the air, and danger of disease for oneself and one's family are bad enough, but infinitely worse are gnawing uncertainty about one's job, doubt of ability to educate one's children, and worry over provision for one's old age. These problems, envisaged ahead of time, have led far too many of our young missionaries to leave the field after a single term.

Our obligations toward the men and women we employ, as a church, are surely as sacred as those assumed by any secular organization toward its employees, but we have not always so regarded them. There are the N.'s, for instance, compelled to leave the field because of ill health, cut off from the mission payroll after a few months with two young children to support and a job to find in a strange land. After fifteen years in China, by the way, America seems a strange land indeed, and it is a heart-breaking task to face competition in trying to get a means of livelihood. After another fifteen years Mrs. N., a widow, is still paying on the debt they contracted in the months following their dismissal by the board.

There are the C.'s, who had four children of school age when they came home for their second furlough. They couldn't quite leave them here to fend for themselves, so Mr. C. returned for six years more in China, alone, while his wife kept the family together in America. "My hardest job," she says dispassionately in recalling those years, "was trying to keep the children mindful of the fact that they had a father. I made it a rule that every Sunday they all should write to him, in order to make him seem real." Three hundred and twelve Sundays without a father! Then he came home, and the two planned to return to China as soon as the smallest child was ready for high school in America. Their furlough time ended, and the board decreed that they had to go at once or not at all. The worm turned at that point, and that fine man at fifty, and after the three terms of successful service, sought a job in this country.

Then there are the F.'s. Dr. F. was sent out as a physician, but after a few years the Mission asked him to become sort of a treasurer and business manager for them and he served in this capacity for several years. The older two of their children were nearly ready for college when they returned for furlough. Without warning, Dr. F. was dropped from the payroll "in the interests of economy," and, upward of fifty years of age and rusty after no medical practice for nearly ten of them, he had to scratch for a living. The second of his sons is just now in the midst of his college course, having entered school ten years late.

Or there are the M.'s, who decided to leave their three in America when they reached school age, and spent seven years without them in China. (O you lucky mothers of America who can bear your children in safety and know you can be with them every week and every day as long as they need you! I have seen missionary mothers in China weep with each advancing birthday of their children, since each year brought nearer the inevitable break-up of their family!) The children "worked their way" through college. (The board can supply anyone interested with information concerning the amount of money given each missionary child for his education.) To the outward eye those children seem quite normal; yet one of them is permanently embittered with parents who "deserted" him; another is living under the threat of tuberculosis, a result of economizing on food during lean years, and a third is so introverted that he cannot confide in anyone save his sister who stayed with him in this country. A talk with a college personnel official reveals the information that a startling large number of missionary children are psychological problems.

Or, finally, there is the case of Miss L., ill for ten years with an Oriental disease, dragging back to China for two final terms against the advice of medical and board authorities because she had to fulfil the requirements for her pension and had no other provision for her old age, dying, finally, alone in a strange city just a few months before she had filled out her time!

There are other cases, but the foregoing are sufficient to mention as typical of what happens to ''our people.'' No one person or group of persons is directly responsible for the suffering of these men and women. If we had more money we could be kinder, perhaps. I believe that if the church at large knew these things they would be more generous—and more businesslike and ethical. We need to be conscious of our grave responsibility in employing a missionary in the first place and in dismissing him (and sometimes it has been done so abruptly and coldly) in the second.

Specifically, the rules regarding furlough time and salary should be far more flexible, enabling those with children to have sufficient time and far more adequate financial means for adjusting them to this country and its educational system. We need suitable supervised homes for those children who have no relatives in this country to care for them. Scholarships in colleges ought to be provided in increasing numbers to help them make their start. And for their parents there should be available a number of pastorates and assistant pastorates, as well as college professorships, for missionaries only, or for those who, for whatever the reasons, cannot return to the field and need something to tide them over until permanent employment can be found. Our school and church life would be enriched by such contacts.

In these days when health, employment, and life insurance plans as well as old-age pensions are becoming the accepted rule for almost every secular organization, they ought to be part and parcel of our mission system, so that these ''our people,'' who go to do our work for us, can be reasonably free from financial worry. If the secular world insists upon a square deal for the workers of its world, the Christian church surely cannot do less.

The Methodist church has become very large in recent months. We are almost intoxicated with our bigness. There is always the danger in any great body that in our adoration of the One we shall be unmindful of the Many who compose it. The missionary must not be the forgotten man in this great church.

Captain Scott left, along with his diary, a message to the British people, and its closing words were these:

> Surely, surely a great rich country like ours will see that that who are dependent on us are properly provided for.

In other words, perhaps, but with the same meaning, our missionaries in China, watching the planes fly overhead and wondering whether the next bomb will destroy them, or their home, or their children, or their Chinese friends, are saying the same thing.—Zion's Herald.

"THE WORLD CONFERENCE: SOME IMPRESSIONS"

Amsterdam—Midway in their ten-day assembly, the 1,350 delegates who are here attending the first World Conference of Christian Youth are grappling with some of the major political, economic, social, educational and ecclesiastical problems in the world today. Into all their discussions is coming the spiritual judgment of young Christians who begin their every morning session with a worship service, an expository sermon and two hours of intensive Bible study in small groups where every delegate is given a chance to be heard.

Unlike most of its predecessors, the Amsterdam World Conference expects to pass no resolutions. According to those who set it up, the meeting is intended to explore the basis of understanding among Christian young people from all the countries of the world. The conference has recognized from the outset that there are differences here. There are 220 separate religious groups represented, ranging all the way from Russian Orthodox (in exile) to the Society of Friends. The claim is being made that it is the largest and most representative body of official delegates to ever come together under any auspices.

One of the pronounced differences was faced openly at an early session of the conference when the delegates heard an Eastern Orthodox church member, a Dutch theologian of the ''crisis'' school, and an American who believes in social action. The points of view of these three speakers were given close attention. In the words of the chairman, the Rev. D. T. Niles of India, it was a symposium of the ''Church-center point of view, the Bible-centered point of view, and the life-centered.''

A strong flavor of the so-called ''crisis'' theology runs through the official program. Since the Conference is being held on the continent of Europe, it is natural that continental theology prevails. Many of the young delegates, however, are chafing under the other-worldliness of the crisis emphasis and are anxious to stamp the conference decisions with a more activistic theology. The American delegates particularly are showing the restlessness.

The American delegation numbers 325 and is the largest single group in the assembly. Seated in the choirloft of the concert hall where the sessions are being held, the Americans form a solid bloc of delegates spread out behind the platform and the speakers.

Perhaps the greatest single achievement of the Conference has been the fact that young men and women from over seventy countries are meeting together on absolutely equal terms, sharing experiences, talking over their problems together, eating together, and otherwise living a community experience that is itself a judgment upon the world of nations. Over seventy different passports were shown at the Dutch frontier, but they have been forgotten since.

Over and over again in the Conference discussions, the delegates remind each other that their differences are subordinate to the basic unity which is their membership in the Christian church. As an illustration, in a discussion of international problems, an Englishman and an Irishman came to a deadlock in thetir two positions. One suddenly said to the other, "But we are arguing our differences only within the terms of politics. As Christians, there is no deadlock between us." Within a few moments, they had transcended the limitations of historical politics and come to an agreement that was broader than either of their former positions. "I believe in the holy Catholic church," was chanted unisonally by the entire group at their opening service, and repeatedly this belief is being proved a cornerstone of the Conference.

In many of their minor definitions, the Conference is showing a wide range of interpretation from country to country. All shades of the pacifist position are represented here, just as they would be at a similar convention in America. European young men, all of them forced to take military training, are even somewhat more inclined to resignation in the matter of war than are their American brothers. However, there are a number of valiant pacifists from the countries of Europe who are here.

In defining the church, a good deal of hair-splitting has gone on. The orthodox position, that a church is inseparable from the sacraments, the orders, and the creeds, has created a wide note of resentment among the free church representatives, particularly those from the more informal communions. The issue over credalism will come to a head on Sunday in the ritual of the Lord's Supper, which is being administered according to four different rites in four different churches of the city. The fact that at the heart of Christian symbolism stands a four-way division has created a good deal of chagrin, particularly among the Americans. Efforts thus far to hold a common communion service have failed to make an impression upon the organizing committees of the conference.

The first world conference has been managed with a maximum of efficiency. The city of Amsterdam and the entertaining country have gone out of their way to make the large number of delegates feel at home. The Minister of Education for the Netherlands entertained the entire assembly at a reception in the government museum of Amsterdam on Wednesday evening. On Saturday, the city of Amsterdam is conducting four excursions for the delegates to outlying communities.

The conference will adjourn next Wednesday, the second of August.

OVER THE DOORS OF WAR OFFICES

In 1790, Dr. Benjamin Rush, famous physician, and signer of the Declaration of Independence, suggested that the following inscriptions be painted over the doors of war offices:

An office for butchering the human species.

A widow-and-orphan-making office.

A broken-bone-making office.

A wooden-leg-making office.

An office for creating private and public vices.

An office for creating public debt.

An office for creating profiteers and bankrupts.

An office for creating famine.

An office for creating political diseases.

An office for creating poverty and the destruction of liberty and national happiness.—Unity.

THE DISCIPLINE OF THE INNER LIFE

By LEVI DAWSON

Fellowship with God is a gift. Wesley proclaimed it as within the reach of all. That does not mean, however, that it is obtained easily. A man needs all his endeavours before he can gain that communion.

To enter the Kingdom of Heaven, Jesus said, a man must strive hard. He must keep on seeking until he finds. He must be as persistent as a neighbor knocking for bread at midnight. In the words of the apostle, he must "contend earnestly for the faith." God is not unwilling to grant the fellowship, but a man must want it more than anything else in the world before he can appropriate it.

It is a law of life that nothing worth while can be attained without effort. Education is free to all. Books were never so easy to obtain. The wisdom of the ages is within the reach of all, however poor. To appropriate this gift to himself a man must strive hard. He must spend hours in study. He must deny himself much that is pleasant in order to gain his place in the Kingdom of the Wise. Any man can obtain that prize if he wants it badly enough to sacrifice for it.

It is not other with God's greatest gift. The saints bear witness that entrance to the Kingdom of Heaven is free to all, but its doors open only to those who press violently in. A man wrestler in prayer, he must agonise to enter through the narrow door. Without that striving on man's part God cannot give. Man must be able to receive. Wireless waves have been in existence ever since the world was made, but it was only after much struggle that man was able to receive. Reception of spiritual power is likewise not gained without a struggle.

The most important thing for those who would know God is to take time to be alone with Him. That is a struggle for most of us. Life is so full and time is so occupied. Yet time must be found even if something else has to go. It is no good saying we have no time to pray. We shall find time if we want it badly enough. That is God's condition. We can find time for things when they matter enough to us. Haphazard prayer has never yet led to an experience. A disciple's road is a disciplined road and the vision only comes to the man who submits to the discipline.

Paderewski is reported to have said that if he missed practicing one day he noticed the difference in his playing. If he stopped for two days his family noticed it, three days and his friends remarked about it, a week and the world knew it. So much does greatness depend on discipline. One of the secrets of the unreality of our religion is the smallness of our prayer. We must recover the discipline of the seeker before we can see the vision of the saint.

We need not only disciplined time but harder thinking. We cannot feel the power of God until we strive to know something of His mind and purpose. Friend cannot talk with friend in the secret places until there is real understanding of the heart. That is why the Bible and the works of the saints must means so much to us. To company with those who have known Him intimately is to gain that understanding of His ways which is so indispensable.

A second-hand religion, gained only from the utterances of preachers and talks in a class meeting is never really vital. There must be discipline of individual search—a man must find God and himself. There is a strange lack of faith and the assurance of victory among Christians today. The world situation, the indifference of men and women, are too much for us. We wonder and faint and become inert. There is a real connection between this state of mind and the fact that we are no longer a Bible-reading people. The assurance of our fathers came because they lived in the Scriptures, and there they saw and heard their God. When we recover their love for their Book we shall know their faith.

We have plenty of ideals for the world and for ourselves. We have good moral principles by which we guide our conduct. These things alone are insufficient. To have the certainty of God a man must have the disciplined inner life. Only he who chooses conflict rather than casualness in this sphere will know the witness of things unshakable.

There is no finding without seeking in the Christian life. It is also wonderfully true that there is no seeking without finding. The search may be a long one, the striving may be hard, but the answer is certain. If seeking is the indispenable condition, finding is the unrevoked promise. To those who seek through the darkness and struggle on over heavy roads there is the knowledge that Christ went that same way and that His vision may be ours.

The disciplined life is the only life into which God can come in His fullness. In the struggle there is perfecting of character and the making ready for the guest. For man is not the only one who is seeking. God also seeks and longs to be known. God also knocks and longs to enter. God also strives—

> About your gates I shall not cease to plead
> As man to speak with man,
> Till by such art
> I shall achieve by immemorial plan
> . Pass the low lintel of the human heart.

When God and man seek together they find each other and share the joy.—From The Methodist Recorder, London.

THE STABILITY OF CHARACTER

By Rev. Sylvester Thorne

The true Christian heart is not self-dependent. Neither do we rightly speak of it as a vessel for holding Divine grace, as though the grace did operate upon the vessel. The heart, the soul, is an organism that, if not penetrated, vitalized, sustained, within the environment of Divine grace will droop and die. And the more it grows, the more robust and strenuous it becomes, the greater its appetite will be, and the more of this grace will it stimulate. The more lavish your expenditure, the greater your income. The more you use, the more you get. Grace is a stream from which you draw your full supplies, but there is no diminution of its volume. It is the gift of Christ, and bread in His hands is ever multiplied until all needs are met. God tells us, in Christ, of a perpetual feast of fountains of living water that are never low. Yea, He tells us of the fountains of the Divine Heart opened forever on the cross; and of their healing and reviving virtues every human child may drink and live.

One amazing truth is discovered unto us, that the heart of man becomes the one invulnerable and invincible factor in God's universe. Wonderful, that this timid, flickering, wavering spirit of ours, so full of moods and humors, so uncertain and inconstant, so delicate and fragile and sensitive, a thing of wayward impulses, registering every vagary of fond desire and intent, swept by every current, swayed by every breath; should attain such strength and solidity and majesty that time cannot touch nor enmity impair it. Yea, it is mightier than the rocks; for though they stand so proud, they yield and give. The ceaseless, persistent flow of the sea wears its own pores and veins and arteries in them; and then thrusting in its tendrils with the weight of an ocean behind, enlarging, expanding, it has its way, and the tiny porous passage become the gaping cavern.

God has set fast the mountains; but even they are not so strong. For the Himalayas are young and the hills of England old; and Time, with its rude assaults, lowers the lofty head, while glacier lacerates the proud breast, and the very hill are worn away. But the heart of man, fortified by the grace of God, is invulnerable—the heart cleansed and strengthened by the blood of Christ, which is the Love of God, is beyond the reach of time. It is the master call of all things; it is the sovereign of all issues. The heart of man held in the hand of God is the greatest and strongest thing in the universe.

LUSTER FOR THE GIFT

Rita Morrison waited on the steps of Grand High School for Virginia Mead. Almost disconsolately she answered greetings of classmates who passed her. A bit tragically she began when Virginia arrived: “You don't mind stopping at Durham's store a minute, do you? I have to pick up some handkerchiefs for Aunt Kathryn's birthday tomorrow.”

“I'd love it.” Virginia's eyes sparkled. “Shopping is my delight.”

“When you have plenty of money for gifts.” Rita was so gloomy her tones seemed to come from a deep cavern. “But with only a dollar to spend for Aunt Kathryn—so darling she deserves millions—it's far from a pleasant errand.”

Virginia hummed a minute to herself. And the sparkle stayed in her eyes. Like all the other girls in their crowd, she adored Rita's Aunt Kathryn. Her front veranda was their gathering place. It was wondferful Aunt Kathryn had a birthday tomorrow, for now she could give her a gift to show appreciation of all her kindnesses.

Durham's store was only a few blocks from Grant High School. But several girls stopped to chat with the two chums on their way. And to each one of them Virginia confided the reason for their errand up-town.

Some of them gave Virginia a knowing smile which seemed to say, “We'll remember what you've told us.” And others, “What a joy it will be to give Aunt Kathryn a gift!”

Finally Rita jerked out some impatient words. She had not wanted all the girls to know about Aunt Kathryn's birthday. “Marta and Helen especially,” she finished. “They have plenty of money and their gifts, like those of the family, will overshadow mine.”

“Not mine.” Virginia was very mysterious. “I won't let them.”

They were at the handkerchief counter at Durham's store before Rita spoke again. To the clerk there she said, “Will you please put three of your prettiest three-for-a-dollar handkerchiefs in a gift-box?”

Impulsively Virginia began: “Oh, let's look at them, Rita. Perhaps,” she was talking to the clerk now, ‘you have some pastel shades. They are ideal for summer, you know.”

Carefully Virginia began to lift the handkerchiefs the clerk brought to the counter. At some she shook her head. Then quite gleefully she turned to her friend. “Doesn't this green one with the white border look perfect for a summer day? And doesn't this yellow one with the delft blue design just match Aunt Kathryn's yellow silk blouse and the vest she had last year?”

Her animation caught Rita as if it were something contagious. She herself clutched a square of white cambric in which were quaint, old-fashioned nosegays.

“This looks most like Aunt Kathryn,” she smiled. “The minute flowers start blooming in her flower garden she has them scattered every place through the house. Why not have them in her handkerchief?”

“Of course,” Virginia almost clapped her hands. “And instead of having the box holding them tied in that pink ribbon they use for all packages, let's carry it home and use some new striped green-and-white I bought at the five-and-ten the other day for gifts I give in spring. It's decidedly suitable.”

In Virginia's room, with the dainty hand-made curtains and the crocheted rugs and all the other pretty things she herself had made for it, Rita saw her friend's gift—two big balls of silk strips wound tight.

“For the rug she wants to crochet for her own room,” Virginia explained. “I didn't know she had a birthday just around the corner. But the day she told me she wanted to make this rug when she had time to get the old silk blouses and dresses of the family collected and made into rugs, I started collecting ours and making these balls.

“And now—” she brought from her closet a pasteboard box across the top of which was pasted pictures of flowers cut from seed catalogues—“the balls go into this ready for delivery.”

“Ginger, you genius!” Rita's brown eyes were positively shining, her auburn curls dancing, “I love your gift almost as much as I do mine. I didn't know handkerchiefs could make such a personal gift.”

“Any gift can be personal if you just select it carefully for the person for whom you intend it. It's feeling that a gift has been chosen just for you—chosen to match something you have or something you like—that gives a gift a luster like that on Granny's valuable old china.”

Rita nodded wisely then.

She smiled more wisely the next day when Aunt Kathryn had opened the green-and-white striped box, taken from it the three handkerchiefs.

Meaningly she slipped her hands into Virginia's and Rita's, who knew then that neither the expensive fruit dish of Marta nor the Oriental scarf of Helen had overshadowed her gift.

For Aunt Kathryn, when she opened the box and looked at the handkerchiefs, had cried, “Oh, you bought this one for my yellow blouse and this one for the printed linen I love so well, and this green one for when I wear white! How darling of you!”

Gratefully Rita whispered, as the two girls started into the kitchen to bring in tiny cakes for the chocolate Aunt Kathryn had ready to serve her guests: “You were right about the luster of a gift, Ginger! Never again will I give one I didn't select very, very carefully to match the personality of the person for whom it is intended.”—Nancy Brewer, in The Girl's World.

To the Leader

This is the second of a series of three topics on "Some Problems of Today." In discussing these three topics, the group should explain the problem, analyze the situation, find a way out, and resolve to go in that way. In discussing this topic, describe the nature of gambling, introduce other evils with which it is associated, and show how it is gardually creeping into charitable and religious enterprises. Point out that gambling is the fruit of a gambling idea which originates and operates in the carnal mind. Make it plain that Christ transforms the mind and enriches it for a more noble purpose than the uncertain game of chance. Make it clear that a transformed mind is the fruit of a changed heart which is the work of the Holy Spirit in co operation with our submission. Do not spend all of your time in talking about the mote in the eyes of others and fail to remove the beams in the eyes of the group. Note the fly in the ointment of society but be sure there are no gnats in your own vinegar.

Questions for the Open Forum

1.—What is gambling? Why harmful?
2.—Where does the gambling idea and desire originate?
3.- What is the object of a wheel of chance?
4.—What is the real purpose of the fortuneteller?
5.—What questionable games are often sponsored in religious enterprises?
6.—In what ways is the simple punch-board related to the gambling idea?
7.—To what extent do we patronize games of chance?
8.—What should be our atitude toward the slot-machine? Seashore games of chance?
9.—What games of chance do we have in our community? Do we patronize them?
10.- -How would our refusal to engage in gambling affect it? Its promoters?
11.—Should a Christian refuse to take a chance regardless of the cause for which the game is promoted? Explain.
12.—What is the tendency of our Government in the matter of gambling? How do you account for it?
13.—What should be the Christian attitude toward specific violators of the gambling laws?
14.—In what ways can youth help to reform the law? Will we do it?

The Poets

Some play for gain; to pass time others play
For nothing; both do play the fool, I say:
Nor time or coin I'll lose, or idly spend:
Who gets by play proves loser in the end.
—Robert Heath.

Immortal were we, or else mortal quite,
I less should blame this criminal delight;
But since the gay assembly's gayest room
Is but an upper story to some tomb,
Methinks we need not our short being shun,
And thought to fly, content to be undone;
We need not but our ruin with our crime,
And give eternity to murder time.
—Edward Young.

Little Gems

By gaming we lose both our time and treasurer—two things most precious to the life of man.—Feltham.

Gaming is the destruction of all decorum: the prince forgets at it his dignity, and the lady her modesty.—Marchioness d' Alembert.

Game of chance are traps to catch schoolboy novices and gapping country squires, who begin with a guinea and end a mortgage. —Cumberland.

It is possible that a wise man may be prevailed on to game; but it is impossible that a professed gamester should be a wise and good man.—Lavater.

If thy desire to raise thy fortunes encourage thy delights to the casts of fortune, be wise betimes, lest thou repent too late; what thou gettest, thou gainest by abused providence; what thou losest, thou losest by abused patience; what thou winnest is prodigally spent; what thou losest is prodigally lost; it is an evil trade that prodigality drives; and a bad voyage where the pilot is blind.—Quarles.

Topic Hints

Gambling: Gambling is either getting something without giving an equivalent for it or it is giving something without getting an equivalent for it. Some one profits at the expense of another. The whole story of gambling is never told in what may be seen at the counter before the wheel of chance. Whatever may be gained at the counter can never replace what is lost in the heart. The gambler always loses in the realm of the heart. This is a tragic loss.

Gambling Age: This is a gambling age. In public places where the law permits gambling, and in secluded dens where the law forbids gambling, the game of chance goes on. The wheel of fortune may be found in the dens of thieves; it may be found on some church-lots dedicated to the Son of God, Who prayed for the redemption of gamblers on the cross. Punch-boards are seen at soda fountains and children ring our door-bells asking us to "take a chance" for what they insist is a worthy cause. Gambling devices and gambling promoters are like the sands of the sea.

Sanctified Gambling: The slaves of gambling endeavor to sanctify their craft. Oftimes they throw sand in our dim spiritual eyes by claiming that the cause justifies their filthy means. Benefit organizations will often "chance off" an atractive article to help the poor and prove to their satisfaction that this is a worthy way of relief because the proceeds are for a worthy cause. They claim that the wheel of chance at the firemen's carnival saves our houses from burning and the game of chance on the church lot pays the preacher's salary or conference benevolences. Jesus came to take the kingdoms of the world but He would not accept them on the devil's terms in the wilderness. A worthy cause never sanctifies the means.

Little Sins: Minute sins never justify the sinner. A minute stake never justifies gamglinm. Gambling is gambling whether the stake is one cent or a million dollars. It is as much wrong to gamble our pocket money as it is to gamble the roof that covers our family. People are oftimes misled because they see only the stake. Let any gambler turn his eyes upon his own soul and he will find a loss of integrity which make men great men and which make nations great nations. Integrity is lost in gambling regardless of the sizes of the stake.

The Remedy: Gambling cannot continue without patrons and promoters. We can refuse to be either. If every church member in this fair land of ours would refuse to have anything to do with anything that had the appearance of gambling, this menace would soon lose its momentum. It is not likely that every church member will agree to do this, but each one that does do it will generate and maintain an integrity to be desired by all honest men and will make a contribution to this country to be commended by all honest countrymen. As a group, we can refuse to patronize the gambling interests. We can support institutions which are opposed to gambling. We can become acquainted with the dangers of gambling and oppose the game of chance in thought, in word, and in action. We can help substitute more enriching means of acquiring material wealth. We can vote against gambling and gamblers at the polls and we can oppose methods of gambling if we are ever elected to an official position. Will we do it?—M. P. Recorder.

MARRIED

Runnion-Drake

At the Merrimon Avenue Methodist Parsonage, Robert Drake and Mary Runnion were united in marriage, August 10, 1939, 8 o'clock in the evening, the writer officiating.

The bridegroom is a member of our church and a splendid young man. The bride is a charming young lady, formerly of Newport, Tenn. These young people are deservedly popular, and we predict for them prosperity as they travel the path of life.

Many friends give to them their blessing and good wishes as they start life together.

FALL PROMOTIONAL PLANS

Mission Study Books for Fall and Winter, 1939-1940

Bettie S. Brittingham, Executive Secretary
Board of Missions.

Study groups for adults have not gone out of date. They have increased, as the reports of adult education centers and the American Association for Adult Education and the experience of most of us will attest. Quite apart from those interesting experiences that have educative value, but which in no remote sense can be compared to study groups, there has been an increase in the number of men and women enrolled in classes for the serious consideration of vital issues.

The major weakness in the church's fellowship program is that adults have passed judgment upon it without knowing its aims or achievements, and others have attempted to defend it with a vague and hazy mixture of fact and fancy. The intentions of these defenders have been good, but pious generalities are unconvincing. We need to know the life and hopes and contributions and needs of the American Indian or the East Indian, of the Negro in the United States or in Africa, of the dwellers in American cities or in crowded China; and we need to know what the situation is today. This suggests why nothing else in the curriculum of Christian education can take the place of courses which present the facts of missions. The Bible is essential, but not enough; Bible study in itself and by itself does not make us aware of the world's needs today. We cannot answer the world fellowship challenge unless we are aware of present-day needs that challenge us to action in the spirit of world fellowship.

Mission Study Opportunities

At least three oportunities for adult mission study groups are within the reach of every church:

1. An occasional course in the regularly organized men's, women's, of mixed classes in the church school.

2. A specially organized adult group to meet for six or eight sessions to study Christ and the World Community, or missionary motive, or world peace, or any similar subject.

3. A world friendship institute or church school of missions. The worth of this institution was proven long ago and in many localities it holds its place as a regular and fixed part of the church's program. While one finds many variations, it is usually a Sunday evening or week night event, organized for a period of about six weeks with three or four elements in the program: supper (optional), a brief devotional service; classes for those of different ages and interests, an assembly period, with a special feature such as an address, a missionary play, a stereopticon lecture, or an exhibit.

The heart of the school is the class period, when there may be a class for the junior high school age, a young people's group, and two or three adult classes with a choice of themes and division on the basis of interest, or with men and women separated or with the young adult group by itself and older men and women in a group or groups of their own. This class period is the opportunity for mission study.

Many churches have come to regard this as fixed in their year's progarm. "We would as readily give up our Sunday School as our school of world friendship," a church officer remarked.

Interdenominational Courses of Study for Schools of Missions

The most comprehensive effort in this field are those in which many denominations cooperate. Each year two themes are chosen, one dealing with Christian work abroad and the other with Christian work at home. Denominations have united under the title of The Missionary Education Movement to produce these books. The writer of this article is our Methodist Protestant representative on the Missionary Education Movement. We choose the themes which will be emphasized during the year, suggest writers, review manuscripts, and co-operate in every way possible to bring out each year books in outward attractiveness and rich in content. We, therefore, are glad to recommend to pastors and leaders the following books for this year. The theme is Christ and the World Community: At Home—Abroad.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Cedar Cliff Church, Mt. Hermon Charge, Rev. J. R. Anderson, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment Sunday at 11 o'clock. He brought us a very interesting sermon from the book of Genesis, of how Abraham was going to offer his only son for a burnt offering to the Lord. He made it clear that we should be just as willing to offer our children to the Lord, because they are His own, and He has every right to them.

One visit to our church would convince anyone that we have had a great revival; there has been a great increase in attendance and we feel that the Lord has been visiting our church and in our homes, also stirring up some of our run-down Christians and making them want a part in God's work. We are very happy for this and hope that the good work may continue. And to everyone who doesn't attend church we extend a very cordial invitation to pay us a visit. We are trying our very best to get our whole community on fire for God. May we all work for this cause.

New Salem, Randleman Charge, Rev. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.—It has been sometime since the Herald readers have heard from us. There is no reason for this delay except the reporter has had a bad case of negligence. Everything is moving along nicely in our church.

Our Sunday School is holding up fine. It has been more largely attended this summer than usual.

Our pastor filled his regular appointment last Sunday night. August 6 he brought us an inspiring message.

On Saturday night. August 5, our church gave a lawn party and cleared $23.00, for which we will use to buy song books for the church.

Our Sunday School enjoyed a picnic at the Guilford Park last Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Fred Allred was elected as our delegate to the annual conference.

Congratulations to Mr. Ewart Pugh, who took for his bride Miss Lillian Hayes, August 5. We wish them all the happiness and success throughout their life.

We are looking forward to the third Sunday in September for our revival to begin.

We hope everyone will be much in prayer for the revival services.

MRS. R. F. WARD, Reporter.

College Street, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Well, folks, here we are again! Working hard as usal, with the good help of our pastor and his wife, we are never idle, always have something on our hands and minds that we want to do.

The third Sunday morning in July at 11 o'clock we observed our Children's Day program. Miss Annie Perkinson had charge of the program with her sister at the piano. At the close of the program our pastor gave us an interesting talk on Children's Day offering and what it benefits.

Then on Saturday following the third Sunday in July the Woman's Auxiliary sponsored a big Brunswick stew at the home of Mrs. Frank King. Thanks to all the public for patronizing us, and for their liberal donations. Also I must congratulate Mr. Leonard Walker for making such good stews. He is one of the best stew cooks.

The Auxiliary met last Tuesday at the church for the August meeting. After the program, during the business discussion, the selling of ice cream, on Saturday, to raise funds, and also the making and selling of aprons, were discussed and decided upon.

The intermediate class in Sunday School has had several contests of various kinds. One of the most outstanding was the doubling of the penny for the class treasurer. Edith Harris won the first prize and Ollie Harris and Edna Perkinson the second. A medal pin was awarded to each of the winners.

On the first Saturday in August, the third Quarterly Conference was held at 2 o'clock. It was stated by our pastor to be the best one we have had this year. Mrs. Sallie Williams was voted to go to conference this fall.

Our pastor has filled all of his appointments for us and he still has service on the first Sunday night as well as on the third Sunday morning.

We would like to have the prayers of all that are interested in us and our work.

ANNIE PERKINSON, Reporter.

Pine Bluff Church, Rev. C. G. Isley, Pastor.—We are glod indeed that our church work is moving along and working nicely. Rev. Mr. Isley filled his appointment Sunday with a very expressive and interesting mesage on "Robbing God." He showed in his message how we rob God by not giving and doing good and also how we are too busy in life. I am sure I can speak in behalf of all who heard this message that we enjoyed it to the fullest extent.

We people here at Pine Bluff are indeed glad that the helper in our revival meeting which will start the fourth Sunday in August is Rev. C. L. Spencer, of Randleman Charge. With his help we are sure we will have a spendid revival.

CLIFFORD BARBEE.

Friendship Church, Shiloh Charge, Rev. C. E. Ridge, Pastor.—Our special meeting closed Friday night. Rev. E. A. Bingham, who aided in the meeting, has endeared himself to our people. Regardless of the busy time and the rain we had good congregations. Those uniting with the church Sunday morning are: Mrs. Wade Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. John Irving York, Annie Laura and Harold Wood, Henry Clay and John Hartley, and Ted and Guy Shoaf.

Monday night the Woman's Auxiliary met with Mrs. Luther Phillips.

Misses Adele and Juanita Phillips visited Manteo last week and had a good time. We are glad that Mrs. Robert Shoaf and Mrs. Willie Shoaf are well enough to be out again. We missed them while they were ill.

Our people have recently purchased new carpet for the church and painted the cemetery fence.

Mr. J. E. Essick has been ill but we are glad he is now able to attend chucrh.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hartley and Mr. and Mrs. Gilmer Farabee took a trip to Asheville, Blowing Rock and nearby mountains. They had a delightful time.

We feel that our church is growing and doing good, yet we still have some among us who will not accept Christ as their Savior and yield their lives to His love and service. Pray for us.

IDA B. HOLT.

Haw River Circuit.—We are glad to report a most successful series of meetings on this charge this year. A total of 15 accessions. The best attendance since I have been heer.

The round of Children's Day Sundays was completed with the service at Mizpah on the first Sunday in August. We had a group of young ladies, members of the Midway Sunday school, to present a pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross," at three of the churches. Splendid and impressively done. The young folks have our thanks. The combined offering was almost seven times larger than last year.

Our hearts were made sad at the home-going of one of Mizpah's most loyal and devoted members, Mrs. J. D. McCollum. In spite of the fact that she heard little the preacher said, she was seldom absent from her place at the services. We shall miss her from her accustomed place.

The Quarterly Conference confirmed the election of Brother Walter Maxwell, a member of Friendship Church, as delegate to the Annual Conference. The Conference also instructed the preached to purchase a new electric refrigerator for the parsonage. The folks who live in the parsonage are enjoying a real treat.

C. W. BATES, Pastor.

◆

Rankin Memorial Church, Rev. Edw. Suets, Pastor.—We are glad to have our pastor back after a ten-day vacation. We have been fortunate, however, to have two visiting preachers wiht us recently. They were Dr. L. B. Hayes, district superintendent of the Greensboro District, and Prof. P. S. Kennett, from High Point College. We thoroughly enjoyed the messages they brought us.

The Woman's Auxiliary met in regular session last Monday evening at the home of Mrs. J. A. Lee. The attendance was very good despite inclement weather, and much interest is being shown in this work.

Our revival will begin Sunday, August 27, and we are looking forward to a great meeting. Come and bring your friends and don't forget to pray for the services.

Glen Raven Charge, Joseph Coble, Pastor.—The Glen Raven Church and Fairview have just completed a two-weeks Bible school. The school at the Fairview Church was held from 9:30 to 11:30 for a period of ten days with the assistance of ten teachers and the enrollment of 84 pupils. The former M. E. Church, New Salem, held their school with Fairview with Rev. Mr. Parrish leading the singing.

Bible school at Glen Raven was held from 4:30 until 6:30 for ten days with eight teachers and an enrollment of 53. Both of these schools were assisted by Rev. Haywood Harrell, of Duke University. Mr. Harrell did a fine piece of work among the young people of both churches. Each evening he conducted a course in "The Life of Jesus" for the adults for one week at Glen Raven and the following week at Fairview.

The third quarterly conference was conducted by the pastor at the Fairview church, August 13. The votes for delegate to annual conference was counted and Mr. J. L. Stanley was elected. Work is about to begin on covering the parsonage, reported Glen Raven church. The Fairview church reported the beginning of painting the church and minor repairs on the building.

The revival meeting at Glen Raven will be held August 27 through September 8th. One meeting each day will be conducted by Rev. J. R. Anderson, of the Mt. Hermon Charge. The special meeting at Fairview will be conducted by Rev. Mr. Merritt, pastor of Graham M. E. church. We are holding a joint meeting with New Salem churches. Rev. L. L. Parrish will be our hymn leader for the services.

Union Chapel Church, Mocksville Charge, Rev. K. G. Holt, Pastor.—Rev. Mr. Holt filled his regular appointment at Union Chapel the second Sunday night.

Our revival, which began the fifth Sunday in July, closed the following Friday night. The meeting seemed to be a success. Rev. J. T. Bowman, the helping minister, delivered some most interetsing sermons. Several confessions were made and nine new members were taken into the church. We extend to Rev. Mr. Bowman a cordial invitation to viist us again. We were glad to have him in our midst and we feel that our church has been lifted up by his help.

Our church has been wired and we are now ready to enjoy electric lights as soon as the power line is finished. We have also underpinned the front of our church and improved the ground around it.

Our choir leader, Edmund O'Neil, is recovering from an appendicitis operation. He is getting along nicely, we are glad to state.

RUTH BOYER, Reporter.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—Well, another year has rolled around and our revival started yesterday with a splendid crowd attending both morning and evening services. Rev. Herbert Gorman, of N. C., is helping Mr. Johnson in the meeting. Rev. Mr. Gorman took his text Sunday morning from the 11th chapter of John, the 32nd verse. He brought a very touching and inspiring message, both morning and evening. Mr. Gorman helped last year in the meeting. We all think he is a fine man of God and pray for him as he presses on through life doing the work for the Master.

Miss Mable Nalley, of Fairview, is spending the week among friends here attending the meeting.

The quarterly conference will be held at Fairview August 26th.

A crowd met last week and cleaned the church ground and cemetery. Everything looked very pretty since it was worked and then after the nice rain Sunday.

The Intermediate Girls' Class with their teacher, Mrs. Nick Smith, enjoyed a delightful picnic at Greenville, S. C., last week.

The young people of our church have planned to have the Bible school, taught by our pastor, Dr. Johnson, on the New Testament. No definite date has been set yet.

Rev. Herbert Gorman and Dr. Johnson was dinner guests Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Davis.

The young people of Fairview church plan to be with us Tuesday. They came last year one day and we are always glad to have them.

Our Sunday school was back above normal Sunday. There were 131 present. We were so proud to see the children back with us Sunday. It just made our hearts rejoice to hear and see their bright and smiling faces, as it had been several Sundays now since the children have attended, as they were asked to stay at home on account of polio. We are so thankful that the ban is lifted and they can come back and worship with us. It just made our superintendent so happy to see the Sunady school back above the 100 mark. He has worked so faithful this year for our Sunday school and church, but of late the attendance has been low on account of polio. But our prayers are that it will continue now to stay above 100.

We were indeed glad to have the Pearson trio to sing for us Sunday morning. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pearson. Also the Fulton quartet sang for us Sunday night. We are always proud to have special singing. We welcome them back real soon. Pray for our meeting and that many souls may be saved.

A GYMNASIUM FOR OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

We have waited long and patiently for the time to come when we could start a gymnasium for our boys and girls, and have tried several plans,, memorial and others to get one built but without avail.

For some months we have had the permission of our trustees to begin, but the way did not seem clear until now.

We ourselves were able to donate quite a bit of the rough lumber and other donations of brick, timber and materials helped us to make the start. Brother S. P. Montgomery, of First Church, High Point, has aided materially in developing the plans, enlarging somewhat on the blue prints sent out by the State Board of Education. And Mr. Montgomery will give what time he can in directing the erection of the building. Mr. W. P. Jester and his sons are building the brick foundation, donating a part of their work, and our boys are keeping brick and mortar at their hands.

Mr. E. J. White, a good carpenter, has been employed to direct in the building and our own boys will do all the carpenter work under his direction, except as friends may donate their labor.

People of High Point and surrounding communities are very kind, so we are hopeful of getting the building enclosed and the floor laid in good time for use this fall and winter. Our youngsters have made a fine record in athletics during the last few years with very poor opportunities for practice, so they are very happy in the prospect of this building and we are happy for them.

A number of our friends have said, "When you are ready to build we will be glad to contribute." We thank you and now that the foundation is actually being laid on this happy day, Monday, August 14, 1939, we shall be glad to receive your contributions, such contributions as will in nowise interfere with your regular contributions for the current expense fund.

With praises to our God and His wonderful leadings and with happiness in our souls because of the joy which has been brought to our Home by the progress of this project, I am, yours in His name,

A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

2. General and Missionary Superintendents of the Church School.
3. Two youth representatives to be nominated by the youth organizations of the Church and elected by the Quarterly Conference.
4. At least two laymen, elected by the Quarterly Conference, and at least two laywomen, elected by the Local Church Woman's Society of Christian Service.

It shall be the duty of the pastor to convene the members of this Council who shall elect such officers and committees as may be determined." We would suggest the use of these persons named for a Committee on a Church School of Missions during the coming year. A constitution is now in the process of being worked out for this group but in the meantime, local churches may find it opportune to use this group named as the nucleus for the Church School of Missions.—Bettie S. Brittingham, Executive Secretary Board of Missions.

A Delightful Visit

Mrs. Dixon and I had the privilege of spending last Saturday night in the splendid new home of Conway Bayliff and his charming wife. They have built in the edge of Burlington and our hearts were made glad when we found them so comfortably situated. Paul Guice and his wife "Edna Doby," "Christine Fogleman" and her husband, "Ruth Lamar" and her husband, Rachel Fogleman, and David and Thomas Weatherly were guests in the home for the evening. Others had planned to be present, but were prevented by revival services and other things. It was a delightful visit and it cheered our hearts to find these our former students and their husbands and wives getting along so well in life. We looked at the group and thought, How worth-while is the work of an institution like this, and how wonderful are the returns on the money invested annually in dependent children! God bless all those who contribute. It is a great work if rightly done, and we are only doing our poor best with the funds which come into our hands.

Yours in His blessed service,
A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

SECURELY SHELTERED

By W. H. Hart

The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms.—Deut. 33.27.

Searching to and fro,
High and low:
No words are found,
More profound;
Than those we know,
Uttered long ago.
Men yielding precious blood,
In wind and fire and flood,
Supported by staff and rod,
Sheltered by the eternal God.

May none presume to say,
"There is a better way";
Since, from days of old,
Like the purest gold,
Heroes we most admire
Were tried in flaming fire.
Amidst the storm and stress,
Of life's wild wilderness,
Souls ever loyal and true,
Came triumphantly through.

Until time shall cease,
No place of release;
Until one's last day,
No better way;
Than hearts kept aflame,
In the Christ's name.
Freed from beguiling charms,
Upheld by everlasting arms,
Led by paths saints have trod,
Sheltered by the eternal God.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Jones

On July 6, 1939, the death angel took as its victim Mrs. Nancy Couch Jones, "Aune Nan," as she was often called. She was born November 3, 1857, and had lived 84 years, eight months and three days. She was the daughter of George and Cynthia Little Couch. She was married to the late E. S. Jones on December 20, 1871. He preceded her to the grave seven years ago.

Sister Jones professed faith in Chirst and joined Hickory Grove Methodist Protestant Church at the age of 12 and remained a faithful member until death. She loved her Bible and was devoted to her church. On account of the infirmities of age she was unable to attend the services for three years but she read her Bible daily and prayed that she might be submissive and be ready when the summons came.

She lived an ideal Christian life, was always cheerful, visited the sick and tried to help those that were in need and distress. She will be missed in the home, the church and community, but we feel our loss is her gain.

She leaves to mourn her loss two sons and two daughters, A. L. Jones, C. E. Jones; Mrs. J. B. Hassell, Miss Nora Jones; 13 grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren and a host of relatives and friends.

The funeral was conducted at Hickory Grove church by her pastor, Rev. Joe B. Frazier, assisted by Revs. O. C. Loy and E. O. Peeler. Her body was laid to rest beneath a profusion of beautiful flowers beside her husband.

A FRIEND.

"We consider that tipping is a degrading custom and have formed a society to put a stop to it," explained the membership-seeker.

"Ay, I'll join," said the man from Aberdeen gladly.

"That's fine. The subscription is 25 cents a year."

"Och, in that case I'm thinking it'll be cheaper for me to tip!"

Hot Weather is Here—
Beware of Biliousness!

Have you ever noticed that in very hot weather your organs of digestion and elimination seem to become torpid or lazy? Your food sours, forms gas, causes belching, heartburn, and a feeling of restlessness and irritability. Perhaps you may have sick headache, nausea and dizziness or blind spells on suddenly rising. Your tongue may be coated, your complexion bilious and your bowel actions sluggish or insufficient.

These are some of the more common symptoms or warnings of biliousness or so-called "torpid liver," so prevalent in hot climates. Don't neglect them. Take Calotabs, the improved calomel compound tablets that give you the effects of calomel and salts, combined. You will be delighted with the prompt relief they afford. A FRESH WORD ABOUT COUPONS

We thank you for your good work in gathering coupons and sending them to us for the home. We have now begun in earnest on the gymnasium building for our children, and for some months now we have been saving the coupon money to buy materials for that. So please save your coupons from products redeemable by the Colgate Company. Gather from your neighbors and send to us as many as you can. All this will help with our gymnasium.

Perhaps you would like to add a bill or a check to help also. Any help you may give us will be greatly appreciated.

In His blessed service,

MRS. A. G. DIXON.

Some Values of Worship

Every pious person has learned by experience that worship has certain indispensable values to life. For what is more soothing to our sorrows than worship? What better thing can man do to rekindle the dying embers of interest on the altars where his soul bows, than real, vital worship? How else can man fill the emptying wells of inspiration, if he neglects this means by which the showers of blessing shall visit his soul? Worship also exercises a most beneficial disciplinary influence upon life. It tends to develop a habitual reverence which makes it easier to know and to do the will of God.

Therefore, one is to be pitied who sees nothing more in Christian worship than a religious form; if to him the most important things in worship are postures, responses, the recital of creeds and the singing of hymns, then must his spirit grow weary and become lean as he engages in them. No litany, however well recited is justified as an end in itself. But if it become the stairway down which the angels of God descend to a weary, stranded life, lying unprotected beneath the stars, who can foretell the results of such an experience? A worship service should be evaluated by what it does to the lives of those who engage in it. If they come out of it unchanged, with the same prejudices, the same attitudes of distrust, of opposition and of unkind criticism; then the time spent in a worship service is worse than wasted.

But if the skilled fingers of the Tuner of man's spirit gets a chance at one's life; if the breath of the Almighty is allowed to breathe upon him, and the voice of God finds a listening heart to His word, then the whole life may be transformed, made new. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain help in time of need."

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Herald Subsidy Again

Again, I am calling attention to the importance of each charge raising HERALD Subsidy in full this year. The HERALD has meant much to our conference. In fact, I doubt seriously whether the conference could have gone forward as it has without the HERALD. It has been as helpful this years as it has ever been and we never needed it more than we have this year. Now we want to see to it that it finishes the year in just as good financial condition as possible. So, Brother Pastor and Brother Layman, see to it that the subsidy is raised and sent in quickly. It will not hurt any church to raise the small amount asked for and it will help the HERALD greatly.

Quarterly Reports

Third quarterly reports have been coming in rapidly for the last week. Some of these shows up fairly well and some are rather poor. Insofar as I have seen no charge reports as being out completely on the annual conference budget. Several pastors reports that certain churches on circuits are out but not the entire charge. Some say that the charge will pay in full. This is very encouraging and I hope that many can pay out. But this should be said, the time is short. Brethren, do your best.

There seemed to be some confusion in that I sent the quarterly report blank to our superannuates and to those men serving in our institutions and on our boards. My sole reason for sending to them was that they might read the one paragraph on the report blank concerning the filling out and returning a card which was being enclosed. It was not expected that they would return the report blank to me although some of them did. I guess I should have been more specific in my instructions.

A Sunday Morning at Charlotte

Sunday morning, August 20, was spent with our church in Charlotte, Rev. T. E. Strickland, pastor. I found a fairly good sized congregation present and it was pleasant to be with them. This church has gone forward since its reorganization two years ago as well as could be expected. The pastor is hopeful of finishing the year in good condition. Brother Strickland is held in high esteem not only by our people but by others as well. At the time I was there he was to preach at the evening hour to a union service of quite a group of churches in the Memorial Stadium.

A Sunday Evening At Caroleen

Going on from Charlotte I found myself at Caroleen for the evening service. This was my first visit to this place. Here I found a good sized church building on a high hill. There was a splendid congregation present for the evening service. Brother Herbert Garmon, the pastor, was away assisting Dr. T. M. Johnson in a meeting but Rev. L. S. Helms who lives nearby presided over the evening service. This church was organized, I was told by Rev. J. H. Moton in 1902. In the first years of the church's history Rev. N. G. Bethea was pastor there and the people are still talking about his great work there. It certainly is refreshing to hear people tell of the great work our men have done in the days gone by as well as to hear them talk of present achievements. Brother Garmon is greatly loved by the people here and they are anxious to keep him.

Two Days At Lake Junaluska

Hurrying away from Caroleen on Monday morning I set sail for Lake Junaluska to sit in with Bishop Purcell's cabinet in the afternoon. The new discipline of the Methodist Church had arrived and the good bishop spent a good deal of time in explaining certain features of it. Many business matters concerning the new conference were discussed. Knowing that Bishop Straughn was coming on Tuesday I remained over to have a conference with him. He is so fatherly in his attitudes that it is always refreshing to be with him but especially so in these times of stress and strain concerning the work of the finishing up conference and the going into the new. I arrived at home Wednesday noon and spent the rest of the week in conferences and trustees meetings and in business matters in general.

At Harmony Grove In Dedicatory Services

Last Sunday morning was spent at Harmony Grove on the West Forsyth charge in dedicatory services. Rev. G. B. Ferree is the pastor of this church and by his assistance and the cooperation of the membership the church was rebuilt about three years ago and Sunday school rooms were added. They now have a fairly good plant, one that will much more nearly meet the needs of the community. And the fine thing about it is that it is paid for. The ritual of the Methodist Protestant Church was used in the dedicatory services. One interesting feature of the service was the assistance given by the son of the pastor, Rev. Sulon Ferree. Brother Ferree graduated from High Point College a few years ago and from the Westminster Theological Seminary last May. He is ready for an appointment in our conference this fall and some charge will be benefitted by his services. This summer he is assisting his father in the revival meetings on the charge. The revival was beginning at Harmony Grove last Sunday.

This is Rev. G. B. Ferree's fifth year on the West Forsyth charge. He and his family have rendered fine service to the people. Brother Ferree was a builder before he entered the pastorate and even yet he can work with his own hands along with the people in making improvements on church buildings.

Not Able To Visit All Charges

The time between now and the Annual Conference is now getting short and I find it impossible to visit all the charges on Sunday. But it will be possible for me to hold a good many quarterly conferences provided they are not all at the same time. I am giving this week by Sunday services and quarterly conference engagements so those wishing my services can see whether the time is already taken or not. I am not listing committee meetings and things of that kind.

A Message In Verse

WE ARE GOD'S HANDS

By Lois Holland Palmer

We are God's hands, we are God's feet,
And ours the strength to do His will.
Our hands must serve, our hearts must seek
His planning daily to fulfill.

We are God's hands, we are God's feet,
And unto us is given grace
To spread abroad the love of God
To every soul of every race.

We are God's hands, we are God's feet,
Through us alone His work is done.
He blesses us, and bears us up,
And gives us strength the course to run.

We are God's hands, we are God's feet,
We dare not falter, then, nor fail,
But follow on where Jesus leads,
And answer mankind's pleading call.

The Consecrated Service

The practice of consecrating one's life and possession to the Lord is very ancient. Even heathen peoples are known to have done this. The Hebrew worshipped Jehovah with tithes and offerings—gifts, they were of things which he gladly sacrificed to the Lord. But the devout Hebrew also gave himself; Isaiah in the temple offers himself to the Lord, Hannah brings her small son to set him apart to the service of God. And when Moses was ready to build the Tabernacle in the wilderness, he called upon all the people, saying, "Who is this day willing to consecrate his service unto the Lord?" Among those who responded to that appeal was Bezaleel, an artificer in gold and silver. Here the records show that it was Bezaleel who made the Cherubim, the Cherub, and the precious vessels used in the worship of Jehovah. It was Bezaleel who covered the tables with beaten gold. He was no preacher, not even an exhorter, but how valuable was his consecrated service to the Lord!

And God is still in need of those who are willing to consecrate their services to the Lord. The teacher with his talents for teaching laid upon the altar; the officers in the Church who are giving their time and their possessions for the extension of the Kingdom of God. This consecrated service; what would your local church do without such men and women in your membership? Workers who are always ready to respond with their skill, time and means when the call comes from the pastor, "Who is this day willing to consecrate his service to the Lord?" We thank God for the great host of faithful workers we know in the Church today. Our faith in them helps to keep our faith in the final triumph of righteousness unwavering.

◆

We greet our readers again. After a rest of one week the Herald comes back to its subscribers.

How Big Is Your World?

There is such a difference in the size of our worlds—yours and mine. Some claim the universe as their very own; all who live in it, all who have lived in it, and all those who shall yet be born; all belong to them. Citizens of the universe, lovers of mankind, debtors to all who have achieved and a channel of blessing to unborn generations.

Then there are others who belong only to their own race and time. The past to them is an unread book; they cast no horoscope for the future. The sorrows and sufferings of those outside their race or clan do not touch them. Nothing is good or glorious which has not come from their race or country. You must speak their language to enter the circle of their concern; your blood must be as their blood to belong to their world.

But there is a group with a still smaller world. Men with parochial minds, narrowed interests; whose attention is ever focussed upon their own life. They are the centers of their universe. But as the poet as well said:

He is dead whose hand is not open wide
To help the need of a human brother,
He doubles the length of his lifelong ride
Who gives his fortunate place to another.
And a thousand million lives are his
Who carries the world in his sympathies—
To deny
Is to die.

A casual reading of the daily press emphasizes the need of the world citizen. Those whose interests are Christian enough to cross the color line in service; whose concern for the human race is vital enough to make them disregard the lingoes and isms of the people as they go about as messengers of truth for world redemption. People who have not allowed their interests in the failures of others to outrun their introspective knowledge of their own weaknesses. The trouble with so many of us is, our world is entirely too small, our interest in the progress of the human race is too circumscribed. We need to read again John 3:16 and to put the emphasis upon SO in that sentence—God SO loved the world—not the Jews, not just the saintly ones, but the world. None is excluded from His love. It is still true today that "Whosoever will may come." Men of every language and tongue, of every time and clime are included in the invitation from heaven. Let us study to widen the horizon of life—to make our world coincide with the world which God so loved.

Sunday School Lesson

By O. L. EASTER

ISAIAH: A LIFE DEDICATED TO GOD

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, September 3

By Rev. O. L. Easter

Lesson Text—Isaiah 6:1-13.

Golden Text—Here am I; send me.—Isaiah 6:8.

The great lives that have swept before the gaze of the world have been both its salvation and its chief glory. Man's history is simply a written story of the great personalities that produced the situations of historical significance or at least the personality that served to meet and master their situations. To fully understand history one must study the biographies of the lives that make up the human list of that particular age. Thus the story of Israel and the history of that great people is wrapped within the biographies of these lives that we have been studying. We are led to believe that God spoke to them and revealed Himself to Israel in miraculous ways that through Israel as a chosen vessel should come the very kingdom of God on earth. Hence we must look to the lives within Israel if we would even understand the workings of God.

Thus we turn this day to study the life of Isaiah to understand the history of Israel and to comprehend the power and majesty of his life. We naturally shall go back along the life of Isaiah to probe out the secret of his great spiritual power in Israel, and very naturally we pause at this extraordinary episode in the temple. If the men of Isaiah's day were asking him by what right did he speak to them thus he replied by saying, "In the years that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord," etc. If we are seeking a clue to his life Isaiah would not take us to where he was born as ordinarily we might do to see his environment, but he would lead us to where he was "born again" there in the temple. This chapter records the first mighty sweep of inspiration that came over his soul, and bound him to God as His witness and accredited messenger for the rest of his life. This is given by Isaiah himself as the secret cipher of his life and in its sequences are to be found some of the vital forces that lay back of the powerful life of Isaiah and the chosen race of Israel. Herein is seen the part played by God in His call to men and their course of responding to that call. These steps are in logical and telling order: God's purity and majesty, man's impurity, God's cleansing, God's call, man's subsequent response.

First he beheld God in the worship of that hour and wondrously beheld His greatness. For a choir he heard a chorus of angels singing "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Host." The presence of God shook the very foundation of the temple and for the voice of this vision He had the words of the Lord. Thus we see that even in the temple Isaiah saw and found far more than was ordinarily manifested there, but we must be impressed that it was while there that he saw God high and lifted up. We do not always see God and His glory when we are at church, but in no other place are we likely to see Him. In our hour of need and inadequacy we find our souls crying out for some such link with God and surely through the avenues of temple worship men should seek direction for those yearnings for the good we comprehend not.

> "In even savage bosoms
> There are longings, strivings, yearnings
> For the good they comprehend not;
> And their feeble hands and helpless,
> Groping blindly in the darkness,
> Touching God's right hand in the darkness
> And one lifted up and strengthened."

How natural then for Isaiah to express his feeling of impurity and imperfection before such a being. Isaiah would at first have joined in the seraph chant but he caught his breath and was struck dumb by the sense of uncleanness that seized him. He was as a deformed creature receiving for the first time a mirror to first behold his misshapenness. We like the devout Bernard when he studied this chapter exclaim, "Had the prophet need of a coal! Oh, then, grant for me a whole globe of fire, to purge away my filthiness, and make me a fit messenger to this people!" The more deeply we see the need of our world for strong and holy men and women to make it a world it should be, the more deeply do we feel our need of purification. We notice that with his cry of uncleanness God had purity ready to supply him Revelation of the notion and presence of God would simply be torture for us were it not for the fact of the "live coal" in the hands of the seraphims.

God cleanses them He calls to service. God's voice has ever since the fall of man sounded out this heartsearching cry, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?"

> "Oh, dull of heart! Enclosed doth lie
> In each 'Come, Lord,' a 'Here am I.' " > —Trench.

No better background for the art of church worship can be found anywhere than in this incident of Isaiah's call. Therein are seen all the progressions of soul worship: first, awe and adoration; second, humility and confession; third, justification and commitment to service. When we remember Isaiah's vision in the temple every house of divine worship should be alive with the sense of God whether it be a temple or an arbor.

> "I like to go into a church
> When only God is there,
> And fall upon my knees to Him,
> And bow my head in prayer.
> And when I must go forth again
> Where men, indifferent plod,
> I am better for the time
> That I have spent with God."

AFRAID OF TRUTH?

Said Jesus once upon a time: ''Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free.'' ''Know the truth?'' Down through the centuries the world's wisest minds have grappled with this question—to no avail. A comprehensive answer to the great mystery is largely withheld from our understanding.

Many of us, however, could know more of life's truths than we do. Why not ''begin at home'' and start today to face the facts about personal character? As we grow older, we become better acquainted with our weaknesses and our stupidities. No facts could come closer to us than those which we encounter daily in ourselves, yet most of us manage rather successfully to elude them. Why? Cobwebs in the brains of most of us prevent clear thinking. Not a few, however, fail to employ self-analysis because they are afraid—afraid that the foundation of their conceit may be shaken.

Without giving much thought to the matter, we all tend to place a rather high estimate on our own personalities. Our smug complacence, to be sure, often carries us through situations that might otherwise prove embarrassing. A family quarrel, an unpleasant affair at the mill or the office, a tempest in a teapot at the club is precipitated. Who is to blame? Not I, surely. But what of that sarcastic reply you received today from a business associate? That hurt look you saw on the face of your friends? Could your action have been senseless, your words unkind? No. We rationalize our faults and, like Scarlett O'Hara, say to ourselves, ''I'll think about it tomorrow.'' Afraid to face the truth! Here you are eagerly awaiting a promotion from your employer. Some one else gets the job. ''Well, of course, he had a pull,'' is your face-saving remark. The truth? Perhaps. Or did your employer analyze your effectiveness without the aid of your own rose colored glasses? Afraid of the truth!

No, no! Be honest! Let a little of the bright light of day play upon your character, lest you become the possessor of a static personality. Many a discontented, maladjusted individual would be a happier man or woman today had he in his youth faced with grim determination the truth about himself. An earnest effort at self-knowledge may bring many a surprise. Like a flash it may occur to us that certain contemptible little habits which from time to time we have noticed in our friends but never dreamed were also a part of our own make-up are daily dragging us down and shaping our characters after a pattern, alas, so different from what we had set for ourselves. Have you the moral stamina to look these hard, cold facts in the face and resolve to fight that which is unworthy? Or are you afraid?

Let us go still deeper into the subject. A working religion involves not only right saying and doing, but, most of all, vital believing. We need to get on an honest footing with God as well as with ourselves. Here, once again, we are afraid.

Do you know what you believe? Gradually, as the years come and go, we build up for ourselves a rambling, unsteady structure of pious religious aspirations and half-baked conceptions, without much thought of coordinating them or applying them in the field of daily experience. Just as our pioneer forefathers in building their homes followed the habit of adding here and there additional rooms to the original structures, so many individuals continue to accept new ideas without bothering very much to discard outworn ones, or to relate the new to the old. Some young men and women, however, during their college years or later in life, arrive at the realization that certain of their views and opinions do not tie up with the thinking of their earlier years. But for some reason they retreat hastily from the revelation that they are outgrowing their former religious concepts. Afraid!

Honesty, sincerity, love of truth—are not these the ethical foundations of all religions? Have the courage to confront and sort out your thought tangles, retaining those ideas and ideals which you are ready to accept and discarding the unworkable and outworn ones. You do not have to compromise with your own common sense to be a Christian. Nor are Jesus' teachings obscure or deceptive. If you are honestly seeking the truth, God will guide you. He will lead you through all your tragic doubts and perplexities to a new appreciation of His wisdom and a new understanding of His power and love. Do your new insights play havoc with hoary traditions, time-honored doctrines? Fear not, for ''the foundation of God standeth sure.'' The only dislocation is in mankind's faulty reasoning and stubborn disobedience to the light. ''Seek and ye shall find.'' Trust your own mind and heart, and God will lead you to a fuller, richer faith.

Dr. Albert Schweitzer, world-famous musician, philosopher and physician, as a young man was moved to delve deeply into New Testament research. These studies were ''accompanied,'' he says, ''by the painful consciousness that this new knowledge in the realm of history would mean unrest and difficulty for Christian piety, I comforted myself, however,'' he continues, ''with the words of St. Paul's, which had been familiar to me from childhood: 'We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.' . . . Even if it comes in a guise which piety finds strange . . . the final result can never mean injury; it can only mean greater depth.''

Why not begin today to climb step by step to a more honest judgment as to what you are and what you believe? With God's guidance you can do it.—Zion's Herald.

PASTORS, PLEASE GIVE ATTENTION

It is exceedingly important that I get the names of the delegates to the Annual Conference at the earliest possible moment. If you have held your third quarterly conference, please let me know who is elected to represent your charge. Remember, Conference comes two weeks earlier than usual—which pushes my work up by that much. Your help will be appreciated.

West End begins its fall revival services next Sunday. Rev. A. D. Shelton is expected to assist the pastor and his people in this revival of religion.

GETTING PEOPLE TO ATTEND CHURCH

By Franklin P. Frye

The improvement of church attendance is one of the basic problems of the Christian church today. It is a pressing as well as a basic problem. Recognizing this, the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches in 1929 appointed a Commission on Church Attendance. Largely as a result of their work, a book, "How To Increase Church Attendance," was published in 1936. Although not an official document of the commission, it was edited by a commission member, Roger Babson, and many of its contributors are members of the commission, while most of its material resulted from the commission's studies. To this book, my article owes much.

Statistics seem to show that church attendance has had times of great increase followed with rhythmic regularity by a period of decline. The lowest ebb in recent centuries was about 1600. Additions to the church by confession of faith reached their height about 1921, when 1,700,000 new members were added. (These figures were, I think, for Protestant churches of the United States.) Since then, says the commission's statistician, "both church attendance and additions by confession have gradually declined." The additions by confession in 1935 were 990,000. Figures kept by 1,000 churches show an increase from 1930 to 1932, followed by a decline of about 5 per cent from 1932 to 1936. Some observers have claimed an increase in most sections of the country since 1936, but that seems largely conjecture. Some signs seem to indicate that church attendance, as well as contributions, rises or falls with economic conditions. Which is the cause and which the effect is a matter of opinion.

If the church of Christ is to cope with its own problems, if it is to provide vision and power in this hour of need, it is imperative that its people be brought back to a new love for the worship of God. I am not saying that all our problems would be solved if our churches were filled. Rather, the first step to a filled church is an emptied church. Some churches will have to be emptied of self-sufficiency and pride, some of class and race prejudice, some of formality, and some of vulgarity. Our emphasis must be on improving rather than merely increasing church attendance. The second step to a church is a filled church: filled with faith in Christ and His way of living; filled with courage and hope that God will bring a better day through us; filled with a sense of the uniqueness of the church among human institutions; filled with concern about the millions of non-churched pagans; filled with enthusiasm for a revival of loyalty in church attendance.

All this is to say that we must begin with the faithful group of twenty-five to thirty-five per cent of a church's membership which is present nearly every Sunday. Even these can, with a little care, improve their own record.

The next class to be reached is those who attend church frequently, as once or twice a month, but not regularly. Cannot we by sermons, literature, and personal conversations make these good folks realize the uniqueness of the church as the only institution directly fostering religion? Cannot we convince them that spasmodic attendance is less helpful to them, less influential on others?

A third class comprises those who attend church regularly—every Easter—and those who never attend. The distinction is that the "once a year" people show at least some vestige of regard for the Christian faith, while those who never attend usually reject either the Christian religion itself or the church as an institution. Pastors and Christian laymen who seek to make contact in a natural friendliness with those who seem most indifferent, even hostile, sometimes find a surprising response to genuine religion.

Many and varied are the suggestions made for increasing church attendance by methods. These include campaigns and contests; sermons and literature; reviving the family pew; a unified service which would have all or most of the church family in the church at the same hour and would allow individual families to come and leave the church together; shorter and more numerous services; nurseries to care for young children while parents attend church; junior choirs; Go-to-Church bands; allowing people to attend the worship service without staying for the sermon, or to come for the sermon only; week-day religious education on public school time; more challenging preaching; more comfortable preaching (or comforting); "preaching to life situations"; sermon themes chosen by the congregation (if you can arouse them to do so); giving more people worth-while tasks; making our sanctuaries more worshipful and our church buildings generally as attractive as public school buildings; emphasis on the service as a whole rather than the sermon; adequate church publicity; a local church news sheet.

I agree with those who feel the time has come with an absolute and unequivocal promise to attend church every Sunday, unless Christianly impossible, must be exacted of every candidate for church membership. Having company come, staying up too late the night before, not liking the sermon topic, and not feeling "in the mood" would not be Christian excuses. Young people going out to work must think enough of church attendance to ask for time for it.

Rev. John L. Keedy of Pilgrim Congregational Church of Toledo, Ohio, makes some interesting comments on the strategy he believes in employing, including the following:

> (1) Building up a large congregation of worshipers who shall be in the worship service Sunday after Sunday is a major task of the church.
>
> (2) Loyalty to church is a chief Christian virtue, and regular attendance at church services is a major Sunday duty.
>
> (3) There is a dominant spiritual life-germ in every child; unfailingly, a gradual spiritual growth results from years of regular participation in worship of growing boys and girls.
>
> (4) The unit of approach to the church is not the individual but the family.
>
> (5) Where the church has the loyal cooperation of the home, it seldom fails with the children. Parents should cooperate by attending, working in, and praising the church.

(6) Sunday school and Scouts are not an adequate church experience for youth, nor is Bible class or men's club or women's union for adults. Membership in such organizations may supplement church attendance, but cannot be a substitute for it.

(7) A large part of the children of the church school can be brought into the regular congregation. A truly worshipful service, of which they are taught the meaning, will bring them soul uplift, even though they do not understand everything that goes on.

(8) Winning people by clubs or social programs is impermanent. They must be told boldly that there is no substitute for regular church attendance.

FAILURE OF THE VIRGINIA ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL (ABC) SYSTEM

By BISHOP JAMES CANNON, JR.

(The ABC system of Virginia was established by the General Assembly of Virginia, when it repealed the Statewide Prohibition Law, which law prohibited the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, including beer, wine and spirituous liquors. The law established a State Commission of three which issues, at its discretion, licenses to sell beer and wine, and is authorized to set up stores for the sale of ardent spirits—whiskey, brandy, gin, etc.,—in packages only, not to be drunk on the premises. The North Carolina law was avowedly patterned after the Virginia ABC law, it being openly declared that the Virginia system is the best method which has yet been devised for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

As I think it probable that Virginia and North Carolina will lead the way in the return to State Prohibition, I have thought the following statement might be of interest to the readers of our Church papers.)

I have been away from Richmond most of the time for the past few weeks, but have recently seen an editorial in the Times-Dispatch calling attention to the fact that in the last twelve local option elections in Virginia the drys have won eight of the elections. This is in line with what has been going on in the nation at large for the past four years. In that time there have been something over 8,000 local option elections, of which the drys have won over 6,000.

It has been my privilege to speak on "The Church and the Liquor Traffic" in Florida, Louisiana, Ohio, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Missouri, North Carolina, in addition to about thirty or more times in Virginia, within the past twelve months. I was glad to be an active participant in the fight to defeat the effort to establish a dispensary system in Dorchester County, Maryland, where we won by a safe majority, and within the past month to speak and to write in connection with the efforts to establish the ABC system in Asheville and Buncombe County, North Carolina. In this election the drys won by a smashing majority of 5,816.

As one of the General Superintendents of the United Methodist Church, the entire United States is within the sphere of my operations, but my work in connection with the Asheville election was not only as a bishop of the Methodist Church opposing, by authority of the General Conference, the liquor traffic as one of the "works of the devil," which our Lord the Master came into the world to destroy, but as a witness concerning the results which have followed repeal of the State Prohibition law of Virginia, and the institution of the ABC system.

In the Asheville (N. C.) election I was faced with an open letter from Mr. John Stewart Bryan, President of William & Mary, and publisher of the Richmond (Virginia) News Leader, which letter was printed by the "wets" with heavy headlines as expert testimony concerning the results of the ABC system in Virginia. The wet leader declared that "President Bryan is not only a leading educator, but a newspaper writer and author of renown," and that, therefore, his opinion "is of unusual interest to our people in Buncombe County."

I quote from Mr. Bryan's letter: "My experience has been that the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in Virginia has performed a social service of immense value. Those who see the figures feel that while much money is being spent for alcohol—no doubt entirely too much—yet in former times no one knew how much the bootleggers got; now at least the use of alcohol is being followed and checked, and the public knows what is going on. Furthermore, and more important, not only has the bootlegger been eliminated, but the idea that every one had to drink has been profoundly altered."

This is a most amazing statement. What are the outstanding facts? The ABC Board it was declared would promote temperance. If that means that it was to reduce the amount of intoxicating liquors legally sold by the state it has done nothing of the kind. The sales in the first year, 1934-35, amounted to $12,230,000 (round numbers); in 1935-36, $12,936,000; 1936-37, $16,162,000; 1937-38, $16,944,000 1938-39, $16,948,000—a growth in sales in the five year of $4,718,000, or more than 33 1/3 per cent.

The revocation of permits on account of drunken driving, beginning with 1933, were: 1933, 516; 1934, 1,042; 1935, 1,841; 1936, 2,529; 1937, 3,127; 1938, 3,115, showing that the revocation of permits was six times greater in 1938 than in 1933.

The number of ABC stores has steadily increased until there are now 87, located by the ABC Board in accordance with its own views, in many cases contrary to the wishes of the people.

The jail commitments in Virginia have increased to a most alarming extent, reaching approximately 87,000 the past year. In Richmond, our capital city, the arrests for drunkenness, have increased from 3,080 in 1932 to 5,914 in 1938. The ABC Board has opened not only the 87 stores for hard liquors, but has licensed approximately 5,600 beer and wine shops, which sell intoxicating beer, and wine (which can be fortified to over 20% in alcoholic content). These beer and wine shops are in operation in almost every community in the state, to the great damage of the young people of Virginia. It is distressing that most of the sales of beer and

THE LITTLE BLACK BOX

"Now hold still, everybody!" commanded a rosy-cheeked boy as he balanced himself upon a slippery rock. He centered his camera to be sure to get the three smiling children and the big Eskimo dog into the picture. The camera's shutter clicked and sent them all laughing and scampering about again in the soft reindeer moss.

"Well, Jerry, that finishes our roll of film, doesn't it? You really should have been in the picture too!" declared Sue, Jerry's sister. The two Eskimo children, Toolik and Neya, smiled at their little white friends joyously.

"Thank you for bringing little black box along today," said the Eskimo boy. "Soon we see pictures of great ice mountain."

His sister, Neya, nodded her head enthusiastically. "Not many people see ice mountain break off into iceberg. But warm weather just right this spring. Ice mountain melt for months and months. Slide out over the water. Today big piece break off and iceberg float out to sea!"

Jerry smiled at the way Neya explained things. But he knew she was right, and he was especially proud to have a snap-shot of the great chunk of ice just as it dropped into the ocean with an enormous splash.

"Don't forget to turn the film!" warned Sue. All four heads bent over the camera to watch the film slip past the little red window in the camera while Jerry wound it up. They made a pretty picture themselves—Sue and Jerry with their red berets, their mackinaw suits and galoshes; Toolik and Neya in embroidered suits of soft reindeer skin, their fur hoods or parkas pushed back off their shiny black hair.

Jerry and his sister had expected to be very lonely when their father's work as a mining engineer had brought him and his family to Labrador. But Neya and Toolik were the jolliest playmates ever. They had already learned to speak English at the mission school. Now Sue and Jerry were learning how friendly and helpful their dark-skinned little neighbors could be.

"We'll bring you each a print of these pictures as soon as they're developed," promised Jerry. The two Eskimo children beamed with joy. The little black box was both a mystery and a delight to them.

"Down, Husky!" shouted Toolik to his sturdy Eskimo dog. Husky continued to jump about the four children, barking playfully, not heeding Toolik's English words.

"He must know it's time for all of us to start home," laughed Sue. "Why, only last week he followed Jerry and me almost all the way home."

Toolik chuckled. "No worry, Sue. Husky always come home all right. Husky never get lost yet!"

The children said goodbye and started home. Toolik and his sister lived farther up the coast. Sue and Jerry soon lost sight of them around a bend in the shore. Then they scampered off over the rough blocks of ice which the sea had tossed up on the beach after the spring thaw. Now and then they stopped to pick some of the wild flowers which grew in rocky crannies, often partly filled with the past winter's snow.

An outburst of noisy barking suddenly made the children turn around. There came Husky, jumping over the rocks and ice as friskily as a mountain goat. When he caught up to his young friends, he jumped against each of them so boisterously he almost tumbled them over.

"Go back home!" Jerry commanded sharply. But Husky seemed to take the strange words as Jerry's way of welcoming him.

Sue chuckled when he brother vainly kept repeating the command. "It's no use, Jerry. Husky hasn't learned much English yet. We'll have to show him what we mean."

Jerry grabbed Husky's stout leather collar and ran with him in the direction of the Eskimo settlement. Husky joined merrily in this new game. But the moment Jerry let go and started in the opposite direction, the dog promptly wheeled about and followed him.

"I don't like to let Husky get into the habit of following us home," the boy said thoughtfully. "But we can't waste any time. It's getting late. You know how foggy it gets in the evening along the coast."

Sue nodded. "I know what! Let's pretend we're going into the water. He won't follow because he knows how cold it is."

Out across the blocks of ice to the water's edge ran Sue and Jerry. Husky looked perplexed. For a moment the children thought he would go home. Then out he bounded after them.

The heavy dog landed with a resounding thud on the slippery ice at Jerry's feet. A rumbling sound, followed by a sharp report as if someone were cracking a whip, startled the children. Suddenly the ice under their feet tilted dangerously. A splash followed. When Sue and Jerry look around, they discovered that the section of ice upon which they were standing had broken loose under their weight. Now a gap of icy water separated them from the mainland.

At first Sue did not realize the seriousness of their predicament. But Jerry was quick to see that their ice-floe had been caught by a current. A chilly wind, which they had not noticed when the played close in under the high banks, helped sweep them northward in the direction of the Eskimo settlement. Neither child spoke. Even Husky seemed to sense the danger, for he sat quite still now, his eyes round and solemn.

"Oh, what shall we do?" Sue groaned at last. Jerry didn't answer. He was thinking fast. Through the rising fog he could just make out the little cluster of sod houses where Toolik and Neya and their people lived.

"Help! Help! We're floating out to sea!" yelled Jerry as loudly as he could. But he knew shouting would do no good. The wind only carried the sound of his voice out to sea. He knew the Eskimos would hardly see him through the fog even if his voice did attract someone's attention.

Sue began to cry. "Oh, if only Husky could help us!" she sobbed. "He got us into this awful fix in the first place!"

Jerry looked around at the strong, intelligent dog a moment. Then he pulled off his red cap. "Give me yours too," he told his sister. With his handkerchief he tied both caps firmly to Husky's collar. Then he urged the big dog to the very edge of the ice.

"Go home!" shouted Jerry, motioning toward the settlement which was already disappearing in the fog. Husky did not move. His big eyes looked up at the boy as if to say, "I'm very sorry, but I don't understand your language."

Suddenly Sue remembered the word Toolik's father had called to his team of dogs when they pulled the sledge over the snow. "Mush!" she shouted. Husky pricked up his ears.

"Mush!" both children cried. At the same instant Jerry gave the dog a push. Into the water he plunged, then swam powerfully toward the shore as if he really understood.

The fog grew denser. Sue and Jerry trembled both from fear and the cold. After what seemed like hours and hours of waiting, they heard voices somewhere in the direction of the shore.

"We're here! Out on this ice floe!" cried Sue. But the others must not have heard. If they had, they could hardly have found the children in the fog. Their voices seemed to grow fainter again in the distance.

"If we only had a light!" exclaimed Jerry. "They'll never find us without a light!" He fumbled in his pocket and brought out a small waterproof box.

"Dad told me always to carry these matches," he explained to his sister. "But a match can't be seen very far through this fog."

"If only our camera would burn," sighed Sut, picking up the little black box.

Jerry shook his head. "It's metal," he said. Then he jumped to his feet. "But camera film burns like anything! I put some in the stove once at home."

Jerry's fingers were trembling so he could hardly pull open the back of the camera. Sue grabbed his arm.

"The iceberg pictures!" she exclaimed. "We may never get any more like those we took this afternoon!"

Jerry hesitated. He was extra proud of those pictures. Then the men's voices sounded again in the distance. He knew Toolik's father and the other men must be out there, paddling their kaiaks about in the fog. They were risking their lives in their little seal-skin boats among those crashing chunks of floating ice. It would be foolish not to burn the signal at once so they all might return to safety.

Bravely, therefore, Jerry unrolled the long streamer of film and paper. He touched a match to the loose end and held the spool high over his head as long as he dared. The film flared up in a brilliant streak of light. When it fell to the ice, the wooden spool continued to burn for some time afterward.

Now the children heard shouts from the distance. The flare had sent its signal through the fog. In another moment a little fleet of tiny bobbing kaiaks appeared as if by magic.

"Are you safe, Sue and Jerry?" cried a familiar voice. An anxious-faced boy ran across the ice to them. It was Toolik. Husky had come straight to him, still dripping from the icy swim. The dog had kept barking until his master saw the red caps and called the men to their kaiaks.

The children's father was waiting anxiously for them when they climbed ashore after their exciting rescue. So was Husky, his thick fur still wet and rough with sea water. He seemed to know his white-skinned friends had had a narrow escape, for he jumped up to greet each of them in turn.

Jerry explained to his father and the little crowd of Eskimos how Husky had saved him and his sister from danger. Then Sue told how brave Jerry had been in burning the precious camera film to make a signal light for Toolik and the others.

"The little black box!" Neya exclaimed triumphantly. "See, it saved you from the icebergs!"

"You're right, Neya," grinned Jerry. "But I won't be satisfied until we get another snap-shot of the formation of one of those icebergs!" And before the summer was over, he and his playmates got the picture they wanted in the little black box.—Seth Harmon, in The Sentinel.

wine are made by young women, when formerly no women were seen in beer or liquor saloons.

The statement by Mr. Bryan, that the "bootlegger has been eliminated," is absurd, and is not supported by the news columns of his own paper, which within the past year published a headline, "Eighty Stills Seized In October Compared With Forty-Nine In October Last Year, 72,000 Gallons of Mash As Compared With 28,500, 3,000 Gallons of Whiskey As Compared With 1,166 Gallons." As a matter of fact no one knows how much liquor is sold by moonshiners and bootleggers. No one knows how much bootleggers sold in former times, and no one knows now, Mr. Bryan to the contrary notwithstanding.

The above report covers two weeks since there was no Herald last week. We are thankful to all of you who have thus contributed to the support of the Home.

Things are going well here, and we are shaping up plans rapidly for school, school supplies and extra clothing, so your earnest cooperation and help is needed.

August will be going and September approaching when the Herald reaches you this week, so there will be only two more regular monthly offerings from the Sunday schools and churches for the Home before Conference, since Conference is to meet on October 18 this time. So please give us the very best lift you can during these two intervening months. We thank you and may God bless every one of you. A. G. DIXON, Supt.

TRIP TO NEW YORK INCLUDED FIRST TRAIN RIDE FOR JOHN STANBACK LEWIS

A real American boy's first ride on a train to New York is an event in the life of John Stanback Lewis, who returned Thursday night from the metropolis.

Young Lewis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lacy Lewis, Sunset avenue, and grandson of the late J. S. Lewis for whom he is named, went to New York with his father to join Lacy Lewis, Jr., who was already there seeing the innumerable sights.

When asked what he thought was the most interesting feature of the exposition, John immediately replied: "The G. E. exhibit, but Billy Rose's show is the 'smash-hit' at the fair." John and his party waited in line for three hours to see the motors display.

John agrees there is much to see at the fair—as well as in the city. The outstanding displays at the World's Fair, he says, were the Acquacade, the British and French pavilions, Dupont glass building, house of jewels, the state buildings, Frank Buck and his animals, Firestone Tire demonstration, Ripley's Believe-It-Or-Not, the North Carolina display, Mrs. C. A. Hayworth's state seal, exhibits of the homes of tomorrow, U. S. Rubber company, Ford Motor and Olson Rug companies, Life-Saver parachute, and National Cash Register.

John Stanback rode on all kinds of push cars, electric cars, elevators and busses. The 500-foot ride in the air was also a thrilling experience for the young man. He also visited the Heinz display and tasted all 57 varieties.

In the city the interesting places visited were to the top of the Empire State, the R. C. A. building, and Rockefeller Center.

John saw the largest ship in the world. He enjoyed the play, "The American Way," starring Fredric March, and "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," featuring Richard Gaines.

The subways were an attraction and John said, "Gee, but this takes you to ride."

John Stanback is quite interested in music and plays the saxophone in the Asheboro high school band. Of special interest to him was seeing Jimmy Dorsey direct his band, and going to the Hall of Music.

Young Lewis said the fair was good for "aching feet," and he walked himself down. While resting from the strenuous expedition, he has an audience to relate his experiences to, this being composed of his Asheboro pals, Billy and Tucker Page, Tyler Lisk and Sam Black, who listen with wide-eyed interest how their friend stayed up until 3:00 a. m. They also marvel at how John dried his hands by hot air in New York, ate breakfast at 10 o'clock, dinner at 5 o'clock and supper at midnight. — Cleta Rich, in Asheboro Courier.

SEPTEMBER MONTH FOR THANK OFFERING OBSERVANCE IN NORTH CAROLINA

Thank offering materials are now out for the fall program, and each auxiliary and each church is urgently urged to hold a service. New boxes in harmony with the theme for the new year, "Thy Kingdom Come," have been gotten out, and envelopes are also available.

A new pageant, "The Changeless Call Through the Changing Years," portraying the history of the work of the women in the Methodist Protestant Church will be of especial interest. It was given at the Women's Convention at Westminster and was especially interesting. Every former Methodist Protestant should have the knowledge of what the women have done along the line of missions, both home and abroad.

"By Faith" is a service which may be used, as a worship service for congregational use in connection with the historical pageant. Program B, "These Things Shall Be," is a one act play, with accentuation on Christian Education (see August-September, 1938, Missionary Record, pafe 16). Program C. "And Who Then Is Willing To Consecrate His Service This Day Unto the Lord." See August-September Missionary Record, 1938.

In the same issue is Program D. Theme of program being "Giving For Gratitude." Order program material at once from Miss Bettie Brittingham, 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md.

Order Thank offering boxes from me at once. Mrs. W. C. Hammer, Asheboro, N. C.

I saw him stop and buy

Held captive in a cage.
Without a single word

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Central Church, Asheboro.—All plans are being completed for the coming revival at Central church, September 20-October 1. Dr. E. K. McLarty, pastor of Central Methodist church, Concord, will be the visiting minister, and the local congregation is fortunate to secure Dr. McLarty for this meeting. He is an experienced evangelist, having had charge of this work for a period of time in the Western North Carolina conference.

Tom Houts, director of Christian Education at the Asheboro church, will supervise the music during the series of meetings. The evening services have been announced for 7:30 with Mr. Houts meeting the young people at 7 o'clock. Dr. Taylor and the church membership are most desirous for a successful revival.

The music for the church school the past Sunday was by the recently organized orchestra under the direction of Tom Houts. Miss Louise Swaim was at the piano and the members are: Mr. Houts, trumpet; Jack Pugh, baritone; Willis Hooper, trombone; Harris Lamb, trumpet; Cicero Holder, saxaphone; James Hendricks, violin and Glenn Pugh, clarinet.

Miss Edna Mae Winningham was principal speaker Sunday evening at a combined meeting of the league group at the Asheboro First Methodist church. Miss Lucy Lowdermilk is leader of the Central church group and the topic was "Worship Understood."

A concert of sacred music will be presented at the church Sunday evening, September 10, by the young people's choir of which Mr. Houts is director.

Tom Houts was guest speaker at a meeting of the Women's Auxiliary at the church Monday afternoon and gave an interesting history of several church hymns. Miss Lollie Jones, Auxiliary president, was in charge of the business session during which time plans were made to send a supply of clothing to the Alvin Drew school at Pine Ridge, Kentucky. Mrs. John Swain spoke on leadership training progress in the Methodist church, and Mrs. John Taylor gave a talk on Methodist youth missionary encampments.

On Friday evening, September 1, the young people of the church will have their annual banquet in the church dining room.

The N. C. Christian Advocate on August 17 carried a picture of Miss Cynthia Mendenhall, granddaughter of W. F. Redding, Hill street, and a prominent member of Central church. The picture was one of a group of eight individual photographs of those who were graduated during the spring from the Methodist Children's Home at Winston-Salem and are expecting to matriculate in the higher institutions of learning this fall. Miss Mendenhall attended school at the Home while her mother, the late Mrs. Cora Redding Mendenhall, was a member of the staff. She will be a member of the freshman class at Woman's College, during the ensuing term.

Jack Pugh, Bill Pugh, Miss Clancey Pugh, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Vestal, and daughter, Earlene; Mis Cleta Mae Ragsdale, Bernice Ragsdale, Miss Esther Ross, Miss Florence Cook, Miss Virginia Lowe, Miss Iola Lowdermilk, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Redding and Mrs. W. F. Redding have recently attended presentations of Paul Green's symphonic pageant, "The Lost Colony," on Roanoke Island. Miss Cleta Rich returned Wednesday from a three-day visit on Roanoke Island with friends of the cast and saw the epic drama.

Mrs. Robert W. Wood and Mrs. W. F. Redding, Jr., are home from New York and the exposition. Mrs. N. M. Harrison, N. M. Harrison, Jr., Lacy Lewis, Lacy Lewis, Jr., and John Stanback Lewis, returned the past week from a vacation in New York. Miss Kate Hammer and Henry Jones, also of Central church, are just home from a week's trip to New York where they purchased merchandise for their stores. Reitzell Smith will go to New York Saturday for a vacation and to see the Fair.

Mis Elizabeth Phillips left Monday for Lee County to begin her work as George Reed instructor in the Lemon Springs high school, after a two-month vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Phillips. Miss Elizabeth Henley, registered nurse of Washington, D. C., is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Henley. Ben Bulla of Burlington, is spending several days with his uncle, Earl F. Bulla.

Of special interest to their numerous friends is the announcement of the marriage on Sunday afternoon, August 20, of Mrs. Nannie Causey Lowdermilk to Charles F. Smith. The ceremony was at the ancestral home of Mrs. Lowdermilk, near Liberty, where Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe C. Causey now reside, with Rev. J. W. Braxton, pastor of Mt. Pleasant Methodist church, reading the marriage vows. The members of the Causey family have for many years worshipped at Mt. Pleasant church.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith were unattended for their marriage vows. Mrs. W. D. Underwood, musician, of Greensboro, played McDowell's "To a Wild Rose" during the service, and the traditional wedding march for the entrance of the couple. Mrs. Smith was costumed in a grape shade crepe gown with black accessories and at her shoulder she wore a corsage of gardenias, pink rose buds and baby's breath.

Mrs. Smith is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joe Causey of Liberty route and she was the widow of the late Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, minister of the Methodist Protestant church. Mr. Smith, life-long resident of Asheboro, is owner and manager of the C. F. Smith Shoe Shop and he and his son also has the agency for the Norge Appliances of Randolph County. He and Mrs. Smith will reside at the Smith home, 600 South Cox Street, Asheboro.

Among the wedding guests were the brothers of Mrs. Smith who are R. C., J. C., W. G. and L. W. Causey and families who reside near Liberty and Kemp Causey of Greensboro; Dr. and Mrs. T. C. Amick and Miss Frances Diviney of Louisburg; Mrs. Mary Biffett, W. D. Underwood and two children, Ruth and Bob, and Rev. R. C. Stubbins, of Greensboro; Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Ryan of High Point and Reitzell Smith of Asheboro. Mrs. Ryan and Reitzell Smith are children of C. F. Smith.

Forsyth Charge.—This has been, in many respects, the most successful year of my pastorate on the Forsyth Charge. My annual report to the Conference at Greensboro will show that Maple Springs has received more members and raised more money than in any other year. It will also show that Mt. Carmel has raised more money and has the largest Sunday school than in any year. Both these churches raised their appreciation year quotas in full. Union Ridge and Hickory Ridge are holding their own so far as attendance and finances are concerned.

Revival meetings have been held at all four churches. The following ministers assisted in these revivals and rendered splendid service: At Union Ridge, Rev. C. E. Ridge; at Mt. Carmel, Rev. V. A. Morton; at Hickory Ridge, Rev. R. C. Stubbins. At Maple Springs the pastor did the preaching, at the request of the congregation.

Mr. J. F. Evans, superintendent of the Mt. Carmel Sunday school, will be delegate to the Annual Conference.

We regret to report the death of R. E. Watts, Jr., son of Mr. R. E. Watts, Sr., superintendent of the Maple Springs Sunday school. An obituary will appear later. This family has the prayers of the entire congregation.

R. A. HUNTER, Pastor.

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Second Sunday morning began our revival meeting. Pastor Broome, text Act 2:2. Sunday afternoon Rev. Phipps from Littleton, text St. Matthews 6:33. Monday evening Rev. J. W. Braxton's text was the entire 6th chapter of Isaiah. He continued the services through Friday evening, bringing very helpful messages from time to time.

And the people enjoyed having him in their homes. Come again, you have a welcome.

We were glad to have Rev. W. M. Howard to worship with us Tuesday afternoon.

Fourth Sunday evening the doors of the church were to be opened but it was so rainy and so few here Brother Broome said he would wait. He read part of 2 Peter 3 chapter, then brought us a very helpful message.

We are very proud to note we have 57 new song books.

Since our last report one of our members, Miss Gertie Pepper, has become the bride of Mr. Richard King. We wish them much success through life.

Sorrow to hear that Mrs. Ambrose Pittard is in the Roanoke Rapids hospital, but glad she is geting along nicely, and is expecting to return home this week.

MRS. CLAUDE HAWKINS, Reporter.

Orange Chapel, Saxapahaw Charge, Rev. M. C. Henderson, Pastor.—The Third Quarterly Conference for this charge was held at our church on August 5. The busines was conducted in a very harmonious way. The ballots were counted, and it was declared that Floy Ferguson was elected as delegate to the coming Annual Conference.

Our revival meeting came to a close last Saturday evening. The pastor did all the preaching, and he labored faithfully, bringing us some very forceful gospel messages. The church was revived and there were twenty-one professions of faith, and reclamations. As a result of this there were eight new members added to our church roll. For different reasons the children's day program has been delayed, but it is announced that this program will be given next Sunday, September 30 at 2:30. We hope as many as can will attend this service. We have a good Sunday school, although we do not have a large enrollment.

We are glad that Mrs. C. C. Crawford who has been very sick, is much improved. To the former pastors of this church, we wish to extend our best wishes.

MRS. J. L. MAYNARD, Reporter.

Mill Grove Church, Rev. E. A. Cook, Pastor.—We just closed a grand meeting here. The preaching was just fine but the crowds were small and very poor interest manifested by most of the members. The help was Rev. C. E. Sullivan of Roxboro. He did some good preaching. His sermons were helpful to all. He left Friday night. Brother Cook preached two powerful sermons on Saturday and Sunday nights. The meeting closed Sunday night. There were four members added to the church, two of them had families and two single. We were very glad to have them join with us. We are moving along very nicely here at present. We have our faithful few to depend on. Our Sunday school is doing very well at present. The interest is good in all the classes. We have our church department nearly, if not all paid and pledged. We are hoping soon to be out of debt. We will be very proud and thankful. We desire the prayers of the Christian people, for our unsaved members. Our degelate to the Annual Conference is Brother J. N. Springer. We desire the prayers of all Christians.

Yarborough Chapel, Yarborough Charge, Rev. T. H. Vickery, Pastor.—At this time we are very glad to report a very good revival which began on the 1st Sunday night in August and closed on the following Friday night. Rev. Leo Pittard of Greensboro was our helper. He brought us some wonderful messages, all who met him learned to love him. We hope he can be with us again. Many hearts were warmed and much eternal good was accomplished throughout the meeting. We are thankful for the splendid cooperation of the other churches in the community.

Our Sunday school is about as usual, but there is still room for others.

Our Young People's meeting is also moving along nicely. Our attendance has been fair and our programs very interesting. Our daily prayer is that those that are indifferent and unconcerned may take more interest in the work of the Lord, for the uplifting of His Kingdom.

State Street, O. C. Loy, Pastor.—Our services have continued through the summer months. Mr. Loy has filled his appointments in a wonderful way.

The Ladies' Auxiliary was kept unusually busy through the month of July as they sponsored and served four suppers. A nice sum of money was raised and paid on interest.

The revival closed last Sunday night. Rev. J. Clyde Auman of Thomasville did the preaching very effectively. A number of conversions and reclamations were received and four added to the church by profession of faith.

The Third Quarterly Conference was held at State Street last Wednesday night with a fairly good attendance and nice reports from both churches.

Sunday morning, August 27, State Street unaminously voted to merge with Main Street Methodist Church on condition that they take over all property along with the congregation. In his natural talented way Mr. Loy gave a splendid lecture on the end of an old trail, and the acceptance of a new and broader trail, and stressed the point that we should let God lead and direct us along our new trail. We feel deeply grieved to think of having the doors of our little church closed. Although we will not forget the many blessings we have received through the good work of our pastors and friendly congregation.

We ask the prayers of all Christian friends that all will be well with us, and that we may serve God in a higher, nobler way in the future than in the past.

Connelly Springs Charge. — Shady Grove Church was completed July, 1939. Although we are planning to do more to beautify the church. The Ladies' Aid Society will plant shrubbery this fall if the Lord permits. The society is working at the present time to buy more pews. We want to say there are about 20 active women in this organization, and if they would be a little more active we would see the work move along a little faster.

When the church was started some said, "We can't build." Others said, "We can." Thank God for people who say we can.

Communion service was observed Sunday, August 20. Rev. Yokeley delivered us a very inspiring message using as his subject, "The Word Come."

We are still having a good Sunday school. Other services are very well attended except the quarterly meeting. We hope all the official members will realize the necessity of this meeting and attend the next one.

A revival meeting conducted by the Cook Brothers is now going on near Shady Grove Church. We are hoping and praying that many souls will be saved and much good will be done.

MRS. RUTH AIKEN.

Friendship, Rev. Earl A. Cook, Pastor.—
On Sunday, August 6 our revival meeting began. Since we do not have a special home coming day here, we combined it with the beginning of the revival. Rev. J. D. Griffin of Monroe, N. C., was the pulpit help. Rev. Mr. Griffin began at the 11:00 o'clock service with a good message, and continued throughout the week; the attendance was wonderful through the entire meeting.

A good number were converted, and five joined the church. They are: Mr. L. C. Burleson, Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon Burleson, and Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Lowe. We are indeed glad to welcome these to our church. If the meeting was not the success it should have been, we do not feel that it was the fault of the preacher. Mr. Griffin and his wife have made a host of friends in Friendship church and community. All who heard him enjoyed his preaching and I am sure would be glad to hear him again. The meeting closed on Saturday night as our pastor, Rev. Mr. Cook, began his meetnig at Loves Grove on the second Sunday, with Rev. W. C. Dutton as pulpit help there. On the third Sunday Rev. Mr. Cook will begin his meeting at Mill Grove, with Rev. C. E. Sullivan as pulpit help. Mr. Cook was released from the 11:00 o'clock service here on the third Sunday .

On Saturday evening, July 15, 1939, at the Friendship parsonage Mr. Lawrence B. Cook of Charlotte and Monroe, N. C., and Miss Mary Texie Petty of Charlotte, N. C., were united in marriage by the bridegroom's brother, Rev. Earl A. Cook.

Mrs. Cook is a daughter of the late L. M. Petty and Mrs. Texie Petty of Charlotte, N. C., and holds a position with the Liggett Drug Company of that place. Mr. Cook is a son of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Cook of Monroe, N. C., and has a responsible position with the H. & M. Grocery Company of Charlotte. After a short wedding trip their home will be in Charlotte, N. C. Their many friends wish for them a long and happy marriage.

Mr. Dan Herlocker, an old and faithful member of Friendship, is very sick. We request your prayers in his behalf.

Mt. Pleasant Church, Mt. Pleasant Charge, Rev. J. W. Braxton, Pastor. — For three months news from Mt. Pleasant has been scarce due to vacation and sickness in the family of the reporter. The church activities of Pleasant Union and Mt. Pleasant have been moving along nicely. Both churches have had their vacation Bible school with Mr. S. R. Crumpton of Duke University as instructor. Mr. Crumpton also held night classes teaching "The Life of Christ," at Pleasant Union and a course in "Building a Young People's Society Program" at Mt. Pleasant. Mr. Crumpton was well liked by all and we feel like a lot of good was accomplished at both schools.

Revival services were held at Pleasant Union with Rev. A. M. Smith of Liberty and Siler City doing the preaching. Rev. Smith was liked by all and brought some helpful messages in this series of services.

The beginning of Mt. Pleasant revival was Sunday, August 20. At Sunday school attendance was 245 with 41 visitors. At the morning service Dr. Lawrence Little, professor of Religious Education at Western Maryland College brought the message. We were very happy to have this inspiring speaker to tell us the "Difference Jesus Made In His Life." Telling us that Jesus was the supreme example of manhood and challenging us to try and be more like Him. In the afternoon and through the week Rev. D. E. Earnhardt was the pulpit help, bringing impressive messages.

During the absence of reports from our church two more bodies were laid to rest at Mt. Pleasant. Mrs. Tom Steele of Greensboro, she was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Eck Hudson. Everyone knew her as "Sybie," a good, kind mother and neighbor. She leaves her husband and several children to mourn her loss. On August 19 last rites were held for Mrs. Con Black, age 41 years. She was the former Genevia Smith. Her going was a great shock to all although she had been in ill health for some time, no one realized her condition to be so serious. She is survived by her husband and two children, Ella Mae and James, both of the home, her father, Will Smith, one sister and three brothers. God saw fit to call another good mother, friend and neighbor. Flowers was in charge of Miss Edith Causey.

We would like to remember our sick. Mr. S. A. Alexander has been missed from Mt. Pleasant for several weeks. Mr. J. T. Shoffner is able to be in a rolling chair. Mrs. Trixsie Suits is much improved. Mr. J. Q. Curtis is critically ill at his home. Mr. Bill Stafford is able to be out some after an operation on his knee. Mrs. Roscoe Causey is a patient at Piedmont Memorial Hospital, Greensboro. We wish for them all a speedy recovery.

A wedding of much interest was solemnized when Mrs. Nannie Causey Lowdermilk and Charles F. Smith of Asheboro, were united in marriage in an impressive outdoor ceremony Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. at the home of R. C. Causey, the bride's brother. About 75 relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony which was performed by Rev. J. W. Braxton. Wedding music was furnished by Mrs. Walter Underwood of Greensboro. The couple will make their home in Asheboro.

Asheboro.—We are having one of our very best summers in the Asheboro church. Congregations have held up well; young people's activities, under the direction of Tom Houts, have been noticeably good. Our Sunday school, women's work, and scout troop, are all showing a most encouraging interest. Carmon Parks has been a wizard with his scout troop. He now has forty-seven boys. This is the largest troop in our city. It is gratifying to have our finances in good condition, despite the slumps incident to this season of the year. We are really having a good summer. Our revival, dated for September 20 to October 1, is our main objective now. All services are designed to get us ready for this campaign. Dr. E. K. McLarty will do the preaching. We are anticipating his coming with deep interest and much prayer. Two other events of importance are in our near program. One is our annual young people's banquet, which will be put on September 1. The other is a concert of sacred music, which will be given under the direction of Tom Houts. This program will take the place of the preaching service Sunday night, September 10. All budgets will be paid in full by the meeting of conference, October 18. We thank God for the Asheboro church. It is in good condition.

Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson.—We are glad that we can report at this time that our Sunday school as well as the general church are doing well in both interest and attendance. Attendance in Sunday school has been unusually good this summer, with classes steadily growing.

The Circuit Rally for the four churches on North Davidson Charge was held at our church the past Sunday, with large numbers attending from each of the churches. The greater part of the Spring Hill Church came to be with us for Sunday school, and the classrooms were filled until every available space was taken, and one class was forced to move out into the main auditorium. After Sunday school, people began coming from the other churches, and about eleven o'clock the Rally Day really began with each church contributing a part of the program. Mt. Pleasant and Spring Hill presented their programs in the morning, followed by a picnic lunch on the church grounds. About one-thirty we re-assembled in the church, and Bethesda and Canaan presented their programs.

If we pick out some highlights, we might refer to Mrs. Williams' solo, "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer," and a short address by Mr. West, principal of Hasty High School in the morning. Mr. West pointed out several good things which Rally Day brings about, and urged us to adopt the program in each church of "Praying for the Work, planning it, and pushing it." In the afternoon, very fine speeches were made by Mr. C. L. Berrier, Mr. C. M. Yokeley, and Mr. Albert Berrier. But the day was not all speeches by men; the children had a part in the program too, and the whole day was seasoned by good singing.

All in all, there were a lot of good things said and done. Certainly Rally Day can be a great good and a great booster for the work of each church on a charge, for ideas can be exchanged, people from the various churches can mingle together, and the very act of getting so many people together seems to make us feel more deeply the importance of the Work.

First Methodist Church, High Point, N. C.—Nothing has been heard from us in several weeks, but we have been enjoying good services during the summer months with attendance holding up very well considering the fact that so many people have been away on vacations. The exterior of the church is being painted and we are certainly proud of its appearance. Our fall program is completed and we look forward to a successful closing of our year's work.

On July 27, the Sunday school held a Retreat for officers and teachers. The meeting was held at the Post Office cabin, several miles out of town. A picnic supper was served at six o'clock. Afterwards Rev. J. Elwood Carroll led the devotional service using as his theme, "A Christ To Share," and then the meeting broke up into small groups according to departments and trained resource leaders conducted discussions. Mrs. E. C. Getzeman from the Fist Baptist church led the Cradle Roll, Beginners, and Primary group; Mrs. P. W. Flagg from Wesley Memorial Methodist, the Junior Department; Mrs. A. C. Lovelace, the Immediate; Rev. James Rink, assistant pastor of Wesley Memorial, the Young People's group; Rev. Donald Conrad, the Adults. Special music was rendered by A. C. Lovelace, Jr. Approximately sixty people were in attendance.

Last Monday at seven-thirty o'clock the Woman's Auxiliary held its monthly meeting at the country home of Mrs. J. R. Meredith. Mrs. E. W. Auman led the devotionals. An unusually large group enjoyed the meeting and social hour which followed.

Last Sunday night a week ago the Christion Endeavor City Union presented a pageant, "A Tapestry of the Bible" in the amphitheater at the City Lake. Approximately forty members took part, many of whom were from this church. It was well presented and attended.

Several people have joined our church during the past few weeks. They are; Mr. and Mrs. John Eshelman, Jr., Miss Pauline Hicks, Little David Auman, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Auman, Mrs. James Montgomery, Mrs. J. A. Lee and daughter, Geraldine.

Pleasant Grove Church, Fred R. Love, Pastor.—I am taking the authority to write a few lines about our church. The church work in general is going along nicely. The attendance has been a little slack due to vacations, but with those over we expect to be back to normal again. However, there are always those who are faithful at all times, ready and willing to do all they can to promote the kingdom in their church.

Under the leadership of our superintendent, Clyde Payne, our Sunday school is doing fine work in the teaching of God's word and keeping the interests of the Conference before the people. All special days have been observed, with good offerings, besides our regular monthly contribution to our Children's Home.

There is a growing interest in our church for the beautifying of our church and grounds. The Ladie's Aid is sponsoring the work that is now being done on our yard. There is to be a complete new concrete wall around the yard, with cement steps. It will then be filled in and sowed in grass. The Senior C. E. Society is making plans to help buy the shrubbery. One will hardly recognize old Pleasant Grove when this work is completed.

There is one thing the pastor does not have to do here and that is, talk about finances, for the people are always ready and willing to pay and support any worthy cause. I learned some time ago that all of our General and Annual Conference Budgets, with pastors' salary were paid to date. I am very happy that these are out of our way. We are just waiting for Conference.

Our revival meeting begins next Sunday, September 3. Rev. Jessie Ingram, pastor of the Welcome Charge (former M. E.), will be our pulpit help. We are trusting that God will give us a great meeting.

Mr. Clyde Payne has been elected delegate to conference for the fourth consecutive year.

We desire the prayers of each Herald reader that God will continue to bless this church and people. FRED R. LOVE, Pastor.

Shiloh, Shiloh Charge, C. E. Ridge, pastor.—Our work here continues to move along in a very satisfactory manner. The annual revival is always begun on the third Sunday in August but it was decided to begin on Wednesday night before, in order to permit a longer revival period. The pastor preached ever night until Sunday and then Rev. T. G. Madison from Cleveland circuit came and preached twice daily through Friday night. This was Mr. Madison's first visit to Shiloh and the church at large was very appreciative of his splendid service. He gave us the vital truths of the gospel and in a manner so easily understood. I would like to give a list of every subject and text that he used but am unable to do so. We thank Our Father for His leading in the services and are grateful to Rev. Mr. Madison for his untiring efforts. We feel sure and can see that we had a revival among our people. There were 12 additions to the church—all new converts except Mrs. Floyd Leatherman who came by letter from Tabernacle, Greensboro. There were also some reclamations. The spirit of cooperation was good and the crowds that attended the services were large at every service. We just hope that the revival spirit shall remain among our people.

Our weekly prayer services are being continued and we are sure that these are a blessing to those who attend.

Trinity Methodist Church, L. E. Mabry, Pastor.—Our Sunday school and church attendance is holding up very well at this time. We have had quite a few visitors at our church for the services. Last Sunday we observed the Lord's Supper at the morning hour. At this service Rev. Mabry preached a very impressive sermon, taking his text from the last supper. Nearly everyone took part in the communion service.

At our Third Quarterly Conference Ernest Hamilton was elected delegate to the Annual Conference.

Our Baby Contest came to a close last Sunday. We raised about $60.00. Jean Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hamilton won first prize. Darrell Kimbrell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Kimbrell won second prize and Thomas Fine, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Fine, finished third.

Stacey Foster of our Boy Scout Troop will get his Eagle badge at the Lexington Court of Honor September 5. Stacey is the first member of our troop to become an Eagle Scout. He will be the second Eagle Scout in Lexington this year.

The city-wide C. E. Union met in our church August 28. The president, Kenneth Crouse, who is a member of our church and was recently licensed to preach, had charge of the meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Baney, who came to Lexington from Indiana, joined our church August 20. We are glad to have these good people with us.

TOM HOUTS SPEAKS BEFORE AUXILIARY ON "CONGREGATIONAL SINGING"

Tom Houts, director of Christian Education at Central Methodist church, spoke on Monday afternoon at the regular meeting of the church auxiliary, reading the following paper:

The singing of hymns by Protestant church members can hardly be over-estimated as to its place in the program of the church. Witness the significant fact that the high points in spiritual power through all the history of the church have been accompanied by a revival in congregational singing. Some of these epochs in hymn singing are well worth noting.

One of the earliest beginnings was at Edessa in Asia Minor during the fourth century. Another took place under Bishop Ambrose during the Crusades, and we cannot overlook our own Protestant reformation and the inspired hymns of Martin Luther, with a "Mighty Fortress Is Our God," being the finest example of this phase in church history. Hymn singing also played an important part in the great revival brought on by the Wesleys in England.

In our own services today we must be aware of the dangerous trends in church music. We should work to discourage and eradicate the so-called "evangelistic singing," featured by haphazard selection of hymns and a tendency to make hymn singing more an acrobatic feat than a sincere form of worship.

Church members should not be satisfied with anything but the best in the form of anthems and congregational hymns, not to mention special music of all kinds. On the other hand we should guard against too ritualistic a service which gives the people no chance really to participate in congregational hymns — a privilege which should be carefully guarded.—Asheboro Courier.

HOME-COMING AND REVIVAL MEETING

Sunday, September 3, will be observed as Home-Coming Day and the beginning of our revival at Midway Methodist Protestant Church. There will be three services Sunday, as follows: at eleven o'clock in the morning, at one-thirty in the afternoon, and at eight o'clock in the evening. Dinner will be served on the grounds at the noon hour.

Throughout the following week services will be conducted each evening at 7:45. Rev. T. E. Strickland, pastor of our Methodist Protestant Church in Charlotte, N. C., will bring us the messages.

The public is extended a cordial invitation to attend these services.

Mrs. Nannie Preddy McCollum was born March 15, 1864 and died August 5, 1939, at the age of 75 years, four months and 20 days. She was the daughter of Calvin and Mary Anne Preddy. On June 21, 1877 she was married to June D. McCollum, who preceeded her in death on February 23, 1937. All those who came in contact with her were helped by the ministry of a life well lived. Her children rise up and call her blessed. They will miss her in the home; we shall miss her in the church.

C. W. BATES, Pastor.

William Watkins Grant

The sudden illness and death of William Watkins Grant, 56, came as a shock to his home, church, and entire county on Friday afternoon, August 11.

Funeral services were held from the home Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the presence of a large gathering of friends and loved ones. The Rev. J. E. Garlington, pastor of the deceased, officiated. He was assisted by the Rev. A. D. Shelton, Rev. W. F. Asheburn, both of Greensboro and former pastors of the deceased, J. M. Morgan, of Triplet, Va., C. E. Sawyer, of Garysburg, and J. P. Gray, of Angier, all ministers of the Methodist Church. His body was laid to rest in the family cemetery under a huge mound of beautiful flowers.

Mr. Grant, a native of Northampton County, lived in the county all his life. He was a citizen of the highest type and had since young manhod been a leader in the best interests of his community and county, having served in many responsible public capacities. He was a member and leader of Lebanon Methodist Church where he served as steward, class leader, Sunday school superintendent, and teacher. Through his death his church has been bereft of one of its most loyal members and his place cannot be filled. His Christian life combined in singular strength and beauty those qualities that have abiding worth. He was a superb gentleman and a man of sterling character. He leaves a splendid family and his influence will live in the hearts of his loved ones and all who knew him.

"Think of him as faring on, as dear
In the love of there as the love of here.
Think of him still as the same, I say;
He is not dead—he is just away."

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Lena A. Grant; two sons, W. W. Grant, Jr.; and Marshall Wood Grant; five daughters, Misses Virginia, Mildred, Rebecca, Edith Mae, and Evelyn Grant; and one sister, Mrs. J. H. Camp, of Garysburg.

His going was unexpected, but he was ready, more ready than we were to part with him. Hail and farewell; we will know where to find you!

TO BE A FRIEND

It's not the liquor you drink,
It's not the by-words you use;
The evil thoughts that you think
Nor the companions you choose.

It's not the lies you believe,
Nor the ones you can tell
Not the way you deceive—
Nor the way you rebell.

But it's friendliness, fellowship,
Faith in the right;
It's cooperation and courage
To stick in the fight.

It takes honesty, truthfulness,
Kindness and love
To make you a friend
Both on earth and above.

New Creation vs. Old Necessity

Most of us live under a cloud. Our initiative and enthusiasm are quenched by the thought that "what will be, will be." Of each new turn in our affairs, particularly if the change be for the worse, we simply remark, "It can't be helped" or "Just my luck." Whatever may be our convictions in theory, in practice we act as though we were under the dominance of fate, as though the course of our life had somehow been predetermined. The demon Old Necessity is constantly on our backs dragging us down into a dogged hopelessness. We are the inheritors of a pernicious philosophy which has taught us that nature, life, and even mind itself must unfold according to a necessary plan inherent in the very fiber of the universe. The doctrine of evolution, regarded as the final explanation of the problem of existence, has simply underlined and emphasized the heresy that the race is predestined to drive right on to some predetermined goal. Necessity reigns. He is our god. We are helpless in his hands.

Necessity is a lie, a colossal lie, which has damned more souls and crippled more lives than the mind of man can count. This idea that humanity is caught in the meshes of an endless chain belt and must "go along" to the end without relief or hope is of the devil, the father of lies. Necessity is the great atheism; but, strange as it may seem, it has been imported into Christian thinking and has become so familiar to us that we regard it as a part of the gospel.

This idea of necessity as the determining power of the universe takes on many popular forms. We say of some unfortunate, "Oh, well, what could you expect, with such a father?" Here is a criminal. We knowingly point, with a wise shake of the head, to his early surroundings and find there the whole explanation. We expect nothing from a sick man. He is "going down." No one trusts a jailbird even after he has served his time and is really trying to "come back." We secretly think that Old Necessity in his blood will drive him again to the penitentiary. In theory we praise the God of freedom, but in practice we worship the devil of necessity.

Let us lift our eyes to the true God of freedom and continuous new creation. There is a great truth in the theory of evolution considered as a description, but it is not by any manner of means a fundamental explanation of the world's inner secret. Evolution is on the surface. The key word is not evolution but continuous creation in a world of free spirits—God's Spirit and the spirits of men. We do well to be on our guard against those who purposely use the word "science" to frighten us out of our faith. The true scientist understands perfectly the limitations under which he must carry on his research. Both the scientist and the philosopher must reckon with the evolutionary process, one from the angle of description, the other from that of explanation, but each does well not to trespass on the territory of the other. The illuminating figure which vividly illustrates the world of necessity is a gigantic clock once for all wound up for the centuries and now relentlessly ticking off the unescapable years under the drive of a powerful inner spring. Another figure, however, visualizes the world of freedom and continuous creation. The Master Musician is seated at the organ. His fingers running freely up and down the keyboard. He is playing a majestic harmony, directly touching first this and then that key and imparting to it something of His own soul. And each key, as though somehow endowed with life, freely responds to the touch of the Infinite and participates in the creation of the heavenly music.

Here we are—in a free world. God is coming into wise and loving contact with each of our lives continuously, day by day, hour by hour, moment by moment, in every situation. And we, as free men and women, have the power to respond to His loving touch and help Him to compose and render a mighty symphony whose eternal meaning will make even the angels of heaven to rejoice. On this view there is no fate, no dark determinism, no compelling necessity driving us on and on like helpless machines. God—God is here, the creative God, the free-acting God. And we are here, we, His free agents, created in His image, with unfathomed possibilities in our personalities. Nothing is impossible! We pray to God and open our hearts to His will, and, behold, the world is changed! Power is released, consequences are modified, relationships are readjusted, laws operate in new ways. Continuous creation is at work under the touch of the Almighty Father and the free response of His child. Our great need is to believe in God—really to believe in Him—and vitally to understand that we are free men in His world of wisdom, love, and power. (Continued on Page Nine)

COMMITTEE TO BOOST ANNUAL CONFERENCE BUDGETS

This committee was appointed by President Pritchard at the Thomasville Mid-Year Meeting, and is composed of the following persons: G. L. Curry, T. J. Whitehead, L. F. Ross, A. J. Koonce, Mrs. D. S. Coltrane, S. W. Taylor, and Dr. Pritchard, ex-officio.

The function of the committee is to boost collections of all annual conference allotments. A program of procedure has been set up by the committee, and there is much encouraging evidence that the brethren have a mind to raise their budget in full. Several pastors that we have gotten reports from say that the full amount will be raised on their respective charges.

Too much can not be said of the necessity for doing this. We are going into the conference of the new church this fall, and we certainly want to go with our house in financial order. A good financial record will be to our credit with the new church, and a matter of satisfaction to us as we reflect upon the final work of our conference. It will be a great achievement for us if every charge will meet its annual conference budget in full. Brethren, let's press for this good goal.

As you raise these claims, or if you have assurances that they will be raised, please report to Dr. Pritchard. He will carry that information in his weekly reports, and it will serve as a stimulus to the rest of us. Mr. President, list Asheboro as paying in full. Come on, now, brethren, and let's make this list grow.

S. W. Taylor,
For the Committee.

A TRIBUTE TO A FAITHFUL COUNCIL PRESIDENT

We were shocked and grieved when we received a wire in the Michigan school last week, telling us that Rev. R. C. Tolbert, the faithful President of the Ohio Conference Council of Religious Education of the former Methodist Protestant Church had passed away early Wednesday morning of August 16. Brother Tolbert, as President of the Conference Council, also served as a volunteer Director of Religious Education and kept the student records of the Ohio Conference. During the week preceding our going to Michigan, it was our privilege to work with him for an entire week. He seemed to be happy in his work and was carrying his usual duties in a faithful way as he had done in the twelve years it has been my privilege to work with him. He was much loved by the hundreds of young people and local church leaders that he had done so much for during these years.

On Sunday evening, before we left the Ohio Camp Ground Monday morning, he and his good wife saw to it that we were made comfortable and bade us good-bye. In his last words to us, he expressed a hope that we would all be happy over any adjustments which might be made in our work as we go into the new Methodist Church. This good man and brother has now joined the Church Triumphant and we are left to carry on here the work which he leaves behind. He is a great loss to the work in Ohio. He will be missed greatly for he was loved and appreciated by so many throughout the Ohio Conference, as well as by many throughout the Church.

CONSERVATION OF VITALITY

By Rev. W. M. Bours

National, commonwealth, domestic and individual vitality depends upon the conservation of the particular constitutional requisites that govern the elementary and composite groups of social existence.

Americanism is the soul and national life of America. Commonwealth integrity is the vitality of the several states in the American Union. Family life, in that purity of indissolubility in which it was divinely created, is the very norm and vitality of society. The conservation of personal vitality is found in a rational living according to the limitations and promises of the laws that govern the body, mind and spirit of human nature.

The revival services at West End Church are going well. Brother Shelton is preaching the truth most forcefully and the congregations are increasing.

Several ministers of the former Methodist Protestant Church and their wives attended the picnic at Jefferson Country Club last Friday. All the Methodist ministers in the Greensboro District were invited by District Superintendent Hayes.

Two World Wars in one generation will be hard for our civilization to bear. The brutalizing effects of the war of 1914 are still with us. The war fought to make the world safe for democracy failed to conquer the foes of democracy. Possibly the ideal was too far in advance of European civilization for those who needed to experience the joy of its freedom most to catch its meaning. While the aggressors in this war will receive but scant American sympathy in their efforts at conquest, the destruction of life and property will be just as complete, just as terrible, as though their cause was just.

It is estimated that while the people of this country were increasing their contribution for armies and navies during the past year by 31%, we were decreasing our contributions to churches and related benevolences 36%. That twice as much as spent for alcoholic beverages as for churches and church supported philanthropies. Crime is costing this country annually fifteen times as much as all churches and allied institutions receive.

The Goal Posts Of Life

Every game in the catalogue of sports has an objective. Some games have goal posts; posts between which the opposing team must send the ball over the efforts of the opposition. How like this is the game of life. For before every life there is an objective to be reached.

To every youth the goal is preparation; building up physical endurance, training the mind so as to understand and to solve the difficult situations which must be faced and with the building up of spiritual reserve and a knowledge of the destiny of the immortal soul, may well be called goal posts which stand between the would-be winner and victory.

Then there must be in those who would win the desire to win; the willingness to play the game according to the rules; the determination to yield to no opponent and to remain in the game until victory is secured. And here is also a worthy goal for every life.

But as St. Paul said: "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertain; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection."

For there is before every one of us many an opponent seeking to trip us, to block our passage, to make us foul the ball and be put out of the game by the Great Referee of all human conduct.

◆

Which Will You Choose?

The conception of human life that is held by the Nazis that man is just a biological product without spiritual values; his social relationship in the animal kingdom determined by his racial chromosomes. Or that man is a creature of spiritual force who belongs to Almighty God instead of the state. And being an immortal soul he has inherent worth surpassing the whole world and is a joint heir with Jesus Christ the Saviour of the world?

Take your choice. But if man is nothing more than a high grade simian who serves his highest end in life by being a subject of the state, then Nazism is right; it may properly supplant the Christian religion. But if the Spirit bears witness with the spirit of man that he is a child of God and is destined to be like God Himself then he is blind and grossly deceived who sets his hope of world redemption upon a cruel system of race purge.

No letter from President Pritchard this week, but Mrs. Pritchard informs us that he will meet his appointments for next Sunday. CHURCH ATTENDANCE

By Earl G. Hamlett
Pastor at Memphis, Tenn.

Church attendance is not on the increase, and the future is not bright. The holy day is more and more becoming a holiday. The additional leisure given the American people has not greatly increased church attendance. People who seldom or never attend, have no great appreciation of the church. Carelessness in this regard can never be proof either of piety or love for Christ. I do not believe that there is a great church in the world where its members are careless or indifferent to its worship services. If we expect little of our people we shall receive less. One can more accurately determine the health of a church by its attendance than by any other standard.

To say that nothing can be done about this matter of attendance is defeatism. It is to close our eyes to the fact that at least one denomination is doing something about it.

A frontal attack will do only harm. There is nothing to be gained by decrying the situation to the faithful. Every word concerning it should be said with faith and confidence. It is awful to be told that you are very sick and have no remedy prescribed for your recovery. Much depends upon the minister. A man who can preach can draw the crowds. A minister's ability and fitness has much to do with church attendance. He will always have more to do with it than any other person, therefore, it is the part of wisdom for every denomination to examine its method of pulpit supply. But there are congregations that attend better to hear the poorest of preachers than other congregations to hear the best of preachers.

We need to believe and teach that regular church attendance is essential to the spiritual life of people, that carelessness in this regard is a sin. We should teach this to our children. Why should not the church be thought as essential to their welfare as the public school? We shall have to be converted at this point, because we have no very great conviction about it at present.

We should believe in the Sabbath as a day necessary for the spiritual welfare of man—truly made for his deepest needs. We should preach and teach, in season and out of season, not the "rule" but the "principle" of Sabbath observance, until by precept and example, our good and dependable members will have a conscience about this matter. The church has first claim on the Sabbath. If the church is not worthy of this, it is not important enough to claim unredeemed humanity for Christ.

The central church service should be magnified. This is the name that we have given in the Memphis district to the common worship services. In two years of emphasis some churches have increased the number of church-school pupils and teachers who stay for the central church service by fifty per cent. Enough has been accomplished to show what could be done by a church-wide participation.

The central church service is the heart of all church life. It is the spring of inspiration for all church activities. Where there is a decreasing attendance at this service, there will be declining health in the organizations within. There will be no revival for which we now work and pray until this emphasis is made with conviction and earnestness by the whole church through an educational program, which will motivate every local church. The teaching of the church today will be the practice of the church of tomorrow. The denomination above referred to has done this for a quarter of a century. In universities, colleges, schools of theology, in record system with a check on teachers and pupils published each Sunday, in teacher training, in missionary societies and in every class and department of church school, it has been constantly emphasized. This church has expected much of its people and it has received much. More than any other one thing this accounts for its unprecedented growth. By neglect we have a generation careless and indifferent to the central church service. Any education that fails to educate in this regard is not educating as it should. Let us do something about it. — The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.

The Discipline of The Methodist Church

We urge every member of this new Church to get a copy of the Discipline and read it through carefully; then sit down and make a thorough study of it, especially as it relates to the organization of the local church. While we have no authority to speak on the subject, we believe it would be well for every pastoral charge that can possibly do it, to change the present organization of the Church to conform with the plan set forth in the Discipline. We believe the proposed plan is much better, can be more efficient, than the plan most of our local churches have operated under heretofore.

The Knocker

By Dr. H. E. Luccock

The knocker is a common wild animal you have all met. He is known by the loud noise which he makes all the time, which sounds like the strokes of a hammer on an anvil. I never heard of a place that did not have at least one confirmed knocker. One is enough to go round. The knocker seems to be afraid of dying from shame if he should ever be caught saying something good about a person. He knocks the boss, he knocks the neighbor, he knocks the folks he works with. If you mention a good thing about a man, he is always ready with his "Yes, but—" and then he starts in with a long string of defects to offset the good qualities. This animal has keen eyes when he is looking for defects, and for good qualities he is stone blind.

IN GOD WE TRUST

By Lovick P. Law, M.M.

This country has been declared a Christian Nation. True, it is provided that there is to be a separation between Church and State, and to that the great majority of our countrymen subscribe most heartily, believing this provision to be the part of wisdom.

Nevertheless this is a Christian Nation.

On our coinage is inscribed, In God We Trust.

The landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on the New England coast long ago was because they desired to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. No one has a right to gainsay that right in America to this day. Every person has the privilege to form his own opinion about God and his relationship to Him.

But our Constitution presupposes that we shall worship God in some way. That leaves no room in this country for Atheism, Bolshevism, or Communism. That is true, even though some would want to dispute it.

Bolshevism would tear down our flag and destroy Christianity if it could. Witness, Russia and its ''society of the Godless'' and other organizations of like nature. That, it seems to me, puts it without the pale of the protection of the flag of the United States, for this country recognizes God and understand that ''Righteousness exalteth a nation.'' Bolshevism has no place in America. It is an outlaw and should be dealt with as one would deal with an outlaw.

Communism is in the same class, and has no place in the economy of American Government. It should be treated as an enemy would be treated. If it could have its way it would tear every flag from our capitals, it would destroy the home life of the American people, it would burn every church in this country, it would destroy the faith, if it could, of those thousands of our boys and girls and our fathers and mothers who have found in Christianity comfort and assurance in the hour of trouble, disaster and death. Yet this country tolerates Bolshevism, Communism, Atheism, and allows them the right to ''free speech.''

I am wondering if that is not too much freedom and if in the years to come we shall not as a people, collectively and individually, suffer for our liberality.

Our educational institutions are being corrupted by organized atheistic societies that are attempting the destruction of the faith of our youth. Communism holds sway on street corners, teaching its doctrines to destroy and corrupt the people of our country and tear down all respect for law and order as understood by our Government.

Is it not about time this land of ours was waking up from its slumber to recognize the fact that here in our midst we are allowing a viper more poisonous than any deadly reptile existing today to develop itself until the time when it will rise up to destroy?

Let our beloved country hold to the traditions that have made it great, and put down with an iron hand those who would turn against our Government whose protecting arms have ever been wide open to suffering humanity fleeing from the tyrant's oppression.

There should be no room in this nation for those who would rip our flag to pieces or seek, in any manner, to destroy orderly Government and substitute therefore some pernicious alien ''ism.''

Let our country continue to place upon her coinage, and mean it, In God We Trust.

THE LARGER PROGRAM

By C. A. Bowers, Pastor, Jamestown, Ohio

A minister is seldom called by God to make a solo flight. More often he is asked to do team-work. He is expected to stake down new areas of life for Jesus Christ in the world as well as to cultivate his little garden plot at home. His interests should never stop at the boundary lines of his own parish.

Once in a generation you may see some paragon of individualism arise who seems to be a law unto himself. Some day you may find his burnt-out remains in a selected list of disgruntled preachers who feel that their talents have never been appreciated. The non-cooperative pastor considers himself a mighty bulwark of protection, as he stands between his people and the program of the church at large with its various appeals for worthy causes. Little does he realize that he is not serving as an asbestos curtain that shields his people from the fires of a world-wide conflagration which he believes is threatening his own little economic structure, but as a wet blanket that dampens their enthusiasm and smothers their desire to share in the work of the Kingdom.

Such a man is to be pitied. He is afflicted with a disease called parochial paralysis. The victim goes groping about his own narrow province of activity fumbling with details, oblivious of the fact that he ought to be a functioning part of the larger church. In its final stage the disease affects the hearing and sight. The victim is unable to hear any cry of need coming from a distance, and is incapable of seeing objectives, no matter how large, if they are outside his own parish, while small ones near at hand are often distorted out of all proportion.

We are a connectional church. The larger program, when administered at regular intervals, will work wonders with the patient. It enlarges his vision, and his hearing becomes so acute that the feeblest call for help will register. It is a powerful mind-stretcher. It is a stimulating heart-enlarger. It makes him a world citizen. It inspires him by causing him to believe he is an important spoke in the wheel, a necessary segment of the circle, a vital part of a glorious whole. Now he goes out pioneering into new areas of life he hardly knew existed, instead of dozing in the chimney corner of selfish isolation.

Thus the church is changed from a dormitory filled with complacent self-centered Christians to a work shop for Christ-centered workers of the Kingdom. The people are no longer drifters but doers; no longer stragglers but strugglers.

The larger program of the church turns difficulties into opportunities, mere men into spiritual giants, weakness into strength, cynicism into faith, incompetency into efficiency, and the Kingdom of God into a reality. — The Pastor's Journal.

FRONTIER

Several thousands of miles of travel just following the Uniting Conference in that part of the United States which scholars say should no longer be called the "frontier" have left some vivid impressions.

"Frontier" or not, the states we visited are still those where the percentage of church membership and Sunday school enrollment to the total population is the very lowest. Due to conditions of life, type of people, or perhaps the inadequacy of the total program of all the religious groups—or whatever the reason—the names which normally should be on the list are not recorded. A name, however, is merely a name, and perhaps the list does not tell the complete story.

This is truly a land of magnificent distances. Where else would one find such vast stretches between neighbors? Where else would ranch families travel twenty miles to the closest religious service and then attend not in a church but in a ranch house or school building? Where else would young people drive 526 miles to attend an Institute, and where else would a man labor so many weeks or months without seeing the face of a brother pastor?

It is a land of sheep. We drove through thousands of them, piloted at four miles per hour by experienced herders, who divided the crowding multitudes with confident skill. Of course, it is also a land of cattle, wheat, alfalfa, beans, and almost endless sage-brush. It is the home of magpies, gophers, coyotes, and antelopes. It is a place of mountains and mines of many sorts, of miners and of prospectors. It is a land of dams and even more dams—dams of concrete, dams of earth, dams for flood control, dams for irrigation, dams for power!

Enormous population shifts have taken place on the old frontier. In general, this has been from the dry-land areas to the irrigated regions and to the cities, which are beautiful, well-ordered, thrifty and growing. To understand this situation, one must recognize that even the "dry" land must be classified, for some of it is merely dry, while other vast territories are "very dry." It is from the very dry regions that people have been moving. Large expanses of territory settled with optimism thirty or more years ago have smaller populations than they once had, while many new areas, into which the life-giving water has come, have witnessed the development of new projects and communities.

In some places the economic problem is acute. In one community we were told that 90 per cent of the Methodists were living on government relief.

This, too, is the land of the dance. To be sure dancing is not limited to the frontier, but here it seems to occupy a peculiarly important place. Dance halls abound and they are frequently used. It sounded strange in an extended sage-brush area to hear the pastor report that his chief problem in enlisting the interest of young people in the church centered around the "night clubs."

We like to think that open spaces are conducive to righteous living, yet we talked intimately with those who had had some part in the excitement created by a young man raised on a frontier ranch whose exploits in breaking from jail, shooting officials, and finally killing himself to avoid capture in an attempted bank robbery, were front-page news over the entire nation.

A week later in coming down through a long but narrow canyon, we were met by officers, with fire-arms, and were warned to look out for our own safety and to report any suspicious circumstances observed. Here scores of armed men had assembled to search out four desperate criminals who had broken jail and were now hiding in a rough country with which they were familiar. Even criminals have to eat and sleep, however, and, just after we had passed through the canyon, three of the group threw down their arms and surrendered, although they had sent word only a few hours earlier that they would fight it out to the death. Two days later newspapers carried a report of the capture of the fourth man. All is not lovely on the frontier.

We found much to encourage. There were two young women who had followed a new project which had attracted multitudes of families. Among these poor people, some of them ignorant and some college graduates, these women are serving as angels of mercy, bringing comfort into new and primitive homes, providing training and helpful leadership for young life, and even organizing a new church which hopes some day to have a home of its own. In spite of work that often involves driving late at night and over rutted roads, which become impassable in wet weather, these loyal workers remain undaunted.

There was the "supply" preacher, who had gone quietly to a difficult field and, with the help of his devoted wife, is reaching an entire group of communities, providing Christian leadership for youth and winning men and women to Jesus Christ.

Also the fine Christian layman, member of a state legislature, who, moved by the appeal of one mother that she might have some Christian ministry for her children, drives miles into the country each Sunday evening to hold a well attended service in a country schoolhouse, to which people come from long distances. For nearly two years, he has been carrying on this service. We thought of the lay preachers of England and wished that the number of such workers, who were willing to pay the price of service, might be multiplied in America. This man grew up on a ranch and he knows what it is to live without the direct ministry of the church. Fortunately, it was in a home where the daily altar was maintained and religion was made a part of life.

On the old frontier are some of the best trained, most devoted and most capable of pastors. Yet, if the work in some places is to move forward, heroic retired men, now shaky with years, who have been called back into service to fill the gaps, must be replaced with workers with physical and spiritual strength adequate to a task of unusual difficulty. Recruits are needed as well as the money with which to pay them. (Perhaps we should add that what seemed to us one of the best pieces of work being done on a rural circuit was in charge of a man technically retired, but that was the exception).—The Pastor's Journal.

OUR STORY PAGE

NATURE INVENTED IT

Has it ever occurred to you that many of the modern devices that we attribute to Yankee inventiveness were originited and employed by Mother Nature untold centuries ago? Consider, for instance, the submarine and its peculiar periscope.

Bermuda has a flounder that likes to lie buried in the sand. Hidden from unsuspecting prey, it still sees everything that happens, for it has its eyes neatly situated on the ends of two long stalks. Nature's first periscope!

And the submarine? Well, in order to descend, this craft permits water to flow into hollow tanks along its hull; in order to ascend, it blows compressed air in to drive out the water, thereby restoring buoyancy. Quite clever. But the poor fish can duplicate this feat by virtue of the bladder that lies below the backbone. By regulating the amount of air in this "tank," the fish can determine easily the depth at which it may swim.

Perhaps you have seen airplanes laying smoke-screens. Many observers think this idea originated with man. Nonsense! The octopus and his cousin the squid always have employed this method. They squirt out inky, black liquids, behind which they execute a successful and orderly retreat.

The heavy blows of the mace and the piercing thrust of the lance met, in the days of knighthood, a formidable obstacle in the nature of a sturdy coat of mail. It was the latest word in armor. However, in Mexico, nature gave such a garment to one of her children, the armadillo, made of a strong and flexible series of bony plates. When attacked, the animal rolls up into a ball and tucks its head under its tail.

The parachute has saved many an aviator's life and has enabled pilots to drop food and supplies to helpless persons who could not be reached in any other way. Important as the parachute is, and ingenious though its construction may be, nature deserves the credit for originating it. If you want proof of this, watch the white blossoms of the lowly dandelion ride on idle winds. This employment of the parachute principle affords a businesslike means of dispersing precious seeds.

Surely, you say, the modern hypodermic needle is man's idea. But you're wrong about that, too! The fang of the rattlesnake preceded this medical instrument. Long, hollow and sharp, the fang corresponds to the steel needle; the poison duct, leading from the poison sac by way of the hollow fang, resembles the hollow core of the needle; the poison sac, surrounded by muscles that squeeze when properly contracted, readily suggests the barrel and the plunger of man's contrivance.

Early man used the simple little instrument known as the drill, but the idea has been used for centuries by the ichneumon-fly. The base of its body has a wonderful little drill with a diameter no larger than a human hair. This drill, strangely enough, defies the hardest walnut wood. The fly drills holes to provide suitable places for the eggs. Following the dictates of instinct, it always places these eggs next to those of another insect. In this way the ichneumon larvae, hatching first, feed on the unmatured eggs of the other insect and as a result begin life with a flourish.

The familiar pincers of the ant came before man's pliers! Of course, you all know what invention is suggested by the glow of the lightning-bug!

In this day of combating insidious soil erosion, engineers are building large dams; these structures also help to store water for future needs. But for ages the industrious beaver has been erecting dams.

Perhaps you have heard of the travelers' plant, so common to arid wastes. It stores in its trunk reasonably large quantities of water; a thirsty traveler may obtain a clear, cool drink by cutting into the plant's hollow reservoir.

We hear much these days of trailers that embody most of the comforts and conveniences of home. The idea originated centuries ago in the mind of the hermit crab. Found practically anywhere on the seashore, the hermit crab takes the empty shell of such animals as the snail, makes them his movable "home," and changes his abode only when he finally outgrows the immediate surroundings. Nature's first tourist!

Speed, aeronautical experts say, has a direct relationship to the degree of streamlining entering into the design of the flying craft. So where did these engineers look for their ideas? You're right. To nature! The body of any fish or bird ably serves as a pattern from which designers may draw plans for speedier airplanes. Nature invented streamlining, but man has been unusually slow copying her.

An old Oriental saying has it that one picture is worth a thousand words. Consequently, photography has become increasingly popular. Interesting is the fact that the modern camera is copied almost point for point after the human eye. The eye-lid, the iris, the vitreous chamber that fills up the cavity of the eye-ball—all these are duplicated exactly. Wonderful films are manufactured, but the retina of man's eye is still more wonderful!—Glenn Yerk Williamson, in "Teens."

THE GYPSIES ON THE GREEN

Below the old farmhouse was a stretch of ground, triangular in shape, that covered half an acre. It ran parallel to the public highway, was unfenced, and was shaded by a row of maple trees. From the name given it, you may know that our forbears came from Ireland, for it was called "the green." It was never used for crop cultivation, but was a playground for the children. On the thick carpet of grass and sheltered by the trees we could play there to our heart's content.

One morning, while we were playing on the green, something occurred that sent us scampering to the house. Three or four rickety, canvas wagons suddenly invaded the children's acre. Like the building of Solomon's temple, they came without noise. It seemed to a small boy that morning that they just dropped out of the sky. They came without so much as asking "by your leave." Unhitched from the wagon, eight gaunt-looking horses began greedily to devour the grass. A dozen swarthy men, wowen, and children, who resembled Indians, took possession of the place. With eyes as big as saucers, a seven-year-old boy watched from a window within the shelter of the house. "Who are they and what are they doing here?" he asked his mother. Her reply was, "They are gypsies and I suppose we'll have to put up with them. If we order them off, they are likely to burn our barns. But you must stay in. I won't let you out of my sight until they have gone."

The gypsies stayed until the following morning. By that time their greedy, half-starved horses had eaten the beautiful grass of the green clean down to the sod. In other ways the gypsies made themselves thoroughly at home. They kept the farmhouse pump busy. They solicited eggs and milk. They wanted to sell shawls and jewelry. They tried to trade one of their broken-down horses. They did their best to tell our fortunes. The majority of their requests met with courteous refusals. Mother said, "I'm afraid of them, but I'm not going to let them know it." And all the time she kept a small boy within range of her vision.

There was ground for her fear. More than fifty years before, some twelve miles to the southward, a little girl disappeared mysteriously and was never heard of again. On June 20, 1834, little Mary Ann Gamble, aged six years, had toddled off alone to school. Her fate is unknown until this hour. A hunt of many years was fruitless. Just before her disappearance, a band of gypsies was seen in that neighborhood. They also disappeared and all efforts to trace them were in vain. The inference was that they had carried her away. More than fifty years later, when mothers in that region saw a band of nomads coming, they gathered in their children and guarded them until the gypsies had gone.

If those gypsies on the green had stolen Benedicite, wouldn't they have had a sour pickle? Despite his mother's fears, I doubt if he was in danger of abduction. If the gypsies had taken him and held him for ransom, as modern kidnappers do, I wonder what price would have been their demand. Maybe 500 pennies, chaperoned by a nickel. One voice cries out of the grave in protest against that, and it is the voice of his mother.

"What impresses you most about the Cross?" we asked a man in Bible class one day. His answer was, "I wonder that God saw anything in us that made Him make a sacrifice like that." Somehow mother looked at us through the eyes of Jesus. She labeled us with the price tag of Calvary. Our value in her sight was beyond computation.

Good has come from gypsy tents. If you doubt it, read the story of Gypsy Smith. In the tent where he was raised there lived a father and five motherless little children. There was no Bible there. Nobody thought of them. Who wants to have anything to do with a gypsy? Says Gypsy Smith, "But God looked on that poor father and those five motherless little things and saw them in their ignorance and heatenism, hungry for God. And He put those arms that were nailed to the tree around the father and the children and saved them all, and I am one of them. It takes divine love to see possibilities in a gypsy tent."

I wonder if it doesn't take a Christ-like heart to see possibilities in you and me.—Benedicite in "United Presbyterian."

BACKBONE AND WISHBONE

Don't you ever wear your wishbone, where your backbone ought to be,
Is a maxim full of wisdom, and applies to you and me,
For the fellow who is wishing for the things to come his way,
Is the one who puts off doing today's work, another day.

This life is but a mirror, laughs and smiles come back to greet us,
Scowl at fate and just as surely frowning features ever meet us,
If it hurts, just grim and bear it, what's the use to cry and curse,
Make the best of circumstances, take what comes, it might be worse.

If you don't get what you're wanting, want the things that you can get,
You can't tell in the beginning just how high your mark to set.
If your job don't suit your notion, and you think the other would,
Just remember that the other fellow would swap, maybe, if he could.

This old world is full of people and a year is made of days,
Takes a lot of folks to fill up all the time in many ways,
But if you just keep on doing all you can, your very best,
Some day opportunity'll open and you'll find you lead the rest.

Life don't look alike to people looking at it different ways,
Better strike an average somehow on the rain and shiny days,
Wishes won't get there like hustle, grit and push win out, you'll see,
Don't you ever wear your wishbone, where your backbone ought to be.

TO TEACH DEMOCRACY

The Board of Education of the City of New York recently passed a resolution to build conscious barriers against those conditions in America which tend to destroy democracy. The plan is to create assemblies in every public school to promulgate American ideals of democracy, tolerance and freedom for all men, with emphasis on the contributions of all races and nationalities to the growth and development of American democracy.

The programs of the assemblies are to be based on the social and political history of the United States in such a manner as to show the relative contributions of the different nationalities and races.—Supreme Council Bulletin.

THE LONG AND THE SHORT OF IT

I was wondering about long meetings.
Our minister ran overtime at church today.
Five minutes.
He preached twenty-eight minutes.
And that make one hour and five minutes of service—
Which is too much.
So some people say.
And if our preacher doesn't watch out
They'll be handing him his hat and asking him what's his hurry;
Because one hour and five minutes in church is an outrageous long time!
I was wondering
How those folks stood it to sit three hours at a theater,
And two and a half at the movies;
And I never heard of a dance only one hour long,
Or a sixty-minute card party.
People seem to want to get their money's worth
When they go to shows and things.
Well, perhaps that's why they want only one hour at church—
That's all they've paid for!
I never thought of that.

SINS OF THE SAINTS

Several weeks ago a Virginia minister announced through the press that his subject for the following Sunday would be "Sins of the Saints. . . ."

As one thinks of sins of the saints, there come to mind prejudice, narrowness, jealousy, suspicion, distrust, lack of vision, stinginess, intolerance, foundness for personal display and credit, selfishness and just plain cussedness. These sins block the coming of God's Kingdom as much as any sins we know anything about. And they are often the hardest with which to deal, because they are so hard to detect in ourselves. It is a rare person indeed who has such insight into his own conduct that he can say, "I am intolerant"; "I am selfish. . . ." To be sure, we can easily detect these sins in others, but when we turn to ourselves, we see only virtues. The "stingy" man is "frugal," or "provident," but not singy. The prejudiced person is sure that he is the embodiment of fair-play and justice. The man without vision is dead-sure that religion is nothing but a lot of bunk anyway.—The Richmond Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va.

NAVY WANTS MORE BATTLESHIPS

The United States is building more warships today than at any previous time in its history. With a present fleet of 369 fighting ships in commission, it has now under construction 101 new warships and auxiliaries which will cost more than a billion dollars. Among them are eight battleships, six of 35,000 tons and two of 45,000 tons. But the navy is not satisfied. No other navy in the world has battleships of such size as the 45,000 ton ships, or costing so much. (Present estimates of the cost of the two now building place it as about $100,000,000 each). The President authorized this enormous size because of rumors that the Japanese were building similar monsters, but the New York Times now states that the two largest battleships Japan is building certainly cannot exceed 40,000 tons and may not be over the 35,000 ton mark. New battleships for the British, French, Italian and German navies in no case exceed 35,000 tons; many of them fall below that. Nevertheless, the navy will ask the next Congress for two more 45,000 ships. How long is this folly to continue? How long will it be before Congress demands a clear formulation of the policy which a projected navy is to support before it appropriates for new ships, whether of 45,000 ton or of any other size? Encouraged by Mr. Roosevelt's obsession with sea power the navy has become the Oliver Twist of the government; its appetite is never satisfied.—The Christian Century.

GOD GIVE US MEN!

God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking!
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land and waiting justice sleeps.

New Creation vs. Old Necessity

The great denial of this mighty truth is written large upon the sky in our day, but the denial will in the end deny itself.

Can a man be made over? Can he be "born again when he is old"? The answer is, "Yes." The Creative Spirit of God, playing upon the soul of man, can break down all barriers of age, infirmity, ignorance, sin, unfortunate condition, and hindering circumstance. Everything depends upon our answer—for we too are free. However weak and feeble we may be, however weighed down by the heavy chains of Old Necessity, the least lifting of the heart to God means an influx of power from the ever-creating God. Hope? There is always hope in a free world under the immediate power and control of a living God.—Zion's Herald.

DEPARTMENT OF SPIRITUAL LIFE

As we study over promotional plans for the Spiritual Life Department, somehow the words of Paul come to our minds and linger there, as though trying to impress themselves upon us as a theme for our planning and our work for this year, "That in all things, He might have the pre-eminence."

How can we find spiritual power for Christian living?

How can we find and maintain peace and an inner poise amid confusing, disturbing and distracting outer circumstances?

How can we at all times, "Abide in Him, and He in us?"

How can we lead others to really visualize Him, and receive inspiration for better living and more Sacrificial services?

How can the church really demonstrate to the world a depth of spiritual power?

How can we find women who can, or train women to really lead a worship service, so that others may be led in a real worship experience?

How can we spiritualize, or place spiritual emphasis upon our projects for raising money? (such as Thank Offering Services, Church dinners, bazaars, etc.)

These are all questions with which the Spiritual Life Secretary should concern herself, and in trying to answer them may find some new realms for her activity. For after all, personal Christian living, and the promotion of all the interests of the Kingdom of God, is the aim and goal of all Christian Service. "We would see Jesus," is the cry of hungering hearts everywhere. Is the world going to see Him in our lives?

O, that every Methodist woman might pledge herself, on bended knee, before her Maker, "In my life, in all things, He may have the pre-eminence."

Then the church might demonstrate to the world a new depth of spiritual power.

We would like to emphasize the Fall Retreat. We all need to follow in the steps of our Master in "going apart" for a season of prayer and meditation. Splendid suggestions for the procedure, the program, for such a retreat may be found in the Record for May 1938.

I would emphasize a deep need for more thorough preparation for the Devotional Leaders who are to lead the Worship Services in the Guide Book. Will the Spiritual Life Secretary, the President, and other interested officers get the devotional leaders together, and impress upon them their responsibility for leading others in a real worship experience. They should make every effort possible to secure the suggested hymns, music, etc. Oft times the continuity of thought is broken by the substitution of another hymn. The Lord's Prayer can mean so much more to us than ever before as month by month we study its different divisions—or it can mean little or nothing if the leaders do not properly lead.

Let us this year try to place a more spiritual emphasis upon the raising of our money. Necessarily so much of our thought, strength and time must be given to the raising of our Budget. But we do believe that it is very possible to make the giving of money a real worship experience. "Draw near, and bring an offering unto the Lord" is an early command of God. Can we, we wonder, really draw near without bringing an offering?

The following suggested activities, stated briefly, are culled from the report of the Evaluation Committee from the meeting of Spiritual Life Leaders of the three Methodist Churches.

"We believe that the greatest contribution the unification of Methodism can make is the demonstration to the world of a new depth of spiritual power."

We are convinced that provision should be made for the Spiritual Life emphasis as an integral part of the Woman's organization of the Methodist Church, and that the objective should be the enrichment of the spiritual life (1) in the individual; (2) in the Women's groups; (3) in the entire Church.

"Methods used for this purpose are Bible Study; Personal Evangelism; devotional reading lists; publication responsibility for devotional literature; letters to young people and teachers in home missionary institutions; and promotion of the World Day of Prayer."

"From the above list of activities we believe the following significant features should be conserved:

(1) Personal plans for definite Christian growth.

(2) Retreats (inter-Methodist).

(3) Small spiritual life groups in local Church.

(4) The principle of combining service projects with spiritual development.

(5) The promotion of reading for spiritual enrichment."

Clothing and Other Gifts

A number of individual boxes of clothing are coming in these days for our children, and are being answered direct from the office. We appreciate this good help, and in addition to these if there are those who can send any good used or new clothing for children from 5 to 18 years of age we will greatly appreciate it. Towels and wash cloths and bed linen will also be very helpful.

The first lot of canned goods to come in for this fall comes from a family near Chestnut Ridge, and is to be credited to Chestnut Ridge Auxiliary, Orange. 9 half-gallon cans and 13 quart cans of fruits and vegetables.

We are thankful for these and for the money and other things reported above.

Please rally to our support in your regular monthly offerings during September and October.

Conference coming as early as it does this year practically cuts off one month's offerings to the Home before Conference. We trust every Sunday school will note this fact, and do your best to make it up to us.

To the Leader

This is the first of a series of three topics on "Studies in the Sermon on the Mount." They should be treated as expository studies. An effort should be made to acquaint young people with the nature and value of these chapters and to cultivate in them an appreciation of the Scriptures. This topic, the first of the three, deals with righteous living. This righteous living must exceed the righteousness of those who strive to keep only the outward laws. Show that true Christian living verifies and demonstrates the transforming spirit who is within us.

The Poet

God, make my life a little light,
  Within the world to glow,—
A little flame that burneth bright,
  Wherever I may go.

God, make my life a little flower
  That giveth joy to all;
Content to bloom in native bower,—
  Although the place be small.

God, make my life a little staff
  Whereon the weak may rest;
That so what health and strength I have
  May serve my neighbor best.
    —Mrs. B. M. Edwards.

Little Gems

If you live wrong you can't die right.—"Billy" Sunday.

We are to undertake nothing that is out of harmony with the spirit.—Selected.

This is the proof of a well-trained mind, to rejoice in what is good and to grieve at the opposite.—Cicero.

Be such a man, live such a life, that if every man were such as you and every life a life like yours, this earth would be a paradise.—Phillips Brooks.

Clothe yourself with the silk of piety, with the satin of sanctity, with the purple of modesty, so shall God Himself be your suitor.—Turtullian.

Topic Hints

Christ's Sermon: Christ's Sermon on the Mount is a discourse on the ethics of a Christian. At first one hears the sermon with a feeling that its standards cannot be reached. They never could be reached in mere human strength. These standards, however, can be lived when Christ truly lives within. That's the secret; Christ living within.

The Way of Righteousness: Jesus was very definite and clear in dealing with the right way of living. He spoke of (1) the supreme standard, Mark 12:28-31; Matt. 5:17; 7:12; (2) the love for neighbor, Matt. 5:43-45; 46-48; Luke 6:32-35; 19:29-37; (3) the pride of life, Luke 13:30; 14:11; Matt. 7:12; 3-5; Luke 17:7-10; (4) anger, Matt. 5:21-22; 23-24; (5) revenge, Matt. 6:12; 14-15; Luke, 17:34; Matt. 18:21-22; Matt. 5:38-41; Luke 6:37-38; 9:52-55; Matt. 18:-23-35; (6) love of money, Luke 12:15; Matt. 5:42; Matt. 6:24; Luke 14:12-14; 12:16-20; Mark 12:41-44; (7) falsehood, Matt. 5:33-37; 23:20-22; (8) impurity, Matt. 5:27-28; (9) divorce, Mark 10:2-9; (10) definite purpose, Luke 6:45; Matt. 6:22-23; 13:44; 44-46; 7:13-14; Mark 10:17-22, 25; Luke 16:1-8; (11) sefl-control, Matt. 18:7; Mark 9:43-47. The beatitudes may be called the summary of the way of righteousness, Matt. 5:-3-10.

The False Way: Not only did Jesus speak on the right way of living but He made that way more clear by speaking on the false way of living. In dealing with the false way He spoke of (1) empty ceremonialism, Mark 7:15; Matt. 23:23-26; Luke 11:38-40; (2) evasion, Matt. 23:16-19; (3) Sabbath harshness, Mark 2:23-28; 3:4; Luke 14:5; Matt. 12:5-7; (4) heartless cruelty, Mark 7:9-13; (5) the result, Luke 11:44, 46, 52; Matt. 23:15, 27, 29-31; 21:31; Mark 12:38-40: (6) evil influence, Matt. 15:14; 5:20; 7:15-18, 20; Luke 12:1.

The Choice: In His message, Jesus gives to man the right of choice. On this subject He speaks (1) a word of warning, Matt. 4:17; Mark 8:36; Luke 12:54-59; 13:1-5; 16:19-31; (2) a thought on responsibility, Mark 4:9; Luke 6:46; 12:47; 48; 11:24-26; 16:10; 19:26; (3) a message encouraging unceasing effort, Matt. 25:1-13; 24:43. Jesus enforced this message by an illustration which may be called a summary, Matt. 7:24-27.

The Right Way: Jesus taught that righteousness is accounted to believers. Said He to the multitude at Jerusalem, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth My word, and believeth in Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation: but is passed from death unto life," Matt. 5:24. Righteousness is to be sought first according to His word, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," Matt. 6:33. Jesus assures the believers that his seeking shall be rewarded. "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled," Matt. 5:6.

Our Kind: It has been said that there are three kinds of people—those who do not live up to any laws, those who live up only to the laws that men enforce in our common life, and those who live according to inward laws that no one can enforce. As Christians, we belong to the last of these three classes. Our actions in life are the fruit of inwardly cherished ideals which are born of God. These ideals cannot be forced by legislation and in action they are beyond the comprehension of worldly legislation. The Christian needs no liquor laws for himself because his refusal to drink is above the law; he needs no Blue Laws to enforce Sabbath observance for he observes the Lord's Day without such laws; he needs no law for murder for he not even hates his brother; he needs no military laws for he loves his enemies. Of course laws are needed for an understanding among men but the Christian lives above such laws because he lives from inward and spiritual ideals.

The Urge: The man who lives a life of righteousness according to the teachings of Jesus must have an inner urge. He must have an "ought to" and a "want to" feeling. He may be forced to obey but character will not be built by force. He may assent in mind and comply in action but either or both may make him mechanical. This is just where many professing Christians fail. They obey by force or comply by assent, but they lack a religious experience. The right way in life has its beginning in the heart of the traveler. The code of traveling must be accompanied by the right spirit. The right way not only leads to a desired destination but it also makes of the traveler a desired citizen of a heavenly kingdom. God's way is the way of righteousness. Only the righteous can go that way. The Throne of Grace is ever ready to make anyone righteous who comes in a submissive and penitent spirit. The right way is designed for right people and God makes people right for the right way.—M. P. Recorder.

THE CHURCH THAT I ATTEND

There's no aristocratic set
  In the church that I attend;
Your lack of riches they forget
  In the church that I attend;
They seem to feel that you and they
Are fashioned from one common clay,
And social barriers fade away
  In the church that I attend.

The pastor seems to know your needs
  In the church that I attend;
Each individual heart he reads
  In the church that I attend;
And whether weal or whether woe
Be yours, he makes you feel and know
That God rich blessing doth bestow
  In the church that I attend.

They sing the good old songs of praise
  In the church that I attend;
That take you back to childhood's days
  From the church that I attend;
And mother's voice you hear again
Croon softly each familiar strain,
And aching hearts forget their pain
  In the church that I attend.

They may not always do what's right
  In the church that I attend;
But still they live close to the light
  In the church that I attend;
And if, in God's eternity,
Heaven's pleasure shall be granted me,
Each well-loved face I think I'll see
  From that church that I attend.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Spencer-China Grove Charge, Rev. A. Ridge, Pastor.—Our services have continued through the summer months. Rev. Ridge has filled his appointments in a wonderful way.

The Ladies' Aid met August 27 with Miss Mary Tee. After the meeting all the business was attended to. Delicious refreshments were served. She had a large attendance.

We are having a good Sunday school. Other services are very well attended, and we are going to have our Home Coming Day September 17. That's the day our revival meeting is to start. I ask all and every Christian to help us to pray that we will have a great revival that will wake China Grove up that the fire from on high will fall on every unsaved one.

We are certainly proud of our pastor, Rev. A. Ridge. He's been so faithful to us and he just suits us folks. We are hoping he'll be sent back to us again.

I'm again asking the prayers from all. Rev. Bell is to help in the meeting.

Christ Methodist Church, Henderson, Rev. T. J. Whitehead, Pastor.—Revival services are being conducted this week at Christ Methodist Church by the pastor, Rev. T. J. Whitehead, who is preaching each evening at 8 o'clock.

We trust the church may be wonderfully blessed and revived and many souls converted to God.

The last of the Union service for the Henderson churches for this summer was held at Christ Methodist Church the fourth Sunday evening with Rev. Mr. Whitehead presiding. Rev. J. Everette Neese giving the invocation and Rev. J. A. Jones of the First Presbyterian Church preaching the sermon. The church was filled with interested listeners. Rev. Mr. Jones has accepted a call to Myers Park Presbyterian Church in Charlotte and Rev. Mr. Neese has received a call to serve a church in Massachusetts while attending Andover-Newton Theological Seminary.

We are grateful for the privilege of having had these consecrated young ministers and their families with us for several years and regret very much their leaving. They have been such a help and inspiration to the people of Henderson.

Mr. S. R. Harris recently entertained the ministers of Henderson at his home with a watermelon slicing. The event was a most delightful one and thoroughly enjoyed by all attending. We are wishing for Mr. Harris many, many years in which to make others happy.

During the absence of our pastor, who was conducting a revival in his home church on the second Sunday, we had the pleasure of hearing Rev. Sidney R. Crumpton, a student in the School of Religion of Duke University, who is working under the direction of the Conference Council of Religious Education of the former Methodist Protestant Church during the summer months.

Rev. E. Norfleet Gardner, pastor of the First Baptist Church taught the Men's Bible class during the Sunday school hour recently. The Rosa Harris and Philathea classes joined the Men's class to hear Mr. Gardner. All enjoyed the lesson so much. The Philathea class has just sent a box of clothing to the Children's Home at High Point. The president and committee wish to thank all who so generously contributed to this worthy cause.

Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard and Rev. and Mrs. Bowman visited friends in Henderson recently.

Mrs. Ethel Harris Kirby of Baltimore, who has been visiting her father, Mr. S. R. Harris, has returned home.

Miss Mary Mitchell Baity will enter the University of Carolina at Chapel Hill. Misses Martha Baity and Nellie Kittrell will return to High Point College and George Gooch will attend Davidson College.

The Woman's Auxiliary, and Circles Nos. 1, 2 and 4 will meet Monday afternoon at 3:30 with Mrs. S. R. Watson. Miss Mary Young will review the study book, "Women and the Way."

During the Sunday school hour Sunday morning Rev. J. Everette Neese, pastor of the Congregational-Christian Church, gave a most helpful and interesting talk on "Evangelism With Christian Education."

Misses Margaret Hight, Mary and Eleanor Young will leave soon to resume their work as teachers in Maryland, Ohio and North Carolina.

Rev. Mr. Whitehead's subjects for the morning and evening worship services Sunday were: "Do You Want To Live In Another World?" and "Our Ever-Present Friend and Guide."

These services mark the beginning of a week's revival in our home church.

The S. S. Worker's Council met with Rev. and Mrs. Whitehead last Tuesday evening. Many things were discussed in regard to the betterment of the Sunday school.

Union Grove, Orange Charge, Rev. C. P. Morris, Pastor.—We haven't been heard from much this year, but we are still alive. We had our Children's Day exercises and homecoming first Sunday in June, which was well rendered. We were delighted to have our own Rev. R. C. Stubbins, who has also been our pastor twice, preach for us. It was good to be there. There were a good many former members present. We are always glad to have them with us. Mr. Albert Neville, superintendent of the Sunday school, has been at Sanatorium since early spring. We trust he will soon be restored back with us. Our Sunday school has been unusually good, with the best attendance in several years.

We have made some improvements in our church inside and bought new hymnals, and trust we can soon do more.

Our series of services began first Sunday in August. Rev. H. F. Surratt, who was our pastor several years ago, came Sunday for afternoon service, and remained until the meeting closed Friday. He gave us plain gospel truths which were much enjoyed. We did not have the attendance we should have had, but we had a good meeting. Six of our Sunday school scholars united with church last Sunday, and we were glad to have Mr. Arthur Minnis transfer from Chestnut Ridge to us, as he lives here.

Our pastor has filled all appointments and gives us good sermons. We trust he will be returned to us.

We are distressed about the world situation. But God's word and law are disregarded and punishment is sure. We as a nation need fasting and prayer and return to Him who only can protect and keep us. May we as a church arise to our duty and let the nation know by our standing for what God requires that we are His people.

Midway Church, Paul Hamilton, Pastor.—The attendance in our Sunday school has been the best it has ever been. We have broken all records in attendance and we are steadily growing. It has been a regualr attendance along with many visitors who are visiting in the community.

The Christian Endeavor has been having regular programs each Sunday evening at 7:30. The attendance has been small but the programs have been interesting. Not only have we been having regular programs but almost every Sunday evening we have a special speaker or special music furnished by outsiders.

Cleveland F. Pinnix, Jr., and Allen Pinnix, of Washington, D. C., are spending some time with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Pinnix. They will be here for the homecoming day.

Weaver's Chapel, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—We were very fortunate indeed to have Rev. J. D. Cranford of Vance charge with us as pulpit help during the revival, which began Sunday, August 20, and closed Friday night, August 25. All-day services were held Sunday. Services during the week were held evening and night, beginning Monday night. On Sunday morning the Jarrell sisters of Chase City sang a duet. Rev. Mr. Cranford was unable to be with us for the morning worship and dinner but he came for the evening service. At this time he rendered a very inspiring message.

Wednesday night, August 30, the Ladies' Auxiliary met in the home of Mrs. P. J. Shearin. There were nine members and several visitors present. Zella Shearin, Mrs. Jesse Salmon, and Catherine Stansbury were received as new members of our club. At this meeting officers were elected for the next six months. They are: President, Alice Mae Whitley; vice-president, Mrs. Murry Myrick; secretary, Mae Shearin; treasurer, Bettie Mae King; program committee, Mrs. P. J. Shearin; sick committee, Mrs. Jack Ellis, Mrs. Lena Walker and Mrs. L. T. King. After business matters were discussed, the hostess served refreshments. Our next meeting will be held at Mrs. Murry Myrick's.

Asheboro.—The following persons were received by letter into the Central church last Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Cross, Mr. L. W. Baggett, and "Billy" Baggett. We gladly welcome them to our communion. Others are to follow next Sunday.

THE ADULATION OF ADOLF HITLER

The adoration offered to Adolf Hitler on the occasion of his fiftieth birthday has nothing in common with the most exalted homage ever paid to any ruler throughout the Christian world.

We have followed carefully Nazi literature and are familair with the exaggerated modes of expression of those around Hitler, but we were frankly shocked when we read the terms used in these congratulations of his followers and our readers will no doubt be equally disturbed. The fact that any man could arouse such adoration did not shock us so much as that there are men and women capable of prostrating themselves in such a degrading way. This prostration seems to us of two kinds—religious and erotic. As a religious impulse, it is blasphemous, and erotically, it is obscene. The blasphemy lies not so much in the idolization of Hitler as in the humiliation of the people who lower themselves before him as their idol. Yet foreign observers must not make the mistake of believing that the whole people is implicated in this abominable adulation. They hear and see those shouting "Heil!" but do not see the many who stay at home, with bitterness and shame in their hearts. They are witnessing an orgy of the Party, not in the spontaneous emotion of a people.

We reprint a number of quotations from the celebration number of the "Schwarze Kops" which solicited for this number replies from its readers to the question, "What does the Fuehrer mean to you?":

1. (A Viennese) "My Fuehrer gave me not only a political 'Weltanschauung' but also a religion. He gave me a faith, which even as a child I had never possessed. This faith is a faith in ourselves, in our strength and our greatness, in the mysterious power of Blood, our Soil and the German nation...."

2. (An S. S. Man) "Even to attempt to put into words what I feel for my Fuehrer appears to me profane. . . . It makes my heart heavy to think that the Fuehrer today belongs to so many, whereas during the time of our early struggle, he belonged only to us, a comparatively few. I am jealous of every person with whom I must share him. May I be forgiven for this sacred egoism."

3. (A Party member in Berlin) "Formerly we were brought up to be religious, trained in a faith divorced from reality, which seemed impersonal, abstract and un-German. This outlook did not improve man, hardly strengthened him, but rather deprived him of courage and initiative. . . . Faith in the Fuehrer and his work have given me strength to force my life to higher things. In this godless, mammon-worshipping world, torn with hate and murder, this world of insanity and chaos, a temple of light has arisen, throwing its rays afar and pointing to a future far more beautiful than our past."

4. (A lawyer from Dortmund) "We know that we are in the grip of a feeling whose essence and depth we can scarcely determine and which renders us dumb. Reverence, love, loyalty, gratitude, self-abnegation—all make up this feeling which yet surpasses them all. But the most revered father, the most deeply loved mother, the most loyal wife and the most trusted friend rouse in our hearts music far less exalted than the song our souls sing to the Fuehrer."

5. (A Party member from Berlin) "I left the Church with the firm conviction that the Christian religion was a man-made faith professing to be the will of God, but having nothing in common with that power which we call God. I believe the fellowship of blood and race is a fellowship much more desired by God than all the religious fellowships built up by man. I frequently ponder, could I face my Leader and Fuehrer, Adolf Hitler, if he knew my thoughts and my work. My religious observance is a daily hour of quiet thought. . . . And then an inner glow comes upon me, an indescribable feeling of satisfaction, if after mature consideration, I come to the conclusion that my father, Adolf Hitler, would bless this or that action of mine."

6. (Another Party member) "Every flower that blooms, blooms in gratitude to him; every apple that ripens, ripens in gratitude to him."

7. (A Hamburg woman) "I should like to say once for all, that the lofty teaching of my Fuehrer is now my religion, the German religion, and I can think of nothing finer."

8. (A Reader from Frankfurt) "What misuse is made by men of the word 'Fuehrer.' This word should only be applied to Adolf Hitler himself and we should impregnate our people from youth up with reverence for this word as the Christian Church reveres the name of God."

9. (A Mother in Unterammergau) "My children know the Fuehrer as a man, who orders all things, rules all things, who built the world. The Fuehrer is for my children that visible Being, which we as children were taught to recognize as God. . . ."—The American "Kulturkampf" Association.

HOW TO LIVE TEN YEARS LONGER

Ten years may be added to the average span of human life "by personal care, if one begins young enough," Dr. Charles H. Mayo, of the Mayo Clinic, stated to the American College of Surgeons at Washington recently. Says a correspondent of the New York Times:

"New diseases would also develop to destroy mankind unless safeguarded against, he said, and man's struggle today was no longer one for mere existence, but for the luxuries of life. Man, he asserted, often committed crimes to obtain such luxuries.

"Dr. Mayo said that man's age lengthened an average of twenty years from the sixteenth century until 1850, when the average age was forty. It had advanced five years more, to forty-five, by 1875. The average age has now advanced to fifty-eight.

"Dr. Mayo said, however, that the world was better through greater care and more knowledge of how to take care of one's self.

"'The dangerous age of a woman,' he said, 'is from sixteen to eighteen. But the dangerous age for man is from fifty to fifty-five—if you can't keep your eye on them, lock them up.'

"Many fat men, he declared, die off because of lack of girth control. The people of Washington do not show their age. Gland transfusion, Dr. Mayo referred to as 'bunk.'

"Stating that the greatest influence in American life was the newspapers, 'it is to be hoped,' he continued, that our great editors will segregate reports of crimes into one section of the paper. That might tend to destroy their effect on boys.

"Two-thirds of those who are old have acquired age through great cell vitality from their parents. Therefore it would be wise for children to select their parents. Many of those who have short-lived parents may lengthen their own lives. Those who have long-lived parents may shorten their lives through lack of proper care. It takes age to make a man—not a generation of good clothes and education."

"Dr. Mayo said children in cities had better advantages than those in the country in many respects, one being that they were freer from bovine tuberculosis than those on farms. Country children had some benefits because of good air, but this was offset in the city by athletic training, proper hygienic care, and other modern advantages."

"'No wonder the farmer wants to come to town,' he said, 'where his children can be educated at public expense.'

"Dr. Franklin H. Martin of Chicago, Director-General of the American College of Surgeons, said one in eight people died of heart disease, one in seven of cancer, and one in six of apoplexy.

"'Every one of these,' he declared, 'is preventable, and a curable disease, if reached early enough. If we had a General Gorgas, or some one of that type, who would say we must have annual examinations, 50 per cent of those diseases would be caught in their incipient stages. General Gorgas succeeded because he had autocratic power to do what he wanted to do in his fight against yellow fever."

THE NARROW GATE AND THE NARROW WAY

The Savior's teaching about life is very plain and distinct. He teaches that there are two gates, two entrances to life and two exits, two endings. One exit is into destruction, a terrible ending for a human life. The other exit is into life, into life eternal.

He also teaches that the reason why there are two entrances and two exits into and out of this life is because there are two lives. There is not one life with vast degrees of difference among people; there are two lives differing radically in kind, not simply in degree. There are those who are "born of the flesh," and there are those who are "born of the Spirit." These are the two radically different kinds, or types, or species of human life. The one type leads to destruction, the other kind leads to "life that is life indeed."

Our Lord also teaches that the gate by which one enters the narrow way that leads to life is a narrow gate. Why is it narrow? It is not narrow because only a little soul can be a Christian. One common objection to Christianity is that the gospel cramps one's personality and hinders its development. The modern mind is full of that delusion. If such a deception of Satan needed an answer, it is enough to say that many of the greatest souls of the human race have passed through this narrow gate, and above all else the supreme Man, the man Christ Jesus entered through this narrow gate and his soul was not cramped.

The gate is narrow partly because no one can enter it unless he repents. This gate is not wide enough for any man's sins, be he a king or a president, or the most prominent person in any community. Jesus said, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. He that saveth his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's shall find it." Whosoever will surrender his own evil desires and impulses and self-will, that he might live within the will of God, he shall find his life unto life eternal.

The gate is narrow, also, because it has room for only one master, one supreme loyalty. There is not room in it for divided loyalty or a divided heart.

The fundamental moral demand of the Old Testament is, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The fundamental moral demand of the New Testament is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Believing on Christ is not simply a strong intellectual conviction about Christ, it is supreme loyalty to Christ, making him Lord of one's life. The Christian does not put Jesus among a number of idols in his heart, as the ancient Romans wanted to put Jesus among their gods, when the gospel began to spread. He casts out the idols and gives his Lord an undivided allegiance.

Narrow? Yes, because only the man who repents of his sin and who has a supreme loyalty to Jesus Christ as Lord can enter it. It is the neglect of these things that makes the other road so broad, and so crowded, and that leads them on to tragic destruction.

And yet in another sense this gate is not narrow. Above it are the words, "Whosoever will, let him come and drink of the water of life freely." It is a wider gate than the gate of modern education. Our educational institutions, and especially our professional schools, cannot say to the young people of today, "Whosoever will, let him come." They would soon be swamped if they did. Our industrial world cannot say to the ten million unemployed, "Whosoever will, let him come and get a job."

The gate into the kingdom of God is a wider gate than the gate of American citizenship. America cannot open her ports and say to all who are in Europe and in Asia, "Whosoever will, let him come to our land and become an American citizen." If we did, within one year America would be flooded by the oppressed people of Europe and by the people from the Orient.

Wider than the gate that leads to education, or the gate that leads to employment, or the gate that leads to American citizenship, is the gate that leads to eternal life. And yet it is too narrow for a man who does not repent, and who is not supremely loyal to Jesus Christ as Lord.—The United Presbyterian .

POPULAR SAYINGS

By Walter A. Quincke

Almost every one has a store of trite, apposite sentences, using them almost daily, without a knowledge of their origin, and as most of us are apt to be curious concerning the habits that they follow, tracing their authorship back into the dimness of long slumbering centuries, so they are often possessed with a desire to know who first framed these sentences so familiar to them. Most of us have no time to devote to such research, so in rambling among books for my own soul's best amusement, I have compiled some data and coupled each with its originator.

"Man proposes, but God disposes," was coined in the fifteenth century by Thomas a Kempis. Thomas Tusser, a writer of the sixteenth century, gave us "Better late than never"; "For Christmas comes but once a year"; "It's an ill wind that turns none to good"; "A rolling stone gathers no moss," and "Look before you leap." It was Francois Rabelais, a French wit of the same period, who said "By robbing Peter he paid Paul." Sir Edward Coke, a famous English lawyer of the sixteenth century, said "A man's house is his castle," and Lord Brooke sang "Out of sight, out of mind." Christopher Marlowe, the forerunner of Shakespeare and father of the grand old English drama, told the ladies "Love me little, love me long," and told of "Infinite riches in a little room."

To the prolific genius of Shakespeare we owe "This is the short and long of it"; "The world's mine oyster"; "Comparisons are odious"; "As merry as the day is long"; "A Daniel come to judgment"; "It is a wise father who knows his own child"; "And thereby hangs a tale"; "The smallest worm will turn"; "Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep"; "The weakest goes to the wall"; "We have seen better days"; "This was the most unkind cut of all"; "A deed without a name"; "Brevity is the soul of wit"; "I am a man more sinned against than sinning," and "They laugh that win."

Francis Bason said "Knowledge is power." Beaumont and Fletcher told "What's one man's poison is another's drink." Milton tells of "All hell broke loose," and "The Paradise of Fools." Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras, claims " 'Twas Presbyterian true blue." Dryden said "None but the brave deserve the fair," and "Sweet is pleasure after pain." He also warns: "Beware the fury of a patient man"; "All delays are dangerous in war," and spoke of "Men are but children of a larger growth." The Earl of Roscommon confides "Choose an author as you choose a friend," and continued with "The multitude is always in the wrong." John Bunyan wisely reminds us that "He that is down needs fear no fall."

Matthew Prior gave us "The end must justify the means"; and Dean Swift feels that "Bread is the staff of life."

"Necessity is the mother of invention," comes to us from George Farquhar, and Edward Young said "Death loves a shining mark"; "Man wants but little, nor that little long"; "A fool at forty is a fool indeed," and "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep." Pope extemporized with "To err is human, to forgive divine." It was John Gay who said "While there is life, there is hope"; and "Over the hills and far away." Benjamin Franklin said "God helps those who help themselves." Cowper stated that "Variety is the spice of life." Thomas Campbell claimed that "Coming events cast their shadows before," and Daniel Webster told of a "Sea of upturned faces," while Washington Irving thought that our idol was "The almighty dollar." Keats exclaimed that "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," and last, but not least, it was Bishop Berkeley, an English prelate, who in the seventeenth century predicted "Westward the course of empire takes its way."—Supreme Council Bulletin.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Lizzie Octavia Clinard

Lizzie Octavia Clinard, daughter of the late Randall B. and Tempa Jane Payne Clinard, was born February 27, 1876, and departed this life July 6, 1939: age 63 years, 44 months and 9 days.

She suffered for many months, but finally disease won the victory and death took her to her reward. We loath to give her up. Everything was done by loving hands and medical skill that could be done, but in spite of all, she grew worse, her disease was stubborn, and would yield to no treatment. Prayers to our Heavenly Father were made, but the clouds hung low and dark, the Heaven, seemed to be brass, but we believe that behind a frowning Providence He hide a smiling face, and with Paul we say, "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord."

Miss Clinard leaves behind her to mourn her death, two sisters, Mrs. Ida L. Bodenheimer of Route 1, Thomasville, Mrs. W. A. Livengood of High Point, one brother, W. S. Clinard of High Point, three nieces, three nephews, and a host of other relatives and friends.

A sister, Mrs. Mollie Craven ,and a brother, Barnabas Philip Clinard, preceded her in death.

She professed faith in Christ in early womanhood and joined the Mount Pleasant Church, remaining a faithful member as long as her health would permit.

She was a faithful and helpful sister. She lived a quiet, peaceful, friendly, and truthful life. She loved all her poeple, friends, and neighbors, for a true friend loveth at all times. She was always ready to lend them a helping hand.

During her illness she often spoke of going home, and seeing her father and mother, and other friends.

We feel that her feet have reached that shore where never tears nor pain can trouble her again.

May we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, and say with the poet:

Servant of God well done!
Thy glorious warefare's past:
The battle's fought, the race is won.
And thou are crowned at last.

Resolution of Respect from the Big Brothers Sunday School Class of Pleasant Grove Methodist Protestant Church, Thomasville, N. C., Route 1.

Insomuch than on the 4th day of July, 1939, our Heavenly Father saw fit to summons Joseph A. Murphy to his eternal reward, therefore be it resolved:

That the members of the B. B. Class desire to express their deep sorrow for the loss of a devoted member, and a sincere friend. His place in his home, his church, his community and in the hearts of his friends cannot be filled; but the memory of his beautiful character will serve as an inspiration to all who were privileged to have known him. Joe stood for the highest ideals; was fair and just in all of his dealings with his fellowmen. He was so unselfish that no one ever suffered for material necessities if he knew it.

Be it further resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his wife with the assurance of our deep sympathy and abiding love for her and her sons, and with our desire to be of any possible service to them; that a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald and the High Point Enterprise, and that a copy be placed in the record book of the class.

A devoted and loyal man has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our class,
That never can be filled.

WALLACE KENNEDY,
KEIFFER MORRIS,

THE HOUSE OF PRAYER

Deeds are the prayers of those,
Those strong, brave souls that face the world,
That face the dark, and unafraid
Would seek Thy face. O God.

They pray with trowel, loom, with ship, with axe,
They pray in furrowed fields, in candled mine,
They pray in hospital, in court, in mart
Whose honest work is service to all men.

Men can not curse thee, they but curse themselves
That violate the laws of brotherhood.
Thy measure is full measure of each life,
No grace for shirk, no tolerance for greed.

Make this a house of prayer,
Let thought and deed go bravely forth
To help, to hearten all Thy folk;
Make this Thine house, O God.

PASTOR NIEMOELLER

July 1, 1939, marked the beginning of the third year of imprisonment of Pastor Martin Niemoeller in a German concentration camp because of his opposition to Nazi domination of the Church. July 2nd was set apart for ministers all over the United States and in other democratic countries to unite in spirit with the German martyrs in a demonstration of solidarity in a struggle against Nazi efforts to curb the freedom of the human soul and to establish a neo paganism in that country.

Doctor Niemoeller entered the fight for freedom of conscience in May, 1933. He resisted the action of the Nazis in forcing the resignation of Friederich von Bodelschwingh as Reich Bishop because he was not a "German Christian." He and his friends refused to accede to this unwarranted political interference with the Church and the denial of the right of Bodelschwingh and others to speak and use the radio and press to make clear their position.

Refusing to make peace with the "Aryan paragraph" by which the universal application of Christianity was abolished by political edict, he, together with other pastors, was suspended from his parish in November, 1933. The breach widened between the "German Christian Wing" of the Evangelical Church and Prussian Council of the Confessional Church until he was the sole member of that council still at liberty.

Finally, after repeated attacks on the "Aryan" dogmas and the un-Christian character of the Nazi regime, Hitler said, "It is Niemoeller or I." Shortly after this declaration of Hitler, the clergyman was arrested by secret police and placed in the dreaded Moabit Prison. There he remained until the Court was compelled by public sentiment to limit the sentence to seven months and suspend even this sentence as he had served eight months prior to his trial. He, however, was never released. Immediately rearrested at the instance of Hitler, he has since been confined in Sachsenhausen Concentration Camp.

Wise Words of Bishop Hughes

Now that several months have passed since the first message given to the Uniting Conference at Kansas City by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes may it not be a most profitable employment to read and to appreciate the words which came from that great leader in the Methodist Church.—THE EDITOR.

Surely the immensity of meaning in any gathering ought to prevent any smallness in its spirit. This being so, our Uniting Conference should drive all littleness from us and bring us to our labors with an earnest prayer that we may have minds and hearts large enough for our tasks. Let me offer the following considerations.

1. The Conference is the outgrowth and result of many anxious years of negotiation. Even before the consideration of formal plans of union began, individuals and groups were praying toward the goal of a united Methodism. This meeting is the ripened harvest of decades of soil preparing and seed sowing.

2. It brings to our recollection wonderful men whose works we are to seek to make perfect. Bishops Earl Cranston and Eugene R. Hendrix; Bishops Edwin D. Mouzon and William Fraser McDowell; Doctors Thomas Hamilton Lewis and Albert Norman Ward,—are not here. But their labors are present with us; and it would be a terrible thing to mar their visions.

3. We deal, too, in a real way with our country,—and with the world. Calhoun felt that the severance of Methodism in 1844 was the precursor of a divided land. He proved to be an accurate prophet. Is it not true, however, that we are now engaged in strengthening the bonds that make for the more assured oneness of our nation?

4. Our work has significance for the other movements of union. It is true that often a plea is made against denominationalism by exaggerated figures: that is by counting as general Churches very small groups of religionists. In reality the significant denominations in the United States are not many. But we do have too many! It is not our desire to intrude ourselves into the counsels of our sister Churches. Yet we may hope that the consummation made at this meeting may become a definite influence for the merger of other kindred groups.

5. This Conference will affect the spiritual interests of vast populations. We have between seven and eight million registered members. Our constituency, not registered by outward profession of Christ, would probably reach well toward twenty million "souls." Many hundred thousand hearthstones are to be touched by our work.

6. The wider service of our Church in all lands will be affected. In spiritual reality, the world will be gathered into our Auditorium. Anyone with religious imagination can see our line going out "into all the world, and our words to the end of it." How can we be other than reverently careful in the presence of that vision?

7. Great institutions wait eagerly for our decisions. Boards and hospitals, and old people's homes, and schools, and colleges, are all involved. The aged and the youthful walk these aisles in our company. Elijah here works for Elisha; and Paul for Timothy; while Jesus sets the "child in the midst" and points a gentle hand toward his growing life. Here, if we listen, we can hear the tread of millions of young feet.

8. Finally, let us remind ourselves all the time that we are here to complete THE GREATEST REUNION OF CHRIST'S PEOPLE EVER ACCOMPLISHED IN ALL THE NINETEEN HUNDRED YEARS OF CHRISTIAN HISTORY.

If this fact be enough to appall us, it is surely enough to inspire us. Making us humble, it should also make us prayerful. It should send us to the Mighty God who alone can help us in these colossal tasks. We have a great work to do; we have a greater Lord to help us.

Let us often visit the Throne of Grace; often pray that we may be saved from little words, little plans, little hearts, little discussions, little moods. In the vast room of our gathering let us see, again and again, the form of Another, even Christ our Lord and Redeemer. Thus shall we make this Conference truly Uniting! Amen.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Moved Again

Moving seems to be characteristic of my administration as president of the Conference. Be that as it may we have moved from the president's parsonage on West College Drive to room 722 in the Sheraton Hotel, High Point. As much as we dislike moving, it seemed best to do so, this time inasmuch as a plan was worked out which seemed to be for the best interest of the conference, the holders of the mortgages on the parsonage and for High Point College. In this plan High Point College gets the parsonage and for it to be worth the most to the college it had to be available for the overflow of faculty and students at the beginning of the school term.

No Appointment for September 3

When it was decided that my long deferred eye operation was to take place on Monday, August 28 and knowing that I would not be able to hold any services on the following Sunday, September 3, I asked to be released from my appointment at Charlotte church on the Richland charge.

Joint Meeting of Boards

After being shut in for a week and a half I was able to go to Salisbury on Thursday, September 7 for a joint meeting of the executive committee of our Board of Church Extension and the Board of Missions of the Western North Carolina Conference. The matter under immediate consideration was that of making appropriations to bring up the salaries of some of our charges so that no man who gives full time to a charge would get less than $1,000.00 salary. The meeting was very harmonious and everything went along smoothly. Dr. S. W. Taylor, Mr. W. L. Ward and I represented our Board.

A Sunday Morning At Brown Summit

Last Sunday morning was spent with the Brown Summit church, Rev. Paul Hamilton pastor. This was my first visit to this church and I was impressed with their earnestness and determination to carry on even though their numbers are not large. I arrived in time for the Sunday school lesson and decided that the school is in good hands. Several came in for the church service who were not present for Sunday school, so that a reasonably good attendance was present. They seemed very attentive and it was a pleasure to preach to them. This church was a part of the Haw River circuit until some six or seven years ago when it was set off as a station. Since that time it has usually been served by some student of High Point College. The rather strange situation is that the church is located immediately across the road from the Haw River circuit parsonage. It would seem most reasonable for the pastor of this circuit to serve the Brown Summit church and perhaps in the new conference some adjustments will be made. At the service last Sunday Brother Hamilton was urging the committee which has charge of the finances to see to it that the conference claims are raised in full. I trust this may be done.

A Sunday Afternoon At Flat Rock

Leaving Brown Summit, I hurried across the country sixteen miles to Flat Rock church on the Flat Rock charge. This was the beginning of the revival services and a goodly number of people were there for the day with dinner on the grounds. Flat Rock church is one of our historic churches. I would like to call the names of some of our outstanding ministers and laymen who have gone out from this church but I could not mention all of them and fear I would leave some out who ought to be included. Rev. J. A. Burgess is the popular pastor of this charge and the people speak highly of his preaching. He easily ranks as one of the best preachers of our conference. He is hopeful of raising all assessments at some of his churches and of making a good showing at the others.

Two Calls

On Thursday of this week Bishop Purcell's cabinet will be in session at Statesville and Bishop Peele's cabinet will be meeting at Durham. I am asked to be in both meetings as important matters will come up at both places. Since the large number of our charges are in the Western Conference I have decided to go to Statesville and am trying to get some one to represent me at Durham. This matter of Methodist Union has added tremendously to the work and responsibility of the office which I hold.

And Now For the Final Stretch

When this is being read by our people there will be only one more month of this conference year. It is of the utmost importance that the work be finished in the best possible manner. A committee with Dr. Taylor as the chairman has been appointed to boost finances and this committee has already done some good work. Let no pastor leave off until he has done his best.

The Official Roster

Already I have been reminded that our pastors will be asked for at least two lists of the official members of our churches. Of course no church could think of postponing its election until after conference. Those pastors who fail to see to it that officers are elected will find themselves somewhat embarrassed at conference. As the elections are held I suggest that each pastor get a record of the newly elected officers with their addresses and that he make three copies of this, one for the District Superintendent, one for the executive secretary of the Board of Education which supervises the work of training schools, etc., and one for the pastor next year, whoever he may be.

Message In Verse

STAND ASIDE

"Whosoever would be first among you, shall be your servant"

Just stand aside, and watch yourself go by;
Think of yourself, as "he," instead of "I."
Pick flaws, find fault, forget the man is you;
And strive to make your estimate ring true.

Faults of others then will dwarf and shrink,
Love's chain grows stronger by one mighty link,
When you with "he" as substitute for "I"
Have stood aside and watched yourself go by.

West End Church revival came to a close Sunday. The attendance was good for West End, and the interest was gratifying. Several were revived, two have already joined the Church and others may come in at an early date. Our people appreciated the faithful services of our guest preacher, Rev. A. D. Shelton.

Next Sunday we shall hold an anniversary service at both the morning and evening worship period. We shall have special music, reports from all departments on our building fund and a brief address by the pastor at 11 a. m. At the night service we are expecting to have for our guest speaker Dr. L. B. Hayes, the District Superintendent of the Greensboro District. It would be a delight to all of us could we have with us then all the former pastors and members who have gone into other churches.

An Appeal

If in the remaining weeks of the conference year every pastoral charge would send in the amount of "subsidy" laid upon that charge for the Herald we would be greatly helped. Since the Herald is continued and the annual conference has assumed to pay the balance due on its running expenses when it ceases its publication, it ought to be a matter of great concern to every pastor and loyal member of the Church to make this deficit as little as possible. The annual conference will pay its debts, but it can only use the means it has on hand to pay them; consequently the larger the Herald debts the less will remain of the "Debt retirement fund" raised this conference year for all such purposes.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate

This splendid paper has been serving the Methodists in North Carolina for eighty-five years. Last week the Advocate emphasized this fact. Dr. M. T. Plyler is running a history of the Advocate in the paper. The paper began at Raleigh and ran as the Raleigh Christian Advocate until 1918 when it was merged with the North Carolina Christian Advocate. There was invested in the Raleigh paper the sum of $2,000, and in the other Advocate $4,500. The value of the plant today is given at $197,000.

Editors of Advocate Serving More Than A Century

Of the twenty-seven men who have served in some capacity on the Advocate the past 85 years only six have served long as ten years. These are the following:

D. Atkins was editor 18 months and P. L. Groome one year during the time of the transfer of the Advocate from private to conference ownership.

Eighty-five years is a long period and the Advocate has served well through all these years, but never better than today. It is a most excellent paper and well adapted to the needs of its constituents. "May it have many happy returns of the day."

Welch Memorial Church Has A Home Coming Service

While the local reporter is silent we understand that the congregation of this church put on a "double header" the 13th of August. It was a combination of Home Coming and honoring their pastor, Dr. Williams, a special all day program was held. Dr. P. S. Kennett was the guest speaker, special music was provided by electrically transcribed sacred songs, and the choirs of the church; a most sumptuous dinner was served picnic style in the hut, then Dr. Williams was presented a cake of large proportions and of rare quality, and with fifty silver dollars. The cake and the silver dollars were given to emphasize the fact that on the 13th of August fifty years before the Doctor preached his first sermon—that is, he was licensed to preach and began his preparation for the Christian ministry at that time. We do not have the record at hand when Brother Williams became a pastor, but the service he has rendered the Church has been most splendid. He is known as a most excellent preacher, a consecrated Christian gentleman and is thoroughly interested in all the departments of the work of the Church. We congratulate Welch upon its good fortune in having such a man for its pastor for eight years, and we wish for the good Doctor many happy, useful years in the ministry.

LOYALTY DAYS

Loyalty Days in the Churches, September 30 and October 1, take on a deeply patriotic as well as religious significance this year, it is declared by the National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery, sponsor of this annual go-to-church movement.

"Loyalty Days this year should be a call to prayer and reconsecration to the cause of world peace, as well as a reaffirmation of our respective faiths," said the statement.

President Roosevelt has strongly endorsed observance of Loyalty Days. In a letter sent from the White House to Dr. E. Graham Wilson, chairman of the Executive Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery, the President wrote:

"There never has been a time in our history when there was deeper need for calling our people to faith in religion than the present moment. In the contemporary conflict between nations and races and their philosophies of human society, we must keep undimmed our perspective on spiritual values."

President Roosevelt's communication was made public last night at headquarters of the Religion and Welfare Recovery Committee, 60 East Forty-Second Street, New York, by Charles V. Vickrey, executive chairman.

The President wrote further:

"Within our own nation we are pressed by problems, both national and international, which call for divine guidance and power. As we seek continued recovery, we need more and more to realize that our search will be in vain unless we meet, with spiritual forces, the materialism which has such disastrous effect on our national and international life.

"I am gratified to learn that the Call is again going forth for the nation-wide observance of Loyalty Day by our churches and synagogues, September thirtieth and October first, to bring the minds and hearts of men back to consciousness of the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man and the sanctions of religion, in services of worship and rededication to these ideals. Upon them alone can the structure of our civilization rest in security and confidence.

"Very sincerely yours,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

The invitation reads: "Every citizen is cordially invited and every member is confidently expected to attend church or synagogue on Loyalty Days, Saturday, September thirtieth and Sunday, October first."

The slogan is: "Every member present or accounted for."

The goal is: "Every citizen in a house of worship every week for rest, meditation, prayer, worship and life adjustment."

In giving out the statement, Mr. Vickrey commented:

"Had the above goal been reached or more closely approached in recent years, there probably would be no war in Europe today or war clouds over the rest of the world.

"Loyalty Days are a 'mobilization of the spiritual forces' of America to strengthen the bonds of world peace and good will as contrasted with mobilization of military forces of Europe in international strife. The more than 10,000,000 soldiers now mobilized in Europe are given no option in answering daily roll-call. Just so every church member, who has any sense of loyalty to his religious vows, taken when he joined the church or was confirmed, should recognize the solemn obligation in these days of world-wide stress and peril, to acknowledge in formal church service, as well as in private workship, the fatherhood of God who 'made of one blood all nations of men.'"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

MICAH: A MESSENGER OF SOCIAL JUSTICE

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, September 17

Lesson Text—Micah 3:1-12; 6:6-8.

Golden Text—What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and walk humbly with thy God? Micah 6:8.

With this study of Micah we turn once again to consider one of God's prophets whom He called to meet the needs and rebuke the sins of His people. We study the life of the kings to learn the why of their iniquity and then that of the prophets to learn the attitude of God towards their transgression. For every wicked king who came to power in Israel God called a righteous prophet to oppose his wicked rule. The democracy of God's dealings with earth allows men to put into ruling power that life or personality whom they choose whether he be righteous or wicked, but they must conduct their campaign under this divine slogan of God which says "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn." Now when the wicked have been put into power God chooses Him a prophet to appose their choice and to act, as it were as a nucleus of an opposing political party to throw the wicked out of power.

"The word unto the prophets spoken
Was writ on tables yet unbroken:
The words of seers or sybils told,
In groves of oak, or fanes of gold,
Still floats upon the morning wind,
Still whispers to the willing mind.
One accent of the Holy Ghost
The heedless world hath never lost.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson. (The Problem)

Thus when Israel, between the years of 700-600 B. C., became beset with wickedness and injustice within her borders God sought out that prophet again who would cry out against the rulers and heads of Israel who "hate the good and love the evil." We have already studied of one of these prophets in our study of Isaiah, but we also find that he had a contemporary ally who was another voice on the side of God. It was Micah, the messenger of social justice. In Isaiah God saw fit to pick a nobleman who walked with kings to carry out His purpose. Again we refer to the democracy of God to say that at the same time He saw fit to call Micah, who was only an humble villager, for His design against the social evils of Israel. Humble as he was Micah was bound to have a profound conception of God and a keen sense of justice. These he had no doubt learned from the nature of his surroundings. Away from the human congestion of the city Micah must have learned of the deeper things of God in his hours of nearness to the voices of nature. His life in the small rural village of Mareshah prepared him to better see the corruption and social ills of the large city of Jerusalem. His occasional visits to the capital stirred his heart to cry out against the cruelty and inhumanity of man to man; to point out the wrong of the princes, judges, priests that pressed their evil intents at the expense of human welfare and social justice. When Micah went to the big city he went "slumming" as many small-town individuals do today. They return home to talk of the thrills of the big town, but Micah remained therein to exclaim: "But as for me, I am full of power by the Spirit of Jehovah, and of judgment and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin." Micah saw all that was to be seen in the city; with its temples and market places he also saw the sin in the temples of men's hearts and the robbery of the poor at the market-place. St. John waxes elequent in his superb description of the great city but he too sees all its vast merchandise. "The great city, the strong city; her merchandise is of gold and silver, and precious stones, and pearls, and fine linen, . . . and the bodies and souls of men." Rev. 18:10, 12, 13. Men today need like Micah and John to look within our fair cities and to see that in the tidal waves of their fierce competition, their money-madness and frantic rush for pleasure that many souls are carried far from the moorings of righteousness and divine law.

"The city is the sea, its waves go to and fro,
And the thunder of its waters roll in the depths below.
One night is in its hollow caves,
And men go down beneath its waves."

Micah was quick to see the trouble with Israel—she had lost her hold on God and with that pivot gone the seeds of corruption and injustice subsequently spring into life. Then if the absence of God resulted in these conditions so would the presence of God displace them. He, therefore, showed them their need for God with them again if Jerusalem was not to be ploughed as a field. He offered to Israel a plain, simple program by which to avert the catastrophe impending. It was no new political theory of "new deal" but simply the elementary principles of religion as established by God for men even as far back as before the foundation of the world, namely: "To do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God." We of today are living in a world that is more frantically seeking and needing a better system of social justice than did Micah and because of that seeking are being led by many unworthy prophets who claim to have a way; when, if we would have courage enough to go back to God's plan as given to this humble villager of 700 B. C. we would have that era of peace and social justice so long looked for by false and true prophets alike.

We search the world for truth; we cull
The good, the pure, the beautiful
From graven stone and written scroll,
From all old flower-fields of soul;
And, weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read.
—Whittier ("Miriam").

MRS. WALTER SCOTT CROWSON OBSERVES HER 90th BIRTHDAY TODAY AT HER HOME

By CLETA RICH

Seldom is a person able to attend church services when nearing a 90th birthday, but Mrs. Walter Scott Crowson, who reaches that age today, walks unassisted two blocks from her home to the Central Methodist Church each Sunday morning. Mrs. Crowson is able to participate in the services from a pew in the center of the auditorium, since her advanced age has not affected to a great extent her sense of hearing.

Mrs. Crowson, one of Asheboro's grand old ladies, resides with her daughter, Mrs. Melvin W. Parrish, and her granddaughter, Mrs. A. Idyl Ferree, and Mr. Ferree at 510 South Fayetteville street. Mr. Crowson died 14 years ago at their Asheboro home. Mrs. Crowson's other daughter, Mrs. Amos R. Winningham, also lives in Asheboro on South Park street.

Mrs. Crowson retains her membership with the Charlotte Methodist Church, four miles west of Asheboro on highway 64, having been a faithful communicant for over 50 years. She has always been a loyal contributor to her church and is still vitally interested in all its activities.

This charming Christian woman, who is unusually active for her age, has a keen vision which enables her to do artistic needle-work, such as knitting, tatting and rug-making, and she also assists with the household duties. Mrs. Crowson reads more than the average person, and has been a subscriber to her church paper, the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD for 37 years. This publication is read more thoroughly than other papers—including every advertisement.

The Randolph chapter, U. D. C., claims Mrs. Crowson as one of the most valuable honorary members, and her late husband was always very active in the Confederate veterans organization.

In observance of the birthday of Mrs. Crowson she is the honor guest today of a noon-day dinner at her home, with Mrs. Parrish and Mrs. Winningham as hostesses. The guests are close relatives: Mrs. A. I. Ferree, Mrs. John Taylor, Miss Anne Ross, Asheboro; Mrs. Robert Reese of Laurinburg; Mrs. W. L. McCord of Spartanburg, S. C., granddaughters; Hal Rich, of Bassett, Va., grandson; and the great-grandchildren, Hal Rich, Jr., Billy McCord and Elizabeth McCord. PASTOR'S PROBLEMS

By HARRY WILLIAM BLACKBURN

Pastor at Parkersburg, W. Va.

The first great problem of every pastor is that he has enough work to do to keep three or four men busy. He does more speaking than a lawyer. He must address the same audience twice a Sunday—104 times a year (besides his revival preaching, funerals, and addresses at special occasions) on the same great theme "The Gospel of Christ." He must approach it from every angle. He must be winning in his mannerism, compelling in his logic, and blood-earnest in his appeal. In brief, he must be interesting, thrilling, gripping, inspiring. It is his congregation if he can hold people, and he must address them in such a way that they will want to come back for more.

He has more studying to do than a student. Most of us in college and seminary thought we were greatly burdened with studies, but the pastor who is really doing his job well looks back through the green fields of memory to those happy days, and realizes he was just learning how to study then. He has more calling to do than a doctor. He calls upon the sick, but he must call upon the well also. When death comes the doctor is through, but the pastor's calls must continue. If he collected on his calls, as does the doctor, he might have an enviable rating in "Dun & Bradstreet." He has more callers than a real estate agent. His phone rings both early and late. He must counsel with individuals and with groups. He must be one to whom the young, the middle-aged, the old may feel free to come and unburden their souls any time, day or night.

He has as much writing as a stenographer. While he does not read his sermons and discourses, yet he must write them, to preserve them and to clothe them in better language as well as to become thoroughly familiar with his thought. His is a heavy correspondence. He must write articles for papers and magazines. Probably he is preparing a manuscript for a book he hopes to publish. The average pastor is not able to hire a secretary, so he writes it himself. He has the work of several ordinary professions in one. Beside all this, he must share the burdens, joys, sorrows, and afflictions of his flock. Preaching is not a lazy man's job.

There is the problem of the predecessor. What shall be the minister's attitude toward his predecessor? By all means, honor him. This is strategic wisdom as well as Christian courtesy. Early in my ministry I was appointed to a city church to succeed a minister much older than I. It had been arranged for me to stay at the home of a doctor who was one of the stewards. As we were eating supper his wife turned to me and said, "Well, I'll tell you, we certainly loved Brother Lane, and we hated to see him move. It seems too bad that the old preachers have to move out to the harder places, so that the young preachers can have a good church." Immediately I sensed the fact that she had expressed the doctor's sentiments as well. Such was my welcome. In reply I spoke in glowing words of my predecessor, commending him and his work in the strongest terms. The next morning in the pulpit I prayed for Brother Lane by name, and with sincerity and earnestness. In my opening remarks I again warmly eulogized the beloved pastor whose term had expired, and said, "It will be impossible for me, a boy preacher, to fill the place of this good pastor of ripened experience. I will need the prayers and sympathetic help of each of you. We meet as strangers. We desire success in our church work. There is one bright omen. This church and the new pastor alike love and honor Brother Lane." His friends from that morning were my friends.

There's the problem of pastoral visiting. We know some who have allowed social, self-indulgent visiting to rob them of the highest efficiency in the pulpit; at the same time we are acquainted with others who have permitted the attractions of reading and study to bribe them into total neglect of pastoral calling. While both types are bad, yet still worse is he who allows his pastoral work to degenerate into mere formal gossipy calls. My brothers, I believe seriousness without sanctimoniousness, geniality without frivolity, frankness without brusqueness, should characterize the pastoral call. We go as the shepherd of souls, and great good can be done by a pastoral call. It has been my custom to pray in the homes where I call, and my experience has convinced me that the people appreciate it.

But who has first claim on our pastoral labors? We might well visit the people, so far as psossible, in the following order. First, the sick. None more deserves immediate attention. They are weak and lonely and depressed. They need hope and cheer, they need it now. They will not forget it when well, nor will their loved ones forget, and you have linked them to you with hooks of steel. Go into the sick room with gentle winsome manner, like a confidential loving friend; speak hopeful and cheering words, especially to the genuine Christian. If the sick be unsaved, direct them in special prayer to a saving faith in Christ, and before leaving, a kind word of exhortation may open the way for their salvation. Always pray with the sick. Not in sepulchral tones, however, but rather in hopeful and assuring tones. Make the visit short and depart quietly leaving a remembrance of love and joy and hope. Second, the afflicted. These need you next to the sick and dying. Go to them as frequently as may be possible while they are passing through the deep waters of affliction. You can draw them to Christ as at no other time. Third, the poor. Somebody in your round of visiting must be first and somebody last. If you visit the rich first and the poor last, the latter will feel that it is because they are poor. The poor are sensitive and their life is hard. They will be comforted and cheered to know that their pastor is no respecter of persons. This, I believe, is a vital matter in your hold and influence upon the poor. Fourth, the most distant. These parishioners come the longest distance, and at sacrifice and expense, to greet you at your services. They deserve special attention. I have always made it a point, as do good physicians, to keep the extremities warm, and thus keep up a healthy circulation.

Again there's the problem of the mid-week prayer meeting. To learn the art of conducting prayer meetings profitably is invaluable to the successful pastor. Prayer meetings often become more or less cold, formal, and uninviting. They can be made so interesting, gracious, helpful, warm-hearted and attractive that people will feet it a great loss to miss them. It can be a time of joyful fellowship, fervent inter-

Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Curl, of Concord Church on Saxapahaw charge, Graham, Route 2, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Sunday, September 3, when they were at home to friends and relatives. The guests showered the Curls with gifts and also brought baskets of lunch which was served on a long table in the grove at the home. Pastor M. C. Henderson made a brief talk, mentioning some of the outstanding facts in the life of this useful couple in Concord Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Curl have seven children, a number of grandchildren and one great grandson. Mrs. J. R. Dodson and Mrs. J. R. Williams, of Grace Church, are daughters, Mrs. Dodson is president of the Grace Woman's Auxiliary and is very active in assisting to arrange homes for the Annual Conference delegates next month. Other children include Mrs. William Stovall, of Burlington; R. L. Curl, of Burlington; B. S. Curl, of Graham, Route 2; Mrs. Frank Morris, of High Point; and Wade Curl, of Columbia, S. C.—(Photograph by Rev. J. Elwood Carroll).

cession and hearts aglow with a sense of the divine presence. To this end the pastor must be the inspiring genius of the meeting. He must come from his Bible and from his knees prepared to feed the flock of Christ. A brief portion of the word of God should be the basis of the service, and it should be so expounded by the preacher that it will come to the people as an inspiration.

The nature of the prayer meeting should be varied so that the people will not fall into ruts. The whole hour should not be uniformly devoted to prayer or to testimony. A mingling of the two, interspersed with singing has always seemed to me the best; and yet, this mingling of prayer and testimony should not be stereotyped. The singing should be brief and largely spontaneous, and a joyful sense of freedom should prevail. In the large city church, as in the country charge, I have found it possible to have a successful and powerful mid-week prayer meeting.

Determine to be a great preacher. Not, however, for self advancement, but for the exaltation of Christ and the salvation of men. This is your chief work. ''This one thing I do,'' says Paul. ''Draw all your studies this way,'' writes Wesley. Study to preach, with this end always in view. Study man, that you may know how to approach, persuade, and capture, his judgment, conscience, and will for Christ.

There are many things that go into the making of a great preacher, but two things are vital, namely, prayer and study. Jesus says, ''Pray without ceasing, and a companion command for the preacher might be, ''Study without ceasing.'' We may each of us be scholars abreast with the times. While life is too short for us to attempt to discover for ourselves all knowledge in every field, yet, experts, in each of the arts and sciences, have placed the results of their life work in scholarly volumes, at our disposal, which we may peruse to edification. It is our privilege to glean from the fields of literature, science, philosophy and history those lessons and truths that have a bearing on the gospel message, and that help us more effectively to illustrate and set forth all the great things compassed by the ministry of the Grace of God.

Important as are each of these problems I have discussed, I have yet to state what I believe to be the greatest problem confronting any pastor. That is, the problem of keeping his own soul aflame. It is so easy to let the fires burn low in our own breast. There is a good deal of monotony in the pastorate. We have so many sermons to preach, so many prayer meetings to conduct, so many calls to make, so many groups to meet with, etc., etc. It is very easy to become professional. Often we don't get a great deal of inspiration from others, and our own zeal seems to be little appreciated by the masses, and so the tempter suggests, ''What's the use of you taking it all so seriously?'' And so, the devil pours cold water on the fires that are already diminishing in our souls.

But, my brother pastors, how vital it is that we keep our own hearts aflame. That we keep a freshness and piquancy in our own experience. A fervor and glow in our own life. In Luke 11:13 we read, ''If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?'' Shall we ask Him? His abiding presence day by day will keep our soul aflame.—The Pastor's Journal.

EXAMPLES OF GENIUS IN DISTRESS

Homer was a beggar; Plautus turned a mill; Terance was a slave; Boetius died in jail; Paul Borghese had fourteen trades; and yet starved; Tasso was often distressed for five shillings; Bentivoglio was refused admittance into a hospital he himself had erected; Cervantes died of hunger; Vagela left his body to the surgeons to pay his debts as far as the money would go; Bacon lived a life of meanness and distress; Sir Walter Raleigh died on the scaffold; Spencer, the charming, died in want; Milton sold his copyright of ''Paradise Lost'' for fifteen pounds, about $75.00, in three payments; Dyrden lived in great poverty; Steele lived a life of warfare with the sheriff on account of his debts; Goldsmith sold his ''Vicar of Wakefield'' at a trifle to save him from the grip of the law.—Selected.

THE IDEAL PASTOR

By BISHOP KEN

Give me the priest whose graces shall possess
Of an ambassador the just address;
A father's tenderness, a shepherd's care,
A leader's courage, which the cross can bear;
A ruler's awe; a watchman's watchful eye,
A fisher's patience, a laborer's toil,
A guide's dexterity to disembroil;
A prophet's inspiration from above;
A teacher's knowledge, and a Saviour's love.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

WHAT JESUS SAID ABOUT PRAYING

Topic for September 17

By Rev. Raymond W. White, D.D.

Daily Bible Reading

Monday, September 11—Pray in Faith. Mark 11:22-24.

Tuesday, September 12—Pray Sincerely and Humbly. Luke 18:9-14.

Wednesday, September 13—Pray Believing. Matt. 21:22.

Thursday, September 14 — Pray Importunately. Luke 18:1-8.

Friday, September 15—Pray for Persecutors and Enemies. Matt. 5:43-45.

Saturday, September 16—Pray in Jesus' Name. John 14:13-15.

The Text: Matt. 6:5-15.

To the Leader

This is the second of a series of three topics on the subject, "Studies in the Sermon on the Mount." It is very common for people to entertain opinions about praying without measuring them by Jesus' standard. Many of our fixed ideas have never been studied in the light of Jesus' teachings. This produces a diluted system of living which we call the Christian way of life. Often our ideas have been borrowed from others without thought,—experiment, or investigation. Such have few, if any, convictions and for them life is mechanical rather than creative. In this meeting an effort should be made to create interest in finding the way Jesus prayed and taught His disciples to pray. Created interest should stimulate creative action. Make this an expository study.

The Poet

Give me a good digestion, Lord
And also something to digest;
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
With sense to keep it at its best.
Give me a healthy mind, Good Lord,
To keep the good and pure in sight,
Which, seeing sin, is not appalled
But finds a way to set it right
Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine, or sigh;
Don't let me worry over much
About the fussy thing called "I."
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke,
To get some pleasure out of life
And pass it on to other folk.

Topic Hints

A Perfect Form: Jesus gave what we call the Lord's prayer as a prayer-form. Luke tells us that one of His disciples asked Jesus to teach His followers how to pray. Luke 11:1. In answer to the desire, Jesus gave the Lord's Prayer. We feel sure that Jesus gave the spirit of prayer as well as the form of prayer. It is certain that, unless the spirit accompanies the words, recitation becomes a vain repetition. A true believer does more than respect the Lord's Prayer. He prays it. Matt. 6:9-15.

Directions: Jesus gave directions for praying. In the sixth verse of the text, He advised His disciples to enter a private room or a retired place and pray. In such a place Jesus and the praying disciples could be alone. It is certain that Jesus would have the mind freed from the distractions of life when one prays in the closet.

Simplicity: Jesus taught that simplicity should accompany prayer. The publican's prayer was very simple but full of spirit and meaning. "God, be merciful to me a sinner," was a brief but commendable appeal. He smote his breast in token of his distress in view of his sins. The spirit of humility justified the publican. The self-exaltation of the Pharisee was frowned upon. Luke 18:10-14.

Promises: Jesus taught that prayer is rewarded. Said He, "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." John 14:13. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you," was a promise which is cherished by every true believer. John 15:7. Other promises were made which may be found in John 16:22-27 and Matt. 7:7.

Faith in Prayer: When near Bethany, Jesus told the disciples that "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive," Matt. 21:22. Again He pointed out that faith must accompany rewarding prayer when in Caesarea Philippi with the disciples. Matt. 17:19. The words of prayer on the lips must be accompanied with faith in the heart.

Forgivenesss Jesus taught that behind the offered prayer there must be a forgiving heart. This truth is found in the Lord's Prayer. When near Jerusalem Jesus said, "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any, that your Father also who is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses," Mark 11:25. It is very clear that God does not answer the prayer of a heart that holds a grudge.

Power: Jesus taught that there is power in prayer. Said He, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 18:19. No human being will ever be able to estimate how much sustaining power came to Jesus through His praying. No human man can comprehend the possibilities of power through prayer. There is power in united prayer. The individual's prayer in the closet must be supplemented by the individual's prayer in a Christian fellowship. There is power in personal and united prayer.

Insistent Appeal: Jesus approved the prayer in which there was frequent solicitation. A prayer life is urgent in character. This is illustrated in His own words in Luke 11:5-10 and Luke 18:1-8. It must be remembered, however, that the insistent appeal must not be limited to material things. The kingdom should first be sought and claimed. The Holy Spirit should be welcomed and our prayers offered by selfish men with nothing but a materialistic outlook on life.

Prayer in Temptation: Often we sing, "Yield not to temptation." How is one to be strengthened against temptation? Not a few have thought that human will-power is sufficient. They have become moralists. When their will-power was weak they yielded and then condoned their sin. The true believer knows that God's Grace is sufficient. He prays for that grace that head, heart, and will may endure the strong assaults of the enemy. Note what Jesus said to Peter at the Jordan, "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." Matt. 26:41.

Notes on the Text: V 5: Jesus warns against praying to make an impression. V 6: Jesus teaches private and secret devotion. Vs. 7-8: Jesus cautions against aimless praying. Vs. 9-13: Jesus outlines a pattern prayer. Vs. 14-15: Jesus points out that a forgiving spirit is a prerequisite of effective praying.—M. P. Recorder.

GOOD WITNESSES

The New York Sun published an interesting article on the passports issued by our Department of State. Many will be surprised to learn that nearly 350,000 American citizens are living in foreign lands. More than 175,000 are in Canada, 80,000 in Europe, while the rest live in Asia, Africa, and South America. Countries like Italy, England, and France have large colonies of permanent American residents. The total of 350,000 does not, of course, include "the enormous army of American tourists."

Whether the number be large or small, Dr. Wm. B. Lipphard, editor of "Missions," that admirable monthly, is eminently right in asserting that the above figures have solemn missionary significance. Especially those who have not caught the vision of world missions should study them with serious concern. Every bearer of an American passport, whether he intends it or not, is a foreign missionary. Here is an army, temporarily or permanently residing in foreign lands, and every member of it is making an impression, either for weal or woe. In too many cases the nations say of them: "These Americans are here not to benefit us, but to get profit for themselves." How the reputation of our country has suffered at the hands of some of these, the reputation for good neighborliness, brotherhood, international idealism, and world friendship!

Against that large group should be contrasted the small body of 15,000 foreign missionaries from our land. They are "over there" not to get but to give, not to exploit but to share the Gospel of Christ, and to lift people to a higher and more abundant life. The total cost of the missionary enterprice is very little, when you consider it as a constructive influence to counteract the demoralizing contribution often made by commercialized interests or rotten diplomacy. The missionaries are holding the torch on high and presenting to the world what is best and finest in American life.—From The Messenger, August 10, 1939.

RUNNING THE HIGH POINT CHILDREN'S HOME NEXT YEAR

It has been tentatively agreed upon by a committee, and will most likely be adopted by the coming Annual Conference, that those of us who have supported this Children's Home through the years be asked to continue its support for one more year in the same way.

This one paragraph from the tentative report of the committee will explain itself,—"That the Methodists in the North Carolina and the Western North Carolina Conferences formerly known as Methodist Protestants, be directed to continue their cultivation and encouraged to secure liberal contributions from their own people for the support of the Children's Home at High Point."

Then after we have done our best, just as we have been doing every year, the other Methodist Orphanages in the state will come to our rescue if need be. So, my dear friends, it is up to us former Methodist Protestants to lay our plans to continue our regular support of the Children's Home which has been ours for so long that we would feel lost without it.

This I am sure we will gladly do because of our love for the Home, and because we would be making our regular contributions to some children's home anyway.

This is just for the coming conference year, and after that other plans will doubtless be adopted.

Your most earnest and faithful cooperation will be needed because we will not have the Herald as our means of boasting the Children's Home week after week.

We are making this announcement this early while we have the Herald through which to reach all our people.

The committee wrestled over the problem for hours, and worked out the very best plans they could for the continuation of our orphanage work in our three children's homes for the first year under Methodist union.

Let us accept the plan in good faith and press on with our share of it happily.

ADELE PHILLIPS, Reporter.

Kernersville-South Winston — The weeks and months of the present conference year have passed rapidly, and we will soon gather in another annual conference. The work on this charge has been moving along at a normal rate. Revival meetings have been held at two of the churches, namely, Pine Grove and South Winston. We are engaged this week in the meeting at Sandy Ridge church, with Rev. G. W. Fink, of Jamestown, doing the preaching.

Two more churches, Ai and Kernersville, will have meetings. The annual revival meeting for Ai church will begin the fourth Sunday in September, with Rev. J. C. Stokes, D.D., of Oak Ridge, as the pulpit help. In Kernersville we are to unite with three other town churches in a week of services. The two Methodist churches, the Baptist church, and the Moravian church will co-operate in "A Preaching Mission." The four pastors are to do the preaching and the services are to rotate in the four churches. The time for the preaching mission is October 8 to 14, inclusive. At the first service, October 8, at 7:30 p. m., Bishop Clare Purcelle will preach. The services will be held at Cherry Street Methodist church on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

We had a good service at South Winston church last Sunday morning. The attendance was about as usual. The four daughters of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Isgette rendered a quartet selection. After the services the pastor and wife and son, C. B., Jr.,, were invited to the good home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Smith, where a period of genuine fellowship was enjoyed. We were seated at the dining table which was loaded with a variety of good things to eat. Brother Smith is superintendent of the Sunday school, a position in the church he has held for many years. He goes about his work in a quiet but definite manner, always displaying a pleasing disposition. Mrs. Smith, in her jovial and congenial manner, always proves an excellent hostess, and no better cook may be found anywhere. The visit with these good people was thoroughly enjoyed.

The Christian Endeavor society of Pine Grove church, which was re-organized a few months ago with Miss Rachel Ingram as president, Ned Ingram, vice-president, and Miss Hazel Thomas as secretary, held a very interesting business meeting and social at the home of Miss Hazel Thomas on Wednesday night of last week. About forty young people were present. We are glad for the progress this society is making since the re-organization and resumption of meetings.

The call for the meeting of the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the Kernersville-South Winston charge has been made. The conference will be held at the Kernersville church Saturday, October 14, at 2:30 p. m. We trust that all officials of the churches will be active for the next few weeks in preparation for the conference.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

Roberta, Rev. H. W. Bell, Pastor. — The church is moving along fine. Our regular services were held Sunday as following: Sunday school, 9:45; preaching, 11 and 7:30 o'clock.

The Ladies' Aid Society has floored the church and had it sanded and varnished and a new carpet for the pulpit; also varnished the pews and pulpit chairs, bought a new door and lock for the front.

We have two very sick members, Mrs. Barbee and Miss Jewel Pennegar. Hope for them a speedy recovery if it be God's will.

The closing of the year is drawing near. When we go in a muddle hope its for the best.

Hollister, Halifax Charge, W. H. Howard, Jr., Pastor.—Since our last report to the Herald, the work has been going on as usual. The third Quarterly Conference convened in Hollister church on August 3, at 8:00 o'clock p. m. All the churches on the charge were represented with the exception of Ringwood church. While we are considerably behind with Annual Conference assessments and pastor salary, it is hoped that a good portion of these assessments will be raised within the next few weeks. Some very interesting reports were given by representatives from each church. Mrs. H. W. Mitchell was declared elected delegate to the Annual Conference. Mrs. Mitchell has served as delegate for a number of times and we know she is a good delegate. We are hoping and trusting that conference will see fit to return our present pastor to us for another year. We have thoroughly enjoyed the short three and a half years of service rendered by our pastor, Mr. Howard. We appreciate the many things he has done in helping us to carry on the Master's work. We know Hollister church, and the charge as a whole have been greatly benefitted by his service.

The revival meeting began here on the fourth Sunday in August with all day services. Mr. Howard delivered two excellent sermons on Sunday. Services were held each day during the week at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Rev. Wilbur Hutchins, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, Apex, N. C., arrived on Sunday evening and did the preaching until the close of the meeting on Friday evening. Mr. Hutchins did some wonderful preaching during this series of services. He was liked by all, and we hope we can have him to assist in our meeting again some time. There were several reclamations and several boys and girls united with the church.

The Woman's Auxiliary met in the home of Mrs. R. I. Pullin on Tuesday afternoon, August 15. An unusually large crowd was present for the meeting and the social hour which followed. Mrs. E. T. Ellington led the devotional service in a very impressive way, using the theme "Thy Kingdom Come Through Training Methodist Youth." Mrs. J. J. Williams, and Miss Evelyn Knight gave very interesting readings on the subject of "Leadership Training for the Youth in the Methodist Church." Solicitations were made at this meeting for clothing for the child in the Children's Home, which the Auxiliary is sponsoring. Nearly all the clothes were donated at this time. We are hoping that our Auxiliary will be well represented at the District Meeting at Creswell, next Sunday.

Bethel, Alamance Charge, Dr. George R. Brown, Pastor.—Although there have been no reports from Bethel, our church has been active this year. Dr. Brown has filled every appointment and Mrs. Brown has been very helpful to us in our Sunday school and Missionary work.

Our class rooms have recently been painted and the Young People's class has purchased new furniture and equipment for their room.

Children's Day service was held the second Sunday in August, with a large number of children taking part in the service.

Our revival meeting was conducted the third week in August. Dr. Brown delivered the sermon on Sunday morning. In the afternoon Rev. O. L. Easter came and conducted the services for the rest of the week. We are very grateful to Brother Easter, especially for the sermons he preached to the children. We believe they made such definite impressions upon the children that they will long be remembered.

The Woman's Auxiliary has held its meeting each month. The last meeting was held with Mrs. Annie Lindley and the program was conducted by Mrs. Sarah Thompson. The October meeting will be held on the second Sunday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Inez Foust with the program in charge of Miss Bessie Holmes. We expect to hold our Thanksoffering service some time soon.

Our annual Memorial Day will be observed next Sunday, September 17, with Professor J. B. Robertson, of Burlington, to deliver the address at 11 o'clock. Picnic lunch will be served, and special music and the business session will feature the afternoon session. All former members and friends of Bethel are cordially invited to attend.

Shiloh Charge.—Now that our revival meetings have been held, I will give the readers of the Herald a brief summary of the visible results.

Rev. Robert Short did the preaching in our meeting at Greer's Chapel, Rev. E. A. Bingham at Friendship, and Rev. T. G. Madison at Shiloh. They did good preaching and rendered valuable service. As a result of the meetings we had 25 professions and 20 additions to the churches. We also had good revivals among the church members and there is new life and increase in church and Sunday school attendance.

We are beginning to nominate committees to elect church officers, and we believe we will come to conference with a good report. Brother J. F. Fritts from Shiloh church is our delegate.

We are all looking forward to our fourth quarterly conference October 7, when we are to have our president. He will meet with us at Friendship church and preach to us at 11 a.m. And the good ladies from all three churches will bring picnic dinner, and Shiloh charge is going to spend this day in the old-fashioned way.

In the afternoon our president will hold our fourth quarterly conference. Since this is to mark the closing of the (former) M. P. conference year for Shiloh charge, we hope for a good attendance and a time of spiritual refreshing.

Love Joy Church, Seagrove-Love Joy, Rev. J. H. Trolinger, Pastor.—Plans are far under way for our annual camp meeting which will begin the fourth Sunday in September. There will be three services on Sunday and each day throughout the revival. They will be at 11 in the morning, 2:30 in the afternoon, and 7:30 at night. Rev. C. G. Isley, of Albemarle, will be the pulpit help for the revival.

We are looking forward for one of the greatest revivals our church has ever known. The interest taken by the church at large is keen. All the tents are being occupied. Some additional tents are being built, and we are expecting good attendance at each service.

We realize that the preachers cannot bring a revival within themselves. The church has a responsibility also. Our prayer is that we as a church may prepare our own selves for the revival and then be led and guided by God's Holy Spirit in helping to win the lost.

Mr. C. V. Commer will begin a singing school at our church Monday night, September 11. We hope that much interest will be shown and that our choir will be greatly improved.

The Friendship circle held its regular meeting September 5, with Mrs. Cora Burns. This was turned into a business meeting at which time plans and arrangements were made to furnish the Sunday school rooms of our church for the pastor and help to live in during our revival. Much interest was shown and a good number was present.

We are sorry to report the illness of some of our church workers, but are glad to know they are improving fast. Mrs. Grady Russell has returned home from the Yadkin hospital where she underwent a major operation. Mrs. I. F. Russell is expected home within a few day from the McPherson hospital, Durham, where she underwent a sinus operation.

Rankin Memorial Church, Rev. Edw. Suits, Pastor.—The revival services which have been in progress for the past two weeks have been brought to a close. We have had a wonderful meeting and many souls have been blessed. We were fortunate indeed to have Rev. S. M. Needham of Greensboro to assist in the revival. We are glad to welome six new members into the church. They are Mrs. Buford Bryant, Mrs. Elizabeth Small, Billy and Jimmy Small, and Misses Ruth Welborn and Vera Russell.

We are beginning some work this week which will complete our church. We hope to have it finished as soon as possible.

The auxiliary met last Monday evening at the home of Mrs. W. F. Clary. There were 20 members and one visitor present.

It is with deep regret that we report the death of one of our members, Mrs. Annie E. Sharp, who left us to be with Jesus on Sunday, September 3. We shall miss her, but we feel that our loss is Heaven's gain. To the bereaved members of that family we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

Ann Street Methodist Church, Concord, Rev. E. O. Peeler, Pastor, Sept. 11.—Our work is going on nicely with good crowds for the Sunday morning services, but our folks just won't come out much for the night service. Instead of having a week or ten days' fall meeting we are having what we call a reenlistment in the Sunday school and church. Mr. Peeler asked all the Sunday school teachers to cooperate in every way that they could and try to get in touch with each member of our Sunday school. We are glad to see a few more out at our midweek services and just hope that more of them will feel the need of these blessings.

A committee has been appointed to see about having a new parsonage built. We would be very proud to see a new parsonage and we hope that the time will soon be here when we can build one. We have our new church and it paid for, and if we will just work together we can have a new parsonage and it paid for.

Our Ladies' Aid met on Monday night at the home of Mrs. Esther Litaker with a large number present. We have had right much work done in the kitchen of the church and all the women are proud of the work, and we appreciate so much the work Mr. Julius Whitley did for us. The Ladies' Aid is working hard along now to try and have a good report for our pastor to take to conference. Our missionary work is going along fine. The names of the circles have been changed from numbers to names. Circle No. 1 now has the name of one of the deceased members, the Lottie Mann circle. Circle No. 2 now has the name of two of the oldest and very faithful members, the Mary Kate circle, named for Mrs. Mary Earnhardt and Mrs. Kate Scarboro. Circle No. 3 now has the name of two of the oldest and very faithful, willing workers, the Rosie Belle circle, named for Mrs. Rosie Sides and Mrs. Belle Cass. We are so sorry to hear that Mrs. Cass is sick at this time and may have to go to the hospital. We are very much in sympathy with Miss Netia Blackwelder who was in a car wreck and is now having to be in bed all the time wearing a cast. Her neck, back, one arm and ankle are hurt. She will have to be in the cast until October. We all hope and pray that she will be well and strong. We miss Netia so much at church; she is one of our choir girls.

Calvary Church, Roland C. Stubbins, Pastor.—Calvary church had its best Vacation Bible School this year. Seventy were enrolled and forty-eight received certificates for full time attendance.

Our Sunday school has about its capacity attendance. We feel confident that with accommodations our enrollment would about double in one year's time, for we have as well equipped teachers and workers as one would find in any church.

Our stewards are lining up for the financial finish and that means we are not intending to come up "short."

The walls, pews and floors of our church have been repainted and refinished this year and Mr. David Glass, a loyal and thoughtful member, is due credit for the total expense of wall painting and much of the labor on the pews and floor. The Sunday school and Woman's Auxiliary made liberal contributions for materials and labor on the floor work.

Quite a number of members have united with our church this year and we expect others to unite before conference.

Among our members that are ill: Mr. George Shaw, Mrs. A. E. Causey, Mrs. C. L. Tucker and Mrs. Otis Campbell.

A revival meeting is in progress at our church, with Rev. Edward Snow of Pleasant Garden Methodist church doing the preaching and Mrs. Clarence E. Williams of Winston-Salem directing the music.

Rockingham Charge, R. L. Vickery, Pastor.—We are glad to report that our church is progressing rapidly in interest and spirituality.

Last Sunday night we enjoyed a "Song, Prayer and Praise" service, at our church. The spirit of the Lord was with us in great power. Everyone was given a chance to testify of God's goodness to him.

Our choir has made wonderful progress. Not long ago we obtained new song books and we have been enjoying singing the new songs.

One of our members, Mr. Arthur Hale, has been doing splendid work for our church. He has collected money and pledges to beautify the church and the church grounds. We are very proud of the work that Mr. Hale is doing.

The fall revival meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in September. We are planning to have Home Coming Day the first Sunday in October. We wish to extend an invitation to all to come and be with us. Especially do we desire the presence of our former pastors Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Trollinger and Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Bell.

The Ladies' Aid mid-week prayer service and Christian Endeavor Society are doing well.

We desire the prayer of all churches for God to give us a wonderful revival and we may all live a more perfect life.

MRS. EUGENE BULLARD, Reporter.

Bethel Church, Randolph Charge, H. L. Isley, Pastor.—We have not had in a report for some time, although our church has been very active. Our revival meeting began the third Sunday in August, with Bro. Charles Coble as our pulpit help. We certainly admire our pastor's choice as I don't think he could have had one to do better. He certainly preached the true gospel. I truly wish that all the pastors in the Methodist ministry could make the Spirit of God be felt as he can. We considered our revival a success. We gave our pastor and wife a pounding the last night of the meeting, which we feel was greatly appreciated.

Our church has done real well on all church claims this year. Everything was paid in full except the pastor's salary, at the last quarterly meeting, which was held the third Sunday in July, which we considered real well.

We had our electric lights turned on in the church in time for the meeting.

The nominatnig committee for the church officers for another year met last Sunday after Sunday school.

One of our Sunday school members is in Piedmont Memorial hospital in Greensboro. She certainly has our prayers and wishes for recovery.

MRS. C. P. ANDERSON, Reporter.

Bellemont Church, Rev. J. R. Anderson, Pastor.—Nothing has been heard from us for three months, but we have been enjoying good sermons during the summer. The attendance has been holding up very well, considering the fact that many people have been away on vacations and there has been much sickness in the community.

Mrs. Mary Buckner, one of our oldest members, died at her home on June 13. She had been in declining health for several years and was unable to attend church. Her pastor and former pastor, Rev. A. O. Lindley, conducted the funeral.

Revival services were held at Bellemont with Rev. H. F. Surratt, of Graham, doing the preaching. He was liked by all and brought us some helpful messages in these services.

Mrs. E. Paul Lowder has been elected delegate to the annual conference.

Our Woman's Auxiliary has been doing some fine work. A nice sum has been raised toward painting the church inside and replacing light fixtures. The August meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Cora M. Hargis, with Mrs. J. G. Holt, Jr., and Mrs. Homer Hargis as joint hostesses. The attendance was the best ever. The next meeting will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock with Mrs. Clyde C. Sharpe.

On the fourth Sunday morning Misses Johnie Lou and Fay Anderson and Mrs. Homer S. Hargis united with Bellemont church. Mrs. Hargis came to us from Bethany Presbyterian church of Graham. Several of our Sunday school and church workers have church membership elsewhere. Hope they will decide soon to unite with our church.

On Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, last rites were held for Mr. Claude Moser. He had been in a Greensboro hospital for over two months, and after much suffering disease won the victory and death took him to his reward. He was a member of St. Paul's Lutheran church near Alamance, N. C. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ella Iseley Moser, and the following children: Mrs. Wayne Curtis, Misses Sadie and Madeline Moser, Hartsell, Troy, Duncan, and Rev. Lee Moser. May the Lord comfort the bereaved who mourn his passing.

Mrs. Paul King, the former Miss Lois Coey of High Point has been visiting her sister Mrs. Anderson at the parsonage for several days.

Mrs. Howard Barbee entertained her Sunday school class at her home on last Saturday evening. A most enjoyable evening was spent together.

Mrs. Gurney Holt who has been sick for some time doesn't show much improvement.

Mrs. Howard Pickett has been spending several days with her father, Mr. Whitaker, in Julian, N. C., who has been ill.

FROM JAPAN

Christians in Korea

Mr. H. Mitsui, of Keijo (Seoul) has an article in a recent number of the Christian Literature Society's bulletin on "Christians In Korea."

He reports a recent religious census of the peninsula, which shows that although a small proportion of the total population the Christians are the largest religious group. The figures are:

Shintoists	91,723
Japanese Buddhists	303,908
Korean Buddhists	193,177
Korean Christians	599,331

Thus there are more than twice as many Christians as in Japan proper. The figures for Japanese Christians in Korea are:

Congregational (Kumiai)	1,104
Presbyterian (Nihon Kirisuto)	1,473
Methodist	1,950

In all, he says, about enough to make one good Korean Church. The attendance at church services amazes him. He says one church in Heijo (Peng Yang) has three services on Sunday, with attendance of over two thousand at each. There are many churches with congregations over one thousand. When Moderator Tomita of the Nihon Kirisuto Kyokai came last year it was expected that he would speak on the shrine problem and there were crowds of over five and six thousand.

He then compares the three religions in reference to educational, medical, and general social work. In education the Shinto sect of Tenrikyo has four institutions but they can hardly be called regular schools. There is one Buddhist higher (semmon) school, one girls' high school, fifty kindergartens, and other types, making a total of 92. There are 5 Christian higher schools, 21 middle schools, 157 elementary schools, 191 elementary schools, 191 kindergartens, with others making a total of 600.

Tenrikyo believing in faith healing only, naturally has no medical work. There are 4 Buddhist hospitals or dispensaries with a budget of Y12,000, which give about 10,000 treatments a year. There are 29 Christian medical establishments, with a total budget of Y1,183,000.

Tenrikyo has one industrial establishment, and the Buddhists spend Y56,000 for social work in 12 institutions. There are 20 Christian orphanages and free medical clinics. Up to recently there has been little contact between the Japanese and Korea Christian movements; but recently there has been much interest in cooperation, and this must increase.

Rome and Japan

Mr. William Woodard supplies the following summary of an article in the "Christian World," by Dr. K. Yamaguchi, of Kyoto, on "Reflection on the Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire."

"Some people think the Japanese resemble the Romans, particularly in respect for military valor and strong love of country.

"The Romans were not strong in religious culture. They had no faith in a creator or any sort of a savior. It seems that they considered religion and the like as a way for the weak to serve.

"What effect did this non-religious characteristic produce? As Rome was able to increase her power she became arrogant and used to seeing cruel amusements. I think this can truly be attributed to the lack of a religious heart. For political reasons they protected the gods of foreigners. Nearly all the religions of the world were gathered in Rome but the Romans paid no attention to them. When they saw among these religious one with some power that could not be disdained, they suppressed it. When Christianity began to flourish they forced emperor worship and imputed all sorts of crimes to Christianity. By forcing emperor worship they showed that they had no deep religious understanding or knowledge.

"Without doubt there was in them truly noble love of country and respect for their ancestors, but this was not able to save them from corruption. The persecution of Christianity caused much trouble and brought about the rapid decline of the country. Evidently persecution was not intended, for Christianity had been given a degree of protection. Why, then, was it persecuted more than in the history of any other country? From the very beginning the Christians were careful to avoid collision. They may have failed at times but the responsibility was certainly with the Roman officials and people. They did not understand the true meaning of religion. They thought they could get along without it. They suppressed and persecuted the pulpit. Thus the hearts of the people were divided and when unity was required it was impossible. Thus Rome, "The Eternal City," was handed over to the barbarians, and the powerless Christians took it over and built a new country.

"The relation between religion and the state is very delicate. If political and religious people do not understand this and manage things willfully they will leave misfortune for a thousand years. We feel that there are many points to be learned from the rise and fall of Rome."

LEADERSHIP

In the conflict around Santiago, our army met with unexpectedly strong resistance. The army had fought all day long and at at was very tired. General Wheeler knew the danger of a night attack without protecting trenches. He ordered the men to dig them. His adjutant found the men lying on the ground from exhaustion and reported that the men were not in condition to dig them. He said:

"General, I am afraid our men can't dig the trenches."

"What men?" asked the General.

"The cavalry division," said the Adjutant.

General Wheeler sat up in bed and began pulling on his boots.

"Send me the man," he directed.

"What man?" asked the Adjutant.

"The man who can't dig trenches."

"But it is not one man; it is many men. They are just played out."

"But you can surely find one man who says he can't dig the trench. I only want one. Go get him and bring him to me."

"But there are—"

"I don't care how many there are, go get me one."

Hood had nothing to do but ride back to the line. In some way he managed to round up a colored trooper belonging to the Ninth Cavalry, and brought him back to the division headquarters.

"Are you the man who says he can't dig these trenches?" asked the General.

"I'se one of 'em, boss, but there's a—"

The General stopped him and walked out of his tent.

"You can go to sleep now, my man, and I'll go up and dig your trench for you. The trenches have to be dug, and if you are unable to dig yours I'll just go out and do it for you. Where's your pick?"

Wheeler slid into his coat and turned toward the big cavalryman. The latter's eyes began to bulge out when the General motioned to him to lead the way to his camp. For half a minute his voice stuck in his throat, and then he said:

"Boss, you ain't fit to dig no trenches. If they done got to be dug, I'll just naturally do it myself. I'm dog tired, but that ain't work for you."

Wheeler stopped and looked at the man with a flicker of amusement in his eyes.

"I know it isn't work for me to do," he said, "but I am going to need soldiers in the morning, and I'm going to save your life, if possible. Do you think now that you can dig the trench?"

The negro started up the hill without a word. Then the General turned to Adjutant Hood with a voice as pleasant as sunshine in May.

"He seems to have changed his mind," he said. "Now you go find me another man who can't dig the trenches."

The Adjutant bowed and rode off. He never came back. In the morning the trenches were dug.—Selected.

THE LAST WORDS OF GREAT MEN

By Rev. Thomas P. Hughes, LL.D.
New York City

Saint Lawrence, the deacon and Christian martyr, was burnt alive in the Valerian persecution, August 10, 258. He was roasted on a gridiron, and it is related that he mocked his persecutors to the last, saying:

"This side is toasted, so turn me, tyrant, eat
And see whether raw or roasted I make the better meat."

Prince Albert, the Prince Consort of England and the beloved husband of the late Queen Victoria, died at Windsor Castle, December 14, 1861. Shortly before his death he exclaimed, "Oh, I have such sweet thoughts!"

Count Vittorio Alfieri, the Italian dramatist, died at Florence, October 8, 1803, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. Turning to one who sat by his death-bed he said, "Clasp my hand, dear friend, for I am dying," and then he closed his eyes in death.

William Hazlitt, the great English critic and essayist, after a long period of wasting sickness, died September, 1730. His old and everdear friend, Charles Lamb, was with him at the close of his strange career of poverty, battle, aspersion, and neglect. Hazlitt's last words were, "Well, I've had a happy life," although to many it had appeared to be a life of singular misfortune.

Algernon Sidney, who was a republican in his opinions, and who undoubtedly schemed for the overthrow of the monarchy and the reestablishment of a republic in the reign of Charles II, was tried for high treason before Judge Jefferies and condemned to die. He was beheaded on Tower Hill, December 7, 1683, and met his death with heroic firmness, amid general sympathy and indignation. Among his last words were, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." As he passed away, he exclaimed, "I die for that Old Cause!"

Edward Gibbon, the historian, died in St. James's street, London, January 16, 1794, in his fifty-eighth year. It is said that the last words which he pronounced articulately were said to his valet de chambre: "Pourquoi est c que vous me quittes?"

Gustavus Adolphus, the King of Sweden, and the national hero of the Swedish nation, was slain in the battle at Lutzen, November 6, 1632. He was struck in the back by a musket-ball and fell from his saddle. The cuirassiers of the enemy rode up to him and demanded his name. "I am the King of Sweden," he replied, "and I do seal the religion and liberty of the German nation with my blood." The horsemen drove their lances through the body of the dying King.

SOUTHERN DESK CO., HICKORY, N. C.

Captain James Lawrence, of the United States Navy, when in command of the Chesapeake in an attack on the British frigate Shannon in Boston Harbor, June 1, 1813, was mortally wounded. As he was carried below deck, he cried to his men almost with his last breath, "Don't give up the ship!" He died in Halifax, July 5, and his remains lie buried in Trinity Churchyard, New York.

Richard Savage, the English poet, died in the Debtors' prison, Bristol, England, July 31, 1743. The evening before his death, when the keeper of the prison visited him, he said with an uncommon earnestness, "I have something to say to you, sir." But after a pause, he moved his hand in a melancholy manner, and, finding himself unable to recollect what he was going to communicate, he said, "'Tis gone." The keeper soon after left him and the next morning he died.

Charles Haddon Spurgeon's last days were days of unconsciousness. The last quotation from Holy Scripture uttered by Mr. Spurgeon not long before his death at Mentone, January 31, 1892, were the strikingly appropriate words of the Apostle Paul, recorded in 2 Tim. iv. 7. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

Dr. William Carey, the eminent Baptist missionary, died at Serampore, India, June 9, 1834. His last interview with Dr. Duff, the Scotch missionary, was very affecting. Dr. Duff sat by Carey's bedside relating the wonderful changes which have taken place in India, largely by Carey's labors. As he drew to a close, Dr. Carey said, in a feeble voice, "Pray." Dr. Duff knelt at his bedside and prayed, and then bade him farewell. As he passed the threshold of the door, he thought he heard a faint voice calling him back. "Mr. Duff," said the dying missionary, "you have been saying a great deal about Dr. Carey; when I am gone, don't speak about Dr. Carey, speak of Dr. Carey's Savior." This self-abasement was in keeping with the verse of Dr. Watts he had chosen to be engraven on his tombstone:

"A guilty, weak, and helpless worm,
On Thy kind arms I fall;
Be Thou my Strength and Righteousness,
My Savior and my all."

Dr. John Carroll, the first American bishop of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, and the first archbishop of Baltimore, died on Sunday, December 3, 1815, surrounded by his relatives and friends upon whom he bestowed his benediction before he calmly expired. He had requested that he might be placed on the floor to die, as he said that he regarded this humble position best suited to his demerits before God into whose presence he was about to enter. To an eminent Protestant clergyman who visited his death-bed the archbishop said: "Sir, my hopes have always been on the cross of Christ."

Michael Servetus, who was condemned because he could not affirm that Christ was the Eternal Son of God, was burned to death, October 27, 1553. Shortly before he expired he exclaimed, "Christ, Son of the Eternal God, have mercy on me!"

Edward VI, King of England, died July 6, 1552, at an early age. When he felt the approach of death the young king prepared himself for it in a devout manner. A few moments before he died he prayed that the Lord would take him out of this miserable world. He interceded fervently for his subjects, and prayed that God would preserve England from popery. The last words he uttered were: "I am faint; Lord have mercy upon me, and take my spirit." And thus he breathed out his innocent soul as he lay in the arms of Sir Henry Sidney.

Robert Milman, Bishop of Calcutta, closed a life of intense missionary zeal on St. Paul's Day, January 25, at Rawal Pindi, India. His chaplain, the Rev. Edgar Jacob, afterward Bishop of Newcastle, was at his bedside, when the bishop requested him to read Psalm cxxx, and soon after he repeated in feeble tones the fourth verse, "But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared," and then he breathed his last.

Daniel O'Connell, the Irish liberator, died at Genoa, May 15, 1847. His fear of being buried alive was singular and painful. More than once he earnestly entreated those around him to beware lest such a fearful catastrophe should overtake him. His serenity and patience in agonizing pain were remarked by all who had the sad privilege of attending him. The holy name of Jesus, the "memorare" and verses from the Psalms, were constantly upon his lips. "St. Liguori's Preparation for Death" was found after his deceise, with marks of long and constant use. His end was peace.

Andreas Hofer, the patriotic leader of the Tyrolese, was betrayed into the hands of the French and conveyed to Mantua, where he was condemned to be shot. The sentence was carried into execution on February 20, 1810. Twelve men and a corporal were detailed to execute the sentence. Being requested to have his eyes bandaged and to kneel, he declined both, saying, "I have been used to stand upright before my Maker, and in that posture I will deliver up my spirit to my God."

Giuseppi Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, died at Caprera on the evening of June 2, 1882. A short time before his death, as he lay silently gazing at the sea from the open window, two little birds were gaily singing on the sill. As he watched them he murmured, "Maybe they are the souls of my dear little ones coming to call me. Feed them when I gone." Again his eyes rested on the sky, the sea, and the faces of his dear ones, and, as the sun went down, the eagle eyes were sightless, the voice which had been as that of a trumpet was hushed, and the loving, lion heart ceased to beat.—Homiletic Review of 1903.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

In Memory of W. C. Montgomery

Some time on the night of August 4 death came among the flock of the Lebanon church and took from us one of our oldest members and certainly one of our most cherished and beloved Christians. While taking an evening walk Mr. W. C. Montgomery sat down along the way to rest and the Lord took him gently to be with Him forever. Brother Montgomery had been in declining health for some time and his death was finally brought on by a heart-failure. Those who knew him intimately knew him as a quiet soul who was faithful to his home and to his church and to his God, and can but relate his going to that beautiful description of Enoch so long ago, "and Enoch walked with God and he was not for the Lord took him." From his usual place in "Amen Corner" which he occupied so regularly and so long we have felt an empty place in the pew but not in the place of memory in the hearts of those who knew and loved him.

The funeral was conducted on Sunday afternoon at the Lebanon Methodist church in High Point, N. C. The attendance was very large and the floral tribute was beautiful. The writer conducted the funeral, assisted by Rev. J. C. Madison, pastor of the First Methodist church. At the request of the family the Davis Brothers Quartet, who are friends of the family, rendered all the music of the service. The body was taken to the Lebanon Cemetery for burial. May his memory ever remain with us who remain and comfort his family with the thought of a life richly lived.

O. L. EASTER, Pastor.

CALOMEL NIGHT
NOW A PLEASURE

The old time calomel was the doctor's favorite remedy for biliousness or so-called "Torpid Liver," so prevalent in hot weather, but it had some serious drawbacks from the standpoint of the patient. The nauseating and sickening after-effects and the necessity to follow it with a dose of Epsom salts made many of us hate to take it. Now you can really enjoy your calomel, for Calotabs make calomel-taking a pleasure. They give you the combined effects of calomel and salts, helping Nature to expel the sour, stagnant bile and washing it out of the system.

One or two Calotabs at bedtime with a glass of water or sweet milk,—that's all. Next morning your system feels clean and refreshed, your head is clear, your spirit bright, and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you wish and go about your work or pleasure.

Genuine Calotabs are sold only in checkerboard (black and white) packages bearing the trade mark "Calotabs." Refuse imitations. Family package only twenty-five cents; trial package ten cents, at your dealer's. (Adv.)

OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

We are thankful for so good a report this week, and we thank every one who has helped to make it possible.

Looking at the calendar this morning, we are reminded that there are just five more Sundays between now and the meeting of the annual conference. We are trusting that every Sunday school in the conference will send us a good offering before conference. There are several of our Sunday schools that we have not heard from in so long that a note from them enclosing an offering would be a delight.

Fall of the year is here, coal must be bought, winter supplies must be laid in, school supplies must be had, and clothing for our children must be bought, except for those who are being clothed by some organization. Please bear us up in your prayers and by your gifts.

Yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON, Supt.

MRS. J. CICERO STOCKARD'S CONDITION

We are informed that Mrs. Stockard, who has been ill for a long time, remains practically the same. Her condition is not quite as serious as during the first six months of her confinement.

Mrs. Stockard has been a faithful member of our Mt. Herman church in Alamance county for years; also she is a regular contributor to our Children's Home.

For the past three months Mrs. Stockard has been in Burlington with a married daughter, but was carried by ambulance last week to her home on Route 1, Graham. Since she is unable to attend church, we urge our members to visit this good sister occasionally.

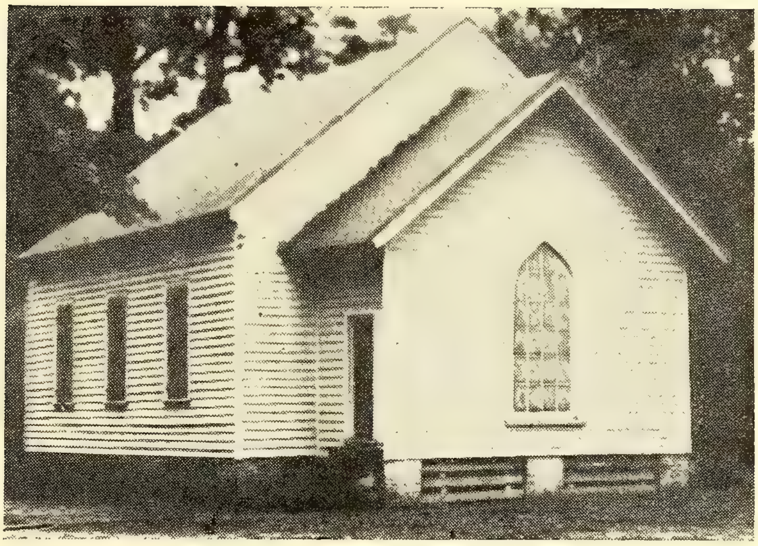
Whitaker's Chapel



The North Carolina Annual Conference, the oldest conference in the Methodist Protestant Church, was organized in this church on Friday, December 19, 1828. Whitaker's Chapel has rendered service to the residents of Halifax County for almost two centuries, having been erected about 1840. The present structure is the third building to stand on the same site. The edifice is well kept, neat, and very attractive both as to its sylvan setting and interior finish. It constitutes one of the outstanding shrines of democratic Methodism of America. Those desiring to visit the historic place may do so by travelling seven miles of improved highway leading southeast from the town of Enfield, North Carolina.

Further information about the subject of this picture will be found in "The History of the North Carolina Annual Conference," which is being prepared by Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, conference historian. The History will be off the press and first offered for sale at the Conference sessions in Greensboro. (Photograph by the author).

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Charges Nearly Out

According to information received by me two charges are nearly out on both World Service and Annual Conference Budgets. These are Pleasant Grove charge and the Randolph charge. Rev. F. R. Love, the pastor of Pleasant Grove in his quarterly report gave this optimistic report and the other information was given by the pastor of the Randolph charge, Rev. H. L. Isley. Pleasant Grove has paid HERALD Subsidy and has raised about half of its HERALD quota while Randolph has not raised subsidy and has a long way to go on subscriptions. I trust both of these charges may pay out in full. As charges pay out the pastor will please notify me so that the information may be used to inspire others.

Herald Committee Meets

On Friday afternoon of last week the special committee appointed to represent the interests of the HERALD had a meeting at Grace church in Greensboro. The committee will have something to say this week but I am urging all of our people to take heed to what they say. If all of our charges will raise subsidy in full then there will be very little deficit from now until conference. Then too, those who renew now will be on the mailing list when the papers are merged at conference and there will be no break in getting the church paper. Our people will be expected to take the conference organ after the new conference is formed and now is a good time to begin.

A Sunday Morning at Asheboro

Last Sunday morning was spent with the Asheboro church, Dr. S. W. Taylor, pastor. This church easily ranks as one of the outstanding churches in our conference. From the time of its organization in 1891 until now it has had some of the leading laymen in the conference in its membership. The building in which this congregation now worships is the second one since the beginning of this enterprise, the wooden building which was originally erected having been torn away several years ago and the present brick structure erected. While the present building was ample when it was first erected it is hardly adequate now, especially for the Sunday school and for some time now there has been talk of enlargement either by adding to the present plant or building new. This church is one that will not be adversely affected by church union in that both Methodist churches will be needed after the conferences are merged. This is Dr. Taylor's fourth year and he is still doing good work as he always does. He has been for a long period of years one of the outstanding ministers in our denomination and he shows no signs of weakening yet. The finances of the church are in good condition and it is expected that everything will be paid in full. It is always a pleasure to be in this church for one always feels that there is much going on about this place. It is a good place to go to get rid of pessimism.

A Sunday Afternoon at Giles Chapel

Leaving Asheboro for the time being we rushed away to Giles Chapel on the Richland charge for an afternoon appointment. This church is something like four miles rather northeast of Asheboro. It is one of our old churches it having been organized on the third Sunday in May, 1833. This being the church of my childhood days of course it has a tender spot in my heart. While it is true that a great many of those who were there in my early days are no longer there yet there are others who have grown up who are carrying on the work. Last Sunday was the beginning of the revival meeting and was also the annual Home Coming Day. So many people have gone out from this church that there are always a good many to come back on this important day. For a number of years I have had a standing invitation to preach there on Sunday afternoon of the revival. Rev. C. L. Grant, the pastor is serving his first year with this people but already he has a considerable grip upon the people. He seems to have made a lot of friends and all speak in the highest terms of him. Last Sunday he was reminding the people of the conference budget and urging them to finish the job. Already the church has made a good showing and it is hoped that all claims can be paid in full. While much more could be said about the work here I think it sufficient to say it is always a pleasure to be there.

Conference Committees

Just as soon now as I get the list of delegates to conference from Dr. Bates, the secretary, I want to make up the list of committees. I am sure he will send me the list just as soon as the pastors finish sending the list to him. Inasmuch as the election is to be certified to immediately after the third quarterly conference it does seem that all the names ought to be in now. If not, two quarterly conferences will have to be held very close together.

A Message in Verse

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new;
That which they have done but earnest of the things which they shall do.
For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails;
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;
Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations airy navies grappling in the central blue;
Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunder-storm;
Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd
In the Parliament of men, the Federation of the world."

—Tennyson.

When it is remembered that Lord Tennyson wrote these lines fifty or more years ago one marvels at such a prophetic utterance on the accomplishments of man. "Heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails" has come to pass; "the heavens filled with shouting," the radio has brought to pass to any listening ear; today the nations "airy navies grapple the central blue," and there rains the "ghastly dew." Now let us hope and pray that in the very near future the war-drum shall throb no longer and that the battle flags shall be furled.

The New Financial Set-Up

We think very many of our local churches will gladly adopt the Financial System for the local church in the Methodist Discipline, found on pages 245-249. Although this Discipline was made up of the disciplines of the three uniting Churches, there are several congregations in our annual conference will be delighted to try out the values of this financial set-up. We suggest that you give the entire section a careful consideration and that in case the Church does not already have a better financial system this be adopted in its entirety; that there may be a good financial system in the local church. For while no Christian Church exists for the sole purpose as a money raising institution, none of them can exist very long or potentially which do not raise money for worthy projects. And for the good of all its members no church should be financed by only a few of its members—the larger the number of contributors, the greater will be the benefits coming to the membership when it raises its budgets in full. In other words, the by-products of giving to worthy causes are never to be despised, "for the gift without the giver is bare" and the church which never gives is poor.

Stingeness not only starves those institutions which are in need of financial support, but it starves the souls of those who need to help support the worthy institutions. Not only has the rich young ruler turned sorrowful away from Jesus because he was unwilling to share his great riches with others, there have been thousands of others who have gone through life sorrowful with their riches because they did not have the blessings of Christ upon their riches. The Methodist Church has given us a wisely planned and a splendidly wrought out system by which the local church may be financed, and no church should refuse to use it, unless it already has a better.

West End Twenty-Two Years Old

Last Sunday West End Methodist Church observed in a formal manner its twenty-second anniversary. It was January 1917 when L. M. Foust, C. F. Johnson, and F. S. Stockard accepted certificates of withdrawal from Grace Methodist Protestant Church and were constituted a committee to hold the real estate, to raise funds for, and to proceed to the erection of West End Methodist Protestant Church, Greensboro. Several months after this group was so constituted by R. M. Andrews, then pastor of Grace Church, the Church was fully organized with thirty-two charter members.

During the twenty-two years of the existence of this Church, a building with ample Sunday school rooms has been erected, at a cost of about $20,000, and 541 members have been received into its membership. There was raised on the building fund for this year, $1,476.00, of the goal of $1,500.00 set for this year; there is no doubt about our going over the top in this campaign. West End has one of the best Women's Auxiliaries in the entire conference; whatever this organization undertakes to do is usually done, and done without noise or pleading with people to cooperate; it is a smooth working organization. The pastor is very proud of it.

The choir prepared special music for both morning and night services, beautiful flowers decorated the chancel, the departed members were remembered, a historical sketch of the beginning of the church, was read by L. M. Foust, and the pastor spoke on the challenge the situation presents to the membership. The congregation was large.

At night there was special music by the choir, and Rev. L. B. Hayes, District Superintendent of the Greensboro District, brought a splendid message. It was a good day for West End.

If our memory serves us correctly, the church has had the following pastors during its twenty-two years: R. A. Hunter, N. M. Harrison, E. L. Ballard, J. D. Williams, G. L. Curry, P. E. Lindley, T. J. Whitehead, N. G. Bethea, and R. M. Andrews.

In the new Methodist Church West End has the field to itself; insofar as the Methodists are concerned; it should grow more rapidly within the next decade than it has during its former years.

ONLY FORTY-ONE

That has nothing to do with my age. It is merely a way of saying that that's all the Delegates' Credentials that have come in so far. And that puts me in a jamb. (I might have said jam, which would have meant that I am in a sort of mess, which I am.)

I don't suppose any of the brethren who have failed to send in the names of their delegates would for a moment think of hurting us in our work or making it difficult for us to get ready for Conference. But that is the result. We desperately need these names. We need them NOW.

The Pastors Report Blanks will be mailed out this week, and ought to be in your hands before you read this. If you do not get them promptly, let me know, and I will send another supply.

Some of the brethren have yet to pay for their 1938 Conference Journals. I am very anxious to close the account before Conference. If you do not know what you owe, write me. Send in your money.

2:00 P. M.	Final Business Session. Report of the Stationing Committee.
7:30 P. M.	First Session of the United Conference at West Market Street Methodist Church.

Please notice a number of changes in this program which are not in harmony with our custom, but which are due to the shortness of the time at our disposal: 1. The Communion service will not be held. It will be observed on Sunday morning as a part of the program of the Uniting Conference. 2. The President's Message will follow the Conference Sermon instead of coming on Wednesday afternoon. 3. The Pastors will submit their reports on Wednesday afternoon instead of Thursday morning. This is due to the fact that much of the matter in the reports must be tabulated in time for the first session of the United Conference. It is quite possible that a number of changes will have to be made in this program after Conference begins. It is only tentative.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

ISAIAH: FORETELLING THE BIRTH OF THE MESSIANIC KING

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, September 24

Lesson Text: Isaiah 7:14; 9:1-7; 11:1-5.

Golden Text: His name shall be called Wonderful, Councellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace.—Isaiah 9:6.

As a review of our study of the lives of Israel's leaders both king and prophet it is significant that we should have as our last lesson the consideration of the Messianic prophecy of Isaiah. The pages of the Old Testament afford many dark chapters of defeat and failure in the ranks of God's chosen people. There is an incompleteness to the plan of God in His communion and fellowship with men that strikes one with bewilderment when studied alone and out of harmony with the New Testament revelation. The voice of the prophet in Isaiah's day is the voice of rebuke and doom to Israel in her sins and it is only when we grasp the trend of Messianic expectancy running through his messages that we catch the element of victory that is essential to our ultimate faith in the supremacy of God over the forces of evil. With man's continuous history of back-sliding and rebellion as found related predominately in the Old Testament how can we associate the fact of God's faith and glory in the hearts of men? Only in the ultimate life and destiny of mankind can this be expected and in the Messianic prophecy that is embodied within the messages of the Old Testament prophets is this to be understood.

In what sense can God be well pleased with all mankind? The angels gave voice to this favor of God for man when they sang to them on the day of Christ's birth when they said, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased." (Luke 2:14). Yet they were then in their sin, and was He pleased with their sin? No! He was and is well pleased with all mankind insofar as they are capable of salvation in Christ, are capable of being made Christ-like. When the sculptor sees the rough stone, unhewn and uncut he is "well pleased" with it, not because it is shapeless and rough and ugly, and for immediate purposes useless, but because it is capable of being chiselled into forms of enduring beauty and service.

"Down in the human heart,
Crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried that grace can restore
Touched by a loving heart,
Wakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more."
—Fanny J. Crosby.

Thus God is seen to be patiently moving through the dark pages of Old Testament history ever laying the foundation here and there as a life opened the way for the coming of Jesus who would save His people from their sins by stirring those buried feelings of men's hearts through the medium of love so that broken chords would vibrate in harmony with God.

The darkness that Isaiah saw in Israel was brightened by his prophetic faith in that coming day when these people that walk in darkness shall see a great light. He speaks of that day when the Lord shall fully reveal Himself to men in the form of a babe given by God upon whose shoulders would the government be laid and whose name would rightly be Wonderful, Councellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace.

Isaiah has a rich background for his prophecy concerning the coming of the Messiah. As early as Adam God intimated His plan to redeem lost humanity by supplying finally the Lamb of God who was to be slain for the sins of His people. To Abraham God promised the great privilege of being the father of the nation that would give birth to this "Holy One of Israel." To Jacob was shown the tribe from which He would come. The Prophet Daniel gave prophecy as to the time of His coming and through the prophet Micah was given even the place of His coming: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Micah 5:2. To Isaiah we turn for a word picture of what His coming will do for the world. Thus we see that the Old Testament with all its pathetic strivings is redeemed to us by its thread of Messianic prophecies that link it with the victorious chapters of the New Testament which in reality is a sequel to it.

It is interesting to look also at that period of four hundred years which intervenes between the last book of the Old Testament and the beginning of the New Testament for further gleanings of this expectation in the minds of men who were not in Israel. Socrates, in Greece, entertained an expectation of the near advent of same supernatural being to be a teacher of men. He said: "We must wait till some one comes from God to instruct us how to behave toward the divinity and toward man." A few years later Plato, his follower, said: "O, how greatly do I desire to see that man, and who he is." He gives, perhaps, one of the clearest of the unconscious pagan deliniations of Christ in his famous description of the just man in his "Republic." Here it is: "Without doing any wrong he will assume the appearance of being unjust; yea, he shall be scourged, tortured, fettered . . . and often having endured all possible suffering, will be fastened to a post, and will restore again the beginning and prototype of righteousness." This shows us that God was moving everywhere to prepare the "way of the Lord" and we see of course that in Israel He found His most fruitful response to these searchings of His for lives who were open to receive Him. Macloren has put it thus: "Ancient religions are confessions of need, and Christianity is the supply of need. Their sacrifices proclaim man's need of reconciliation. Their stories of the gods coming down in the likeness of men speak of his longing for a manifestation of God in the flesh. The craddle and the Cross are heaven's answer to this sad question."

OAK GROVE METHODIST CHURCH

Oak Grove Church had its beginning when Rev. T. T. Ferree held a revival meeting in a brush arbor some distance from where the church now stands. The church was organized about 1872 and called Love Joy Methodist Protestant Church. The name was suggested by Rev. T. T. Ferree, the first pastor, because of the wonderful spirit of love and brotherhood which grew out of that first revival. A small log church was built. In 1882 the name was changed to Oak Grove.

In 1886 the log building was replaced by a frame structure. This house soon proved to be too small to accommodate the people. In 1896 another frame building was erected and stood until the present brick church was started in 1934. This building was not completed, however, until the indebtedness was finally liquidated in 1939 and then the Sunday school department was finished and new pews secured for the auditorium.

The following pastors have served this church: Rev. T. T. Ferree, Rev. A. W. Lineberry, Rev. D. A. Highfill, Rev. J. E. Hartsell, Rev. J. H. Moton, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, Rev. H. S. B. Thompson, Rev. W. D. Reed, Rev. W. C. Lassiter, Rev. W. F. Kennett, Rev. J. H. Stowe, Rev. J. D. Morris, Rev. C. E. Ridge, Rev. R. S. Troxler and Rev. T. G. Madison.

CALL TO ONE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH AND FINAL SESSION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH

The 112th and final session of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church will be held in Grace Church, Greensboro, N. C. Beginning Wednesday, October 18, 1939, at 10:00 a. m. The session will conclude on Friday afternoon, October 20, and will be followed by the first session of the United Conference, of the Western North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Church, which will begin on Friday, October 20, 1939 at 7:30 p. m. in the West Market Street Methodist Church.

All charges in the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church as now constituted will send delegates to this final session. But only those charges within the territory now occupied by the Western North Caroline Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will send delegates to the session of the Western North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church. All others will elect their delegates to the Uniting Conference within whose territory their charges are situated. For example: the Delegate from Orange Charge will sit in the final session of our Conference, but he will be a delegate to the Uniting Conference of the Methodist Church at Rocky Mount, not to the one at Greensboro. We hope this is plain to every one concerned and will cause no confusion.

As we come to this final session, may we come in the spirit of prayer and consecration. There are many problems yet to be solved as we enter upon this larger union. We need the wisdom that is from above to guide us all.

CHRISTIAN SYMPATHY FOR JEWISH PEOPLE

Combating Anti-Semitism in America

By EARL S. SCOTT

There is a rising tide of anti-Semitism in America. It may not as yet be very extensive, but it is extensive enough to give serious concern. There is no widespread violent expression. Sound thinking will help to prevent such expression.

I am writing from a pastorate in Sullivan County in New York. This is a rural county until the summer months when the population swells to about three hundred and fifty thousand. The year-round population varies from fifty per cent Jewish in some villages to considerably less in others. From this background of residence here it appears to me that this is a time when the Christian may very well check on his own feelings with reference to our Jewish neighbors.

In the first place, there are some general principles that ought always to be in the background of our thinking on this subject. They are so simple and self-evident as to make their mention seem, at first, unnecessary. Even the most fundamental principles, however, are easily ignored when there is a wave of popular opinion.

The first such principle is that, as Christians, we are particularly indebted to the Jewish race. It gave our Saviour not only His birth but also, so far as His humanity was concerned, His spiritual inheritance. From that race came the founders of the primitive church. The apostles were Jews, as also were most of the writers of the New Testament. We have in common with our Jewish neighbors our regard for the Old Testament, a sacred literature produced by their race.

The second fundamental principle is that we must never judge an entire race by what one member or a group of individuals in that race may do. Our inclination is to do just that. A proof of that tendency may be found in the fact that in one nation they are accused of being predominantly Communist at the same time that they are suspected of getting control of the nation's money for capitalistic manipulation.

When a Jew does something wrong, we say, "He's a Jew." When a Gentile does the same kind of thing, we simply announce that he did it, without thinking about declaring his race. We may say that Jews are clannish, forgetting those who are not clannish and ignoring the fact that we have contributed to that clannishness.

It is always well for us to remember that our own nationality or race has its disagreeable characteristics. The purpose of this article is not to attempt to prove that the Jewish people are without faults. Quite naturally, there are certain characteristics that seem to me to be predominant among Hebrew people in general which I do not admire. But I must remember that to generalize may be both illogical and unfair. And we must all remember that if Jews were equally frank they might be compelled to admit that they see us in certain general qualities which to them are just as objectionable.

We frequently hear some one say, "Well, if they want to come over here, they ought to do things as we do them." To such a person, several questions ought to be addressed, namely: When did they come over here? Whose country is this? What do we mean by our way? At the time when the Continental Congress was facing bankruptcy in the days of the Revolution, Abraham Solomon loaned the Government $558,000. I mentioned this in an open forum, and a Gentile replied, "Well, why wouldn't he? I'll bet he got good interest!" But we must remember that many Gentiles would not trust the new government, and that Robert Morris had to beg people to loan money. It was a risk. Jews were here before this nation was a nation. They belong here as much as we do. If we were to go back much farther than that, we might be embarrassed; for we might discover that, for conscience' sake, we should have to hand our church property back to the Indians.

Keeping these general principles in mind, there is one thing we ought especially to do. We ought to make a special effort to be unusually considerate, sympathetic, and magnanimous in our attitude toward the Jewish people just now. That is always the duty and privilege of the majority.

The pastor of a Methodist church in this county held a special service on Race Relations Sunday. The rabbi of the near-by synagogue was in attendance with several of his people. There was a warm feeling of real friendliness. Shortly thereafter, that pastor announced the showing in his church of a moving picture on the life of Christ. The rabbi called upon the pastor to make a respectful request that the pastor cancel the showing of the picture on the grounds that it would arouse anti-Semitic feeling and thereby undo the good that had been done by the former service. The rabbi had seen the film, and felt quite distinctly that certain references to Jewish guilt for the crucifixion of Christ would have that very undesirable effect.

The pastor assured his friend that there was no such intention in the showing of the picture. He invited the rabbi and his people to witness it and pledged himself to say to the congregation that would be assembled that there was no anti-Semitism intended; that we Christians would not hold people responsible for what their ancestors did nineteen hundred years ago; that while we recognized that Jesus' enemies were Jews we remembered that His friends also were Jews, and that the first church was Jewish. At the close of the conversation the rabbi said, "I guess we are unusually sensitive just now."

Why wouldn't they be? We should be as much so if our group were being persecuted and exiled as their European friends and relatives are at the present time. We have a great opportunity now to show that generosity of spirit which was so characteristic of our Master, as we work and live with all our fellow Americans.—Zion's Herald.

PASTORS AND THE HERALD

The success of the HERALD during these closing days of the Conference depends upon what you pastors do. You are asked to raise the subsidy on your charge in full and to continue your efforts for short term subscriptions. President Pritchard will ask in his fourth quarter questionnaire, "HAVE YOU RAISED YOUR HERALD SUBSIDY IN FULL?"

Many charges have done well on the subsidy, but many others have done little or nothing. Upon these latter we are depending for a neat sum during these closing days. The subsidy is levied against the local church at the rate of $2.50 per hundred church members, or major fraction thereof, and if raised in full by all charges would amount to approximately $750 per annum. Only thirty days remain until Conference, and to date 33 charges have paid something on the subsidy, 24 of this number have paid subsidy in full, thus leaving 61 charges that have paid nothing. The total raised for subsidy by these 33 charges is $291.36, which is about 35% of the total amount assessed all charges.

We desperately need all the subsidy this year. Subscription receipts have dropped considerably due to short term renewals. We are publishing almost as many papers per week as in former years, but practically all these subscriptions will expire soon after Conference. We need the subsidy to reduce our publishing deficit. This year the HERALD has shown a loss to date of $853, caused by the short term renewals and lack of payment on the subsidy. We are at present losing an additional sum of approximately $25 per week. If the paper is published until Conference, that means we shall be in arrears about a thousand dollars unless you pastors come to the aid of the paper with the full payment of your subsidy.

OUR STORY PAGE

THE COLLECTOR

Janice glanced at the penny, as I slipped it into the machine that would tell her weight.

"Do you save Indian head pennies?" she asked.

I told her that I have seen one now and then but I do not save them.

"Well," she said, "next time you see one will you save it? Betty Davis will give you a Lincoln penny for it. I got three for her. Betty is a friend of mine and she has a collection of Indian head pennies."

Of course I promised and it just happened that soon after, in a box of trinkets in the attic, I found one that was rather unusual.

"You see," I explained, when I gave it to Janice, "most pennies are made of bronze but this one is nickel. See: it's the same color as the buffalo nickel. Besides it's quite old."

"O, thank you!" exclaimed Janice. "Betty hasn't one like that I know and she will be ever so pleased. Do you—" She hesitated. "Do you ever get foreign stamps?"

"Not often," I said. "Now and then one on a letter from France or Germany."

"And you don't collect stamps? Well, next time you get a letter from away off, will you save the stamps for Tony Squadrilli. He's a friend of mine and he collects foreign stamps. He gets plenty from Italy, because that's where his grandmother lives, but I don't think he knows anybody that gets letters from France or Germany. Last summer, when Aunt Esther was up in Canada, she wrote us two letters and I gave Tony the stamps from them."

The very next week, as it happened, I had a letter from Mexico. Janice told me it was the first Mexican stamp in Tony's collection.

A day or two later, we were walking together down the street, when all at once Janice called, "Help me catch him!" and started on a run. I had not chased butterflies for a good while, but I could not fail Janice. Finally we caught it and she ran across the street with it. Later she told me all about it.

"It was for Janie Forbes. She's a friend of mine and she has just started a collection of butterflies. I've been helping her catch them—she has a net and everything—and that was one she had not caught yet. I knew as soon as I saw it. Janie asked me to thank you for helping."

We all went to Lake Muscroon the next week for the Sunday school picnic. Janice and I had been for a ride with some of the others and I had just lifted her from the boat, when among the pebbles on the short I noticed something different and stooped to pick it up.

"Oh—!" exclaimed Janice. "You—you want it, don't you?"

I looked at the piece of flint in my hand. It was gray in color and long, long ago skillful fingers had shaped it and sharpened it.

"No," I said, "I don't collect Indian arrow heads."

"Well—Jimmie Barlow—you're sure that you don't want it yourself? He's a friend of mine and he has a collection of arrow heads. Most of them his father plowed up on their farm but I found two for him last summer."

"Jimmie is quite welcome to it," I told her.

Just the other day, Janice was up in my study, when I opened my afternoon mail.

"Oh!" she suddenly exclaimed. "You aren't going to throw that away, are you?"

"Yes," I said. "You can have it, if you want it."

She took it out of my waste-basket—a picture post card showing a man with a fishing rod, standing knee-deep in a mountain stream.

"It's for Margie Lane," explained Janice. "She's a friend of mine and she's collecting picture post cards. She had a scrap book almost full; some from Florida, some from California, two from England. I gave her the two that Aunt Esther sent us from Canada.

All at once she stopped studying the post card.

"Do you know some nice things to collect?" she asked "You see—I don't collect anything."

"Nonsense!" I said, "I don't know anyone who collects more. You collect Indian head pennies for Betty, stamps for Tony, butterflies for Janie, arrow heads for Jimmie, and picture post cards for Margie. That surely ought to be enough for one girl."

"I mean," said Janice, "a collection of my very own."

"Well," I said, "I think you have a collection of your very own. Some people collect things without knowing it."

That was puzzling and she asked what a person could collect without knowing it.

"Freckles," I suggested.

Then she laughed, because of course that was a joke.

"You mean things a person would like?" she asked.

"Certainly and I don't know of any girl in this town who has a finer collection than you have. What's more, I think you have enjoyed it even more than Janie, and Betty, and the others have enjoyed their collection. It's a better one."

"You're not fooling?"

"No, indeed, I am not fooling."

"What is it?"

"Well," I said, "while you have been helping Betty, and Tony, and Janie, and Jimmie, and Margie with their collections, you have been collecting friends."

Janice stared at me hard for a moment.

"They are my friends," she said.

"Of course they are and, whether a person is little or big, he could not possibly collect anything worth more than friends are. Why, they are so much more valuable than Indian head pennies, or stamps, or butterflies, or arrow heads, or picture post cards—they should hardly be mentioned in the same breath."—Frederick Hall, in "The Story Hour."

To the Leader

This is the third of a series of three topics on the general topic, "Studies in the Sermon on the Mount." These verses should be studied very carefully and the topic should be discussed in a way that an expository study may be made of the text. Much preparation is necessary if one desires to lead this meeting successfully. Verses may be given to the members who will give an exposition at the meeting. Commentaries will greatly help in this preparation. Your pastor will gladly advise you.

The Poet

God send us men whose aim will be,
  Not to defend some worn-out creed,
But to live out the laws of Christ
  In every thought, and word, and deed.

God send us men alert and quick
  His holy precepts to translate,
Until the laws of Christ become
  The laws and habits of the State.

God send us men! God send us men!
  Patient, courageous, strong and true,
With vision clear and mind equipped,
  His will to learn, His work to do.

God send us men with hearts ablaze,
  All truth to love, all wrong to hate;
These are the patriots nations need,
  These are the bulwarks of the State.

Topic Hints

The Kingdom. Jesus often talked about the Kingdom of God, its citizenship, its nature, and its manner of life. In the 13th chapter of Matthew we find we spoke seven parables in an effort to make the nature of the kingdom plain enough to be understood by the most simple mind. Jesus came to introduce men to the kingdom and to give men the assurance of God's sustaining wisdom, grace, and power for kingdom living. One stands startled before the Master's outline of the rules for kingdom living found in this Sermon on the Mount. The tension releases, however, when the startled feel the dynamic current of divine power empowering them to do what their compassionate Lord bids them do.

Lesson 1: There is a vast difference between the treasures of this world and the treasures of the kingdom. The former are temporal and soon perish; the latter are eternal and abide forever.

Lesson 2: The quality of a man's spirit is indicated by the kind of things he cherishes. He is known by his fruits. Any man can read the nature of his own soul by consulting the desires of his heart. He may know the degree of spiritual growth by the same process. A man's investments reveal the dugout of his soul.

Lesson 3: No man can serve two masters at the same time. Neither can any man cherish both kinds of investments with equal devotion. What a man regards supremely is his treasure, or his God.

Lesson 4: Anxiety about future support and comfort in this world is needless, hurtful, and wicked; for present obedience to God will insure all needed good. If man is less concerned about the abundance of things in life, the lack of them will not upset him.

Lesson 5: That a man should trust in God, cherish the treasures that abide, and live each day to the full. Certainly godliness with contentment is great gain. One plainly sees that in the kingdom inner powers make men masters of circumstances.

Lesson 6: The secret of victory is seeking first the Kingdom of God. It should be sought first in time, in order, and in importance. Victory over the world is won by putting the things of the spirit before the things of the flesh and the world.

Supplemental Lessons

1. The kingdom began with Christ. Luke 16:16.
2. Christ was sent to preach the kingdom. Luke 4:43.
3. Children are included. Matt. 19:14.
4. The kingdom not known to the unregenerate. John 3:3.
5. It belongs to the meek. Matt. 5:3.
6. It belongs to the persecuted. Matt. 5:10.
7. The kingdom is a growth. Mark 4:26-29.
8. The kingdom grows like leaven. Matt. 13:33.
9. The kingdom grows like a plant. Matt. 13:31.
10. It is beyond price. Matt. 13:44-45.
11. It contains good and bad who will be separated. Matt. 13:47-48; 24-30; 22:2-10; 25:1-13; 14-30.
12. It is a scene of complaint. Matt. 20:1-16.
13. It is not limited to this world. John 18:36.
14. The kingdom is to be sought first. Matt. 6:33.

The Sovereign: God is the Sovereign in the Kingdom of God. He has made the rules which govern men in that kingdom to the end that each individual who has been spiritually restored might live and grow in the likeness of Christ. God's supreme desire is that man, his creation, might become like Him through Jesus Christ and in so doing attain his highest happiness. God welcomes anyone who seeks admission to His kingdom through Jesus Christ; He keeps anyone in good standing through the ministry of the Holy Spirit. The kingdom is man's for the asking.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

CONSECRATED WORK

Italy's gifted artist, Fra Angelico, was of so devout a spirit that he never touched his brush to the clean canvas upon his easel till he had first asked God to make beautiful his work. He refused to paint for hire or at the behest of any save his spiritual superior.

Once at the command of the Pope, Angelico left his cloister and journeyed to Rome where he decorated one of the chapels of the Vatican. His work was completed and he returned to his cloister where soon afterward they found him dead before one of his just finished pictures. But the key to the chapel was lost, and for two full centuries the room remained unopened. At length, however, the door was opened and there, to the joy and wonder of admiring throngs, stood revealed the angelic faces that this saintly artist had traced there generations before.

Parents and teachers are called to the task of painting upon the white canvas of childhood the faces of men and of women. Like the holy Angelico they should be so saturated with the spiritual and the divine that nowhere upon the canvas shall appear the face of a Herod, a Judas or a Pilate, but always some strong, conquering, peace-breathing countenance that utters the divine to those who look upon it.—Selected.

QUARTERLY MEETING OF WOMEN'S WORK

The statement concerning this meeting which appeared in this column last week failed to state the place of the meeting. This place is Winston-Salem, the date is October 10, the time 10:30 o'clock a.m. (The omission was mine, as I wrote the notice by permission of Mrs. Bowman.)

PLEASE READ ON! If you have ever been embarrassed by having unexpected guests for whom you are not prepared, at meal time, you will realize the importance and the courtesy due them, of notifying the Winston Auxiliary that you will be there and expect to eat lunch with them, for 35 cents. The person to notify is Mrs. Ruby Kirk, 524 W. Second St., Winston-Salem, N.C.

It is especially important that the blanks that have been sent you by our corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. T. Bowman, asking information for this quarter, be returned to her filled out as completely as possible. I have been notified that I will be expected to make a report of our work at the two-day session of the Annual Conference of the former M. P. Church. The information you put on the blanks you return will be a part of the report I will have to make. This report will become a part of the record in the Journal of the first session of the Methodist Church, and it is very desirable that we tell the truth, the whole truth.

Yours very sincerely,

THANK-OFFERING

Now that the thank-offering season is at hand, and since Mrs. Carroll has given me the privilege of supplying material for this column this week, the story of Little Ann of Lost Gap seems to be a very fine one to tell in auxiliaries before the thank-offering is held; or if you have nothing better for the service itself, have someone tell the story as part of the thank-offering service. The story is printed below, and comes to us from the W. H. M. S. of the M. E. Church.

LITTLE ANN OF LOST GAP

By Elizabeth Kern

I am writing this from the hill country. I have found haven here at Lost Gap, in the mountain cabin of old Ahab Dove. When I told the old mountaineer that I wanted nothing but quiet for a while he smiled and said, "Waal, you have come to the right spot for that!"

He spoke truly. One day is very like another day here in the mountains. In the morning, I drag an old split-bottomed chair out under the pine trees. At stated times during the day, old Ahab's wife sends her granddaughter, Little Ann, out to me with bread and milk and berries, and sometimes a mountain trout. The child has been warned by the old people not to annoy me, so she seldom talks, but once in a while she will linger, looking solemnly at me out of great black eyes. Once in a while, too, old Ahab, on his way to the mill or the stream, will stop to pass the time of day with me. But the greater part of the time I am entirely alone.

It is not an exciting life. But I love the spicy fragrance of the pines and the sound of the running water and the deep peace of the hills. I have come, too, to care for the simple folk in the cabin. And especially do I love Little Ann, with her quiet ways, so at variance with her tense, eager expression and her great hungry eyes that seem always asking. She rarely speaks, yet when she does talk, one catches a glimpse of a poet's imagination.

Not very long ago we were watching the miracle of the evening sky. "Who done it?" she asked suddenly, nodding her head toward the sunset. "Who painted it all pink and red and gold?"

"Why, God painted it, child," I answered, smiling into the eager face.

"Where'd He git His paint?" she demanded. Then thoughtfully, "Did He dip it out o' the sun?"

The other day I saw her lean forward breathlessly to watch a ruby-throated humming bird poise over a magnificent clump of laurel. "I wisht I knowed how you done it!" she cried hungrily. "I wisht I knowed." The child ought to be in school, I thought.

And so last night when old Ahab had finished his evening meal and was settling down to his corn-cob pipe, I thought to broach the subject.

"Ahab," I began, "are there no schools in the mountains?"

Old Ahab pulled hard at his pipe. "No, we ain't never had no schools in these here mountains," he said slowly. "We ain't never had no schools nor churches nor nothin', but all my life long I've wanted a chance ter larn. Jes' seems like I can't remember the time I didn't want to be in school."

"When I was a little shaver," the old mountaineer went on in his patient, wistful voice, "A missionary come ter Lost Gap one day, and from a little book he carried, he read us the story of a child and a star and some shepherds. Hit seems like the child growed up into a kind of healer an' he went around healin' the lame an' sick an' the blind. But after 'while his enemies got too much fer him and they took him away an' they was goin' ter put him to death with two thieves. But jes' then," said old Ahab, "jes' then the missionary was called away—an' I never got ter learn how the story ended. An' all my life I've been waitin' fer somebody to come and larn me ter read so's I could find out the end of the story.

"But the summer went by an' the wild geese honked south in the fall an' back again in the spring, an' another year was gone—an' nobody never come. An' when I'd plow the mountain land an' git ter the end of the furrow, I use ter look down the mountain ter see ef that warn't somebody comin'. Only nobody never did.

"An' after 'while, I knowed that fer me, hit was too late—an' hit's too late fer my boy. But when Little Ann come along," he said huskily, "hit jes' seemed like I couldn't stand hit not to put her on the trail fer the school house."

I was deeply touched by the old man's story. "Surely there are missions somewhere in the mountains," I said. "Yes," he replied, "I've been down ter the mission. The mail carrier at Cross Roads tol' me about hit. A good school hit was, he tol' me, over at Bufflick Run, forty mile over the mountain. When I heered that, hit jes' seemed like a dream was comin' true, like I was jes' that little boy agin lookin' down the mountains fer help—with help a-comin'.

"An' I went an tol' Little Ann about hit, an' we set down on a log an' we talked an' talked. Jes' think, I says, jes' think, our Little Ann is goin' ter larn about the things I've wanted all my life ter know."

"'Yes,' says Little Ann, smilin' up in my face, 'I'll study all the time, gran' daddy. An' some day I'll come back from school an' we'll set down by the fire an' I'll read you out of the book, an'—guess what the story'll be?' Of course I knowed what she meant, but somehow I couldn't answer. I jes' had ter keep winkin' back the tears that was makin' my ol' heart hurt. So Little Ann answered fer me. 'Yes, gran' daddy,' she said quiet-like, 'it'll be the story of the little child an' the shepherd an' the star.'

"An' the next day, I started over the mountains ter the mission. Little Ann went as fer as Cross Roads with me, dancin' every step of the way. Forty mile ain't nothin' to walk when thar's a school-house at the end. An' when I finally got to the mission, I walked all 'roun' an' I see little gals with their letters an' books an' things. I see one little gal that looked like Little Ann. She was readin' out of a book an' I couldn't help wonderin' if it was the story the missionary read me when I was a little boy.

"An' when I went up ter the mission house an' tol' the teacher 'bout Little Ann, she said, 'I only wish I could take her in,' an' you could tell by her voice that she meant it, 'but we can't accept any more students just now. We are over-crowded as it is.'

"'Do you mean Little Ann can't come?' I askt her, an' somehow I coudn't keep my voice from shakin'. We had never thought, Little Ann an' me, that she might not be able ter git in. An' the mission teacher said sorter to herself, 'If they only knew! If they only knew!' An' then she tol' me how the mission school was run. She said as how the good women in the church met together an' formed their missionary society, an' they planned fer hit, and how they got out mite boxes and had thank-offerin's. Hit was the money from the thank-offerin', she said, that helped to run the mission school.

"'They are splendid women,' said the mission teacher, 'loyal and generous an' fine, but there is so much in their busy lives that sometimes they forget or they think they can't afford to give, an' the money doesn't come in, an'—' then she said, lookin' up at me with her eyes filled with tears, 'then the Little Anns of the mountains have to suffer.' I didn't understand everything she tol' me. All I knowed was, I'd hafter go back an' tell Little Ann thar warnt no room fer her at the school. So I started off, an' as I crossed the mission yard I could see the little gals playin' about, an' under a big maple tree, with the book still on her lap, was the one that looked like Little Ann.

"I was a good deal longer comin' back than I was goin'. When I come ter the Cross Roads, thar was Little Ann like as if she'd never left the spot. An' when she sees me, she come runnin' toward me—her black eyes shinin' like stars.

"An' then I tol' her. She never said nothin'—jes' stood thar lookin' at me—an' her eyes had the same look that a deer has when it's been wounded an' the shot's gone deep.

"She never mentioned school after that. She never cried ner complained ner nothin'—Little Ann didn't—she jes' shet her lips tight an' kep' quiet. But ol' Ahab knowed. He'd been thar!

"An' a year went by. An' one day I found her down in the holler holdin' a piece of newspaper that the mail carrier had throwed away. 'What're you doin', Little Ann?' I called to her. She never said nothin' fer a minute, an' then she looked up an' I see thar was tears in her eyes. An' she said, 'I was jes' pretendin' to myself that I was readin'!' That was the first time I ever see her cry—an' I tol' her, 'Little Ann,' I said, 'termorrer I'm goin' back thar ter Bufflick, an' have another try at the mission.'

"An' the next mornin' I pulled out over the Great North Mountain. An' I jes' went an 'tol 'the mission teacher how things was up thar in our mountain. I tol' her 'bout Little Ann waitin' fer the chanct ter larn—not complainin' ner nothin'—I tol' her—jes' waitin'. And when I was through the mission teacher's face was twitchin' an' she put her hand on my arm. 'I'm expectin' to hear from the home missionary society just any day now,' she said. 'Tell Little Ann that as soon as the money comes in, I'll send a letter—an' she can come.'

"An' that's why every day, rain or shine, I go down ter the Cross Roads ter see ef thar's any news. But the letter never comes. Seems like I can't stan' it sometimes, when the mail man rides on by an' calls out, 'Not today, Ahab.' "

The old mountaineer was quiet for a while. Then he looked up with a patient smile. "If they only knew! That's what the teacher tol' me; if the home missionary people only knew!' "

I thought over the old man's words far into the night. And today came the golden thought, I would write to the Woman's Home Missionary Society myself and tell them of Little Ann. The mission teacher is right. They are fine and loyal and generous—these devoted women of the church. The reason Little Ann has to suffer is because they do not know.

And so I am writing directly to you, dear people of the women's missionary societies, wherever you may be. I am writing here under the pine trees in the shadow of old Ahab's cabin. I know that if you could only see Little Ann with her great hungry eyes looking down the mountain for help, you would not let her look in vain.

And my hand is all a-tremble as I write. For believing in you as I do, I know that the day is not far distant when old Ahab and Little Ann will go down to Cross Roads to watch for the mail man to come. I can see just how they will look—the old mountaineer with his patient face turned toward the winding road, and Little Ann — body tense, hands clenched, lips tight, the soul of her blazing from her great black eyes. Clothing and Other Gifts

A number of boxes of clothing for our girls, and a few for our boys, have come in during the last few days, and we are very thankful for these. And we had to buy for several of our boys before they could start to school.

The second lot of canned goods to come in is 34 jars from Fairfield on Guilford, with two others to come. We greatly appreciate this help. We were not able to put out as many glass jars this year as last for lack of invitations, but quite a few were taken, for which we are thankful. When they are filled and there is passing this way, please bring them if you can. If that is impossible, please see that they are all gathered at some convenient place and we will send for them after conference.

School

School opened this morning, September 18, and all of our children are going except two little boys and two little girls who are too young. They seemed happy to start to school.

While We Have the Herald

How this Home is to run without the Herald we cannot now see, but somehow the Lord will direct. So while we have the Herald we must use it to try to get across the fact that the former Methodist Protestants are expected to continue to run the Children's Home at High Point just as we have been doing. It will take a fine spirit of cooperation to do it, and we believe we will have your hearty cooperation because of your love for the children and the work here.

AN ISLAND OF BIRDS

One of the strangest bird colonies in the world is Willis Island, a tiny sand key out in the Pacific Ocean, some 250 miles from the eastern coast of Australia. On this lonely islet, only 20 acres in area and so far off the normal course of steamships that in ten years only one passing steamer has been sighted, is a radio-cyclone-warning station, where two men, a meteorologist and a wireless operator, keep a vigil like Robinson Crusoe and Man Friday. Their duties are to warn shipping on the Australian coast of the approach of cyclones.

Reposing in isolation in the middle of a vast expanse of heaving ocean, Willis Island has a greater bird population than any other island of similar size in the Pacific, if not in the world. The tiny speck is the home of countless thousands of birds as tame as domestic fowls, birds of many species that live in complete harmony with each other, their nests intermingling on virtually every square foot of the little island.

Most plentiful are the noddies—trim little figures in dark-brown, with crowns of silver gray. Masked gannets, red-footed gannets, and brown gannets are also there in great numbers. Master divers and fishermen, these birds spend most of their time at sea, soaring and dipping over the sun-kissed waters seeking fish. Sooty terns and crested terns are also plentiful. The latter are very attractive birds of a battleship-gray color, with fine yellow bill, neat black-capped head, with a "crest" on the nape of the neck which is erected when the bird is indignant, as, for example, when the peace of its home is disturbed.

By far the most interesting bird on the island, however, is the banded landrail. This bird is found in many other parts of the world and is known to be a speedy flier. But on Willis Island the bird is flightless. On Willis the landrails cannot fly, but they make up for this deficiency by being extremely fast runners on the ground. The presence of this flightless bird on the lonely island, which is over 200 miles from any other land, is a puzzling mystery.

When the cyclone-warning station was established on Willis Island eighteen years ago it thought that the birds might resent the intrusion of man to their domain and leave the island to settle elsewhere. Instead the birds have become the greatest of friends with the men at the station.

It is almost impossible to walk even a few feet on the island without stepping on an egg, and wherever one walks one is accompanied by a noisy bodyguard and the fluttering of a myriad wings that seem almost to fan one's face.—Ewen K. Patterson in Our Dumb Animals.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Kistler's Union Church, Cleveland Charge, T. G. Madison, Pastor, Sept. 18.—We have not had a report for some time, although our church has been very active. Our revival meeting began the first Sunday in August, with Rev. W. L. Harkey of Lincolnton as the pulpit help. Mr. Harkey did some wonderful preaching in these services . He was liked by all, and we hope we can have him to assist in our meeting again some time. There were many reclamations and several new converts, and three young people united with the church.

Our Sunday school is having the usual attendance and much interest is being shown. We have an enrollment of 80 in Sunday school, and attendance of around 60 each Sunday. We are proud of our Sunday school and feel that much good is accomplished by attending each Sunday.

We are looking forward to our fourth quarterly conference on September 23, when we are to have our president. He will meet with us at Mount Pleasant and will bring the message at the 11 o'clock hour. In the afternoon our president will hold the fourth quarterly conference. We hope to have good attendance and good reports from all churches.

There is some sickness in our church and community.

Prayer services are being held in our church each month with good attendance.

Our delegate to the annual conference is Mr. P. P. Richards, of the Lawndale church.

We desire the prayers of all Christians.

Central Church, Asheboro.—Dr. J. E. Pritchard paid his official visit to Asheboro September 17, preaching at the morning worship hour to a large congregation. Mrs. Pritchard also spent the day in Asheboro with friends.

A program of worship in song was presented on Sunday evening, September 10, by the young people's choir of Central church. Tom Houts, supervisor of music in the local church, directed the vested choir of 36 members, with Mrs. N. M. Harrison accompanying. The program was as follows: "Te Deum" (Downes); "Finlandia," arranged for hymnal (Sibelius); "Crossing the Bar" (Barnby); "Deep River" and "Dig My Grave" (arranged by Burleigh); "Ave Maria" (Gounod); "The Day Is Past and Over" (Bach), by the choir. Sam and John Taylor, Tom Houts and Lawrence Sours sang "Prayer of Thanksgiving" (Traditional) and "Some Blessed Day" (Nevin), while Sours and Houts contributed a duet, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought." Tom Houts sang "The Holy City" for the offertory.

The service was attended by many from other churches and a group of worshipers from Leaksville, home of Tom Houts, were present.

A series of prayer meetings was conducted from homes of the church members during the past week, preparatory to the revival services which began September 20 at Central church. The visiting minister is Dr. E. K. McLarty, of Concord. Tom Houts is directing the choir.

Colon Cox of Central church died at his Asheboro home September 11, after an illness of four years. Last rites were conducted from the church by Dr. Taylor. Mrs. Martha Burrow Wright, one of the oldest church members, died September 14 and funeral services were at the Charlotte Methodist church, near Asheboro, by her pastor. Both families have scores of friends who extend sympathy.

Miss Enolia Presnell of Charlotte has come to Asheboro where she is a member of the local school faculty. Miss Thyra Wright is teaching in the Bessemer school at Greensboro. Away at school are Marguarite McCullers, Martha and Cynthia Mendenhall, Helen Phillips, Woman's college; Lacy Lewis, Jr., Salem college school of music; Sam Taylor, High Point college; James Hedricks, Lenoir-Rhyne; L. D. Burkhead, Jr., University of North Carolina; Hal Hammer Walker, Frances and Thomas McDowell, Bowling Green, Ky.; Harris Lamb, State college. Cicero H. Holder, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Holder, received a degree in engineering from State college at the end of the 1939 summer term.

Mrs. J. S. Lewis, Rev. and Mrs. N. M. Harrison, and Dr. and Mrs. Taylor jointly entertained 40 members of the young people's choir at the Lewis home on Friday evening. Special guests were the college group who has entered school this fall.

Mrs. Harriett Hammer Walker is improving rapidly from a major operation at the Randolph hospital.

The young people's choir on Monday evening gave the program of Sunday evening, September 10, over radio station WMFR at High Point.

Corinth, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Our revival meeting began at this church first Sunday in September with an all-day service. Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Broome, brought us two splendid messages for that day. Rev. Mr. Wagoner came on Monday and preached until Friday night when the meeting closed. He brought us some wonderful messages, and all who heard him learned to love him. We enjoyed having him preach for us and enjoyed having him in our home. We hope he can come and be with us again.

There were no additions to the church, but many hearts were warmed and we feel much good was accomplished throughout the meeting. We are thankful for the splendid cooperation of the members of other churches in the community.

Rev. Francis Joyner of Littleton preached for us the first Sunday in August, as our pastor was away in a meeting.

Rev. Mr. Broome brought us a good message Sunday night. We were glad to have Mr. W. I. Porter worship with us Sunday night.

On Sunday night Mr. Claude Insco, one of our stewards, and Miss Clara Hawkins, of Hawkins Chapel church, were united. We wish for this splendid young couple much happiness as they journey through life.

On Thursday night, September 14, our community was shocked and saddened as the news spread that two of our Sunday school members were killed in a wreck—Francis Warren and Surry Keeter. They were returning home from a Sunday school picnic when a big lumber truck hit their car. No one else in the car was hurt. Mr. Keeter was 17 years old and had moved into our community this year. Miss Warren had lived in our community all her life. She celebrated her 14th birthday on last Sunday, September 10, and was baptized that day at Bearswamp Baptist church. She attended Sunday school and preaching service at our church regularly. Our pastor conducted her funeral on Friday afternoon. They will both be missed in our Sunday school and church services. Our deepest sympathy goes out to their parents in this sad hour.

While our church is considerably behind with annual conference assessments and pastor's salary, it is hoped that these assessments will be raised in the next few weeks.

Canaan, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor, September 11.—It has been some little time since I have given any report from our society, but just the same we have been trying to carry on the work required of us as Christian workers. We have been working hard toward getting enough money to give our church a new coat of paint and hope to see this done in a few more weeks. Our circles seem to be growing. Each meeting has been inspiring and uplifting. The last meeting was held at the church with 19 members present. We had 89 sick calls and flowers sent to 12. We are hoping that soon all will be restored to health.

Let us say here that the pantry at the parsonage has been built. This was done through all the churches on the charge. This adds a little more room for the pastor which I am sure they are proud of, as they have needed this for some time. By the way, our next meeting will be held with Mrs. Williams. Am sure we will have a nice time there. This will be our first meeting with her since they have been on this work, as she has been called on other duties each month in the past.

I would like to say here that the attendance is good, both at Sunday school and preaching services.

May great blessings fall around God's humble servants and make them His children.

MRS. CARL W. CLODFELTER, Reporter.

Seagrove, Seagrove-Love Joy Charge.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment last Sunday, September 17, at 11 a.m. Brother Trolinger always has an interesting message for us. Rev. and Mrs. Trolinger were dinner guests of Dr. and Mrs. D. J. Johnson.

Our revival services began the fourth Sunday night in August and closed the first Sunday night in September. Rev. H. F. Surratt of Graham did the preaching, and oh, how we did enjoy those splendid sermons! The attendance was good all through the meeting. There were several conversions and reclamations and we believe the entire church was greatly revived. Brother Surratt, we hope you will come this way again, for we enjoyed your stay among us so much.

Our Sunday school attendance is good. We have 104 enrolled and usually have around 70 present each Sunday.

Our people were made sad Sunday, September 10, by the news of the death of Mrs. Euna Walker Gearin, a former member of our church. Mrs. Gearin died in Randolph hospital after an illness of several days. Mrs. Gearin was once secretary of our Sunday school. She moved her church membership to Science Hill Friends church after her marriage. Her young husband and other relatives have our sympathy. A number from here attended the funeral at Science Hill, September 11.

We are having a very active Christian Endeavor society. We have some splendid young people who like to do things. The society recently enjoyed a melon slicing at M. C. Auman's pond. A business meeting was held before the social hour. Wade Harris was elected president to take the place of James Auman, who had been president for some time. Other officers were elected.

Our Ladies' Auxiliary met in August with Mrs. James Green. A good program was rendered. The attendance was good and delicious refreshments were served. The September meeting will be held in the home of the president, Mrs. A. C. Harris, Friday night, September 22.

We are expecting a joint meeting with Love Joy society in October. Pray for us that we may remain a true and loyal little band for Christ.

Midway Church, Rev. Paul Hamilton, Pastor, September 13.—An inexperienced reporter has not kept you very well informed this year of the activity of our church, but our church has been doing things so great that more than make up for the negligence on my part.

Last week he had the greatest revival in the history of our church. Thirty-six conversions were made with 26 of this number uniting with our church. Rev. Tommy E. Strickland of Charlotte and High Point was the pulpit help. He is well known and much loved in our community. His messages were well planned and the above figures tell their own story as to how they were received. The foundation for this revival had been laid by our own beloved Paul Hamilton by his bringing us inspiring messages regularly. This young man has done a good job this year and we hope conference will see fit to return him to us and let him continue the good work he has started.

An impressive baptismal service was held at a nearby lake, where some of the converts were immersed and the rest sprinkled. Twenty-five of the 26 people uniting with our church were baptized. This service was a little unusual for our church, but due to the fact that some of the candidates wished to be immersed, the services were held at the lake.

The organizations of the church have also been active. Three classes of the Sunday school are holding meetings this week. The Ladies' Auxiliary has regular meetings. The attendance in Sunday school last Sunday was 107, near the record mark for our Sunday school. The Christian Endeavor society is active and continues to have well planned and helpful programs.

Barber Jean Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hamilton, 10 Robbins Circle, Lexington, N. C. Jean recently won in a popularity contest at Trinity church. She received a total of 2,600 votes. Little Darrell Kimball was second with 1,321 votes, and Tommy and Eugene Fine were third with 700. The contest ran through August and a nice sum of money was realized for the church.

With the coming of fall and colleges opening, we are losing three of our young people. Cleo Pinnix will return to High Point College as an upperclassman, Herman Wyrick will enter High Point College as a freshman, and Hugh Thomas will enter Elon College as a freshman.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. York have been in Fort Bragg, N. C., where Mr. York's work has kept them for the past few weeks. We are looking forward to their return soon.

The church members have certainly enjoyed Mr. J. A. Suits' watermelons. We look forward annually to seeing that his melons are well taken care of and we have done a good job of it this year. Their flavor has surpassed those of previous years.

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—The doors of the church were opened the second Sunday morning. Joining by letter were Brother and Mrs. D. A. Broome and Mr. Curtis Porter. We extend to them the right hand of fellowship. We feel fortunate in having them. Brother Broome filled his appointment. After service Mrs. Broome asked all to remain for a few minutes, for the purpose of organizing a Christian Endeavor society. Officers were chosen as follows: president, Leonard Hawkins; vice president, Virginia Vincent; corresponding secretary, Miss Margaret Pittard; recording secretary, Miss Lillian Hawkins; treasurer, Miss Virginia Hawkins. It would take too much space to name the various committees. They met in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willie Grey Mitchel Friday evening, for the purpose of getting their parts straight. The first meeting will be held the fourth Sunday evening at 6:45 o'clock.

Sunday morning at Sunday school there were many back in their places, as most all the revival meetings have come to a close.

Miss Margaret Pittard has been appointed to hold Sunday school if it should happen the superintendent or the assistant were not present.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Claude Inscoe, who were married at the parsonage September 9 at 7 p.m. We hope for them a long and happy life.

We are sorry Mrs. F. A. Greens, who is at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Herbert Harris, is very ill. Glad to report Mrs. Squire Cullom is up again after returning from the Roanoke Rapids hospital.

Union Chapel Church, Mocksville, Rev. K. G. Holt, Pastor.—The health of our people in the community is good at this writing, except Mr. M. B. Richardson is suffering from a wounded finger which he nearly cut off. Rev. Mr. Holt also had a similar accident and is suffering with his finger, we are sorry to state.

Rev. Mr. Holt was unable to fill his regular appointment the fourth Sunday morning at Union Chapel on account of illness, but filled his regular appointment the second Sunday night.

It seems that the month of August was a celebration and enjoyable month with most of our folks, since two birthday dinners were held consecutively. Mr. Beal Bailey was given a surprise birthday dinner August 20, with about 65 relatives and friends present.

The Sunday school honored Mr. R. L. Baker, our superintendent, by giving him a surprise dinner August 27. Mr. Baker was 76 years old on that day.

Sapling Ridge Church, Alamance Charge, Dr. George R. Brown, Pastor, Sept. 17.—Our regular preaching service was held last Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Our pastor delivered a wonderful message, as he always does, his text being taken from the 16th chapter of Romans and the 23rd verse.

The September meeting of our auxiliary was held at the home of Mrs. Harry Perry of Burlington, N. C., September 16. The meeting opened with a song, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Devotionals were led by Mrs. Ward Campbell, followed by the Lord's Prayer by all. There were 14 members present. We had a very interesting program. Those taking part were Mrs. Laverne Woody, Mrs. Epps Clark, Mrs. Harry Perry, Mrs. Duley Campbell, and Mrs. T. M. Clark. Mrs. M. H. dismissed us with prayer. We were then invited into the dining room, where Mrs. Perry served a delicious lunch which was enjoyed by all. We decided to meet with Mrs. H. K. Webster next month. We as auxiliary members are striving to carry on this work so that it will be pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

We have recently bought a large pulpit Bible for the church with money we had in the treasury. We have done several different things to raise some money.

We still have several on the sick list, Mr. A. G. Campell, Mr. Wilbur Johnson, Mr. James Johnson, Mrs. A. V. Ferguson, Mrs. Sina Stone. We hope for them a speedy recovery and their presence at the church again.

Mrs. H. K. Webster and daughter Hazel spent the week-end in Burlington with her daughters, and also Mrs. Wade Perry and daughter Doris spent the week-end in Burlington with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Johnson announced the birth of a daughter, September 14.

We ask the prayers of all Christians that we may grow in grace.

Randolph Circuit.—Successful revival meetings have been held at Bethany, Shiloh, and Bethel. Revs. A. D. Shelton, Thomas E. Strickland, and Charles Coble were the pulpit help in the order named. These brethren preached soul-stirring gospel sermons. As a result of these meetings and the work done in the community, there were 54 conversions and renewals and 26 additions to the churches. We think others will join later. Many of our members were very much concerned about the unsaved people. Much personal work was done in the community as well as in the churches. During these meetings the members and friends kept us well supplied with melons, apples, honey, vegetables, and some gasoline.

And this is not all. At the close of the Bethel meeting we received a generous pounding consisting of eggs, flour, veegtables, sugar, coffee, potatoes, canned goods, and one chicken, completely filling the car.

Several years ago I heard a preacher say that preachers had very few visitors. We were very pleasantly and agreeably surprised last Saturday afternoon, September 16, when 62 of the Bethany people visited us at one time. They brought their supper (dinner) with them, which was served on a quickly arranged table on the lawn of the pastor's home. It was their Sunday school picnic. They too brought a pounding with them, consisting of 35 pounds of sugar, flour, vegetables, lard, cocoa, oat meal, soap, towels, matches, a fruit bowl, and some cash.

During the Shiloh meeting Brother C. C. Hemphill gave the pastor a cash donation.

For all these donations and the many words of encouragement, we are profoundly grateful. We shall serve them the very best we can.

Brother G. L. Whitaker, who recently had an operation in a Greensboro hospital, has returned home. Miss Maxine Jones is in the hospital at the present time for treatment. Others are sick in their homes. We wish for all these a speedy recovery.

Our last revival for this year will start at Gray's Chapel next Sunday. For 108 years this church has started the revival on the fourth Sunday in September.

Bethany Church, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—Around sixty members of the Sunday school enjoyed a picnic supper at the home of their pastor, Rev. H. L. Isley, near Burlington, on Saturday afternoon. The pastor was also presented with a number of gifts.

The Helpers' class will meet with Doris Wood Saturday afternoon, September 23. New officers will be elected for the coming year.

The fourth quarterly conference for Randolph charge will be held at Bethany church the second Sunday afternoon in October at 2:30 o'clock. All official members are urged to be present.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. We have an average attendance of over 100. We have most of our conference claims paid in full. We still lack some on the pastor's salary but hope to have it raised before conference.

Our deepest sympathy goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Johnson in the death of their infant son, Thomas Alfred, on September 23.

Trinity Church.—The fall revival at Trinity church began Sunday night, with Rev. J. W. Groce preaching to a packed house of people. The interest is good for one of the best revivals in some time. Pray that God will direct, and the church be greatly revived and sinners saved in this meeting.

MARRIED

Sink-Berrier

The marriage of Miss Mabel Berrier and Homer Sink was solemnized Saturday afternoon, September 9, at 3 o'clock in a quiet but impressive ceremony at Shiloh Methodist Church.

Rev. C. E. Ridge, pastor of the church, performed the ring ceremony. Mrs. Homer Craner rendered the wedding music.

Prior to the entrance of the wedding party Mrs. Craner played "I Love You Truly" by Bond and "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms" by Moore. To the strains of "Bridal Chorus" from Lehengrin, Wagner, the bride and groom entered unattended.

The vows were spoken near the church pulpit which was banked with ferns and palms against which floor baskets of dahlias improvised an altar.

Mrs. Craner played during the ceremony "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." The wedding march from Mendelssohn as a recessional.

The bride wore her travel outfit of navy crepe. Her small felt hat, purse, shoes and gloves were navy. At her shoulder was an exquisite spray of white roses and gysophlia.

Mrs. Sink is the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Berrier. She graduated from Lexington high school and holds a position in Lexington. Mr. Sink is the second son of R. B. Sink and the late Mrs. Elissa Sink. He graduated from Reeds high school and now holds a position with Montcastle Hosiery mill in Lexington.

Mr. and Mrs. Sink are at home on Route 3, Lexington.

Massey-Garlington

Miss Virginia Dare Massey and the Rev. J. Ezell Garlington were married in an impressive ceremony at Spring Methodist Church at 8 o'clock Monday evening, August 14. The Rev. William M. Howard of Enfield heard the vows.

The church was decorated in green and white. Pine was used as a background and the altar was twined with English ivy. Tall floor baskets of white gladioli alternated with four seven-branched candelabra in which white candles burned.

Prior to the ceremony Mrs. Charles Miller, vocalist, and Miss Dorothine Massey, sister of the bride, rendered a program of nuptial music. Mrs. Miller sang "The Sweetest Story Ever Told" and "I Love You Truly." As the wedding party entered the church the bridal chorus from "Lohengrin" was played, and during the speaking of the vows Miss Massey played softly "Indian Love Call."

The ushers were S. Ellis Crew and J. Winfield Crew of Pleasant Hill.

Miss Pauline Massey, sister of the bride, was her maid of honor and only attendant. Mr. Garlington had as best man his brother, H. B. Garlington, of High Point.

The bride entered with her father by whom she was given in marriage. Her wedding gown in an off shade of white satin had a sweetheart neckline with wasp bodice and modified bustle back fullness. The skirt extended into a lengthy train. The finger-tip

GETTING READY FOR THE SUNDAY SESSION

"I must study my Sunday school lesson," says Miss Allison as she turns to next Sunday's session in her teacher's textbook. She reads the three or four pages of materials and suggestions which the writer has provided for her guidance. But printed lesson materials to her mean facts 'set-out-in-advance-to-be-learned," and later recited to the teacher. So she does not see the significance of the suggested informal procedure for the class session nor the reason for having the children carry out activities. She reads the story, if there is one, so she call tell it to her group, and notes the Bible references which are given. She hopes the children will "study their lesson," but does not know just what she wants them to study.

Miss Allison is intelligent, loyal, and earnest. She wants to make a contribution to the lives of the pupils in the class which she has been teaching since last October. But she dissatisfied with the lesson materials and discouraged with results. The boys and girls, she says, are not interested, won't study their lessons, lose their books, come irregularly, are irreverent and difficult to manage.

Mrs. Hamilton says, "I must get ready for next Sunday's session" rather than "I must study my Sunday school lesson." She begins not with the printed lesson materials but with what happened in the group last Sunday morning. With her class roll before her she checks each child's name recalling the significant things he did and said, making mental notes of special needs.

"John has been absent four times recently.. I must talk with his mother and perhaps his public school teacher and find out before next Sunday what he is interested in and why he does not like to come to church school," Mrs. Hamilton says to herself.

"Peggy agreed to take Mary's copy of Boys and Girls to her and tell her what the group has been doing since she has been ill. I must call Peggy. She is apt to forget and needs a little help if she is to learn to be more dependable. I will try to stop by the hospital to see Mary this afternoon.

"Barbara does not seem to feel at home with the group though she has been coming regularly for several months. A class party might help her. She could serve on a committee with Jean and Frank.

"Jean has difficulty in sharing in class activities. Frank is always friendly and cooperative but lacks purpose and initiative. Definite responsibility on a committee might help him too.

"Martha went home unhappy last Sunday because the group did not vote for her to take the picture they had mounted for the children in the Beginner Department. The other members of the class do not like Martha. How can I help her make happier contacts with children her own age?

"Dora, Susan, and Jack are coming Saturday afternoon to help get the room ready for Sunday. Martha must come too; perhaps she can make friends with a few childern at a time.

"Joe will be interested in this clipping about the rings of Saturn in today's paper."

Thus Mrs. Hamilton considered the individual needs and interests of each boy and girl in her group, and now she is ready for the printed lesson materials which she thinks of not as so much subject matter set-out-in-advance-to-be-learned but rather as a means of arousing interest, widening horizons, creating purpose, and enriching the lives of the children she teaches. At the beginning of the quarter she has carefully examined her own and the children's textbooks to discover the several units which are included, and the number of sessions given to each unit.

Her preliminary plans included reading the materials for the entire unit noting the central idea and the writer's statement of desired outcomes; checking activities which seemed most worth while and practical for her group; and listing sources of materials.

Now as she gets ready for next Sunday's session she recalls the class discussion and activities carried out in preceding sessions, unfinished items and children's unanswered questions. She reads the writer's suggested way of beginning but thinks of a happier one which will pick up and carry forward last Sunday's interest. It may be a question, a picture, or a poem but it will fit the situation and start the group thinking together. The informal procedure suggested in her textbook is in line with her preliminary preparation and serves as a guide for directing class discussion. She makes note of specific assignments which may be given to members of the group.

On Sunday morning Mrs. Hamilton will be in the Junior Department before the children arrive ready to suggest interesting things to do: arrange the flowers; put pictures or clippings on the bulletin board; learn a new song; find and mark in their Bibles the passages to be used in the worship service.

Mrs. Hamilton is not dissatisfied with the lesson materials because she thinks of them as means rather than ends in themselves. She is not discouraged because she is getting satisfying results. The boys and girls in her class do "study their lesson," and use rather than lose their books, because she gives them very specific assignments. They come regularly and are not difficult to manage because they are interested, and they are learning to be reverent through having real worship experiences in the church school.—Barnett Spratt, in "The Elementary Teacher," August, 1939.

Coghill

Patsy Kittrell Coghill was born on September 20, 1894, and departed this life on September 9, 1939. She is survived by the husband and three children: Nellie Kittrell, Flora Coghill and John Coghill. Her surviving brothers and sisters are: Mrs. E. R. Breedlove, Mrs. John Barnes, Mrs. Stanley Ellington, and W. R. Kittrell, E. C. Kittrell, M. G. Kittrell, and A. M. Kittrell.

She had been a faithful member of Rehoboth Methodist Church since childhood. The funeral services were held in Fuller's Chapel Christian Church. The writer and Rev. Mr. Carter held the services. A large congregation and a beautiful floral tribute revealed the deep esteem in which the deceased was held. Our prayers go out to the bereaved ones.

J. P. PEGG, Pastor.

AN APT QUOTATION

They do me wrong, who say I come no more,
When once I knock and fail to find you in,
For every day I stand outside your door
And bid you wait and rise and fight and win.
Weep not for precious chances passed away,
Wail not for golden ages on the wane.
At night I burn the records of the day;
At sunrise every soul is born again.

Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell.
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven.
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell.
Each night a star to guide thy ship home to heaven.

the turn of the road the mail carrier will come in sight, waving something in his hand. There's a ring to his voice as he calls out, "It's come! It's come! Here's your letter, Little Ann!" I cannot see the faces of the old mountaineer or of Little Ann, for my eyes are wet with sudden tears. But from out of the deep peace of the hills, I seem to hear a voice saying:

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Our church has heard the call from the mountains and established its own school for mountain children at Pine Ridge, Kentucky, and our thank-offering helps to maintain this and other educational institutions of learning so that those who hunger for knowledge may satisfy that hunger. The number of Little Anns we are able to help still depends largely upon the liberality and generosity of the women's societies and their efforts. Please make your offerings as liberal as possible.

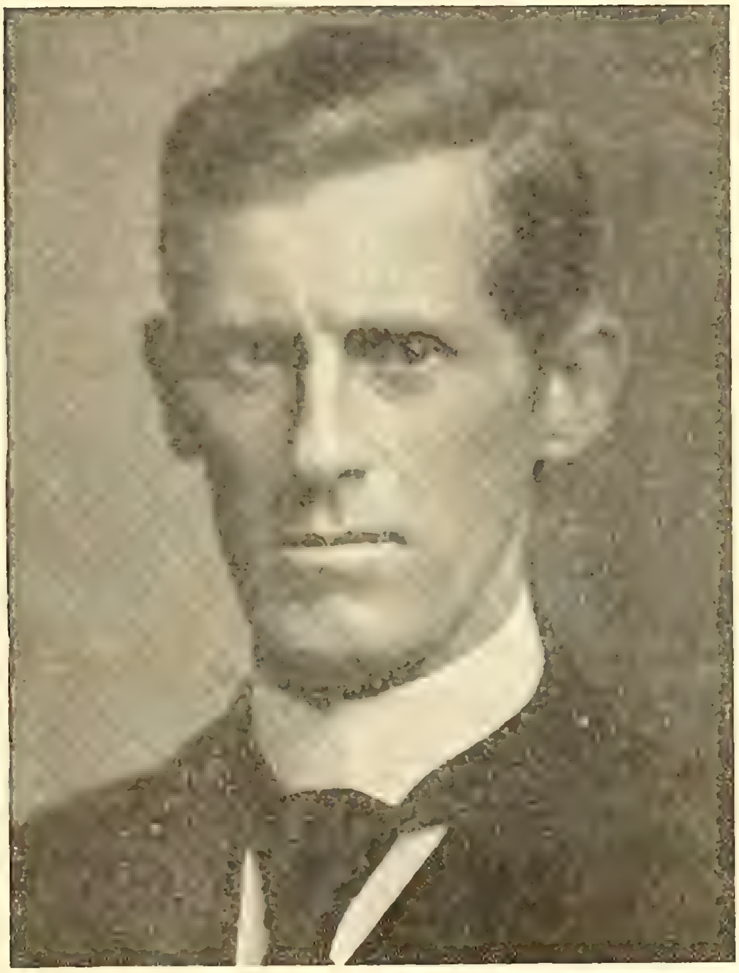
ONE IS YOUR MASTER EVEN CHRIST BRETHREN

VOLUME XLV GREENSBORO, N. C., SEPTEMBER 28, 1939 NUMBER 15

Rev H L Isley [illegible]
R 1

Reverend J. F. McCulloch, D. D.



One of the greatest contributions to the Methodist Protestants of North Carolina was that made by McCulloch, who for forty years edited and published the official paper of the North Carolina Conference. He proposed as early as 1893 that the Conference establish a college in North Carolina. The strength of the Conference, however, at that time did not seem to justify the undertaking. He established the paper for the purpose of educating the people to the need of a college. He saw his dream realized in the opening of High Point College in 1924.

Further information about the subject of this picture will be found in "The History of the North Carolina Annual Conference," which is being prepared by Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, conference historian. The History will be off the press and first offered for sale at the Conference sessions in Greensboro.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Fayetteville and Not Rocky Mount

In the call for the meeting of the Annual Conference in the HERALD of last week the statement was made that the North Carolina Annual Conference of the (new) Methodist Church would meet at Rocky Mount. This was an error and it should have said at Fayetteville. I am sure that Dr. Bates who wrote the article will make the correction this week but I am doing it also to be on the safe side.

Full Time Pastorates

A couple of weeks ago I stated that the Board of Missions of the Western N. C. Conference had asked our Board of Church Extension to ask for supplements to salaries so that each man serving a charge would get as much as one thousand dollars. There was just one thing I should have added, namely, that this rule applies where a man devotes his full time to the work of his charge. As I understand it it does not apply to student pastors nor to cases where pastors do not live among the people and give simply Sundays to the work. This is a very important matter and should be clear in the minds of all.

A Saturday On the Cleveland Charge

The entire day, Saturday of last week, was given to the Cleveland charge, Rev. T. G. Madison, pastor. The services were held at the Mt. Pleasant church with preaching at eleven o'clock and the quarterly conference in the afternoon. Not many places think they can give all day to the work of the church and when we do find a place where the people will attend it is refreshing. This church is near the foot of the South Mountains south of Morganton. It is about sixteen miles from the parsonage and is the furtherest removed from the center of the charge of any church there. While there I was told that I was the only president of the conference to visit this church since the days when Dr. T. M. Johnson was president. It had so happened that the other presidents had visited the charge on Sundays when the appointments were at other churches. There was a splendid congregation present both for the preaching services and the quarterly conference. This charge has made a good record this year. Five of the six churches raised World Service in full, some of the churches are already paid out on salary and all will pay. Some also are out on Annual Conference budget and we had the assurance that all will pay out. There have been 24 accessions during the year. In the quarterly conference there was a unanimous vote for the return of the pastor for the next conference year.

Oak Grove Church Dedicated

Last Sunday morning the Oak Grove church on the Cleveland charge was formally dedicated. The pastor, Rev. T. G. Madison and the people had worked hard to have everything in readiness, however, they did not have quite time enough to put the finishing touches on things. This nice brick building was erected some four or five years ago during the pastorate of the late Rev. R. S. Troxler. There is a good sized auditorium with Sunday school rooms on either side of the auditorium which can be opened or closed by rolling partitions. The massive concrete steps leading up to the main entrances at the front give one the impression of stability. And from the front steps of the church is mountain scenery in the distance fit for a king to look at. While Brother Troxler was not permitted to live to see the church dedicated yet he was well represented Sunday morning by the presence of his family. The Troxler quartet composed of Miss Vesta and Miss Virginia and R. S. and William sang very effectively as did R. S. in a solo. The dedicatory ritual of the former Methodist Protestant Church was used almost in full. This was a glad day for this congregation and I predict that they will make good use of the new building.

The Fallston Quarterly Conference

Leaving Oak Grove church I rushed across the country to the Fallston charge quarterly conference, held at Laurel Hill church Sunday afternoon. Rev. R. L. Hethcox, the pastor and his people have had another good year together. Knob Creek church reported everything paid in full for the year. It seemed a pity that we did not have a gold medal or something to present to this church for this accomplishment thus far ahead of conference. The splendid building at Fallston has been dedicated this year and improvements in general have been made on the church buildings, one being a heating plant at Laurel Hill. Two new Christian Endeavor societies have been organized on the charge this year. Friendship church reported having raised a little more than two hundred dollars for the Children's Home during the year. Brother Hethcox has done a fine work on this charge and has many friends there.

Western Pastors' Federation

On Monday it was my privilege as well as the privilege of a good many others to be present at the meeting of the Western Pastors' Federation meeting at Union Grove church, Rev. E. A. Bingham, pastor. Rev. C. E. Ridge, the president, presided and Rev. T. G. Madison acted as secretary. This Federation has been the only one of the three in our conference to meet with anything like regularity. And while the men are considerably scattered over a large territory yet they attend, all of them except three being present Monday and these had good reasons for not being present. Rev. G. L. Curry gave an illuminating discussion of the new discipline. Dr. Dixon presented the Children's Home and I spoke on the Progress of Methodist Union. The pastors gave good reports of their work. At the noon hour the women of the church served a fine dinner picnic style—free.

A Message in Verse

"Lost this day loitering, 'twill be the same story
Tomorrow, and the next more dilatory;
For indecision brings its own delays,
And days are lost lamenting over lost days.
Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute
What you can do, or think you can, begin it;
Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it;
Only engage, and then the mind grows heated;
Begin it, and the work will be completed."

—Goethe.

The fault finder is often most in fault, but if finding riches were as easy as finding fault none need be poor.

Pledge keeping should ever keep pace with promise making; one should strive to keep his pledge for only by so doing can he keep his friends, and without friends he is very poor indeed.

Near the end of his life Lord Byron said: "The thorns I have reaped are of the tree I planted; which must have been very true. And others may as well say that the flowers they have most enjoyed were the ones they helped to bloom."

It never hurts one to put his religion into politics one hundred per cent; not so is he, who foolishly put politics into his religion; it would be better for that man had he never sought to mix the two.

No Church can run a program a year on the fervor of the annual revival. Undirected emotions are like unconfined steam, soon dissipated. Neither can a Church conduct a successful program without the revival; the two must be geared up under the wise direction of a consecrated leader.

If any of our readers have forgotten the time of the meeting of the next annual conference of the former M. P. Church, it is October 18, place, Grace Church, Greensboro. The old time hum and hurry of pastor and stewards is less audible and obvious than usual. Let us hope that all that was to have been done in preparation has already been accomplished and they are just awaiting the expected day.

As the chairman of the Committee on Financial Recommendations understands it; the same allotment for World Service each church has this year, 1939, is to be accepted for 1940; so this committee need not make a new apportionment for this item, but the apportionments to annual conference claims will be different, therefore, each pastoral charge will have a different set-up in these brackets for 1940, however these apportionments are to be made by the Finance Committee of the united annual conference.

M. H. Waynick, Jr., a member of the West End Church, who recently graduated from the University of North Carolina, has accepted a position as teacher of music at Eli Whitney high school and entered upon his duties last week. He has a large number of piano students enrolled; he also teaches the band and directs the glee club of the school. Evidently Mr. Waynick will be very busy. He is a fine young man, a good musician and Eli Whitney is to be congratulated upon securing his services.

September 28, the day we go to press, is the birthday of Frances E. Williard. She first saw the light of this world on this date, 1839, one hundred years ago. A most remarkable woman, not so strong in body but with a courage that quailed before no foe; with a faith in God and in man vital enough to classify her among those heroes listed in Hebrews, chapter eleven. Her stature in grace and beauty stands in the rotunda of the Capital at Washington as a fitting recognition of the people of this country of her tireless and victorous fight for temperance. Long may the memory of her great life be treasured in the hearts of our people.

Religious Certitude

Against the expressed doubts and fears of so many, the word of God again and again declares the privilege of knowledge. Our Lord said to the woman at the well, "We know what we worship"; St. Paul, "I know whom I have believed"; St. John, "We know that we have passed from death unto life"; and the patriarch Job in the darkest hour of his search after the fuller knowledge of God, cried out in his anguish, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." It takes knowledge to separate superstition from worship. And God has not left us alone with our doubts and fears. Jesus said to His disciples, "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven." We may know what we worship; we may know what prayer is designed to do for the soul; we may experience eternal life. For every one may know "If we follow on to know the Lord." Eternal life is not just a dream, a fancy of the prophet, an ideal of an apostle; it is life in the Kingdom of God. He who dwells in doubt and is content to regard his religious life as a way of living that he is unable to understand, is living far below his privilege.

"He Who Pulls the Oars Has No Time To Rock the Boat"

Recently I read of a busy Church worker having this maxim printed in large letters, framed and sitting high on his desk. He was a busy man, and naturally, was one of the most dependable members of his Church; giving his time, his energy to intelligent planning; and contributing liberally of his means to the execution of those plans. And he had made a discovery many others have yet to make, that if one did his turn at the oars he would have neither time nor inclination to rock the boat. It is obviously a foolish thing to tug at the oars with all one's might to push the boat forward and then give over the oars to another and begin to rock the boat with the same determined effort. It looks like such a one does not want progress at all, he just wants to have his way about the boat.

Many Churches have in them some very husky boat-rockers. They never seem happier than when all who are in the boat are most unhappy or very disgusted. Some are sermon tasters of the most finicky sort, others are "general superintendents" of the Egyptian taskmaster style—skilled in the administration of the lash (of their tongue). And when the last word is spoken over their grave and the marker is carved to keep in memory the place where they lie, would it not be a fine epitaph to put on the marker, "Here lies one who was too busy rocking the boat to relieve the weary ones at the oars"?

Tabulating Results

This is the particular season for the Methodist minister and Church official to begin tabulating the results of the year. What progress has been made? Is the Church in a better condition than the year previous? What should have been done? Who is responsible for the failures? etc., etc. This all sounds most interesting, it affords many an opportunity for discussion. Among the criteria for judging the progress in a church are the increase in membership, and the amount of money raised that year. If there has been substantial increase in the membership, there usually is a feeling of satisfaction. At least the Church will not likely die from the lack of members soon. And if the budgets are all paid in full there is also satisfaction that those who belong to the Church think enough of it to support it. And so the blank upon which the pastor reports to the annual conference gives ample room to tabulate the results of these activities. And, we should not despise them.

But there ought to be a more definite way by which the pastor can report the faithfulness of those who serve, whose service is not that of the evangelist, nor the raising of money. We speak of those whose regularity at the Church service cannot be rebuked even by the clock; whose faithfulness in the performance of the smaller duties is as fine as the priest in the temple. Those people who make the pastor comfortable in his home, who cheer him with their friendly presence, who make the Church a Church, who make a Church service spiritual by their spirit, these are the people who make men believe in the reality of religion in the face of the most skilled attacks of the doubter and unbeliever. We know God keeps their names in His book of life in heaven but we wish so much that there was a place down here where the records of all such faithful souls were kept.

A CORRECTION

In the Call to Conference I stated that the Uniting Session of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church would be held at Rocky Mount. I was in error. It will meet at Fayetteville. I did not mention the date. The regular session of the now M. E. South Conference will begin on November 9. I suppose, although no notice has been published, that the uniting session will be held on November 10.

THE GREAT SUNDAY MORNING TRAGEDY

By Charles W. Koller, D.D.

It is the Sabbath morn. The old home-town with its lovely trees and lawns and flowers is smiling in the morning sun. The fragrant stillness brings memories of Galilean Sabbaths hallowed by the presence of the Saviour himself.

The town clock has just struck eleven. Listen! from the sanctuary of the church the first strains of music are heard. The organ is softly playing. The Sunday school is closing; and presently, in beautiful spiritual climax, the voices of young and old will mingle in the sanctuary, and the doxology will ascend like sweet incense to the throne of God.

But wait! From the Sunday school annex a conflicting melody is heard. The children begin to sing. "The Sunday school is over, and we are going home. Goodbye, goodbye—" From cradle days they have been singing the song, and through the years they have not ceased singing it and suiting the action to the words.

A door opens. An attractive young woman comes out, carrying her Bible under her arm. A little group of twelve-year-old girls is thronging about her. Affectionately they follow her down the street. Another door opens. Another teacher comes out, Bible in hand. He is a middle-aged man. He is going home. So is his class of adolescent boys. Another teacher comes out, and still another; and their pupils are following them.

The angels weep. The very teachers to whom the destinies of boys and girls have been entrusted are leading them away from the Lord's house, on the Lord's day, at the Lord's appointed hour of worship. Unwittingly they lead the unsaved away from the Saviour. Unwittingly they help to destroy the Sunday morning worship service, with which the church must ultimately stand or fall.

What an awakening, when the judgment shall disclose the consequences of that mistaken leadership which labors and prays for the salvation of the children in the Sunday school, and then frustrates God by leading them away from that further blessing in the house of God, through which they might be saved!—The Watchman-Examiner.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

THE INFANCY OF JESUS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, October 1

Lesson Text—Matthew 2:13-23.

Golden Text—And they shall call his name Immanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us.—Matt. 1:23.

To the Christian the story of the infancy of Jesus holds a tremendous fascination. Acknowledging as he does that Jesus is the Son of the True and Living God what a spectacular event must His birth and infancy of necessity be. It is no wonder that the Wise Men from the East travelled far to see this strange child; for whom would not make great effort to witness the birth of God? Isaiah associated many names with Jesus the Messiah that speak many volumes as to His nature and mission to the world. He called Him Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace, yet Matthew has given us a name that shatters our greatest imagination when he gives Him the name Immanuel, which is interpreted to mean God with us. If we believe God to be Wonderful, Councellor, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace, then what a tremendous fact does the Incarnation become.

"'Man of Sorrows,' what a name,
For the Son of God who came;
Ruined sinners to reclaim.
Hallelujah! What a Saviour."

In the opening pages of the Old Testament is found the sensational description of the creation of the universe with all its stupendous powers being brought into being. One can hardly comprehend the spectacle of the Spirit of God moving upon the darkness of the nothingness of space to produce the heaven and earth that even God Himself looking upon was led to exclaim, It is good! Yet having said all this about the wonder of the creation story as to the significance of the heavenly bodies we hasten to say that more spectacular by far than all the "sea and dry land" is the fact that man being made in the image of God. This one fact forever placed man above all creation to dress and keep and subdue it. In the opening pages of the New Testament, however, is found a still higher fact than this: that of God being made in the image of man. If to be made in the image of God exalted man then the compliment of God in allowing Himself through the incarnation of Jesus Christ to become a man is forever the crowning glory with which God has honored the nature of man.

"Lowly to us, O Lord, as Thou
In humility dost bow,
So high our nature lift with Thine,
Till human things become divine."
J. S. B. Monsell.

Thus, in the first place, the infancy of Jesus as He takes the name Immanuel teaches us of the honor God confers on human nature.

In the second place it teaches the divine sympathy that God has with human life. The coming of this Babe is to forever prove to men that God is able to be touched by their infirmities in that in Christ He had been tempted in all points like unto them. Rudyard Kipling who wrote so understandingly of the English exile in India gives the reason for this ability in his own words when he said:

"I have eaten your bread and salt,
I have drunk your water and wine,
The deaths ye died I have watched beside,
And the lives that ye led were mine."

Gad had made man but He had never been man. He had seen men toil but He had never had calloused hands Himself so He became the Carpenter of Nazareth. He had heard men weep but He had not wept so He became the Son of a widow. He had never felt the soul-shattering pangs of physical pain so He allowed Himself to bring salvation by the way of the Cross. Who can remember that the name of this Babe was Immanuel and doubt the sympathy of God. Shakespeare rightly explains the absence of sympathy in those who have not experienced the struggles of others when he said, "He scoffs at scars who never felt a wound." Never can we feel that God ignores the scars of our human battles when we remember that He received like wounds while upon earth. Surely, with His stripes are we healed.

Again the coming of Jesus into the world teaches that God has provided not only symathy for our plight but a remedy for the ills of human life. His coming is God's supreme effort of love to bring lost men back to their right relationship with God. Moody summed it up thus, "To create man, God had only to speak; to redeem him, He had to suffer. He made man by His breath; He saved him by His blood." The presence of this little Babe showed that man's salvation would come by man, "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection." As we watch the Child grow into manhood as the Son of God we naturally watch for the miraculous that would prove Him to be God, yet if we watch Him closely we shall see that the most miraculous thing about Jesus was His determination not to be miraculous but to be human. As a man He was able to best save man, thus He "took not the form of angels but the seed of Abraham that He might be a better high priest."

HAPPENINGS ALONG THE UNITED FRONT OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN THE LOCAL CHURCH DIVISION

In addition to conducting our large series of summer camps and conferences which has just closed, the leaders of the former Methodist Protestant Church have been sharing in many other enterprises along the united front of Religious Education in the Local Church Division. Some of these projects are:

National Council of Methodist, Warrenton, Mo., Aug. 30-Sept. 3, 1939. Six young people representing general youth work and one representing student work along with the writer had the privilege of attending the National Council of Methodist Youth, held at Warrenton, Mo., August 30-September 3, 1939 on the campus of the Central Wesleyan College, Warrenton, Mo. Those representing youth work were: Donald Barss, Coshocton, Ohio; Lea Joyner, Grayson, La., Wilson Little, New Brighton, Pa., Mary Neel, Birmingham, Ala., Bette Marsh, Ionia, Mo., and F. L. Gibbs, Pittsburgh, Penna. While there these young people shared with representatives of the other three churches in exploring the youth program for the new Methodist Church. The Methodist Protestant group decided upon the following general principles as a basis for the new program. We found the other two groups agreeing to these principles in part. They are:

First: That a National Organization of Young People of the Methodist Church is Vital and Necessary, and that one be democratically organized.

Second: That This Organization in its program and guidance be closely related for administrative purposes, to the agencies and Board of the Methodist Church responsible for a total youth program.

Third: The plan of Organization, whether Local Church, Annual Jurisdictional, or National, be so constructed as to safeguard youth initiative, expression, and responsibility which is necessary for proper growth and leadership development. At the same time proper adult counseling and guidance is to be provided.

Fourth: We find ourselves in harmony with the Uniting Conference legislation pertaining to the Youth Work of the Methodist Church: (a) Local Church; (b) Annual Conference; (c) Districts; (d) Jurisdiction Conference; and (e) General Conference.

Fifth: We recommend that there be held in the late summer or early fall of 1940 a National Methodist Youth Conference or Convention. The program and Organization of which to be worked out by the eighteen young people meeting in Nashville, Tenn., September 22-24, 1939, in cooperation with leaders of Youth responsible for the youth work of the former three churches forming the Methodist Church.

There will be a meeting of eighteen young people and the sub-committees of Educational Institution and Local Church of the Joint Committee at Nashville, Tenn., September 22-24, 1939 to discuss further the program of youth work for the Methodist Church and to recommend a final plan to the Joint Committee on Education. The Methodist Protestant Church will have two young people on this committee. Mr. Donald Barss of Ohio will represent the general youth work and our other member will be appointed by Dr. F. W. Stephenson to represent the student work.

The writer is thrilled with the possibilities of a great youth program for the new Methodist Church.

Staff Meeting of the Division of the Local Church of the Three Boards of Education, Chicago, Illinois, September 11, 12, 13. We have just returned from this most helpful meeting in Chicago. The entire staff of the three churches met together for a part of three days for the purpose of arriving at "a common interpretation of the legislation enacted by the Uniting Conference as it affects Christian Education in the local church, to the end that the members of the Staffs of these Departments and Divisions may make a common interpretation in their fields; and for the further purpose of planning for cooperation between these Departments and Divisions wherever practicable between this time and the organization of the Board of Education following the General Conference." This meeting proved to be a great step toward a United Front in this very important phase of the program for the Methodist Church. At a later date the results of these meetings will be given to the paper and will form a basis for procedure in children's work, youth work, adult work, leadership education, missionary education, etc.

During this ad-interim period the sphere of influence for the Southern Board will be the south central and south eastern jurisdictions. The sphere of influence of the Northern Board would be all other jurisdictions. The Board of Christian Education of the former Methodist Protestant Church will, for the present, maintain its office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and will cooperate in every possible way with these two Boards in their areas of influence.

We are confident that all these steps in the work being done are in the direction of a more adequate program of Christian Education in the Methodist Church.

FOREIGN MISSIONS AND TODAY'S WORLD

By Charles Daniel Brodhead

Against the rival faith of indigenous religions, totalitarian nationalism, and secular paganism, Christian cooperation appeared all the more timely and vital at the forty-sixth annual session of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. For eight days, 300 delegates from more than 60 denominations and 150 denominational and interdenominational boards and agencies convened at Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pa., where they lived together in the college dormitories, worshiped and discussed together in the beauty of Clothier Memorial or in the quiet and simplicity of the Quaker meeting house. Charged with the responsibility of putting the recommendations of the Madras conference of the International Missionary Council into action, they sought conclusive thinking for what their boards and agencies should do to carry out the Madras findings and meet the challenges for the kingdom of God amid contemporary world conditions. One index of how well they succeeded came from President Lee of Hankow University, who said that what impressed him most at the conference was ''the sincerity of all and the lack of politics, often found in church gatherings.''

The missionary imperative stressed individual commitments. Such has been the movement in Shanghai to reach the alumni there of the Christian schools, inasmuch as teachers, doctors, nurses, and other professionals tend to congregate in large cities. About twenty per cent of the Chinese students in the Christian middle schools and forty per cent in the Christian colleges have accepted Christ and joined the church. All the others have been influenced by Christianity and become interested in it. They are being sought and won by a united evangelistic approach. What has been done in Shanghai should and can and will be done elsewhere.

The Commission on Evangelism, on ''The Life-Giving Church,'' made a practical recommendation that has marked possibilities in many centers for ''a group of missionary board to hold a conference on evangelism with board secretaries, board members, and missionaries home on furlough. Such a conference might review and exchange the experiences of missionaries in different parts of the world and in cooperation with a group of local churches engage in some definite form of evangelism in the city in which the conference meets.''

The missionary urge also emphasized more Christian attitudes in personal and social relations. A Young Men's Christian Association secretary who for a quarter of a century has been over at Cairo, Egypt, told how Moslems there resent a direct evangelistic approach but have been responding to his more indirect advances. According to their Moslem tradition, everything is done to win merit and thus attain their heavenly entrance. Now they have been learning to serve for the sake of others, taking the Christian attitude of concern and service without the label.

Inasmuch as ''Jesus disclosed the fundamental principles upon which healthy and progressive economic and social relationships can be built,'' the church was summoned to a new approach and into divine guidance for social and economic problems. In rural churches, ''wider study and demonstration should be given to the comprehensive or parish program: better agriculture, better health, better recreation, better homes, better economic organization, widening of intellectual horizons, enrichment of rural life through music, drama, and other forms of the arts, development of community spirit, as well as the vitally important work of Christian preaching and teaching, worship, fellowship, and service.''

Hence the missionary demand has come for a united front and an ecumenical church. No wonder Dr. James Moffatt, who led the daily worship morning and evening, closed his final message with ''Blest be the tie that binds.'' Franklin D. Cogswell of the Missionary Education Movement suggested the timely name of the hymnal used at the conference: ''Hymns of the Widening Kingdom.'' One leader confessed that some within his denomination regard themselves as guardians of truth, when all are guardians of truth, to be shared like leaven in the lump. It was asked why the Methodists of China entered The Methodist Church in China instead of the Church of Christ in China. National Christian councils were encouraged. The West China situation is demanding ''united planning on the part of Christian agencies, and pooling of evangelistic, educational, medical, and other resources.'' The call for a larger unity not only was made by speakers like Dr. John R. Mott and Dr. Samuel M. Cavert but was felt in all the deliberations and decisions.

Japanese and Chinese delegates were associated together in the conference. The Far Eastern committee will study carefully the suggestion for exchange visits between Japan and China of skilled and internationally experienced missionaries.

During the sessions a cablegram from Chengtu, West China, told of the bombing of West China Union University. Its more than sixty buildings house not only its faculty and students in the arts, science, religion, medicine, dentistry, and education, but now four other Chinese universities, exiled from the occupied territory. Here for four decades Dr. Joseph Beech, Wesleyan 1899, has been building the kingdom of God in this richest and most westernly Chinese province. Now this cablegram of bombs over Chengtu was a tragic parable of the baffling forces faced by the Commission on World Tensions, so that it registered wide-spread discussion. It was agreed that ''the desperate need of the world is for the Christian insight and a demonstrated Christian strategy for overcoming enmity, injustice, exploitation, and dishonorable dealings in international relations.''

To the local churches it was recommended that, ''since the world mission of the church is one, the boards urge the local churches to coordinate closely their work for missions, peace, and the ecumenical movement (all three being concerned with world tensions). Instead of three separate committees competing for program, time, and appropriations, there should be one, with division of responsibility. The boards suggest to the local churches a church library section on the world mission of the church rather than three separate sections."—Zion's Herald.

THE DISCIPLINE OF THE INNER LIFE

By Levi Dawson

Fellowship with God is a gift. Wesley proclaimed it as within the reach of all. That does not mean, however, that it is obtained easily. A man needs all his endeavors before he can gain that communion.

To enter the kingdom of heaven, Jesus said, a man must strive hard. He must keep on seeking until he finds. He must be as persistent as a neighbor knocking for bread at midnight. In the words of the apostle, he must "contend earnestly for the faith." God is not unwilling to grant the fellowship, but a man must want it more than anything else in the world before he can appropriate it.

It is a law of life that nothing worth while can be attained without effort. Education is free to all. Books were never so easy to obtain. The wisdom of the ages is within the reach of all, however poor. To appropriate this gift to himself a man must strive hard. He must spend hours in study. He must deny himself much that is pleasant in order to gain his place in the kingdom of the wise. Any man can obtain that prize if he wants it badly enough to sacrifice for it.

It is not other with God's greatest gift. The saints bear witness that entrance to the kingdom of heaven is free to all, but its door open only to those who press violently. A man wrestles in prayer, he must agonize to enter through the narrow door. Without that striving on man's part God cannot give. Man must be able to receive. Wireless waves have been in existence ever since the world was made, but it was only after much struggle that man was able to receive. Reception of spiritual power is likewise not gained without a struggle.

The most important thing for those who would know God is to take time be be alone with Him. That is a struggle for most of us. Life is so full and time is so occupied. Yet time must be found even if something else has to go. It is no good saying we have no time to pray. We shall find time if we want it badly enough. That is God's condition. We can find time for things when they matter enough to us. Haphazard prayer has never yet led to an experience. A disciple's road is a disciplined road and the vision only comes to the man who submits to the discipline.

Paderewski is reported to have said that if he missed practicing one day he noticed the difference in his playing. If he stopped for two days his family noticed it, three days and his friends remarked about it, a week and the world knew it. So much does greatness depend on discipline. One of the secrets of the unreality of our religion is the smallness of our prayer. We must recover the discipline of the seeker before we can see the vision of the saint.

We need not only disciplined time but harder thinking. We cannot feel the power of God until we strive to know something of His mind and purpose. Friend cannot talk with friend in the secret places until there is real understanding of heart. That is why the Bible and the work of the saints must mean so much to us. To company with those who have known Him intimately is to gain that understanding of His ways which is so indispensable.

A second-hand religion, gained only from the utterance of preachers and talks in a class meeting is never really vital. There must be discipline of individual search—a man must find God for himself. There is a strange lack of faith and the assurance of victory among Christians today. The world situation, the indifference of men and women, are too much for us. We wonder and faint and become inert. There is a real connection between this state of mind and the fact that we are no longer a Bible reading people. The assurance of our fathers came because they lived the Scriptures, and there they saw and heard their God. When we recover their love for their Book we shall know their faith.

We have plenty of ideals for the world and for ourselves. We have good moral principles by which we guide our conduct. These things alone are insufficient. To have the certainty of God a man must have the disciplined life. Only he who chooses conflict rather than casualness in this sphere will know the witness of things unshakable.

There is no finding without seeking in the Christian life. It is also wonderfully true that there is no seeking without finding. The search may be a long one, the striving may be hard, but the answer is certain. If seeking is the indispensable condition, finding is the unrevoked promise. To those who seek through the darkness and struggle on over heavy roads there is the knowledge that Christ went that same way and that His vision may be ours.

The disciplined life is the only life into which God can come in His fullness. In the struggle there is perfecting of character and the making ready for the guest. For man is not the only one who is seeking. God also seeks and longs to be known. God also knocks and longs to enter. God also strives—

> About your gates I shall not cease to plead
> As man to speak with man,
> Till by such art
> I shall achieve by immemorial plan
> Pass the low lintel of the human heart.

When God and man seek together they find each other and share the joy.—The Methodist Recorder, London.

APPRECIATION OF THE M. P. HERALD

By Mrs. Claude Hawkins

To be able to express my sentiments regarding my association with our own Methodist Protestant Herald, I would need a spontaneous mind, and the pen of a ready writer. Nevertheless, I will say in all sincerity that as reporter for Hawkins Chapel for the past ten years, I have had the blessed privilege of spiritual contract with many dear people; and through the pages of the Herald I have learned and loved the work of the various churches, a joy which otherwise I should not have known.

I have never met Dr. McCulloch personally, yet I have felt that he was an intimate and faithful friend. It has been my good fortune to meet both Dr. Pritchard and Dr. Andrews through my work as reporter to the HERALD, and was very much impressed by their sincerity to the cause of the church. The high motives of the HERALD and the promotion of the gospel of Jesus and Lord: and not only those, many others, all of whom will join me in expressing our heartfelt thanks for the wonderful work of the HERALD. Though the years as our church paper, and should the publication be discontinued we as a united group will sustain a decided disappointment.

In reviewing the past ten years of service as reporter to the HERALD and recalling the many happy hours I have spent in spirit with the various writers and the comfort I have derived from the pen of those whose hearts are full of the Holy Spirit and whose every word is an inspiration to my soul—ah! there I find no words adequate to express my sentiments. So in the words of the beloved Psalmist, the sweet singer of Israel, I will say: Oh praise the Lord all ye nations, praise Him all ye people, for His merciful kindness is great towards us, and the truth of the Lord endureth forever, praise ye the Lord.

The Lord shall preserve thee from evil; He shall preserve the soul.

The Lord preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and even for evermore.

THE LOST SHEEP

By REV. W. A. LEDFORD

The three parables found in the fifteenth chapter of Luke, teach among other things, that God does not lose sight of the individual, in a great crowd. Jesus tells us that the Shepherd calls His own sheep by name. Many of us have interesting names here, but it would be a great deal more interesting to know the name our heavenly Father calls us by. It warms my heart to know that God loves the world, but it melts it into tenderness to know that "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." All these precious truths in harmony with the fact that God knows the number of the hairs of our heads, and sees where the sparrow falls. How unlike the modern world, which seeks to let all people go by number. The shepherd missed the straying sheep, the woman the lost coin and the younger son was continually missed until he returned home.

The Parable of the Lost Sheep is given by Matthew in a rather different connection from Luke's setting. Both unmistakably teach how precious the little ones are in the Father's sight. We gather this from Matthew's story of the penalty imposed for causing one of them to stumble. The penalty make us shudder. "Who shall cause one of these little ones to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck, and he should be sunk in the depth of the sea." This penalty should be written in large letters, and placed before all betrayers of youth.

Matthew suggests another proof of the preciousness of little ones in God's sight, namely, that each one has a guardian angel. "See that you dispise not one of these little ones: for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven." We guard against the safety of a thing in proportion to the value we place on it. We lock our most valuable earthly papers in great bank vaults. I shall not soon forget the care taken to preserve, "The Great Chalice of Antioch," at the World's Fair in Chicago. It was insured for five hundred thousand dollars, locked in a glass case, and guarded day and night. Our God does not trusting the keeping of us even to our mothers, but to the One that neither slumbers nor sleeps.

Luke agrees with Matthew, in showing that God holds His little ones to be very precious in His sight. This is seen in the searching love of the shepherd and the woman, and the waiting love of the father for the son's return. He extended his search until the lost sheep was found. There is no place in the economy of God for faint-heartedness, growing weary in well doing and feeble efforts: yea, nothing short of one's best. The indifference, the neglect, the trivial way so many treat their God given privileges and opportunities is sickening to faithful church people, and enough to make angels weep.

It is a very comforting fact, that the Good Shepherd, didn't drive the tired, worn and straying sheep home; lashing it unmerciful, nor did he place it on the shoulder of some servant, or hirling; but on his own strong shoulder. This fact is not only illustrated in the parable of the Lost Sheep, but is also taught in the book of Revelation, "The Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall be their shepherd, and shall guide them unto the fountains of waters of life: and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes." This is doubly comforting since, "All we like sheep have gone astray: we have turned every one to his own way." Is. 53:6. Paul writing to the Romans said, "We have all sinned and come short of the glory of God." The Apostle John wrote, "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father." Jesus commanded, saying, "After this manner, therefore pray ye. . . . And forgive us our debts, as we have also forgiven our debtors." Jesus came seeking the lost.

Some years ago I heard Bishop Francis J. McConnell preach from the text, "We know that to them that love God all things work together for good." The scholarly bishop explained that the key word in his text was "together." We know how we are overwhelmed by certain experiences in life, which almost crush us. But taken together with our mountain top experiences, we learn that these darker, more trying ones were really and truly for our good. The key word in all these parables is "until." There is no let up in the search until the lost was found. There is an adage, "A faint heart never won a fair lady," and is just as truthful, "A fait heart never won a lost soul." In these trying, saddened days the Christian world needs to hear often, "Let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Gal. 6:9.

These parables were spoken for the encouragement of the publicans and sinners, who were drawing near unto Jesus; and to rebuke the scribes and the Pharisees, because of their murmuring because the publicans and sinners did come. The Christ had a lot of trouble with the proud, boasting Pharisees, who felt themselves better than other people. They were so set in their ways, that they would not join in the songs of jubilation at Christ's Triumphal Entry; nor welcome home, the prodigals, who had been dead, and were alive again: were lost and found again. Could such a spirit still exist among church members, who object to any excitement, or emotional expressions?

It is nauseating to hear how cheaply we use certain phrases. Take that one, "Over the Top." We sing the Doxology, and shout "Over the top," when we have completed a undertaking that called for neither sacrifices, nor struggles worthy of the name. Unmindful of what it cost the men over seas to "Go over the top" in the World War. This phrase in these parables "Rejoice with me" and translated by Drs. Goodspeed and Weymouth, "Congratulate me," has been cheapened till we congratulate our friends on the most trivial accomplishments. The highest grounds for congratulations is to be a part of God's redemptive purpose in this world of sin and sorrow. Often we congratulate our friends over bringing home some prize easily won, and fail to congratulate the winner of precious souls, which cause rejoicing among the angels.

RESUME OF SUMMER CONFERENCE SCHOOLS

Beginning with Missouri and Texas the first week in June and continuing to the end of the series with Kansas, closing August 27, twenty-eight summer training projects were under the auspices of the Board of Christian Education in cooperation with our twenty-six Conference Councils of Religious Education. To these came some three thousand students and workers to whom were issued about three thousand units of the new Standard Leadership Training Curriculum. Seven hundred and fifty-eight signed Life Service Declaration Cards in the decision services and the popular attendance reached approximately seven thousand. Three hundred and sixty-three First Certificates of Progress and eight Second Certificates of Progress were issued. One hundred faculty members and a large number of staff workers gave of their time aside from their already busy program in order to make this far-reaching enterprise a success. In many of these enterprises, leaders of the former Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South cooperated. Also a number of students from the other two Methodist Churches found their way into our schools. In addition to the large number of volunteer workers, the following field workers contributed much to this series: J. E. Olson, M. A. Williams, J. Clyde Auman, E. L. Ballard, Mrs. Amos Banks, Miss Lillie Foster, W. C. Mathes, Miss Lea Joyner, Mrs. J. W. Shell, and T. L. Crenshaw. These workers traveled twelve thousand and six hundred and one miles and rendered twenty-eight weeks of service at a total cost of only $598.70.

It is interesting to note that our summer conference schools have been quite successful even though there has been some uncertainty because of the adjustments being made leading to complete Methodist Union. These enterprises have reached practically every section of the former Methodist Protestant Church and are considered to have such value that it is the earnest desire of the leaders of our three Boards that wherever possible that they be conserved for the new Methodist Church. In many cases our schools can be merged with similar enterprises but in a large number of cases where we have well-established camps, they will more than likely become a neucleus around which will be built a larger and more effective program of summer leadership education than has been possible in the three separate churches.

We wish to take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the large number of workers who contributed to the success of schools and to assure them that they will have no little part in the program of Christian Education of the new Methodist Church. We trust that the large number of students who were trained in these enterprises for work in the local church will render every service possible to make their church programs effective in their own community.

THE CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE

Just to be tender, just to be true,
Just to be glad the whole day through,
Just to be merciful, just to be mild,
Just to be merciful as a little child,
Just to be gentle and kind and sweet,
Just to be helpful with willing feet,
Just to be cheery when things go wrong,
Just to drive sadness away with a song,
Whether the hour is dark or bright,
Just to be loyal to God and right,
Just to believe that God knows best,
Just in His presence ever to rest,
Just to let love be our daily key,
That is God's will for you and me.

THE SANCTITY OF HOME

A Christian home should be heaven begun on earth. It will be if it is the abode of warm and loving hearts. Serene but inspiring is the household which thinks, works, rejoices, and sorrows together; whose personalities are all melted down by divine grace, uniting them in love. "A lamp," said Robert McCheyne, the great Scottish preacher, "is a very small thing, and it burns calmly, and without noise, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." So there are great but quiet influences which, like the flame of a sacred lamp, fill many a home with light and fragrance. A soft, deep carpet not only diffuses a look of ample comfort, it deadens many a creaking sound; so is the peace of a Christian home. A strong curtain wards off the summer heat and the wintry winds; so a sweet family fellowship is a shield protecting all the members. A soft pillow may make some forget their misery, and a tired mind soon forget its cares in the delights of a comfortable Christian home. Its influence is like the fresh evening breeze at the close of a burning day. There would be fewer aching hearts if there were more Christian homes. When you turn your face homeward think of Jesus and heaven. Our Lord raised three persons from the dead. One was an only son; another, an only daughter; the third, an only brother. Whenever He entered a home He sanctified it with peace and radiant life. Make sure that Jesus is in the sacred presence of your home.—Watchman-Examiner.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS AND WORLD PEACE

We are indebted to Mrs. Henry C. Sprinkle, Jr., of Black Mountain, chairman of international relations and world peace of our Conference Bureau of Christian Social Relations, for the following splendid article which we know will be read with interest:

"In the past few weeks the cause of world peace has received what appears to be a mortal blow. Those of us who have studied, talked, and prayed for peace must now redouble our efforts. Dark as the European scene appears today, it should be remembered that the tragedy and horror resulting from the appeal to violence simply argue for the cause of peace and the peaceful methods of settling international disputes. The great danger lies in our wavering faith and our tendency to yield to the war spirit and the propaganda to arouse emotions of anger and of fear.

"Granting that the democracies of western Europe did not enter upon this war until every possibility of peaceful settlement had been exhausted, and that our sympathies are on their side, we who believe in peace must keep our heads, and we must keep our faith. We who enjoy the security of peace at present have no right to feel superior in any way to those who have been caught in the catastrophe, but we must strive more earnestly than ever to prevent the spread of war to neutral nations and to bring about an honorable peace as soon as possible. We believe that we can best help those with whom we sympathize by staying out of this war.

"Our first and most important means of helping the cause of peace remains the way of prayer. The God of peace has not forsaken his cause. He still hears the prayers of humanity, and he is still our Rock and our Salvation. We cannot escape the influence of press and radio, but we can keep our balance if we keep in touch with God. And it is still true that—

'More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of.'

"A second means of helping in the cause of peace is through intelligent personal appeals to representatives in Congress. This means that we must keep informed about the issues that will arise from time to time. There are few people who do not follow the news reports with deep concern these days. But it is well to keep in mind that propaganda is one of the strongest measures used in modern warfare. As the war progresses, more and more pressure will be applied to neutral countries, and an uninformed people is the natural prey of propaganda. The immediate question about the revision of our existing neutrality law is a case in point. This law was framed with the purpose of keeping America out of war. It is invoked for the first time, despite the fact that a war has been going on in the Orient for many months. It may be that this law ought to be changed, but let us be sure that such changes are not made with the purpose of enabling America to make money out of the misery of war and that these changes do not increase the likelihood of our being drawn into the conflict. Thus far the issues have not been presented clearly enough to enable us to say more with certainty, but when the Christian conscience can speak, our representatives in Congress should be urged to stand for the kind of neutrality legislation that makes for peace."—From North Carolina Christian Advocate.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Gisbourne J. Cherry

Gisbourne J. Cherry, "Gibb" as he was familiarly known among his many friends, was the son of Gisbourne J. Cherry and Elizabeth White Cherry; born August 12, 1869, and died July 30, 1939. Had he lived a few days longer he would have reached the age of three-score and ten.

He united with Rehoboth church in his boyhood days during the pastorate of Rev. W. T. Totten, and remained faithful and loyal until the end of his life. He gave generously to its support and always had the interest of his church at heart. He spent much of his vacation time at his old home in Washington county. While he was there he invited his pastor to see him; one especially, Rev. R. L. Hethcox, who was his pastor for many years. Mr. Cherry was planning to have Rev. Mr. Hethcox visit him in his home in Charleston, South Carolina, and conduct services in the Star Gospel Mission, as he did some years ago. The deceased was one of the trustees of this great mission work in Charleston and contributed very largely to its support; he was also one of the trustees of the M. P. Children's Home, High Point, N. C. He took one of the boys from this Home years ago and trained him for his office; today he is secretary of the business and one of the most highly respected men in Charleston. Mr. G. J. Cherry often remarked, "A son could never be more dutiful and respectful to a father than he has been to me."

Mr. Cherry has been in the lumber business since he was 17 years old. He began his business career with the Branning Manufacturing Company in Edenton, N. C., and served in this capacity for a year. At that time the Parmele and Eccleston Lumber Co. at Parmeel wanted a young man to be superintendent of their mill. They chose him because he did not drink. For many years he was superintendent of that organization. While there he organized the North State Lumber Co. and moved to Charleston, S. C., and located his plant on the Cooper river; this was 44 years ago. He was a rugged individualist, one who practiced honesty and integrity in his business. His estimate of himself is that he was a successful business man and had always taken God as his partner. Not long before he passed away he remarked to many people that he was so happy and enjoyed life so that he did not want to retire; but when the Master called, "I am ready to go."

He was stricken with paralysis the morning of July 24th, and passed away so peacefully the night of the 30th at his home in Charleston. Funeral services were held in Grace Episcopal church, which he attended, and interment was in Magnolia cemetery.

Mr. Cherry was married twice. His first wife was the former Miss Emma Mayo of North Carolina, and his widow Mrs. Elizabeth Cherry of Virginia. He is survived by his second wife and one sister, Mrs. Sallie Cherry Davenport, Washington county, N. C.

To the Leader

Observe that this is the first of two topics on the subject, "Witnessing for Christ." This two-week unit provides an opportunity for the members to reconsecrate themselves to Christ and His work at the beginning of the new year of activity. This, the first of the two topics, deals with the commitment of the members to Christ which is an act that generates an adhesive power uniting Christians in one body and in a common cause. Common devotion of the members to Christ is the beginning of a move in the right direction. Knowing that commitment involves an inward transformation and an outward conformation, the members should be encouraged to seek the new life in Christ Jesus and endeavor to live a new life in fellowship with Him and His followers. Note that committing ourselves to Christ involves a "togetherness" without which there can be no fulfillment of the second commandment of our Lord.

Questions for the Open Forum

1. In the Scriptural sense, what do we mean by commitment?
2. What does the commitment of the individual to Christ involve?
3. What demands does commitment to Christ make on the individual?
4. What are the inward results of a commitment? The outward?
5. How may one develop a "want to"? An "ought to"?
6. Of what value, if any, is a group commitment to Christ?
7. What rules for the road can you suggest for a committed group?
8. Can we and will we live the rules suggested?
9. What do you mean by transformation of life? Confirmation? Conformation?
10. What can we do, as individuals, to make Christ live in our C. E. Society?
11. As a group, what can we do to make Christ real to one another? To the world?
12. If you knew you had but one more C. E. meeting to attend on earth, how would you spend it?

The Poets

A seven-years' lad gazed sadly on
The manor house of Daylesford.
"It shan't be thus. I will regain
Our lost estate of Daylesford."
He toiled afar, but ne'er forgot
He'd Hastings be of Daylesford.

A man perceives his soul is barred
From access to his true estate.
"Though far I wander, long I strive,
I'll not be shut from mine estate."
A new life-center he has found—
He'll claim and conquer his estate.
—St. Clair Adams.

Peace has unveiled her smiling face,
And woos the soul to her embrace;
Enjoyed with ease, if thou refrain
From selfish love, else sought in vain;
She dwells with all who truth prefer,
But seeks not them who seek not her.
Yield to the Lord, with simple heart,
All that thou hast, and all thou art;
Renounce all strength but strength divine;
And peace shall be forever thine;
Behold the path which I have trod,
My path, till I go home to God.
—Madame Guyon.

Topic Hints

Commitment: The word "commit" may be used in many and various ways. An up-to-date dictionary and a good thesaurus of English words prove this fact. Words are symbols and conversation means little if these symbols are not understood by both the speaker and the hearer. We are now using the word "commitment' as a relationship between Christians and their Christ. Thus we might say that "to commit" means "to connect." If we accept this interpretation of the word, we reach the conclusion that "committing ourselves to Christ" is "connecting ourselves with Christ." This connection is perfectly illustrated by our Master when He said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." John 15:5.

Transformation: Transformation of man is the first work of God in a penitent soul. Said Jesus to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John 3:3. Repent was the command of Jesus and repent was the message of His apostles. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," said Paul. 2 Cor. 5:17. This new-born man and this new creature have passed through a transformation. This changed man is no longer carnal in mind, wicked in heart, nor wayward in will. His interest has been turned from the things of the flesh to the things of the spirit. He is connected to Christ because he has been made a spiritual being. Spiritual man is connected to a spiritual Lord.

Conformation: A transformed person very naturally conforms to the things of his Transformer. No longer is he "conformed to the things of the world" but he delights in conforming to the things which glorify his Lord and which edify his own soul. Conforming to the ways of the Lord is one of the problems which the modern world faces. We are inclined to believe that the problem presents itself because "professing transformation" has been substituted for "transformation." Men of unction should have no trouble in living lives of action. Again the problem arises because the dim eyes of men have not seen that when they disobey the laws of God they invite personal and social disaster. The committal of a life to Christ includes the committal of the ways to Him.

Means of Grace: A commitment to Christ includes a commitment to the means of Grace. A person is what he is by the Grace of God, but he keeps what he is by the same Grace. God's Grace is sufficient but man's reception must be efficient. The Bible is a means of Grace when it is lived as well as read and studied. Prayer is a means of Grace to the man who prays as well as talks about prayer and believes in it. The Lord's Supper is a means of Grace if there is a communion of the communicant's spirit with God's spirit as well as a pious observance. Baptism is a means of Grace if the heart is cleansed as well as a ceremony observed. Committing ourselves to Christ includes committing ourselves to the means of Grace.

The Way of Life: Committing ourselves to Christ includes committing ourselves to Christ's way of life. In the committal, Christ becomes Lord over every phase of life. His teaching and example become the law of life. Read again the Sermon on the Mount and note the way our Lord encourages His followers to live. Read again the story of His life and see how He lived what He taught. There can be only one conclusion. The committed to Christ is committed to Christ's way of living in the home, in the school, in office and shop, in business and industry, in leisure and in labor, in trouble and in triumph. "Commit thy way unto the Lord." Ps. 37:5.

NATURE'S ADAPTATIONS

A recent writer in the Scientific American tells us that man at one time had power to move his ears; that all the muscles are there now but man has lost control of them. He declares that those animals having this power are enabled thereby to detect more readily simultaneous sounds, which enables them more readily to detect foes from any quarter and defend themselves more readily. Man in his primitive state needed also this power. But as there has been less and less use for it in his advance in intelligence the power thus to use his ears has passed away. But instead the stationary ear gives him greater ability to detect successive sounds and has thus enabled him to develop all the higher beauties of language and music. Having become a man he has put away childish things. "When that which is perfect is come then that which is in part shall be done away." —J. W. D.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Moriah, Rev. J. Leo Pittard, Pastor.—Quite a few interesting things have happened at our church since our last report. We had a grand meeting beginning the last Sunday in August. Rev. Charles Sharpe preached for us at the morning service and the Ladies' Auxiliary was in charge of the afternoon program. Mr. John R. Hughes, prominent attorney of Greensboro, gave a splendid talk and the ladies filled the choir. All in all, it was an ideal home-coming service. During the following week Rev. Mr. Stevenson of Durham preached for us each evening at 7:30. He is a grand preacher. You that missed his sermons just can't imagine what you did miss. We had four new members added to our list, Mr. and Mrs. Gray, Mrs. Clarence Curtis, and Mrs. Richard Glass.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is having its thank-offering program next Sunday night, October 1, at 7:30. They are giving a pageant, "The Lighted Highway." Everyone is cordially invited. This promises to be a good program, and, too, the offering counts on our World Service budget.

Rev. J. Sylvester Higgins was a visitor at our Christian Endeavor meeting last Sunday night. We have had the pleasure of hearing him preach and we welcome him and all other visitors to these services.

The quarterly conference meets the second Sunday in October immediately after service. All members are urged to be present. This meeting has been designated as the time for election of officers for the coming year.

North Davidson Charge, O. B. Williams, Pastor.—We are now in the closing weeks of our first year as pastor of this fine group of rural churches. Since we have a Herald reporter at each church, I have not written many reports to the paper. In this letter I want to refer to the progress that has been made.

We have held our special meetings. At Mount Pleasant the preaching was by Rev. T. Glenn Madison. His preaching was very effective, the church was revived, and seven new members were added.

At Canaan church the preaching was by Rev. W. L. Harkey. His preaching was truly on the evangelistic order that gets the desired results, the church being revived and 13 new members added.

At Bethesda church the preaching was by Rev. J. Paul Pegg. He was pastor of this church only a few years ago, and everyone was glad for his return; his preaching was very instructive and helpful, the church people rededicated themselves, and five new new members were added to the church.

At Spring Hill church the preaching was by Rev. James T. Bowman; his good preaching was appreciated by everyone, especially the young folks, and they number more than half the congregation. We had a good meeting; nine new members were added to the church.

All the churches are in a better spiritual condition and 34 new members have been added.

Many material improvements have been made. Mount Pleasant church has been painted, and it certainly presents a new appearance; this improvement cost $178 and was paid by our Women's Auxiliary. They certainly know how to do things that should be done to keep the local church in fine repair.

Bethesda church has a new roof on the auditorium at a cost of $85, and it was paid for by special effort of the trustees; the money was raised from the congregation.

The Ladies' Aid society at Canaan church has raised the money for painting the church and bids are now being asked for; the work is expected to be completed by conference.

At Spring Hill the Ladies' Aid society has raised the money for, and are having a cement walk laid around the church. They are assisting the church in the improvement of finishing the Sunday school rooms in the church basement; they have also recently paid for a beautiful painting—a picture of the Master knocking at the door. This has been placed in the auditorium and dedicated.

The parsonage has been furnished this year and a pantry built. Bids are asked for on repainting the parsonage, which is expected to be finished and all paid for before conference.

Our fourth quarterly conference will meet at Canaan church on Saturday p.m. at 2:00 o'clock, October 14. Dr. J. E. Pritchard, conference president, will preside over the conference. Our World Service budget has been raised and paid, and it is expected that salary, annual conference budget, and all other claims will be paid in full. Our delegate to the annual conference is Brother C. L. Wagner of Bethesda church; and we want to say that whoever he may get for pastor of this charge will find this one of the best rural charges in the conference.

O. B. WILLIAMS, Pastor.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—Since we haven't had a report since our revival meeting closed, we would like to say we have had a grand meeting. Large crowds attended. Several conversions were made and several united with our church. Rev. Herbert Garmon of North Carolina was the pulpit help. He is well known and much loved in our community. He brought very helpful and inspiring messages each morning and evening. The foundation for this revival had been laid by our beloved pastor, Rev. T. M. Johnson, and by him bringing us inspiring and helpful messages regularly, and also by the prayers and help of the church people. Our pastor has done great work the two years he has served as pastor for Liberty Hill. Much has been accomplished and we are hoping that conference will see fit to return him to us.

The organizations of our church have been very active lately. The Sunday school is having good attendance, The Christion Endeavor is very active and continues to have well planned and helpful programs. The Ladies Aid is still doing grand work, The prayer meetings also is still continuing each Wednesday night at 8:00 o'clock.

The first Sunday in October will be the day for election of new officers for our Sunday School. The second Sunday of Oct. will be the day for the election of officers for our church. We urge each member to be present both Sundays and pray that nothing will be done or said that will hurt in any way, but will be uplifting and helpful for our church.

An Ice cream supper was much enjoyed by the Christian Endeavor society at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McClimon Saturday night. Rev. Johnson attended and each one reported a nice time.

Several of our members are sick at this writing, Thomas J. Brannon, Miss Ester Compton, Miss Romaine Poole and Mrs. Simpson. We hope for them a speedy recovery and their presence at the church again.

Rev. T. M. Johnson was the Sunday dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Davis.

The regular Willing Workers class meeting under the sponsorship of Mrs. W. T. Jackson will be held Tuesday night October 3rd, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bee Cooper. We urge each member of our class to be present as these meetings are very important and helpful. Splendid programs have been rendered by the leaders.

The fourth and last Quaterly Conference of this year for Anderson charge will be held September 30th, in the afternoon. All officials are urged to be present.

All Annual conference claims have been applied for except one which is the largest. We do pray that all will stand by and pay in full the assesments that we are to raise before conference meets. We do urge all to help and make this year the best report ever given from our church.

A Rally Day program is under way at this writing and will be given as soon as possible.

New Hope, Why Not Charge, Rev. C. H. Hill, Pastor.—Our revival meeting began the first Sunday in September and closed the second Sunday night. Rev. J. R. Short was the pulpit help. Everybody enjoyed his sermons very much. There were several professions and reclamations. Three were added to the church membership, and the church was revived in general.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely with a large attendance each Sunday.

Plans are being made to hold a Presnell family reunion at this church next Sunday, October 1, with an all-day service, this being the regular preaching day. Brother Hill is expected to be present. The public is cordially invited to attend and bring lunch

Some of the Presnell forefathers who have passed on to the great beyond years ago were among the founders of this church, and their descendants are still helping to carry on the work here.

Mrs. Hattie Presnell James of Washington State is visiting friends and relatives in this county, and will be present next Sunday. Mrs. James is the daughter of the late Wiley A. Presnell and was one time a member of this church. It has been 24 years since Mrs. James had visited her relatives.

All of our conference claims have been paid and we are planning on finishing the pastor's salary before conference. Pray for us that we may ever press onward and upward.

Spencer-China Grove, Rev. A. Ridge, Pastor.—The revival services which began last week are still going on. We have had a wonderful meeting so far, many souls having been blessed.

We are fortunate indeed to have Rev. Mr. Bell from Roberta church to assist in the revival. We were glad to welcome 12 new members into the church last night, September 24.

Rev. A. Ridge has made each appointment and never been late yet. We as a church think we have a wonderful pastor. He has meant so much to each one of us. We hope we will get him back.

Our Ladies Aid is doing very well; also our midweek prayer meetings, as the young girls have been holding the prayer services each prayer service. Our C. E. society is still doing very well. We had five new members to join this past Sunday. Our Sunday school is certainly doing splendid work.

MRS. TITUS WRIGHT.

Denton-Canaan—We have had good revivals at both churches. Brother Easter was with us during the Canaan revival which began on the second Sunday of August and closed the following Friday night. Brother Easter did fine preaching and endeared himself to the people. We were all so glad to have him with us that we would be glad to have him with at any time. There were a number of conversions and reclamations and the church was greatly revived.

The Denton revival began on Sunday night of August 27th and continued until the next Sunday night. Brother C. E. Ridge was with us and did the preaching. He did good preaching and we were all pleased. Brother Ridge was born near Denton and his first pastorate was Davidson charge very near here. He did not have to get aquainted for the people all knew him. The way the people responded to him indicated that the people with whom he had lived and labored highly appreciated him and his life. Here too we had a number of conversions and reclamations. In the two churches we have had 25 accessions during the year.

Our finances are not quite up to date. But are in such shape that we are reasonably certain it will all be paid.

Our fourth quarterly conference will meet on Monday night October 9.

Friendship Church, Chase City Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Mr. Broome has filled every appointment since our last report. Every sermon has been an inspiration to us. We haven't been reporting but that's no sign we haven't been working.

Our Sunday school attendance isn't as high as it was last year, but our collection is higher.

We had a good revival meeting and I feel it was a great help to our community. Eleven new members were taken into the church. We were glad to have Mrs. Broome and the children spend that week with us, and we were also grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Broome for organizing a Christian Endeavor. I am sure this will be one of the greatest to our young people we could have chosen.

At our third quarterly conference Mr. George Bell was elected delegate to the annual conference.

The fourth quarterly conference will be held at the church on October 9 at 6:30 o'clock. All official members are urged to attend. We also have the privilege to have with us on the same evening the District Superintendent of the former M. E. Church.

I am asking the prayers of all you good Christian people who are interested in our church. Pray that we may carry on our work faithfully to the end.

Lawndale, Cleveland Charge, Rev. T. G. Madison, Pastor.—It has been quite a while since we had a report. However, we are still having some splendid sermons by our most able pastor. On September 3 our pastor gave us the best message since being on the work. His subjejct was "Old-Time Religion."

The Auxiliary is still very active. Several new members have been added since our last report. The last meeting was held at the parsonage, with Mrs. Madison as hostess. Everybody reported a good meeting and one new member, Mrs. Henry Williams.

Our Sunday school is still moving along fine.

This being a union church, the Baptist pastor, Rev. J. L. Suttle, conducted his revival last week. He brought some very good messages.

We have a Thursday morning prayer meeting for the evening shift, prayer meeting on Thursday night for the morning shift, and Saturday night for everybody to meet together.

The reporter had the pleasure of attending the dedication of Oak Grove church on this charge Sunday. The president preached a very impressive sermon. Mrs. R. S. Troxler and children were present. It was through the untiring efforts of the late Brother Troxler that this beautiful brick church now stands on a little knoll overlooking a lovely countryside and can be seen several miles. Mrs. Troxler's four talented children gave a splendid number in song at the service. We were all delighted to see them and to know they are getting along so well.

Gibsonville.—The former M. E. and M. P. churches of Gibsonvile concluded revival services here Friday night. Rev. Robert Hardee, pastor of the Glenwood Methodist church of Greensboro, was the preacher for these services. Cottage prayer meetings were held in the homes of members of both churches preceding and during the services. These services proved to be of inestimable value and we trust that their influence will be felt for a long time to come in this community.

Brother Hardee's services were well received by our people. This Sunday seven members were received into the membership of this church by the pastor.

First Methodist Church, High Point.—On Sunday week the college students were welcomed at First Church to their first service of their school year. Members of the church went out to the college and brought the students to the service. Mr. Madison preached an unusually good sermon to the large congregation attending.

In the afternoon a Youth's Rally, sponsored by the City-wide Christian Endeavor Union, was held at the church. Rev. Elbert Newlin, pastor of the Oak Hill Friends Church, and Luther Medlin, field secretary of Christian Endeavor, delivered the principal addresses. A. C. Lovelace, Jr., led the inspirational song service. This meeting was well attended.

Last Monday the Woman's Auxiliary held its regular monthly meeting with Mrs. L .H. Zimmerman. Mrs. Lillie Green led the devotionals. The attendance at the Auxiliary meetings has been very good recently and the women of the church are delighted with the progress they are making on their budget. No projects are being undertaken this year, except for an occasional meal, and more time is being spent on the devotionals and programs. Practically all the budget was pledged at the beginning of the year.

On Sunday morning, September 25, Cale K. Burgess, Temperance secretary for the state, delivered a Temperance sermon at our church. He spoke interestingly on his subject and urged his listeners to lend their support to the efforts his associates are making against the sale and use of intoxicating drinks. At this same service officers for the coming year were elected. Miss Mary Louise Gibson was welcomed into our membership.

Seagrove Church, Seagrove-Love Joy Charge.—A large number of the descendants and friends of the late Peter and Anne Vuncannon met at Seagrove Methodist church Sunday, September 24. This service was held to renew social relationship between relatives and friends as well as to honor the departed ones.

When our new church was built here the children of this good couple installed a memorial window with the following names engraved: Peter Vuncannon, Anne Vuncannon, and Melton Vuncannon; also the dates of births and deaths and the slogan of Peter Vuncannon, "Prepare to meet thy God." Many of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren had never seen this window, so for this reason they had their reunion at this church. Then, too, Peter Vuncannon and family once lived in this community and he helped build the present Fairgrove church.

The program rendered was a short, impressive one. Devotional was in charge of Miss Xannie Stowe of High Point. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Vuncannon sang an old familiar hymn, then the grandchildren sang, and after that the great-grandchildren sang.

Mrs. Carrie Fogleman Nicholson made a short talk, dwelling much on the fine qualities of Mr. and Mrs. Vuncannon and the family in general. A story of their marriage and life was read by a granddaughter. A collection was taken and after expenses were taken out $11.08 was turned over to the church to help buy seats or to be used where needed most. This was unexpected to the people here but was greatly appreciated.

Last, but not least, the tables from the church dining room were carried and formed a long table near the church on the outside, and it was soon covered with delicious food. Everyone seemed to enjoy this, and I don't think anyone went away hungry.

After dinner the crowd assembled again in the church for a few minutes to hear three little girls sing. These children were on the morning program but arrived too late to sing before noon. They were the daughters of the former Miss Ruth Vuncannon, who is a granddaughter of Peter Vuncannon and daughter of Milton Vuncannon. We were glad to have these people in our church. We really felt it an honor for them to select our church as a place to hold their reunion and hope they will come back again.

Our pastor is conducting camp meeting at Love Joy with Rev. C. G. Isley as pulpit help this week. Some of our people attended services there Sunday.

Eden, Halifax Charge, Rev. W. M. Howard, Jr., Pastor.—The conference year is drawing to a close and we are looking forward to having Brother Howard with us another year.

In May we had a five day Leadership School conducted by Rev. Sydney R. Crumpton of Duke University. About twenty-five persons attended the school, twelve of whom qualified for certificates.

Our Easter and Children's Day programs were unusually good this year. We attribute the success of both to Mrs. R. G. Willey, Superintendent, and members of the Junior classes of Sunday school. The Sunday school has lost two very efficient members, Marjorie Willey, pianist and Hattie Mae Locke, teacher primary class. Our best wishes go with them. They have been faithful members since infancy. They are both in school, Marjorie in Greensboro and Hattie Mae in Raleigh.

The church yard and cemetery have been cleaned up and electric lights have been installed in the church and hut.

Our revival meeting began the first Sunday in August. We were fortunate in having Rev. J. C. Auman preach for us. The church and community have been greatly benefited by his deeply spiritual sermons.

The Ladies' Auxiliary, following the leadership of our most efficient president, Mrs. J. J. Burt, has had a very successful year. We have gone "over the top" in every undertaking.

It is indeed a pleasure to report the recovery of Mr. J. W. Hardee. Mr. Hardee was critically ill for a number of weeks. He is now able to walk again.

We of Eden church welcome the new regime with sincere hope and faith.

Please Remember

First, that we are having to close up our conference year almost a month earlier this year, so please get us another offering before conference if at all possible.

All moneys to get into our report at this conference should be in our hands by Tuesday, October 17. Conference meets on the 18th.

Second, this Home is to be supported next conference year by former Methodist Protestants just as in other years. CALOMEL NIGHT NOW A PLEASURE

The old time calomel was the doctor's favorite remedy for biliousness or so-called "Torpid Liver," so prevalent in hot weather, but it had some serious drawbacks from the standpoint of the patient. The nauseating and sickening after-effects and the necessity to follow it with a dose of Epsom salts made many of us hate to take it. Now you can really enjoy your calomel, for Calotabs make calomel-taking a pleasure. They give you the combined effects of calomel and salts, helping Nature to expel the sour, stagnant bile and washing it out of the system.

One or two Calotabs at bedtime with a glass of water or sweet milk,—that's all. Next morning your system feels clean and refreshed, your head is clear, your spirit bright, and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you wish and go about your work or pleasure.

Genuine Calotabs are sold only in checkerboard (black and white) packages bearing the trade mark "Calotabs." Refuse imitations. Family package only twenty-five cents; trial package ten cents, at your dealer's. (Adv.)

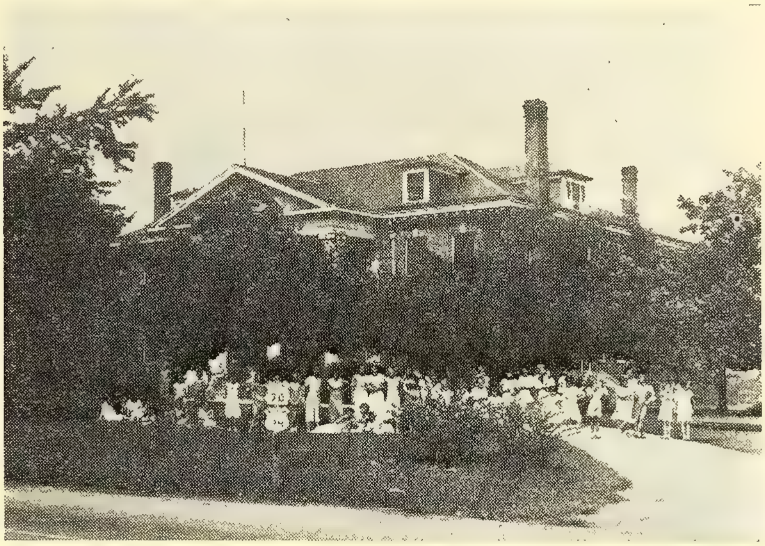
The Methodist Protestant Children's Home



The only orphanage home of the Methodist Protestant Church is located at High Point, North Carolina. It was established by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of North Carolina upon the recommendation of Mrs. W. C. Hammer, president. The Home was opened in Denton, North Carolina, in 1910, with Mrs. Mabel Williams Russell as matron. Mrs. Russell received assistance almost immediately when Mrs. Etta Auman Austin arrived. The Home was transferred to High Point during August, 1913. Those taking a very active part in the establishment and maintenance of the Home at High Point included Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Welch who provided the land for the site and gave generously towards its purchase; the Reverend and Mrs. A. G. Dixon, J. R. Reitzel, A. M. Rankin, George T. Penny, J. C. Penny, and J. M. Millikan. The Home is the property of the North Carolina Conference, though endorsed in 1912, by the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church. The Penny Building for Boys, not shown in the picture, was largely the gift of George T. and J. C. Penny. More than half of the annual operating cost of the Home is provided by voluntary offerings by the Sunday schools in the North Carolina Conference. J. M. Millikan has been chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Home throughout the life of the institution. A. G. Dixon is the present superintendent.

Further information about the subject of this picture will be found in "The History of the North Carolina Annual Conference," which is being prepared by Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, conference historian. The History will be off the press and first offered for sale at the Conference sessions in Greensboro. (Photograph provided by the Home).

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

The Time Is Short

It is hardly necessary to remind any of our people of the fact that the conference year is rapidly drawing to a close and that what we do we must do quickly. This letter is being written this week on Wednesday morning and it is just two weeks until our conference meets in Grace Church, Greensboro, for the finishing up session and then we go into and organize the new conference. Let every pastor do his best to bring up everything in full and let churches cooperate to make this a good year.

The Eastern Pastors' Meet

On Thursday of last week I went to Littleton to meet with the pastors in the eastern part of the state. All of them with the exception of two were present. During the meeting each pastor reported the prospects for finishing up the year on his charge. In many cases the picture was not very bright. The boll weevil had badly damaged the cotton crop and then the tobacco holiday came along and made it impossible for the farmers to market their tobacco so things are in a bad way. Some pastors reported not having received half of their salary so far this year. Of course the situation will improve some when the market does open but in some cases it will be too late to get the best results. People who have not lived in the section where these money crops are raised have difficulty in realizing how adverse conditions effect the people. While down east I held conferences with the District Superintendents in the Rocky Mount and Durham districts in regard to the future of the work down there.

The Randleman Quarterly Conference

On Saturday afternoon of last week I held the fourth quarterly conference of the Randleman charge, Rev. C. L. Spencer, pastor. The churches on the charge were well represented and good reports were given. The charge has done decidedly better this year on World Service than in former years and a good showing has also been made on A. C. B. and Pastor's salary. In fact the salary is so nearly paid that it ought not to be much of a task to finish it up. The salary was fixed at the same figure for next year and the delegate was instructed to ask for the return of the same pastor for another year. Brother Spencer is one of our best workers and usually stays a good while on the charge.

A Sunday at Lincolnton

Last Sunday was spent with the Lincolnton charge, Rev. W. L. Harkey, pastor, with preaching at Lincolnton at 11 o'clock and quarterly conference in the afternoon. The attendance at the morning church services was cut some by the fact that an electric and rain storm descended just at the time for the service to begin. Those who were there for Sunday school had the advantage of the others in that they were already there, however, like it is at so many other places, not all of the Sunday school remained for the church services. But it was a pleasure to preach to this congregation in their nice auditorium. After dinner, in the home of the pastor, it was my privilege to baptize three of the pastor's children.

In the afternoon all three of the churches on the charge were represented at the quarterly conference with good reports. Here too, the salary is about paid with a good showing on most of the other interests. There was some discussion in regard to boundary changes for the new year and I was asked to confer with the District Superintendent in regard to the matter. One of the churches, Fairfield, is some twenty miles away from Lincolnton and could be served more economically from another charge closer by. It is likely that this will be done. Here, also the vote was strong for asking for the return of the same pastor for another year.

With the Cabinet Again

The entire day, Tuesday of this week, was spent in Statesville with Bishop Purcell and his cabinet in a serious discussion of the work for next conference year. The various proposed mergers were discussed and in most instances approved. The one question before all three of the former groups is that of finding a place for all of the men for the new year. But Bishop Purcell assures us that the new conference will make such adjustments as are necessary to find a place even if it has to make new places. In his interests the Bishop knows no difference between those of the former M. E. Church, South, and the other two former denominations. My opinion is that Methodism in Western N. C. is fortunate in having such a fair and impartial Bishop.

Some Good Reports

From time to time I have been asking pastors to furnish me with the information when their charges pay out on everything in order that I might put the name of the charge in a place of honor in the HERALD. So far no charge has reported everything paid in full, however, Rev. Earl Cook of the Friendship-Love's Grove charge and Rev. H. W. Bell of the Roberta church have sent in good reports with everything paid except in a very few instances. I hope they can finish the job.

Names of Delegates Not All In

A few days ago Dr. Bates sent me the name of the delegates to conference as had been sent to him. In this list there are several blank spaces, some of them from our best charges. Since the time is short I will have to communicate directly with the pastors. Next week I will have the list of conference committees ready but I want to get all of the names of delegates before making up the committees.

Message in Verse

"You can never tell what your thoughts may do
In bringing you hate or love;
For thoughts are things, and their airy wings
Are swifter than carrier dove.

"They follow the law of the universe,
Each thing must produce its kind;
And they speed o'er the track to bring you back
Whatever went out from your mind.

"Then let your secret thoughts be fair,
They have a vital part and share
In shaping worlds, and moulding fate;
God's kingdom is so intricate."

Rev. Charles Sharp, pastor of Chatham circuit, brought a good message to the congregation at West End Church last Sunday night. Brother Sharp is one of our young men yet unordained, but he gives promise of becoming a splendid preacher.

On another page we run through the courtesy of Pastor Way a cut of the M. P. Church at Kernersville. It has served the community and the denomination in a splendid way. Entertained the annual conference in a most hospitable manner several years ago. Has had in its membership some very fine people among them, Brother J. C. Roberts who gave vitality to the campaign for a college in North Carolina by pledging a gift of $10,000, the Linville family has been and is among the most substantial, dependable members in that Church. Pastor Way is now serving the Church his second year; Charlie is a good man and a very hard worker. The Church now appears under its new name, Cherry Street Methodist Church. A very good parsonage is on the same lot but does not appear in this picture.

The following ministers were present: T. H. Pegram, Alson Gray, W. H. Wills, C. F. Harris, A. W. Lineberry, A. C. Harris, J. Deans, Q. Holton, J. L. Michaux, K. Parker, R. R. Michaux, R. R. Prather, J. W. Heath, W. McB. Roberts, J. M. Waynick, J. R. Ball, J. C. Deans, W. C. Kennett, W. F. Gray, S. P. J. Harris, A. M. Lowe, R. H. Wills, J. M. Kennett, J. Ketchum, W. A. Lineberry, J. W. Naylor, F. S. Gladston, J. H. Gilbreath, J. A. Huggins, G. W. Hege, H. A. T. Harris, and J. H. Page.

The following laymembers were present: L. W. Batchelor, R. J. Vinson, and W. H. Jones from Halifax Charge.

Tar River Circuit, T. T. Thorne, B. T. Pittman, delegates.

D. B. Bell, Roanoke Charge.

J. B. Hicks, Dr. Horace Hester, R. W. Harris, Granville Charge.

Jas. B. Thompson, Orange Charge.

Berry Davidson, Alamance Charge.

O. U. Ward, Randolph Charge.

W. W. Amick and R. R. Hammer, Greensboro Charge.

L. Thacker, Haw River Charge.

W. D. Trotter and J. C. Roberts, Guilford Charge.

D. L. Mitchell, J. Rominger, Winston Charge.

B. Willis, Cleveland Charge.

A. J. Gill, Buncombe Charge.

J. C. McClure, J. Thomas, Catawba Charge.

Asheboro Charge, Green River Charge, and Davidson Charge did not have delegates present.

J. L. Michaux, Alson Gray and Q. Holton was the committee to examine candidates for elders orders. The characters of the ministers were passed.

The Superannuate Fund Society reported $2,873.19 in the treasury.

Such elementary matters engaged them as "no quarterly conference has the right to change an arrangement of the annual conference"; " all licenses to preach expire unless renewed annually," etc.

Much time was spent in conference sessions in the passage of the characters of the ministers, through reconsideration of the actions.

"The Watchman and Harbinger," appears to have been the name of a conference paper published at that time.

T. H. Pegram was re-elected president of the conference.

The Stationing Committee consisted of one laymen from each pastoral charge to act with the president of the conference.

Ai Church, near Oak Ridge, asked to be set off as a station.

Five hundred copies of the Minutes to be published in pamphlet form, was ordered.

The Church in Wilmington was sold, bringing $1,235.31.

One of the requirements for those entering the ministry then was "to be able to write legibly and to compose with a tolerable degree of correctness." It is most fortunate for many of us modern preachers that we have typewriters, if this rule is still to be enforced.

Rev. T. T. Wyche was the Fraternal messenger from the M. E. Church, South.

A set of resolutions was adopted urging members to try to attain unto full sanctification; to revive prayer and class meetings; to provide for the instruction of the servants in the land, either in public or in the home of their master's.

The conference voted to hold its next session at Enfield.

The salary of the president for the ensuing year was fixed at $3,200. But remember those were the days of an inflated currency; the Civil War was not yet over.

Rev. J. L. Michaux was elected editor of the Watchman and Harbinger, salary $4,000.

Q. Holton introduced a resolution that the North Carolina Conference be divided into Western and Eastern N. C. Conference; it rested on the table when conference adjourned sine die.

Twenty-two pastoral charges were reported with 8,880 members; of whom were 459 colored; thirty-four itinerant ministers; sixty-six unordained preachers.

There were received into full membership that year 1,517 members; expelled 10, 150 were deceased, 70 withdrew, etc., showing a net increase of 1,222. There were reported 13 Sunday schools with 139 scholars, 3 libraries with 100 volumes, 101 churches and 3 parsonages; the total value of all church property was $53,975.00.

It would be most interesting did we have the time, to trace the descendants of these ministers for they are well-known citizens of our state; the Wills family, the Michaux, the Grays, the Holton family, the Pages, the Harrises, the Kennetts and others. These men were heroic in their efforts to establish righteousness in the land. Their lots were cast in conditions so very different from ours of this day that it is difficult for us to appreciate them as we should.

IT ISN'T MY BUSINESS

No it isn't. My business is to raise the Conference claims on my own charge; which I am trying to do, with fair prospects of coming out in full. (One church lacks about $10.00 of being out, and will make it.)

But I am concerned about the total. I took some money to the Conference Treasurer last Monday. He is very much distressed. Not enough has come in to meet certain urgent claims. He is embarrassed, the individuals and Boards involved are in straits. And, what is as much to the point, we are going to make a mighty poor showing when the brethren of the other Conferences entering into this union come to study our statistics, as you may be sure they will, in the combined Minutes. There isn't much I can do about it. Except to do my best on my charge—and urge all the saints to be like minded.

PASTORS, PLEASE NOTICE

I went to Salisbury yesterday afternoon for a meeting of the three Annual Conference Secretaries. We talked over the joint Journal that is to take the place of the three separate Conference Journals as heretofore printed. We found ourselves up against a good many difficulties; but we are trying to get around them as best we can. We need your help in some matters.

1. There is great need that we shall have the reports in —all of them—at the earliest possible date. We—the Methodist Protestant section—have asked that the reports be turned in on Wednesday afternoon, instead of Thursday. That means we won't be able to wait until late in the session, as some of the brethren have the habit of doing, before we turn our reports in. This is especially important as regards the numerical report. Let's be as accurate as we can. One of the Secretaries called our attention yesterday to the fact that the difference of five members one way or the other may determine whether we shall have one less or one more representative to the General Conference.

2. We are going to have to report our statistics separately this year. The information asked for by the three denominations is so different it will be impossible to combine much of it. Next year we shall probably have a new set of blanks which will call for the same items from all of us. I am sure we want these statistics to show up to the best advantage. We ought to make a desperate effort, even though we are working under severe handicaps, to make our financial showing satisfactory. Many of us, I fear, began too late. But we certainly need to do our very best.

3. No place is provided for it in the blank, but I think the Appreciation Year receipts ought to be reported. I am suggesting that you put it in your Financal Blank in the space for "Special Offerings." White "A. Y." in that space, and the amount raised in the column.

4. We shall have to omit, for lack of space in the combined Journal, a number of items we have been carrying. There will not be room for the Honor Roll. I am suggesting that it be compiled and printed in the Herald for the week after Conference. Then any one who wishes may paste it in the Journal for a permanent record.

5. Only one blank of each kind was sent out. There is some possibility we shall have to use the same set-up for our statistics for next year. I did not want to have another supply printed. I have enough on hand for another year if there is need for them. But the brethren can get extra copies, if they are needed, at Conference.

6. Still a few charges that have not paid for the 1938 Journals. I shall send out letters this week asking the brethren to send in their Journal money before Conference. If you get one, please do that.

Last Sunday was Rally Day and Promotion Day in West End Sunday school; there was a large attendance, and a good program was put on by the primary department. Church officers were also elected and installed.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

THE FORERUNNER OF THE KING

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, October 8

Lesson Text: Matthew 3:1-17.

Golden Text: Make ye ready the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. Matthew 3:3.

John the Baptist is one of the most interesting characters in the story of mankind. More is told us about his birth and babyhood than concerning almost any other character in the Bible. And after that we know nothing at all until he emerges full grown out of the desert, preaching in the wilderness, not coming to the towns and cities to find a crowd, but drawing the eager multitudes away from the cities into the desert, by the force of his ideas, the power of his eloquence, and, above all, the Spirit of Almighty God upon him, which made those who listened to him believe that he was a messenger of heaven. The attention of the nation was as much arrested by his look as by his words. The lean form hardened by fasting; the flashing eye, full of living energy; the uncut Nazarite locks; the rough hair-cloth garment; the independence of much that other men hold needful; the thrilling herald voice, piercing like a sword to divide soul and spirit. It is no wonder, then, that the whole neighboring community of cities and towns was stirred and that crowds poured forth to hear and be baptized of him. His utter recklessness in proclaiming the truth whether to the unthinking crowd of peasants, or the rude soldiers, the formal Sadducees, the hypocritical Pharisees, or the guilty Herod on the throne makes him a heroic and vital character to the Christian. As, therefore, we observe this bold life we can readily endorse the declaration of the masters when he said that ''Among them that are born of women these hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist.''

His ministry served as a forerunner for the coming of Christ and we should know the characteristic of that ministry. The most notable perhaps is its fearless allegiance to the truth irrespective of the attitude and whims of the crowds to whom it was preached. John's passion was to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord and with such a holy and exalted personage in mind he had no homage left to give to the unholy life of Herod (though an earthly king) nor did the self-righteous pretense of the Sadducees and Pharisees command his consideration. Thus we hear John crying to Pharisee and Publican alike, ''Repent ye, for the Kingdom of heaven.'' John braved the danger of such preaching because he knew that if the Lord was to be able to come in the hearts of His people the way must be prepared by repentance on their part, whether Pharisee or sinner, king or peasant. He knew that he could not be true to his Lord nor to all men if he did not so preach. John the Baptist must still do his work today in the soul. Only when there has been repentance and confession of sin, which submission to John's baptism signified, is a sinner prepared to receive the Saviour. As one has expressed this truth, ''Only a broken-hearted sinner can receive a crucified Lord.'' The coming of the Lord has struck rough going in recent years because the all-important work of John has been neglected. As the church has moved out of the wilderness conditions to discard its cloak of camel's hair to the highly developed conditions of the twentieth century in which the church has put on the ermine cloak of ecclesiasticisms it has at the same time been tempted to discard the harsh sounding words of John which demanded repentance.

It is, however, a mistake on the part of the modern day preacher to suppose that the world is unwilling to hear an earnest and positive sermon that demands all of the vital processes of true Christianity. Experience today proves that more people go to hear that than any other kind. Jesus admitted this when He said to the crowd one day, ''What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind?'' Notice the irony in the Lord's question, ''What went ye into the wilderness to see?'' that is, ''ye took long a journey, ye were at great pains to see John, ye left your homes and went into the wilderness—for what? to see some frail reed shaken by the wind? to see some cultured preacher give a book review? It is as if the Lord had said that if John were such you would not have gone out to see him. John himself was a little surprised to see that even Scribes and Pharisees had come out to hear sermons on repentance (of all things). He exclaimed in wonder, ''Ye generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?'' Close observation of all classes of people will show us that the heart of man, which the moralist tells us is so pure and excellent, will not stand the light of day. It is not pure though dressed in rich attire or concealed under the long robes of Pharisaism, but rather it is corrupted and polluted and restless. This truth is confirmed by the presence of all these classes at John's baptism. There was yet something that their souls wanted and they came to see if John could give it to them. He could not, but his ministry was able to point them to one who could. ''Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.'' Is not this the work of every true witness of Christ today? To stir men's hearts to seek through repentance what their souls lack and then to point them to Christ. We must use our friendship, our business relations and all our association with men as suspension bridges over which Jesus Christ may walk into their hearts and lives. ''Make ye ready the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.'' What nobler, grander work can any man do than that?

The ladies of Grace Church will provide coffee and tables free for those who wish to come to Conference on Sunday and bring their own lunch. You will appreciate this courtesy when you realize that there will be thousands of Methodist visitors here and the eating places filled to overflowing. Meals will NOT be served at the church on Sunday.

YOUTH AND CHURCH LOYALTY

There is no more urgent problem before the Christian church than that of securing and holding the loyalty of its members. At no point in its life is this need more apparent than where it touches youth. If the church of Christ is to be what its Founder and the Lord intended it to be—a vital missionary force for the kingdom of God—it must win the loyalty of youth.

Let us remember that Christ is the object of Christian love and loyalty; that loyalty to the church of Christ is a derived loyalty, only rich and powerful as that from which it springs is virile. If we can indicate what creates and maintains loyalty to Christ and are able to follow lines calculated to do that we will do much to solve the problem. What are the roots of loyalty in the human soul? Is it not clear that loyalty to a person or a movement initiated and controlled by that person arises when an individual has been profoundly touched by that person? Putting that in Christian terms, it means that one root of loyalty to Christ is in a life transforming experience through Him. When He touches and changes life, then that life tends to love Him in a loyal, consistent way. Boiling it down to a matter of practical approach to youth, it means we must first give them Christ in all His power. No substitute can be permitted here if the church is to live for and serve God. Straight to the center of the soul's need we must go with Christ—bring Him with all His loving power to become the center of the new life. If we compromise or equivocate here we will lose in our quest for youth. Christ is our message—and Christ alone we have to offer.

This is vastly more than a vain platitude. It has implications of lasting significance. Christ is Saviour; He frees from the bondage of sin. Christ is the herald of the kingdom of God, and He calls all men to citizenship in it through the door of personal regeneration. Interest is aroused when out of the confusion of life a clear, compelling purpose emerges; and when purpose comes to the soul it unifies; it simplifies, and it transforms so that in the triple experience of the touched heart a new treasure is discovered, a new dominant loyalty arises and the personality s won in deathless allegiance to the kingdom of God. Thus is loyalty born in the heart of man. Now if that loyalty is to grow there must be unqualified surrender to its object. The cost of loyalty must be paid by the life that would know its rewards. There is a baptism of fire coming to him who would be loyal to Christ. From this youth must not shrink. From it the church must not seek to protect it.

It is a sad day for the church of Christ when we begin to lower the standard demanded of its members. We do ill service to youth when we make it appear easy to be a Christian. We must urgently call youth to heroic, creative, yet unconscious sacrifice. Again and again we must lead the way before youth in full, glad surrender to the costly way of Christ. Our generation must give a genuine demonstration of loyalty to Christ in every field of life—demonstrations in life rather than in sermons in words. An ounce of action is worth a ton of talk. Unmoved by our studied eloquence, rich in Christian lore, youth will be profoundly touched when it sees us with a cross upon our backs laboring for Christ in our time. The cry of youth is for reality; let us of the church of Christ give it in living terms. Let us be pioneers in the unconquered fields of paganism all about us. Let us dare to raise the banner of Christ in our own lives, measuring them without self-pity in the scales of Christian righteousness. Let us suffer our offending eyes to be plucked out or our sinning hands to be cut off rather than for our whole lives to be plunged into spiritual oblivion. When we begin to do that, youth will begin to listen to our preachments! It will pause in its mad rush for pleasure and listen to the living secret of our courage. It will be startled into a new inquiry concerning the source of this higher righteousness they have seen lived out before them.

Friends in Jesus Christ, there is no other technique than this by which we may win from youth the loyalty to Christ we so greatly covet. This is the price we must now pay and continue to pay if youth is to bow in loyalty to Him who is our only Hope.

To the hosts of youth the world around let this be said: Everything you need, everything you should and ought to be and have, Christ is and can make possible. Let there be no doubt of this—the church of Christ is the missioner of an abundant life you greatly need—without which your life will be, in the highest sense, a failure. The church needs the verve, the vision, the courage, and the enthusiasm of youth. It needs the capacity to abandon one's self to a great adventure which is the genius of youth. At home and abroad, in city, village, and rural hamlet the call to service is heard—the fields are white unto the harvest and the laborers are few. The ranks of the Christian ministry call to youth for dedication of life to its holy task. Field after field of volunteer service stretches out before young men and women today in the interest of Christ's kingdom. Door after door, long closed to the gospel message, has by the hand of God been flung open to our generation. We are still under the compelling command of our ascended Lord, "Go ye into all the world"—our mark is still to be a sent people. Christ is calling youth to serve His church—to spread far and wide the gospel of grace, and where it has been planted to cultivate and produce abundant fruitage in the things of the spirit. Out of every walk of life our Lord would have consecrated youth go to pioneer for the kingdom's sake. The complex social issues of our time will only yield in solution to men of good will who in Christ have found the goal of human history. The major problems of our time await the solvent of fervent action under the power of the Holy Spirit. To make this solvent an actual factor is the challenge that Christ and His church lay before youth.

Let us bring this matter, finally, very close to each heart. A traveler in the Alps once came upon a village in which a strange custom prevailed. Centuries before a great church had been built by the Duke who lived near the village. The beautiful old church had been built without lamps, but to each person in the village the Duke supplied a torch which they took with them to church and lighted as they entered. As one by one they entered the church the glow of their torches spread until the whole church was filled with light.

Here and there over the audience the traveler saw a dark spot—for someone had stayed away from this Church of the Lighted Lamps. So today in the church of God—if Christ's church is to be as a light to the world—as the center of a radiance streaming out into a world plunged into the night of sin and despair, it will only be as one by one we light our torches and take our places of witness in the church Christ loved and gave Himself for. Let us say:

"Just as I am, Thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me,
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O, Jesus Christ, I come.
Just as I am, young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be,
For truth, and righteousness, and Thee,
Lord of my life, I come."

Rev. Elbert Paul, B.D., in Biblical Recorder.

BETTER PARENTHOOD WEEK

Religious and social organizations will take active part in the national observance of Better Parenthood Week, October 23 through 29, according to plans made public this week by George J. Hecht, publisher of Parents' Magazine and chairman of the nation-wide committee sponsoring Better Parenthood Week.

"With America one of the few nations in which parents can still be reasonably certain of keeping their children under their own guidance, we feel that programs planned for this week will have an unusually thoughtful and receptive audience. The threat to humanitarian principle, which war always brings, makes paramount the need for more thoughtful guidance in the moral and spiritual development of children," Mr. Hecht explained. "Religious leaders are particularly urged to join in the national program for observance of Better Parenthood Week and deliver, not only on the Sabbath but during all this week, sermons or messages that will influence the thinking of parents in their communities."

Better Parenthood Week is a project which has grown in two years to become one of our great national observances. Churches, Sunday schools, Parent-Teacher Associations, women's clubs, schools and consumer groups are urged by the Better Parenthood Week Committee to take part in the programs of this week which will be devoted to the needs of youth today and the necessity for parents to intelligently understand child problems and deal wisely in the rearing and training of their children.

Church organizations, clubs and other groups, arranging programs to tie-in with the national observance of Better Parenthood Week, may secure a complete plan for suitable programs and other helps from the Better Parenthood Week Committee at 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York City, states Mr. Hecht, chairman.

The need for national observance of this week is summarized by Faith Baldwin, famous author and member of the Better Parenthood Week Committee, who writes that, "There has never been a time in history when the welfare of children was not vitally important to any country. It seems even more important now, if that is possible. Certainly I know of no era—not even that of 1914 to 1918—when the youth of the world was as important to the community. In these troubled times many of us are asking ourselves what heritage we have to offer our children. Surely, we cannot promise them the peace and security and happy forward-looking to realized ambitions which our parents promised us! It seems to me that anything which can be accomplished in educating parents to their responsibilities, in giving children as much of their rightful due as possible, is of incalculable benefit to the country itself."

The national significance of Better Parenthood Week will be augmented in the many states by proclamations from state governors who urge state-wide observance of the national movement. Honorable Edwin C. Dawson, acting for the Governor of the State of Kentucky, in a proclamation this week, urged all religious and social organizations in Kentucky to make child health and parenthood their special topics for discussion during that week. Better Parenthood Week has similarly been endorsed by the Governors of many states who praise this national movement as an opportunity for parents to inform themselves concerning modern methods of dealing with child problems.

The national program for Better Parenthood Week will begin with a luncheon meeting in New York City on October 23, at which time outstanding leaders in parent education and child guidance will bring important messages to parents everywhere in America. Speakers on this occasion will be Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Mrs. Ethel Nourse Rogers, Representative from Massachusetts; Dr. E. A. Gilmore, President of Iowa State University; and Mrs. Clara Savage Littledale, Editor of Parents' Magazine. The program will be broadcast over N. B. C. on a coast-to-coast network. Other radio programs and events will be announced later.

The U. S. Children's Bureau also is cooperating with the Better Parenthood Week Committee and Katharine Lenroot, Chief of the Bureau, in endorsing this national project writes that, "It seems to me this is an excellent time to call to the attention of the country in this special way the opportunities open to parents for more adequate facilities for the care and protection of children, through the cooperation of many different groups and organizations. The job of parenthood is concerned not only with providing the best possible conditions in the child's own home, but also reaches out into the community, the State and the Nation."

Among the nationally famous persons on the committee sponsoring Better Parenthood Week and arranging suitable programs for its observance are: Mr. George J. Hecht, Publisher of Parents' Magazine and Chairman of the Committee; Angelo Patri, educator and author; Dr. Arnold Gesell, Director, Clinic of Child Development, Yale University; Miss Faith Baldwin, famous author; Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, physician to the Dionne Quintuplets; Dr. Lillian M. Gilbreth, author of "Living With Our Children"; Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, American Youth Commission; Dr. George D. Stoddard, Director, Iowa Child Welfare Research Station; Dr. Grace Langdon, U. S. Government Specialist of Nursery Schools, Parent Education and Homemaking; Mrs. Sidonie M. Gruenberg, Director, Child Study Association of America; Mrs. Paul Rittenhouse, Director, Girl Scouts, Inc.; Dr. James E. West, Chief Scout Executor, Boy Scouts of America; Dr. Malcolm MacLean, Dean of the General College, University of Minnesota; U. S. Senator Capper; Frederick L. Redefer, Executive Secretary, Progressive Education Association; Dr. Lester F. Scott, National Executive, Campfire Girls, Inc.; Dr. Douglas Thom, Director of Habit Clinic for Child Guidance; and Harriet Ahlers Houdlette, American Association of University Women.

"Religious organizations and other groups who plan to follow the governor's suggestions and make child health and better parenthood subjects for discussion at their meetings during October 23 through 29 are invited to write the Better Parenthood Week Committee at 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York City, for material for such discussions," states Mr. Hecht.

GOODBYE!

Sometimes we say this word with the thought of meeting again, and there is no sadness connected with it; but when we say goodbye for the last time there is always a thought of sadness that cannot be expressed in words. So to say goodbye to the HERALD is sad for we shall only see it again in the future in the good things that it has helped us to do and the help to us in making our lives better.

Beginning with the first issue of Our Church Record, back before entering the itinerancy, I have never missed a copy. What hallowed memories it brings as I think of the past years and those who have contributed to its columns. I have always realized that the church paper was a pastor's helper, and always did my best to get the membership of the churches I served to subscribe and read it. I have never deviated from that path whether the Editor pleased me or not.

One of the pleasant memories is of asking my congregation one Sunday morning if they could supply me with an assistant pastor. The charge was not paying a living salary at the time. They looked at me like they thought, "He is as crazy as he looks." Then I explained that it would only cost them two dollars per family extra. That if they did not have the money I would vouch for them—subscribe to the HERALD! That relieved the tension. We soon had our quota. Always paid our subsidy after that was put in, and have always raised the quota of subscribers. Another thing: that charge that was only paying one thousand dollars soon went to fourteen hundred. I believe reading the church news had much to do with the raises I have always gotten, for unless I fail this year, it will be the first charge I have ever served that did not increase the salary. Find out that your brethren are doing the impossible and it will always increase your faith, and we get that in the church paper.

I have written many articles during this year for the HERALD. Some of them have been severely criticized, others commended, but that is all in the past. I have been reading the Advocate now regularly for nearly a year, and I expect to push that interest just as much as I have the other papers during these years. It will come natural to talk church literature as I have kept it up through the years.

To Dr. McCulloch's memory I feel incompetent to add anything in words to his illustrious life. What it has meant to all of us former Methodist Protestants! He lived to see the accomplishment of much for which he had sacrificed. To the other men who have labored to keep the HERALD going, I take off my hat.

Goodbye HERALD! Your work has not been a failure by any means. You have helped us to get ready for larger usefulness. May we all prove faithful to this trust. There are other things that have made this writer feel sad. One was the thought of giving up intimate relations which have grown dearer through the years. But since living up here among as fine a set of Methodist ministers as walk the globe today, I have learned of their consecration and sincerity and the cordial way in which I have been received has dissipated that sad thought to a large degree as I realize that I am among real brethren. So as we enter the larger fellowship with no friends lost, we trust, and these treating us better than we deserve, new ones gained, I gird myself anew for the few years that remain with a firmer faith in God, hoping that great grace my rest upon us all, and that greater victories may come to a greater UNITED METHODISM!

N. G. BETHEA.

"OPEN YOUR MOUTH, OLE HOSS"

It was in a committee room during the session of my annual conference. Several other old-like ministers were seated and talking of the possibility of being superannuated. Suddenly with the dash and ease of an athlete a large clergyman came in with two others, he paused for a moment, then said, "Ah, here they are." He came to me first and said, "Open your mouth, ole hoss," and somehow without hesitation I obeyed the command. He put his unwashed finger in my mouth and speaking as to himself said, "Ah yes, his molars are very well worn, wisdom teeth gone, bicuspids decaying, the frontal incisors have been often repaired." Then going to my friend, Rev. Mr. D., he went through practically the same inspection, and when he had examined all of us, he turned to the two clergymen with him and said, "I think we will recommend all of these men for the superannuate relation at this conference. There is Mr. B, and that was me, his wisdom teeth are no more, his molars are worn down to the gums, his bicuspids are of but little use in mastication, and the condition of his frontal incisors convince me his ennunciation is seriously affected." Turning to me he said, "Here Mr. B. let me hear you sound p. b. m. f., ah, that will do. Yes, we will recommend them for superannuation."

My resentment was kindled against them, and I arose and said, "Do you men mean to say that the condition of a preacher's molars and incisors are to determine his status in the pastorate? Why I'll get me a new set of teeth at once. Listen to me brethren," I continued, "My health is splendid, I can drive my car all right, I have averaged this year in my visits to my people at least three calls a day for every day in the year. I can prepare a sermon with greater ease than when I entered the ministry; my congregations are good; I have raised all claims and there is nothing against my character. Why this is high handed. If ever I have been of service to my church I am now able to render acceptable service to the type of pastorates I serve."

The other pastors arose and began to insist that they were wrongly judged, that the real test of service had not yet been invoked. But the examiner, who was also the spokesman for his committee, waived us silent and said, "Sorry, ole gents, if you are displeased with our recommendation, but you will have to admit the facts of bad teeth won't you? I will therefore recommend that all of you be superannuated, and of course it will be done. Good day." With a flourish and a dash he passed into the main auditorium. Amazed at such treatment, I could hardly move out of my tracks, but did manage to move towards the door to the street and there one of the young fellows met me and said, "Oh Mr. B., I was just looking for you, I understand that you will superannuate and I am to be pastor of Middle Creek Circuit next year. please let me have some information." I must have stormed at the intruder for my wife shook me real hard and said, "Why husband, what in the world is the matter?" "Oh," I said, "I have had a terrible dream." But when I told it all to her, she said to me with a sad, but knowing look in her eyes, "It was terrible, but I hope it is only a dream."

A MESSAGE FOR A TROUBLED CHURCH

The Revelation of St. John the Divine

By PAUL D. LEEDY

Critical observers of contemporary international affairs are seeing a striking similarity between the events of today and those of 1914. In Christian living another analogy has been making itself felt, events paralleled by nearly the gap of the life of the Christian church. We are today of a Christendom that is being assailed and persecuted in a striking manner. As was the case with the early church, our faith is clouded by despair, reeking with the blood of persecution, and under a canopy of pessimistic lethargy. We are the people who walk in darkness and need to see a great light.

The church of the present day needs to see the shaft of light that shone clear and pure through the blackout of ancient Christian despair. It came from the island of Patmos, where an old man who knew God and lived among the eternal verities of the world could see the shadow of the Almighty, and feel again the continual strength of the everlasting arms. To a church persecuted and ravished, and to a people whose faith was being smothered beneath the iron fist of Rome, came this assurance of the ultimate triump of righteousness, this revelation for the eternal nature of God. We need this message now. Under the cryptic mosaic of its exterior, it holds a word of hope for a troubled church, a church not unlike the one to which the message was first written. The Revelation of St. John the Divine should give us today the awareness that we are even now more than conquerors through Him who overcame the world.

The more we inspect its elaborate symbolism, the more we allow its beauty and significance to grow into our consciousness, the more it becomes a beacon of confidence amid the sullen seas of hopeless pessimism, a shaft of light in a God-forsaking world. The book was written for an age like this!

Picture the Roman provinces of Asia in the last decades of the first century. Dotted throughout these provinces were the seven principal churches of early Christendom. The Roman Levant was opulent and prosperous. The crossroads of the empire was here, and Caesar was being worshiped in every great center as a god. Those who refused to participate in the oblations were at first socially ostracized and later brutally punished. It was totalitarianism first persecuting the Christian church. As time went on, the price for faith in God became more and more exacting until, under the reign of Nero, the unspeakable tortures to the Christians of the early church form one of the goriest chapters of all history.

It was out of blood and persecution and the darkness of Sheol that this letter of hope, enunciating faith in the ultimate triumph of good, was written. The ornate tapestry of symbolical language which covers the message in the letter was intentional. It had meaning for those who knew its cryptic code. To the member of an early church who thought of their new faith in vivid symbolical equivalents, it spoke eloquently. It meant nothing to the profane. John on Patmos, like Niemoeller in prison, yearned to send a message that would strengthen the hearts and fortify the determina-of those of the early church who might be tempted to fail in the crucial hour. What an analogy between the situation in which this letter was written and the contemporary world!

The final book of the Bible still has power to quicken fainting hearts. Take it, sit down quietly with it, and read it over again and again. Let its beautiful symbolism, the mystical expression of the Oriental mind, grow upon you. The seven points of light in a dark and pagan world were the seven churches of Asia. And in the very center of these lesser lights was the regal and majestic personage of "one like unto the Son of man," whose countenance was "as the sun shineth in his strength." Where else do we get a divine portrait of the Christ like this? Read it; forget its materialism and literalism, and in the beauty of its symbolism interpret it in the light of its spiritual implications for the church of Christ among men.

The key to the book is hidden in the thirteenth chapter and the eighteenth verse: "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six." It will be recalled that the ancient peoples used letters to designate numerical values. The Roman numerals that have survived to the present day are our best example. Now, here is the interesting fact of this verse: if Nero Caesar be written in Hebrew and the letters be given their numerical values, the total value is six hundred sixty-six! In similar manner the beast that rose up "out of the sea" is a graphic portrayal of Rome. Take a map and look at its geographical location and it will be readily apparent what a wonderfully powerful and realistic metaphor the writer of the Apocalypse has used. To those who read into the book with the aid of simple critical helps, the significant symbolism will make the message clear. The white horse represents, of course, the victorious Christ; the red horse is the personification of revolution, war, and civil strife; the rider of the black horse is Famine; while finally come Pestilence and Death riding upon a "pale horse." The blood "under the altar" is vividly descriptive of the actual persecution of the early Christians; while the "feet like unto fine brass" are at once suggestive of the stability and strength of the gospel. Those who know their Gibbon will at once recognize that the allusion to the beast with ten horns refers to the Roman Empire with its ten emperors. Obviously, a knowledge of Roman history aids limitlessly in reading the Revelation intelligently. Alpha and Omega, the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, represent the first and last of all things, eternity, boundless and infinite. The eagle was symbolically the messenger of doom, and smoke appropriately represented the befogging nature of false doctrine.

This is only a very elementary gloss to the reading of the letter. He who reads wisely will not quibble too much about the exact interpretation of every allusion; there are places, in this divinely inspired work of a lonely saint to a discouraged church where several interpretations are possible, and time alone has the perfect answer. Always, however, shining like a star of first magniture, one truth is inevitably enunciated: Christ and His kingdom will ultimately be victorious over all forms of falsehood and evil! This is the book's universal message, and one that a faltering church needs in this modern age of doubt.

And now sit down with this great letter as you would sit down before a beautiful piece of Oriental tapestry, filled with significant scenes of trees and dragons, beasts and streams, and ponder its meaning, not critically and scholastically, but simply and yearningly. Drink of its beauty of language and sincerity of faith and the book of the Revelation of St. John the Divine will challenge you as it did the early Christians to live a more courageous life, and to see with a clearer vision the Christ Victorious.—Zion's Herald.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE

We welcome you as official delegates to the final session of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, to convene in Grace Church, Greensboro, Wednesday, October 18, 1939. This message is important, therefore, please read every word of it.

FIRST, there will be a great concourse of Methodists in Greensboro at that time. Three conferences with more than a thousand official members will be running simultaneously until merged on Friday evening. In view of the tremendous crowd to be entertained we are asking two things, namely: first, that ministers and delegates bring no additional persons with them for us to entertain as we cannot assume responsibility for entertainment of persons other than official members of the conference; and secondly, that ministers and delegates who live within a radius of twenty miles of Greensboro travel to and from conference daily.

SECONDLY, meals will be served at Grace Church during the week days of conference. The thousands of Methodist visitors to the city will of necessity crowd all eating places. Our ladies will serve you excellent meals at a reasonable price. We urge you to cooperate by purchasing a season meal ticket for the entire week.

THIRDLY, a luncheon for wives of ministers will be served in a private dining room at Grace Church, Wednesday, October, 18, at 12:30 o'clock for forty cents per plate. Those who wish to attend are asked to drop a card stating same to Mrs. J. Elwood Carroll, Greensboro.

FOURTHLY, a letter with the above facts is being sent to every minister and lay delegate. If you fail to receive your letter will you write a card to Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, 222 N. Edgeworth St., Greensboro, and give the answer to the following questions: Do you wish us provide lodging for you? When will you arrive? With whom do you wish to room? Will you be driving your car? What charge do you represent? What is your name?

A CITY WITHOUT CHURCHES

By A. C. HOFFMAN

A city without churchgoers would be like a railroad without engines—nothing to make things go, according to a Pennsylvania newspaper.

A neighborhood in which no church people lived might not be a very desirable section of town.

A city without church would receive a great deal of advertising of the wrong kind.

It would be selfish, and there would not be a single hospital or any welfare organization in the interest of humanity.

Half of the population would be afraid of the other half. The motto of such a city would be "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," or "Do the other fellow before he does you." It would be a place where might makes right. If somebody suggested "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," the people who heard him would think he was crazy.

How would you like to live in a place like that?

Is it too much to say that those who have no time for church are doing all they can to bring about such conditions? This is what neglect amounts to.

Every civic blessing was brought about, is directed, and kept going by the church.

As a class member are you doing your share to make the church count for still more in your community?

FOURTH QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, KERNERSVILLE-SOUTH WINSTON CHARGE

The Fourth Quarterly Conference for the Kernersville-South Winston charge will be held in the Kernersville church Saturday, October 14, beginning at 2:30 p. m. It is the desire of the pastor that all the official members of the five churches be present, and we urge all others who can do so to attend the conference. The business will be, reports; election of alternate delegate; instructing delegate concerning a pastor for next year; miscellaneous matters.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

Four boys were received into Church membership last Sunday at West End; others are expecting to join before conference.

A LETTER FROM CHINA

Dear Friends:

Three weeks after reaching Kalgan we passed over into the New Year. It seemed that we were ready for anything and began the work eagerly.

During the first few days of the year a long country trip seemed in place. We went to Hsi Ho Ying, visiting other churches en route. It was wonderful to be driving Green Glory again, and in an hour's time go from one church to the next. Such a distance used to take nearly a day by mule cart.

The territory around Hsi Ho Ying and Shui Cruan is now very dangerous on account of an unprecedented number of bandits. With their night raids they make life very uncertain for the village people.

In Lien Hua Shih (Lotus Pool) we have the nucleus of a church. They have a little chapel in the home of Mrs. Yu. One night bandits came to this village, killing and looting. The Christians were at Mrs. Yu's home praying. Although people were kidnapped from houses on both sides, and although Mrs. Yu's yard was more prosperous-looking than many others, yet no bandits even so much as knocked on the door.

Since March 1, we have made two other short country trips: one to An Chia Pu, and one to Shan Nan Shan. Rev. Mr. Soderbom went on the trip to An Chia Pu, as there were some to be baptized. We had a happy time going out there, filling Green Glory with evangelists and children. Lunch was taken from Kalgan, and after the regular morning service we all had tasty Chinese food together. Then dividing into teams, we held baptismal services in two villages nearby. Reuniting, we returned to Kalgan that evening, thankful that we were permitted to visit those friends and welcome new ones into the church.

The village school at Shan Nan Shan has been closed. Old Mr. Li wanted an evangelist to open up a special class for the children in the church. We took Mr. Kung up and took advantage of the occasion to summon the village people for a meeting. Mr. Li is still earnest for the Lord and supports this work himself.

One of the most important matters coming before the Mission this quarter was in regard to some special training for our evangelists before we enter Church Union. Many of them have little training, so we decided upon an Institute to be held in two sections. Thus, while one group studies, the other can care for the work. Already one group—those with less training—are with us. They are working earnestly, as a result of this study will help determine their standing in the new Annual Conference.

There will be special speakers also and we are hoping for a real revival. Although these last two years have somewhat deepened the spiritual experience of many, yet just now there are so many trials of daily occurrence, the church is in grave danger of being overcome.

In the country the people are suffering much from unsettled conditions and the increase of banditry. In many places they seldom have a night of rest without some disturbance. In the city, food stuffs are more expensive daily. Our evangelists received a substantial increase in salary from January 1, but even so, the high cost of living seems to be winning the race.

The pressure of constant rumors and threats, and the struggle to make ends meet, continue to "wear" upon our people. Powers of endurance are greatly needed by both Chinese and missionaries. Truly it is a time when the church at home should help us in prayer. Our God is able. Almost daily He is helping His children in a special way. Let us rejoice before Him.—Margaret and Horace Wiliams, in the Missionary Record, October.

BOOKS FOR THE SEMINARY

I have received a good report concerning the project in which the men of the North Carolina Conference and the women of the North Carolina Branch are cooperating; that is obtaining books for the Seminary. But the report comes from the men only, and, as someone has said, "the women's part of the campaign hasn't seemed to get up much steam." Do you like to take the dust from the car ahead of you on a country road? I do not. But that's what we seem to be doing, figuratively speaking.

I am asking that our Auxiliaries begin at once to send in money for books; not waiting until the Herald ceases to assist us or the winter comes with its bad roads.

We are asking each Auxiliary to give $5 or more toward this project. Give it as a "special." I am going to start the column of figures in the Herald. Please follow with your contributions as soon as possible. I am wondering who will be next.

MRS. GEO. R. BROWN,
Secretary of Education;
MRS. C. W. BATES,
Chairman of Districts.

P.S.—Since writing the above, word comes that a member of one of our Auxiliaries is giving a number of acceptable books. It may be that others can do the same. If you have such books, let us know what they are.

HOW OLD ARE YOU?

How old are you?
Age is a quality of mind;
If you have left your dreams behind,
If hope is cold,
If you no longer look ahead,
If your ambition's fires are dead,
Then you are old.
But if from life you take the best,
And if in life you keep the zest,
If love you hold,
No matter how the years go by,
No matter how the birthdays fly,
You are not old.

Clothing and Other Gifts

Concord, Saxapahaw, one coat for a girl. This should have been reported two weeks ago.

Where you have canned fruits and vegetables and other produce ready for the Children's Home, please bring or send it if there is passing, or if convenient. If you cannot get it to us, then please hold it until after conference, gather it at some one place, and help us to so plan it as to make just as few trips as possible.

Please Note

We will have only two or three more copies of the Herald through which to write you about the Children's Home. After that we must get our messages to you in some other way. Pastors and Sunday school superintendents will please tell the people in their churches and Sunday schools that former Methodist Protestants are expected to support this Children's Home for one more conference year, and help them to plan for it. It will take a fine spirit of cooperation to do this without the Herald. But we will do this for the sake of these children here, and because of our love for the work.

The General Conference will meet next May, but we cannot change the plans of financing the Children's Homes in the middle of the year. So it is being planned that

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Glen Raven Charge, Rev. Joseph Coble, Pastor.—The Glen Raven revival meeting with Mr. J. R. Anderson of the Mt. Hermon charge conducting the services, came to a very satisfactory conclusion about two weeks ago. There were six conversions, and one new member was taken into the church. The women of Glen Raven are preparing to make the final payment on the furnace installed last year. The Christian Endeavor society has just completed a fall outfit for the child they support at the Children's Home. Our parsonage, which has needed a new roof for some time, has received a new covering of green asphalt shingles.

The Fairview church on this charge has just completed a two-week revival meeting, with Rev. B. O. Merritt of Graham in charge. This was a union meeting of Berea Christian church, New Salem (former M. E.) and our Methodist church, Fairview. Rev. L. L. Parrish, pastor of New Salem, led the singing.

The Haw River young people's organization is still going strong with regular meetings each week. They are planning to attend Homer Rodeheaver's recital next Monday night.

This charge is expecting to meet its financial obligations by conference. New officers in all three churches are being elected this week. Our last quarterly conference will be held Sunday, October 8, with Dr. J. E. Pritchard in charge. Mr. J. L. Stanley of the Fairview church is our delegate to conference.

Alamance Charge.—I feel that my charge has deserved more publicity this year than it has received from the reporters. This fact, I hope, will justify a brief report from the pastor.

With the exception of the time spent at the Uniting Conference, I have met all appointments, attended all Sunday schools, met with several women's auxiliaries, conducted a number of funerals, and held four protracted meetings. In the meantime I have given special attention to the sick, to the afflicted, and to the aged and infirm. While in Kansas City my appointments were filled by Rev. A. O. Lindley, who is a very fine product of our Center church. He is one prophet who is highly esteemed by his own people. I am deeply grateful to him for the services rendered.

For reasons which are not easily understood by me, my special meetings were not as successful as I had hoped. Any failure to reach the desired goal cannot be charged against the brethren who did the preaching for me. They were instant in season and out of season. They preached the gospel of repentance and regeneration; they exhorted the sinner to flee the wrath to come, and they plead with the backslider to return to the Father's house. When I name these preachers, my brethren will agree with me when I say no better preachers are to be found in our conference: Rev. Edwards Suits at Sapling Ridge, Rev. T. J. Whitehead at Center, his old home church; Rev. Oscar L. Easter at Bethel, and Rev. Aubert M. Smith at Rock Creek. Thank you, brethren, for services well rendered.

The following material improvements have been made: Rock Creek has installed beautiful electric lights and paid for them. Center has erected a vestibule to the church at a cost of several hundred dollars, and installed folding doors between the auditorium and the Sunday school rooms. These have been paid for. Bethel has erected a new chimney and painted the interior of the Sunday school rooms. The women of the Sapling Ridge church have bought and paid for a fine pulpit Bible. All of the churches contribute to the Children's Home.

We have enjoyed being associated with the fine people of this charge this year. They have been gracious to us, and they have dealt kindly with us. We are grateful to them, and our prayer is that a kind Heavenly Father will bless them above anything they can possibly think or ask.

GEO. R. BROWN, Pastor.

Bethany Church, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—Officers for the coming year were elected at the preaching service Sunday morning. The following were elected: Superintendent, Miss Swanna Baldwin; assistant superintendent, Wade Kinley; secretary and treasurer, Percy Julian; class leaders, D. T. Gaster and Swanna Baldwin; trustees, Wade Routh, John Julian, C. T. Redding, Wade Kinley, and Clarence Baldwin; ushers, Paul Sapp and Clarence Baldwin; stewards, Allene Julian, Bessie Baldwin, Frances Ellis, Frances Marion Pugh, and Doris Wood; secretary to the Children's Home, Allene Julian; church paper reporter, Doris Wood; cemetery committee, John Julian, Wade Routh, and J. T. Brown; pianist, Alese Julian; and choir leader, Paul Routh.

The fourth quarterly conference will meet at this church Sunday afternoon at 2:30. All official members are urged to attend.

DORIS WOOD, Reporter.

Palestine, Flat Rock Charge, J. A. Burgess, Pastor.—My last report failed to get in. Will say a few words about our revival meeting. Rev. Joel B. Trogdon was reported to be our pastor's helper, but owing to sickness he could not come. So Rev. J. P. Pegg, also a former pastor of ours, helped Mr. Burgess. The Eden M. E. church and Palestine M. P. church held a union revival; afternoon and night service at one church one day, the other church the next day, and continued one week . The atendance was good, the preaching real good, and everybody enjoyed hearing former Pastor Pegg.

Brother Pegg served his first year on Flat Rock charge. Our people learned to love him then, and it was a real pleasure to have him back, and the M. E.'s learned to love him also. Mrs. Pegg and the children visited with us a part of the week. We were glad to have the family, and welcome them back again.

Our pastor has filled all his appointments this quarter to date, and has only one more before conference.

The last quarterly conference will be held Saturday afternoon before the third Sunday in September. We do wish our pastor could go to this, our last annual conference, with every claim paid in full.

The annual Tucker reunion met at Palestine the fourth Sunday in September, with a large crowd and a most delicious dinner; and a good program made an enjoyable day. The attendance was estimated at 400 people. The next reunion will meet next year on the same date, at Colfax, N. C.

GRACE R. TUCKER, Reporter.

Baltimore Church, West Forsyth Charge.—We are nearing the close of another conference year. We trust that all our responsibilities will be met. Our pastor has been with us five years. We greatly appreciate all his efforts to make our church one of the best. He has been very loyal, bringing us, from time to time, very inspiring and uplifting messages.

Mr. Ferree delivered his last sermon before conference, Sunday morning. He read from the 5th chapter of Matthew. His subject was "Peace," taken from Matt. 5:9. In the Beatitudes we find a new source of comfort and a wonderful hope set forth to distressed and perplexed souls.

The fourth quarterly conference will be held the third Sunday at Stony Knoll at 2:30 o'clock.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its last meeting at the church Saturday, September 16, with 12 members present. The district meeting will be held at Maple Springs, October 12. We hope that every member can be present.

JOSEPHINE PHILLIPS, Reporter.

Davidson Charge, W. H. Neese, Pastor, October 3.—In a few words this writer will try to give a brief report of the meetings of the Lineberry Auxiliary for the past four months.

The June meeting was held with Miss Bruce Smith. Owing to sicknes in the homes of some of the members, the attendance was not so good, but a real interesting meeting was held. Miss Smith in her interesting way gave a brief report of one chapter of the study book. We were glad to have as visitors Mrs. J. C. Smith and Miss Mayme Lanier.

The Auxiliary met with Mrs. Van B. Wood for their July meeting. Not a full attendance of the members, but an interesting meeting. Mrs. W. C. Wood reviewed the second chapter of the study book which was enjoyed by all present.

The August meeting was with Mrs. Vernon Hall. At this time Mrs. Garvin Elliott gave an interesting report of the quarterly meeting of the Branch that was held at Thomasville. We were glad to have as visitors Miss Donnie Harrison of High Point and Miss Bonnie Rea Lanier of near Handy. At this meeting the Auxiliary voted to take the initiative in having Lineberry church painted on the inside. The Auxiliary bought the paint and the men paid for having it put on. The paint adds much to the looks of the inside of the church.

Not so many miles from Lineberry church there live two maiden ladies who are not able to attend church, so the Auxiliary members, with the pastor, met with these ladies for their September meeting. The writer was not privileged to be present, but from the reports she received from the meeting, it was indeed "good to be there." The usual program was carried out, with the Auxiliary singing a number of hymns dear to the hearts of these ladies. This meeting was held in the home of Miss Mary Ann and Miss Abigail Coggins. This, I believe, is one way we can carry on home mission work—take the Auxiliary, prayer meetings, etc., to those who cannot attend the regular church services. Two new members were added to our roll at this time—Mrs. Esther Morris and Mrs. Estella Harrison.

The October meeting will be with Mrs. D. E. Lanier.

Next Sunday night, October 8, at 7 p.m., the Lineberry Auxiliary will observe the fall thank-offering service.

1 am not the reporter for the Chapel Hill Auxiliary, but I just want to say they are holding their meetings each month and much interest is taken in the meetings.

Each Auxiliary has elected delegates to attend the Branch quarterly meeting in Winston-Salem October 10.

The people continue to remember us with good things for the table, not only our own members but members of other churches.

We were glad to have the following people from Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson charge, worship with us yesterday at Lineberry church, and to have them in our home for a short visit: Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Payne, Misses Annie and Evelyn Payne, and Artis Payne. It is always a pleasure to have former members visit us.

MRS. W. H. NEESE, Aux. Reporter.

Gray's Chapel Church, Randolph Charge, H. L. Isley, Pastor.—As conference draws near, we are looking forward to having Mr. Isley with us another year. He and Mrs. Isley have gained the love and respect of all the members. If our church has failed in any way this year we hold our pastor blameless, for he has given his time and self unreservedly to his work.

The end of the year finds us with most of our claims paid. We hope to have them all paid by conference.

The fourth Sunday in September we had an all-day service, which was the beginning of our meeting and the 108th anniversary celebration of our church. Our pastor delivered a fine sermon at 11 o'clock. In the afternon he read a history of the church. Rev. A. O. Lindley and Miss Edith Guthrie each gave a splendid talk. It is estimated that something over 2,000 people were present to enjoy the day.

Rev. Charles Coble was the help during the week of the meeting. I am sure everyone who attended the services was helped. I have never heard better preaching. As our pastor put it, "He preached the gospel in its purity."

On Friday night of the meeting the members gave Mr. and Mrs. Isley an old-fashioned pounding.

The Randolph County Ministerial association met at Gray's Chapel on Monday, October 2. The ladies of the church served luncheon to the members present.

We plan to have the election of church officers the second Sunday in October.

New Salem, Randleman Charge, Rev. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.—As we haven't had a report since our revival meeting closed, we would like to say we had a good meeting, with large crowds attending the evening services.

Rev. W. L. Harkey of Lincolnton was the pulpit help. Everybody enjoyed his sermons very much. We enjoyed having him in our homes so much. We hope he will come our way again some time. There were several professions and reclamations, and four were added to the church membership.

Our pastor has done great work the two years he has served as pastor here. We are hoping that conference will see fit to return him to us.

Our finances are not quite up to date, but are in such shape that we are reasonably certain it will all be paid.

We would like to remember our sick. Mr. W. A. Brown is real sick at his home here. We hope for him a speedy recovery. We missed him at church yeterday so much.

Mrs. Floye Hinshaw is a patient at Randolph hospital, but we are glad to report she is getting along nicely, and is expecting to return home this week.

Since our last report, one of our members, Miss Mada Trogdon, has become the bride of Mr. Charles Oscar Hayes. We wish them much success through life.

Stony Knoll Church, West Forsyth Charge.—Rev. G. B. Ferree filled his reguar appointment at Stony Knoll church, Sunday, October 1, bringing a splendid message on "The Peacemaker." The church officers were elected at this meeting for the ensuing year.

We are having a very good Sunday school at this church, although the attendance is not as large as we would like. Mr. Henry Cornelius is superintendent, and Mr. Walter Speer assistant.

The fourth quarterly conference of West Forsyth charge will be held at Stony Knoll church the third Sunday in this month at 2:30 o'clock.

Shiloh, Shiloh Charge, C. E. Ridge, Pastor.—Our work here continues to move along toward the fast approaching annual conference. Our pastor filled his regular appointment Sunday and preached from the text, Luke 22:31-32. At the close of the service three new members were received; namely, Mrs. J. M. Shoaf from First Presbyterian church, Salisbury; Mrs. Letha Smith Berrier, from Jersey Baptist church; and Mr. Carl Everhart from the Pilgrim Reformed church. We welcome these to a place in our church.

Church officers were also elected, a list of whom will appear later; and on the third Sunday the installation service will be held. Also the church will hear the treasurer's report, with the contributions of each member given.

We remind all officers that Saturday, October 7, at Friendship, is the fourth quarterly conference, with preaching at 11 and dinner, followed by conference in the afternoon.

The Auxiliary presented its fall thank-offering Sunday night, and received an offering of $11. The Auxiliary will send cakes, etc., to the Children's Home, Saturday, October 7.

On Sunday morning, October 1, Mr. S. Tilden Moseley passed away at the age of 62 years. Funeral services were conducted from Shiloh church, of which he was a member, Tuesday at 11 o'clock, by Pastor Ridge and Rev. C. C. Wagoner, of Beulah Reformed church. A fuller account will probably appear later.

As we near the close of our conference year with the hopes of a very successful ending, we are wishing for every church great success, and ask you to continue to pray for us.

Central Avenue Methodist Church, Charlotte, Rev. T. E. Strickland, Pastor.—During the last year the Central Avenue Methodist church has had a very prosperous year. We have had many successful services and held a two-week revival service conducted by Rev. Odell Brown of Duke university. There have been 35 additions to the church membership by profession of faith and transfer from other churches. The Sunday school has also been very successful in its work; it has grown in number and in spirit. The young people have been very active in the C. E. work of the Mecklenburg county and N. C. state unions. They are also a great benefit to the church in every way. The adult department has also been active in backing the young people and advising them in the spiritual way.

Back Pain and Kidney Strain
Wrong foods and drinks, worry, overwork and colds often put a strain on the Kidneys and non-systematic and non-organic Kidney and Bladder troubles may be the true cause of Excess Acidity, Getting Up Nights, Burning Passages, Leg Pains, Nervousness, Dizziness, Swollen Ankles, Rheumatic Pains, and Puffy Eyelids. In many such cases the diuretic action of the Doctor's prescription Cystex helps the Kidneys clean out Excess Acids. This plus the palliative work of Cystex may easily make you feel like a new person in just a few days. Try Cystex under the guarantee of money back unless completely satisfied. Cystex costs only 3c a dose at druggists and the guarantee protects you.

We have just elected new officers for the coming year in the Sunday school. Mr. W. G. Tadlock has been elected superintendent, and he has already begun to do a good work. We are reorganizing our church school into the graded classes under the Methodist supervision. He has as his assistant, Mr. Clifton Gibson, and co-workers with him are Mr. Woodly Craig, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Vincent Starnes, assistant secretary and treasurer. With this splendid set-up in our church school officers, I am sure that we will have a most successful year.

The Ladies' Auxiliary has also elected officers for the coming year, and have as their president, Mrs. Lewis Garmon; vice-president, Mrs. Charles Deweese; secretary, Mrs. Crow; and treasurer, Mrs. J. H. McCall. This is also a very active organ of the church, and they are doing a great work. They sponsored an "old maids' convention" given by the Brevard Street Methodist church in the hut of the church last week, and made a great success.

The Christian Endeavor societies have also elected new officers for their work during the coming year. The executive committees have met and planned the work, both spiritually and financially. Installation services were held last Sunday evening, conducted by our pastor, Rev. Mr. Strickland. He made a very inspirational talk and the new officers pledged themselves conscientiously to the work.

We trust that as we go into the Methodist Church, we may have a most successful program of church activities. We are praying for this new work and pledge our support to the uplifting of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

College Street, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—The Woman's Auxiliary met at the regular time for the monthly meeting, but due to the fact that so many of our members were absent, we did not discuss matters as they should have been. So we decided to have a called meeting the following Tuesday night, at Mrs. J. W. Warren's home. The meeting proved a success. More members were there, and also we had the pleasure of having Mrs. Silery, one of our former church members, with us. We discusssed several plans and have carried some of them through.

On Thursday night, September 21, the Auxiliary sponsored a foot-measuring party at Mrs. Frank King's. The public was invited, with everyone paying a penny for each inch their foot was long. Games were played and refreshments served.

The Auxiliary also has a patch-sewing project on hand. Each member has the opportunity to see how many patches she can get on the pajamas while they are in her possession. Each one that sews a patch on puts some money and their name under the patch. When this is completed we are going to give our pastor the job of taking them off for us.

The Sunday school goes on very much the same. We have not had much increase recently. We have decided to send some money from the Sunday school to the Children's Home.

Our pastor has filled all of his appointments since my last report. The past third Sunday morning we observed Communion, and nearly all the congregation partook.

On Thursday morning, September 28, at 10:30, we had the honor of having our president, Dr. Pritchard, with us. He spoke on the subject of uniting together. He told of how other churches had united, and of many other things of great value to all of us Methodists.

Along with the pleasure of having our president with us, we also had a number of other ministers who were from other charges. Mr. Whitehead, of Henderson, was chairman of the meeting; Mr. Pegg, from the Granville charge; Mr. Cranford, of Vance; Mr. Howard, of Halifax; Mr. Wagner, of Creswell; Mr. H. S. B. Thompson, and several members from the Littleton charge. We hope that all will come back again in the near future. We enjoyed having them very much.

We are very sorry indeed to hear of Mrs. Tom Woods' death. She was a member of Weaver's Chapel church, and I am sure that Weaver's Chapel and its members will greatly miss her faithfulness. Our sympathy goes out to Mr. Wood and family in their great loss.

As conference draws nearer, we try but the harder to make this another year of worth-while things. I hope so much that the rest of the churches on this charge and others will take the same attitude.

We pray for the Lord's blessing upon us, and want the prayers of all that are interested in us and our work.

Shiloh, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment fourth Sunday morning, bringing a good message as usual. Our people seem to be well pleased with the work of our pastor this year.

Our annual revival meeting was held the second week in August. Rev. Mr. Strickland of Charlotte was the pulpit help. He brought some very impressive messages. There were five new members added to our church.

We are glad to have Mr. G. L. Whitaker back again. He has been in hospital.

Plans are underway for wiring the church for electric lights.

The class of young married people met at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Grady Hemphill, Friday night. Games were enjoyed, after which the hostess served hot weiners and rolls.

We wish to thank the ladies of Tabernacle church for an invitation to their reception.

Let our church be well represented at the last quarterly conference this year, at Bethany, Sunday at 2:30 o'clock.

I believe we are required to do whatever we are called upon as best we can. Let us not shirk this coming year and cooperate and try to make our church a success.

Spring Hill, North Davidson Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment Sunday afternoon, bringing a very helpful and inspiring message.

We began our revival service September 17 and continued through the week. We were indeed glad to have with us Rev. J. T. Bowman, of Thomasville, as the helper. He brought to us many helpful and interesting messages. Our of 15 professions, nine united with the church.

Our Ladies' Aid society will meet with Mrs. Clyde Craven next Saturday evening at 7:30. We have had several new members recently, of which we are very proud. We would like to have several more to join.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

A Nonagenarian Passes

Frances Louisa, daughter of Anderson and Susan Richardson Glenn, was born in Chatham county, North Carolina, July 2, 1841. On February 21, 1861, she was happily united in marriage with Jese Meacham Lindley. To this union 11 children, eight sons and three daughters, were born, all of whom survive except her husband, two sons and one daughter.

Early in life she accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as her personal Savior and united with Center church on the Alamance charge, which her father had helped to establish by giving the land for the church and cemetery. She lived in fellowship with several generations of people who passed through the portals of this historic church into the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. She loved her church and was faithful and loyal to it to the day of her death. She was an affectionate wife and mother. She was a good neighbor, and all who knew her loved and respected her.

On June 22, 1939, she fell asleep in Jesus. Funeral services were held in her church, conducted by her pastor, on June 23, and her body laid to rest in the cemetery hard by. She lived to be 97 years, 11 months and 20 days old. She was one of the oldest, if not the oldest, citizen of Alamance county. This remarkable woman lives today in the lives of her eight children, 50 grandchildren, 62 great grandchildren, and three great, great grandchildren. One son, Oscar A., is an honored member of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and all of the other children are highly respected members of the church.

What a contribution this godly mother made to the church and to the state! It is not to be wondered at that a great crowd of her neighbors and friends attended her funeral, and mingled their tears with the tears of her children and of their offspring. We expect to meet her again some day.

FALL MEETING HELD AT CRESWELL

The fall meeting of the Women's Auxiliaries was held in the Creswell church Sunday, September 17. The meeting opened at 11 o'clock a.m. Rev. W. M. Howard extended a welcome to all members and visitors.

Following the usual service procedure, Dr. C. E. Forlines preached a wonderful sermon.

At 12:30 dinner was served. We say "dinner," for by no stretch of the imagination could the bountiful spread be called a lunch. The Creswell people more than justified their reputation for friendliness and hospitality.

The afternoon session opened at 1:30. Miss Blanche Hardee, district chairman, presided. Mrs. C. N. Davenport extended a very warm welcome, to which Mrs. P. S. Bellamy, of the Enfield Auxiliary, in behalf of the visiting Auxiliaries, responded. Mrs. J. J. Williamss conducted the devotional. This was followed by a lovely solo by a member of the Creswell choir.

The meeting was then opened for the business session. Holister took the honors for the largest attendance. After the business discusions, Mrs. L. A. Williams of Eden Auxiliary reviewed the study book, "Homeland Harvest." Mrs. J. H. Cutchin of Whitakers spoke on the achievement and influence of the Auxiliaries.

After a special offering was taken for the Children's Home, Dr. Forlines spoke on the urgent need of scholarship funds and new books for the library of the Theological Seminary. Pledges were made for these worthy causes.

No definite invitation being given for the spring meeting, plans for meeting with the Littleton Auxiliary were discussed.

Benediction was spoken by Dr. Forlines.

We left Creswell feeling greatly benefited by having been there.

MRS. L. A. WILLIAMS.

MY CREED

By Dr. Charles Medbury

To this day that is mine, my country's and my God's, I dedicate my all. My talents, every one, shall be held subject to the sight draft of the emergencies of others. I will enlarge my soul by cultivating love for those from whom I find myself recoiling. No man shall ever feel his color or his caste in my presence, for within my heart of hearts there shall be no consciousness of it.

The man who has fallen shall find in me a friend, the woman down, a helper. But more than this, those falling shall have my trust that they may stand again. The cry of every child shall find my heart whether cry of need or of aspiration. Not one of all the nation's "little ones" shall be despised. Cherishing every life of whatever land or race, and mindful of hidden struggles in all things, I will strive to help and to serve.

No word shall ever pass my lips that hurts another in things of face, form, station or estate. My own weaknesses, my foibles and my sins shall chasten speech and spirit and deny desecration to pervert them. The vandal hands of lust and hate and greed shall not be permitted to despoil.

And thus I resolve, not because I am good, but that I want to be; not because I am strong, but that I feel weakness; not that I feel above others, but with all my soul I long to be of humankind, both helped and helper. So do I set apart my culture. So do I receive but to give to others. So do I press humbly into the presence of the sacrificial Son of Man, crying out in eager consecration "Let me follow Thee, Master, wherever the world still needs ministry, wherever life is still to be given for many."

Help me, Thou whose manger cradle brought democracy to light, to meet in my own worth democracy's final test and to my own great day to be true.

A MILE WITH ME

Oh, who will walk a mile with me
Along life's merry way?
A comrade blithe and full of glee
Who dares to laugh out loud and free,
And let his frolic fancy play
Like a happy child, through the flowers gay
That fill the field and fringe the way
Where he walks a mile with me.

And who will walk a mile with me
Along life's weary way?
A friend whose heart has eyes to see
The stars shine out o'er the darkening lea,
And the quiet rest at the end o' day—
A friend who knows and dares to say
The brave, sweet words that cheer the way
Where he walks a mile with me.

With such a comrade, such a friend,
I fain would walk till journeys end,
Through summer sunshine, winter rain,
And then?—Farewell, we shall meet again!

—Henry Van Dyke.

CALOMEL NIGHT NOW A PLEASURE

The old time calomel was the doctor's favorite remedy for biliousness or so-called "Torpid Liver," so prevalent in hot weather, but it had some serious drawbacks from the standpoint of the patient. The nauseating and sickening after-effects and the necessity to follow it with a dose of Epsom salts made many of us hate to take it. Now you can really enjoy your calomel, for Calotabs make calomel-taking a pleasure. They give you the combined effects of calomel and salts, helping Nature to expel the sour, stagnant bile and washing it out of the system.

One or two Calotabs at bedtime with a glass of water or sweet milk,—that's all. Next morning your system feels clean and refreshed, your head is clear, your spirit bright, and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you wish and go about your work or pleasure.

Genuine Calotabs are sold only in checkerboard (black and white) packages bearing the trade mark "Calotabs." Refuse imitations. Family package only twenty-five cents; trial package ten cents, at your dealer's. (Adv.)

5 Reasons Why You Should Use DEVOE'S 2-Coat System

1 Your paint money goes twice as far. New 2-Coat System outlasts paint jobs 2 to 1. . . . Nation-wide reports prove it!
2 Your house is whiter—colors truer. Ordinary paints will not produce such a dazzling white or such glorious tints.
3 Paint stays Fresh, Clean and Bright. Years after other paints become streaked, your Devoe painted home is still clean and fresh-looking.
4 Saves one Whole Coat. Two coats of Devoe House Paint do a better job than three coats of conventional paint ever did before.
5 Four Paint Evils avoided. New system defies checking, cracking, peeling. Devoe paint resists fading.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Conference Committees

This week I am naming conference committees to perform the usual functions at the annual conference session. Inasmuch as the session is shortened this year it did not seem wise to appoint all the committees which we usually have. Also we are to have a common journal and there will not be room in it for all of the reports which the committees, if appointed, would prepare. Since the number of committees is smaller it became impossible to use anything like all of the members of the conference, either ministerial or lay delegates on the committees. And to be exact I do not yet have the names of all the lay delegates. All pastors have been written to who had not sent in the name but not all have yet responded. Of course the task of the committees this year is going to be different from former years. In the past many of these committees have launched a program for the new year. In some cases this time that will be done by the new conference. Well, here are the committees:

Credentials: The Secretaries.

The President's Message: Ministers, C. E. Ridge, George R. Brown, M. C. Henderson, E. A. Bingham. Laymembers, J. G. Rogers, Eli Bellamy, J. F. Evans, J. L. Amick.

Methodist Protestant Herald: Ministers, J. Elwood Carroll, C. W. Bates, F. W. Paschall, C. L. Spencer. Laymembers, F. R. Stout, W. L. Ward, H. L. Hanner, J. M. Cutchin.

Christian Education: Ministers, E. O. Peeler, J. C. Madison, T. E. Strickland, Aubert Smith. Laymembers, T. O. Pender, J. H. Walker, Jr., Mrs. H. W. Mitchell.

Missions: Ministers, J. C. Auman, G. L. Curry, Joseph Coble, D. I. Garner. Laymembers, Mrs. Charles Orrell, Mrs. Sallie Williams, Mrs. A. H. Ragan.

Our Last Chance

As I now understand it, it seems that this will be my last letter to our people as president of the Annual Conference. The agreement some time ago was not to print the HERALD next week and by the next week my office will have been abolished, so it seems to be now or never. In this letter I would like to urge all pastors and all charges to do the very best possible to bring up all finances in full. This will be our last chance as a separate denomination and it will be embarrassing to the conference not to be able to pay its bills. This week good reports have come in from several charges. First Church, Burlington, reports all interests paid in full. Of course this does not include HERALD Subscriptions. Other charges report that all interests will be paid.

Quarterly Conferences and Sunday Services

For the past week life has been such a whirl of quarterly conferences meetings with District Superintendents and Sunday services that it is impossible to report all of them in detail. But Friday night of last week I held the quarterly conference on the Richland charge, Rev. C. L. Grant, pastor. At the most of the churches the bulk of the finances was in hand. Brother Grant is a good worker and looks well after the interests of the charge. Saturday of last week I was with the Shiloh charge in all day services at Friendship church with preaching at eleven o'clock and the quarterly conference in the afternoon. Rev. C. E. Ridge, the pastor and his people have had a fine year with most of the finances in hand. Even though Brother Ridge has served the charge six years there was unanimous desire for him to return, however, he will be subject to the will of the conference. Sunday morning I was with Dr. George R. Brown at Center church on the Alamance charge and was at Sapling Ridge in the afternoon. At both of these places there was good attendance. Dr. Brown looks after the interests of the church and I think he will have a good report this year even though all finances perhaps will not be raised.

Sunday evening I was at Glen Raven church on the Glen Raven charge preaching first and holding the Q. C. afterwards. Rev. Joseph Coble, the pastor, has done good work here and this charge also will make a good report. Here too the verdict was unanimous for the return of the pastor. This week every day and night will be used for conferences, group meetings, board meetings and such things as are necessary but it is too late to announce them for this issue.

Boundary Charges

So far this year I have tried to hold the circuits of our conference together for another year in large measure because of the financial difficulties of mixing them up. But in some cases I shall not be able to see my plans carried out. But in all of these things we will do the best we can.

Pray for the Conference

I am now calling on all of our people to pray for the coming session of our conference for if ever there was a time when we needed wisdom it is now.

Appointments

Saturday, October 14, 2 p. m. Q. C. on North Davidson charge, Canaan church.

Pastor Aubert Smith reports that World Service and pastor's salary are paid in full by the Siler City Church, that Bonlee and Piney Grove churches on same charge are practically out, will pay everything in full; and that all claims will be paid by the church at Liberty. Splendid.

Our front page this week is recording the most momentus event that has occurred in North Carolina Methodism in all the decades of its progress. Grace Church will house the maker of the last motion ever to be made by a member of the Methodist Protestant conference in North Carolina. West Market Street Methodist Church will furnish place for the opening session of the united Western North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church. And shall we say that possibly there is to unite on the twentieth day of October in this Church a religious movement that shall serve the needs of man as long as time shall last? It may be so.

There will be just one more issue of the M. P. Herald. No paper next week, but on the week of the adjournment of the Conference will come the last copy from the press, and it will contain the important proceedings of this first annual conference of the Methodist Church in North Carolina. It will indeed be an historic number and all of our subscribers will doubtless want to file it away to be kept for their children to read that they may know what happened upon this eventful day. If you should want an extra copy, let us have your order at once otherwise we shall print just enough to supply our regular subscribers.

The Board of Publication of the North Carolina Christian Advocate will take over the unexpired subscriptions of the Methodist Protestant Herald and send to all of our subscribers the Christian Advocate so that you will not lose a penny on your Church paper subscription. We greatly appreciate this act of the Board of Publication and we hope that you will show your appreciation by renewing your subscription just as soon as your present subscription expires. The price is the same as the Herald, $2.00 for the year, $1.00 for six months. All who attend the Conference at Grace Church next week may get a copy of the Advocate without cost, we know you will avail yourself of this privilege; the editors will place several hundred at your disposal.

The problems of the world may be reduced in statement to the problems of the individual life. One person can create the most difficult problems the world has ever known. The acts of just one life has thrown the human race for many a fall and has thereby "turned the hands of the clock back" for generations. This fact makes self-mastery the first duty of life.

In an address to the people of North Carolina through the public press, Senator J. W. Bailey among other things truly says:

"Commerce is not worth the cost of war and peaceful means of promoting it are more effectual than the means of force. I am not inclined to think that so-called international rights are worth the cost of war, and here too the methods of peace are more effectual. I believe that the involvement of this country in a war at this time, even if we should be successfull, would tend to bring this country to ruin and our people into poverty, and hundreds of thousands of homes into incurable sorrow. We should prepare our defenses in the highest degree. We must have a great navy, a great merchant marine and a well trained, efficient and modern military equipment. Some of us may not like this, but we are dealing with the world as it is, and we must remember that there are in the world nations that seem disposed to take whatever they can, whenever they can, wherever they can. Power to resist there must be. Our peace may not otherwise be preserved."

ENDORSEMENT OF THE HISTORY OF THE CONFERENCE

By Dr. Paul Neff Garber

I am happy to have the opportunity of recommending the book, The History of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, by J. Elwood Carroll to all Methodists of North Carolina. This volume will give to the reader a picture of one of the most thrilling stories in North Carolina Methodism. It is the story of devout Methodists who in 1828 because of difference of opinion over polity organized the Methodist Protestant Church, stressing the principle of lay representation. In 1939 the descendants of those first Methodist Protestants of North Carolina have seen that principle adopted by the United Methodism.

The Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina brings to the United Methodism not only a great heritage and loyal members but also institutions like High Point College and the Orphanage at High Point. Mr. Carroll's book not only tells of sacrifices made by the early Methodist Protestants but it also deals with the leaders of the present era. Dr. S. W. Taylor and Mr. J. Norman Wills served on the Unification Commission that prepared the Plan of Union. Dr. C. W. Bates was assistant secretary of the Uniting Conference while all North Carolina Methodism was honored by the election of Dr. George R. Brown to the Judicial Council of The Methodist Church. This book shows that the Methodist Protestants of North Carolina have able administrators in men like Dr. J. E. Pritchard, Dr. S. W. Taylor, and Dr. A. G. Dixon. Scholarship and education are represented by Dr. C. E. Forlines, President G. I. Humphreys, Dean P. E. Lindley, Dr. P. S. Kennett, Dr. R. M. Andrews, Dr. N. M. Harrison and Dr. F. L. Gibbs. Of the many laymen of the church, J. Norman Wills and Mrs. W. C. Hammer are given special mention. The Methodist Protestants also make a great contribution to United Methodism in North Carolina through the many young preachers who have taken an active part in all phases of religious activity in the state. In this group are such leaders as J. W. Braxton, F. W. Paschall, J. C. Madison, A. M. Smith, T. J. Whitehead and J. C. Auman. The Methodist Protestants certainly give to United Methodism a young historian in J. Elwood Carroll.

I have known in a general way the history of the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina and have had the privilege of associating with many of the preachers and laymen. It was not, however, until I had read Mr. Carroll's manuscript that I had a complete picture of what Methodist Protestants have meant to our state and the contributions which they are destined to make in our United Methodism. This book should be read by all North Carolina Methodists. It is a contribution to our Methodist literature.

COL. L. L. POLK—"FATHER OF STATE COLLEGE"

By David A. Lockmiller

As early as 1872, if not earlier, Col. L. L. Polk, North Carolina's first Commissioner of Agriculture and founder of The Progressive Farmer, was publicly urging the establishment of an agricultural college. In the fall of 1872, at the opening of the first agricultural fair in Raleigh, he made an address in which he urged the people to establish an agricultural college somewhere in the State "with its branch schools in every county as feeders to the main school."

Col. Polk, more than any other man, organized and led the farmers of North Carolina in their demand for a college which would comply with the broad terms of the Morrill Act. Through the editorial columns of The Progressive Farmer he continued week after week the fight for a "farmers' college" which he had begun by word of mouth. He served notice on all concerned that he would "continue this subject and follow it up until justice is done the people, or they know why it is not done." . . .

All during the 1880's, through speeches, correspondence, and the columns of The Progressive Farmer, he continued to arouse and organize the farmers and farm clubs of the State in support of such a plan. He was not unmindful of the efforts being made by the Watauga Club in behalf of industrial education, but his aims were larger—he wanted a college in which agriculture would not rank beneath "woodwork, mining, and metallurgy" in the curriculum. He demanded a college which would receive substantial support from the State treasury, and he argued that the annual income of $7,500 from the Land-Script Fund should be transferred from the State University to maintain the proposed college in accordance with the true spirit of the Land-Grant Act.

Cherry Street Methodist Church, Kernersville

Rev. C. B. Way, Pastor

In 1886, a legislature largely composed of farmers had been elected by the people. Many of these men were Polk's friends. . . . He called an official mass meeting of all organized farmers' clubs of the State in Raleigh, January 26, 1887. It was probably the largest gathering of farmers ever held in North Carolina up to that time . . . and demanded that a "college of agriculture and mechanic arts" be established in accordance with the Morrill Act; that the income from the Land-Script Fund be paid to the college. . . .

Thus did "The North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts" come into being, not as an industrial school, but as a land-grant college. Hundreds had worked for one cause or the other, but the chief credit for success belongs to Col. L. L. Polk. In 1892 William J. Peele, organizer of the Watauga Club and a staunch friend of the college before and after its establishment, wrote of Polk as follows: "In 1884, 1885, 1886, and 1887, he was the most powerful factor in the establishment of an agricultural and mechanical college." Years later Josephus Daniels wrote of Polk's service in securing the A. and M. College in these words: "I was secretary of the Watauga Club for a time and this club was very active in its efforts, but it could not have enlisted the necessary support and aroused the enthusiasm that resulted in success until Col. Polk organized the farmers into militant support. It was this organization of farmers led by Col. Polk that put it over."—(From The Progressive Farmer for October, 1939, by permission of the editor and author.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By O. L. EASTER

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, October 15

Lesson Text: Matthew 4:1-11.

Golden Text: "For we have . . . one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Hebrews 4:15.

There is much made of the idea of Christ as the divine Companion or friend to man in that He became flesh and dwelt among them. Perhaps one of the chosiest statements of Christ in all the gospels was that one in which He declared to His followers that "I call you not servants but friends" which was to say that between them and Him there was to be a close tie of fellowship and understanding. His whole life was simply lived to accomplish this fellowship of man with God through the incarnation. Many wise maneauvers were made on God's part to wisely bring about this true companionship of Christ with mankind. There was the levelling fact of being born as a little babe in the arms of a human mother, there was the fact of His slow and natural growth in wisdom and statue, there again was the fact of His lack in the world's goods which put Him in fellowship with the world's majorities. (Lincoln once said that God must have loved the common people for He made so many of them, thus in taking the humble home of a hard-working carpenter as His place of entrance into this world He made Himself brother to this great body of common folk). Of all the various moves on the part of God towards this end this one in which He allowed the Spirit to drive Christ into the wilderness to be tempted of Satan was without doubt the most productive. In being tempted like as we He truly became a comrade; in being triumphant over temptation He becomes our Saviour. For temptation is the one inescapable experience of man and upon its outcome rests the moral destiny of all souls. Thus to be our High Priest in Heaven and our Companion on earth Christ of necessity had to submit Himself to the fact of temptation.

Temptation of itself is not evil. It is an inevitable product of free will that war afforded to man when God decided to make him a moral being.

James, in fact, admonishes us to "count it all joy when ye fall into manifold temptation." He says this in response to the fact that to be able to be tempted is to be a moral creature made in the image of God able to choose good or evil. To choose good is the process by which mortal men can develop into the sons of God; to choose evil is to become a sinner fallen from the first estate. Therefore for God to allow man to be free moral agents He must concede to them the power to choose; between two opposing elements, good and evil, and this automatically brings about our fact of temptation. Man's plight has come about by the way he has met temptation and not in being tempted. Man became "lost" simply by yielding to the temptation of choosing sin and he has been subsequently "found" or saved by Christ in that He met our same temptations but was able to come through them victorious in choosing the good. It is as Shakespeare observed "One thing to be tempted and another thing to fall." The life of Christ was a typical human life, which shows what every human life may be in its essential essence, when completely given up to God and entirely obedient to His divine will. That is the hope of our humanity—a hope that alone can be realized by surrending these wills that are ours unto the Christ who through temptation throes was able to surrender His to God.

"Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, thou:
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them thine."
Tennyson, In Memoriam.

Since we share the various temptations that were Christ's our great need and privilege is to likewise share His victory over these temptations. Every weapon that He used against Satan is available to the Christian today. Christ as a man has forever proved to sinful men that "there hath no temptation taken you, but such as man can bear." First we note the weapon of prayer and fasting—communion with God our Father. After forty days of fellowship with God Jesus was equal to the wiles of Satan. What had Satan to offer as over against the promises and resources of the Lord God. Christians usually succomb to the Devil's approaches when through lack of prayer they have forgotten the rich treasures of God. It was this that Christ feared for His disciples there in the garden and He warned them to be busy at praying in that dangerous hour that when temptation should come they might not "enter into it." A second weapon of defense that Christ used was the word of God. Therein is to be found the answer to all of the deceptions of sins suggestions. When Satan promises bread, kingdoms, glory if men will fall down and worship him by sinning, into man's hand should go the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, to thrust home a deadly blow to the "Father of lies" by stating that the soul that sinneth thus shall die. Satan would hide the evil from our eyes: he points at the rainbow and veils the storm behind it, and thus are we tempted, thus do we fall if we use not the word of God to show us the truth. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto good works." (2 Timothy 3:16, 17). The other means of victory was that of divine worship which was the process of putting Satan "behind" and god on His throne in front. When a human heart fully surrenders itself to worship only God then, as with Jesus here, Satan will leave him and the angels of God will be his ministers.

The men whom I have seen succeed best in life have always been cheerful and hopeful men, who went about their business with a smile on their faces, and took the changes and chances of this mortal life like men, facing rough and smooth alike as it came.—Charles Kingsley.

THE END OF A WAY

By Los. L. Wren

Yes, we are coming to the end of a way, or rather, we are coming to where three ways merge into one greater way. One of these ways has been known as the Methodist Protestant way, a great highway over which thousands have come. This way, this highway of faith and hope and courage has ever pointed upward, onward to a better church life. The Christian men and women who began walking this way first are all gone. Many of them their names forgotten and hardly a trace of their memory left but we know they lived and prayed and worked, and that this highway of holiness afforded them a church home, and the world is better today because they walked in this way and contributed their mite to the church life of their community through this medium of service. This way has not always been smooth and easy of travel. Many times it has been rough and steep and difficult to climb, but with faith and hope and courage the travellers pressed onward and upward until they reached and kept the heights. Those of us who live today, and are coming to witness the merging of this Methodist Protestant way with the other two branches of Methodism into a greater highway of church opportunity and service, should take time to meditate upon what this way has meant to us and all who have come under the benign influence of the Methodist Protestant church. We owe a debt of gratitude to the mothers and fathers of our church who made it possible for us today to have had such a fine highway of holiness in which to live and serve and walk toward the Eternal City.

A thousand memories come flooding upon us as we meditate upon this way. We go back to childhood's happy hours, back to the old home church where first we found the Lord. The old home church may have been a stately edifice of brick and stone with stained glass windows but to most of us it was a brush arbor or a quaint old house with little architectural beauty to make it attractive, but to us today it is the old home church. We recall so vividly the day we joined the church. What memories cluster about that dear old place. There were other boys and girls, perchance there were men and women, joining that day. What an experience for us. It all comes back today so vividly. The yesterday of the old home church. It was here that we heard the preacher of his day. He may not have been very learned, so far as Seminary training goes, he may never have been to a college, or even to high school, but he had a message that was full of Christian fire and pathos and his hearers caught the spirit of this humble man of God and the old church house rang with glad shouts of rejoicing Christians. The old church house may be gone and the faces we knew in the long ago may be fading from our minds but memory still lives and weaves about the dear old place some of the sweetest thoughts in our meditations.

Yes, we are witnessing the end or the merging of the old way. But we are coming to the end rejoicing. Rejoicing that it has been our happy privilege to have known so many fine Christian characters as we have journeyed along this highway. I am thinking now of the many noble women and men whom I have known, and with some of whom I have had the opportunity to work and walk together along this way. I shall never forget that fine group of Christian men who have been my pastors. They will ever hold a warm place in my heart. They are among the finest characters I have known and have added so much to my Christian experience. I shall never be able to tell them in this life just what they have meant to me. And as I remember our church papers and the unselfish service of their editors we can but say, "Well done good and faithful servants." And to that noble group of men and women who have been the officials of our church through more than a century of service we give unstinted praise. And then there is that most unselfish group of all, our missionaries, who have braved the hardships and dangers in foreign lands that they might carry the glad tidings of the gospel to peoples who have never known about our way, to them we build in memory's temple our most sacred shrine. Yes, we rejoice in the history of such a church with such a membership.

And I am rejoicing, too, as we come to the end of this way that we are merging into a greater highway of Christian endeavor and service. Here we shall meet new friends, make new acquaintances and grow into a larger family of Christian believers. This new church directed by the Master and supported by millions of loyal Methodists should challenge every one to do his best. Rejoice, rejoice, and again I say, rejoice.

BROTHER, CAN YOU SPARE A BOOK?

Some of you preachers have heard my appeals for books for the Seminary. And some of you have heeded. Something like a hundred books have come into my hands, or have been reported to me. Others have gone direct to Dr. Forlines. So I have no way of checking on the total.

I am making this last appeal before Conference: Won't you please look over the books in your library. Pick out one or more books—the more the better—make a list of them. Bring the list to Conference and give it to Dr. Forlines, who, I am told, will be there. If it should happen that he cannot come, give the list to me. But be sure to sign your name to it.

THE EFFECT OF WAR ON THE REFUGEE PROBLEM

By GUY EMERY SHIPLER

President, Associate Press

The incalculable results of the lightning strokes of the European war stagger the imagination. But in the immediate foreground there are some clear details which ought to be observed by all people of good-will. While it may bring ultimate changes for the better in their status, the refugees from Germany are in the present hour perhaps the most to be pitied of any of war's victims. They are caught everywhere as by an inexorable fate. In the torrent of troubled waters they seem likely to be overwhelmed.

Their hope may well be placed in the response of the many fortunate people who are not involved in the war and yet who feel that they should do something to help when civilization is being subjected to the most terrible attack in history.

Not many questions concerning the exact status of the refugee can be answered authoritatively at the moment. How many are there now outside of Germany? Can they remain where they are for the present? How many will be interned simply because they are Germans living in lands now at war with their homeland? Will Hitler's invitation to many expelled professional persons to return and aid Germany win the war find a response? Will the number of refugees go on increasing now that so many frontiers are sealed by war? What about the refugees now in America on visitor's visas? Where can they go when their leave to visit our land expires?

To most of such questions the only honest answer is—we don't know yet. However there are, as has been intimated, some known facts which are in themselves ample basis for continued work on behalf of the refugees. We do know that eleven thousand, three hundred Christians arriving from Germany had by October 1939, registered with the American Committee for Christian Refugees in New York. We do know that they are pleading for help, thronging the offices daily. Some require immediate necessities of life. Many have temporary means of existence and only need help in finding a new home and means of livelihood. We do know that in Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, England and France our cooperating agencies are still trying to serve the refugees. We do know that in Shanghai, China, as well as in other far-off places there are growing communities of refugees looking desperately for aid. Shall they look to America in vain?

Whether or not more refugees can come to our shores these who are here constitute an opportunity for friendly service which ought strongly to appeal to Americans who would like to do something about the menace of Hitlerism. Here are people who have been his direct victims. Many of them need not have left home had they been willing to submit to his ideas and his orders. At the risk of life itself they have opposed him. What more fitting thing than that they should now find comfort and help at the hands of those whose opposition to Hitlerism has cost them nothing? And what better time than the Thanksgiving season for the practical expression of our gratitude for our own liberty and peace through a generous gesture of friendship toward them. It is hoped that a widespread response will be made to the appeal of the American Christian Committee whose ability to extend help depends necessarily upon the financial support of the American Christian public.

HERALDS OF DESTINY

"Heralds of Destiny," adventure stories of civilization building and humanitarianism taken from the annals, past and present, of the Baptist and Methodist churches, are being presented weekly over Radio Station WMFR in High Point, North Carolina, at 5:00 o'clock on Sunday afternoons.

An eyewitness account of the recent bombing of Chungking, the sacrifice an old slave made in order to teach his people, the heroic courage of America's first foreign missionary, and the inspired determination that carried a Revolutionary era preacher on a quarter of a million mile journey on horseback provide the material for a few of the stories.

They are all true stories. Some of them happened almost two centuries ago. Others are still unfinished today. Jointly presented by the Methodist Million Unit Fellowship Movement and the Northern Baptist Convention, the "Heralds of Destiny" series is a dramatization of the most stirring episodes from the history of both churches.

In it is depicted the adventure and romance of building civilization on the world's frontiers and of taking comfort and aid to America's own benighted and underprivileged. While the episodes deal particularly with the heroes of the Baptist and Methodist churches, "Heralds of Destiny" stories are typical of the experiences of missionaries of any denomination.

The series, presented by the radio station on a sustaining basis, was inaugurated in 1937 by the Methodist church agency. This year, the Northern Baptist Convention accepted the invitation to join in the sponsorship, thus adding a wealth of material to the store from which material is drawn and increasing twofold the interest in the series.

To the Leader

This topic is designed to help young people get a basic point of view of life that will enable them to handle trouble victoriously. Young people need to discuss this subject. They are acquainted with hardship, disappointment, loss, pain, handicaps, and the like as well as their elders. They need to get the Christian's point of view of turning trouble into triumph. They need to discover the secret of making stepping stones out of stumbling stones. This topic affords a great opportunity for showing that practical Christianity calms the troubled breast and strengthens the troubled heart. You will find much help in the first chapter of E. Stanley Jones' book on "Christ and Human Suffering." No doubt the pastor has this splendid volume in his library and will be glad to loan it to you. Be sure to point out that the sustaining power of God's spirit is the secret of triumph over trouble.

The Poet

But as his joys are double,
So is his trouble.
He hath two winters, other things but one:
Both frosts and thought do nip,
And bite his lip;
And he of all things fears two deaths alone.
Yet even the greatest griefs
May be reliefs,
Could he but take them right, and in their ways.
Happy is he whose heart
Hath found the art
To turn his double pains to double praise.
—George Herbert.

Little Gems

We may sometimes have to "go through fire and water," but it is that God may bring us out "into a wealthy place."—Selected.

It is not in the pursuit of pleasures, but in the facing of tasks and difficulties that man develops strength.—The Congregationalist.

Topic Hints

Universal Baptism: Trouble is a universal baptism. It comes to all ages; it comes in unexpected and inexplicable ways. Trouble comes to the just and unjust. God knowing that trouble is a universal baptism has filled His great Book with tender comforts; He has pointed out the way for His children to use trouble as a means of spiritual growth. Troubles come to the Christian to be mastered and not shunned. God explains the method and supplies the penitent with wisdom and strength. It is certain that every man will face more or less trouble; every man should be certain that he can face his trouble triumphantly.

God's Written Word: When trouble comes, one should read the Word of God. He, who has read and studied the Bible before trouble comes, will be better prepared to refer to it when trouble comes. In this Book, one becomes acquainted with men who faced trouble and learns how they won victory or suffered defeat. There he meets the Jesus, the Master of every circumstance in life. On these sacred pages, he discovers the conditions which he must fulfill in the hour of trial. Here he finds the instructions of the Son of God and the assurance of victory for the faithful.

God's People: The lives of great men who have triumphed over trouble remind the troubled that they can likewise be triumphant. The departed have left us a record of their victories when the world thought they were defeated. The living faithful stand ready to share with the earnest inquirer their experiences under similar circumstances. Reading the literature of yesterday's victors and hearing the testimony of today's warriors gives strength to the weary wrestler in his hour of conflict. Association with God's people prepares one to master his troubles.

Divine Intercourse: Prayer provides power. The Creator knows every possible circumstance in which His creation may be involved. As a loving Father, the Creator has provided wisdom and grace sufficient for His children's mastery. He sets a Canaan over against every wilderness. Out of difficulties He can blossom miracles. "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray." James 5:13. When circumstances are beyond human power and skill, let us remember that our extremity is God's opportunity. Satan may build a hedge about us, but he cannot roof us in and prevent our looking up.

Use Your Tools: A good craftsman knows how to use his tools and uses them. In time of trouble, the Christian uses his spiritual tools and builds a more stately mansion. He makes his stand with the presence of mind that summons to his assistance the spiritual resources accumulated through the past. He

Wright

Mrs. Martha Jane Wright, daughter of John and Nancy Redding Burrow, was born in Randolph county, February 5, 1861. Her childhood and early girlhood were spent in the southeastern part of the county, and near Fair Grove Christian church. At the age of 18 years she moved, with her parents, to Cedar Falls. While living there she was united in marriage with Mr. Robert E. Little. The year 1881 marks this happy event in her life. Seven years later, while they were living in Randleman, Mr. Little died. This union was blessed with four children, three of whom died in infancy. Robert O. Little, of Thomasville, survives.

In 1894 our deceased sister was united in marriage with Rev. Jackson H. Wright. His decease occurred in 1907, in their home just south of Asheboro. One year later Mrs. Wright moved to Asheboro, where she remained until her death, September 14, 1939. In the Wright family there were born the following three children, all of whom survive: Mrs. R. H. Ingram, Asheboro; Mrs. F. C. Burney, High Point; and J. Willard Wright, Hickory. A step-daughter, Mrs. John H. Brown, Asheboro; two brothers, J. M. and Frank Burrow; and a sister, Mrs. Fletcher King, of Troy, also survive.

The religious life of our departed sister began in her early years. She united with Cedar Falls Methodist Protestant church, and on taking up her residence in Asheboro she transferred her membership to the Asheboro Methodist Protestant church, where she remained a faithful member for 27 years.

During the past several years Mrs. Wright has been in declining health and infirm from years. She has not, therefore, been able to attend church. But she has always retained the spirit of the church, and yielded herself in heart and life to its purpose. She was a good woman, a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, and an obliging neighbor. And now she is not; God took her.

The funeral service was held in Charlotte Methodist church. The writer was assisted in the service by Rev. C. L. Grant and Rev. D. V. Pike. The body was laid to rest beneath a covering of flowers in the church cemetery. May the God of all comfort sustain and keep those who feel most keenly the breaking of this earthly tie.

We thank you for helping with the above good report. Conference meets Wednesday of next week, October 18. Please have all money you wish to go into our report to conference in our hands by Tuesday, October 17. That is as late as we can count it in for this year.

Clothing and Other Gifts

Some groups of ladies have sent us, or brought us, cakes for school lunches. We are very grateful for this good help. These are: Davis Street church, Burlington, Welch Memorial, High Point, and Shiloh on Shiloh. This will be helpful through the winter, if our good ladies will continue it as in other years.

Harvest-Home Offerings

We are sure you are planning for your fall offerings of canned goods and produce, and we thank you. Please hold this until after conference, and then tell us where and how to get it. Thank you.

Pastors Please Note

We will specially need a Children's Home Secretary in each local church, on every charge, for next conference year. Former Methodist Protestants are called upon to support this Home during the next year. We have to reach the people without the Herald. Please see that we have at conference the name and correct address of your Children's Home secretaries. We are not asking that new ones be appointed. We prefer the old ones if your present ones are active. What we want is the name of one for each church, with the correct address.

Thanksgiving

When conference is over, Thanksgiving will be just ahead. Please be praying, thinking, and planning for a splendid Thanksgiving offering for the Children's Home. Plans will be given you for the campaign. We thank you.

Yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

uses the Word of God he has learned how to use. He prays as he has learned to pray. He calls to mind familiar experiences under similar circumstances which have resulted in victories. The time of trouble is not a time for worry and fear. It's a time to use the tools which one has collected through the years.

Christian Confidence: When trouble comes, one should trust God. Confidence in God is consolation; faith in God is fortitude; reliance on God is radiance; trust in God triumph. The little things in life are big in God's great love; the big cares are little in His great power. If one trusts God and does his part, victory is as certain as day following the night. Trusting God in trouble is yielding to His refining process. "There is no ripened fruit without the sun; no gold without the fiery furnace; no real greatness without rigorous discipline," said a wise one. Enduring trouble, however, is not enough. The mastery of trouble is the making of character. "What we do in the crisis always depends upon whether we see the difficulties in the life of God, or God in the shadow of the difficulties."—G. Campbell Morgan.

Mastering Trouble: The only way to manage trouble is to master it. Use it as a means of building Christian character. Trouble may be used as a means of discipline. Noblest characters have been the product of sanctified tribulation. Trouble may be the means by which God speaks to His people. Often God washes our eyes with tears that we may more clearly recognize His providence and His presence. The furnace of affliction is one of God's meeting places with His people. He never meets with His children without blessing them. "God is our refuge." Here is escape. But "God is our strength." Strength for what? Strength for endeavor. Escape in God and endeavor for God lead to the mastery of trouble.

Tale bearers are just as bad as tale makers.—Sheridan.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Union Grove and Zion Charges.—We feel that the Lord has richly blessed us on these charges this year. The attendance at the preaching services has been good for the membership. The meetings have been a great success. We have taken twenty-four members into the Union Grove Church and forty-one into the churches on Zion Charge. Rev. Glenn Madison helped in the meeting at Friendship Church and Rev. C. E. Ridge at Union Grove. These two men are among our best preachers and revivalists. We are well pleased with their work. The pastor did his own preaching at the other three churches.

Three churches on the Zion Charge will pay all claims in full. I am hoping the fourth will pay all claims. Union Grove is some behind with finances, but hurriedly coming to the front. We think Union Grove will make the honor roll on every thing except World Service and Herald subscription. They have already paid more on World Service than was accepted last year. Early in the year the members helped to build the pastor a barn, repair the garage, and dig a basement. This summer the Duke Power Company put their electric power line to the parsonage. As pastor and family we appreciate these improvements. We also appreciate the fine cooperation and work done by the good people on this charge.

E. A. BINGHAM, Pastor.

Asheville, Merrimon Avenue Methodist Church.—The fact that there has been no report from this charge does not mean that nothing has been going on. Our reporter has been sick and her physician advised her to get off from every task possible. She being a teacher in our city schools did not feel that she could give up her livelihood, decided to give up as much of her work as possible. So in order that you may know that we are living and making progress, I am sending a few items that I am sure will be of interest to the friends of our Asheville church. You will note the name at the heading for which we have received a number of congratulations. Thank you!

Our attendance is holding up well. We have added ten to the membership this year, have the names of five other splendid people to unite with us the third Sunday, and there is a prospect of others.

We have a Church Loyalty Campaign on in our city now that we feel will help all the churches. We have already noticed an increase in attendance. We are hoping for better things.

Our Young People's Choir is doing fine work as is the Woman's Auxiliary. The Sunday school has held its own notwithstanding many scares that have kept the children away. The leaders in all departments have been faithful and we are hoping for a good report at Conference.

Our finances are coming up nicely, while the salary was cut two hundred dollars before Conference last year, there is a movement on foot now to increase it two hundred dollars over this year. With the paying of some debts left over from last year, an increase in the collections for World Service, with all Conference claims practically in sight we are hopeful of a splendid report.

When we consider all the set backs this church has had one way or another, it is encouraging how a faithful few have held on in spite of the discouragements. We are hoping that they may be rewarded in the days to come by seeing an answer to their prayers by people coming this way and an enlargement in the membership that will be an attraction when the time comes for the merging of this with the Methodist church on the next block. Neither church seems to be ready for this yet. Of course this is the logical thing to do, but it is rather a delicate situation and will have to be handled with care by making both churches as strong for it as possible.

This has been a very pleasant year in many respects. Asheville is a great place to live. There are so many advantages here. So many conventions and conferences, then we are so close to Lake Junaluska.

We have had a number of friends come to see us this summer that we have enjoyed so much. Among them two visits from Bishop Straughan and one each from Bishop Broomfield and Dr. F. L. Gibbs. We are glad you all came, friends. Sorry to have missed several on account of being away on our westward trip and helping in several meetings. One hundred and seventeen out of town visitors during the year.

We are hoping and praying that the Spirit of Christ may guide in all the affairs of the Conference uniting in Greensboro this month. There is much to be done. May the same spirit that has been manifested in the meetings heretofore held be seen in the meetings just ahead.

In the Quarterly Conference last night, it was found that our delegate-elect will not be able to attend Conference, and Brother H. L. Hanner was elected to take her place. On motion of Dr. J. S. Williams and seconded by Dr. R. B. Wilson, the Quarterly Conference voted unanimously to increase the salary for next year two hundred dollars. Our Rally Day service yesterday was a success in every way.

Sincerely,
N. G. BETHEA.

Love Joy Church, Seagrove-Love Joy Charge, Rev. J. H. Trolinger, Pastor. — As Conference draws near we look back over the year to see that it has been a very prosperous one for our church. We feel that our good pastor and wife have really been a blessing to the church as a whole during the past year. We are looking forward to having them another year.

Our annual camp meeting began September 24 and lasted through October 3. Our pastor brought three fine messages the first Sunday. Our helper, Rev. C. G. Isley of Albemarle, arrived Monday and remained with us throughout the revival. We were glad to have Mr. Isley's mother with us also. We enjoyed their stay on the camp grounds with us, and hope they will come again. We had good attendance at each service and every message was heart-searching and uplifting. We feel that the entire church was revived. There were a number of conversions and reclamations. We welcomed eight new members into the church.

There were more people camping on the grounds this year than has been in the past several years. There were sixty-six camping during the revival.

Sunday, October 8, was our last regular preaching day before Conference. There were a good number present and our pastor delivered a splendid message. Communion was observed at the close of the service. There was also the installation of the official board for the coming year.

The organizations of our church are very active, including the Ladies' Auxiliary and Sunday school. We have had an average attendance of ninety-one in Sunday school during the past year.

The financial program of the church has moved along splendidly this year. We could not ask for better cooperation. Our pastor's salary has been paid in full. The Annual Conference claims have all been paid and a good show made on the General Conference claims.

So we close our year's work, giving God the credit for what has been accomplished in the past and with a greater determination to make next year a better one.

MRS. CLARA RUSSELL.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—Our pastor filled his regular appointments Sunday, bringing a very helpful and inspiring message. His lesson text was taken from the 12th chapter of Galations the 25th verse.

Mr. E. S. Pepper of Fairview Church has been elected delegates from Anderson charge to go to Conference this year.

The Rally Day program was observed Sunday night with a splendid program. It was so beautiful to see the small children with their smiling faces under the lights speaking. It always reminds me when I see children speaking and singing for the Lord that they are being trained up in the way they should go and when they are old they will not depart from it. A special song was given by the Brannon sisters.

As Sunday was the last preaching service before Conference meets, several important matters had to be taken care of so that the year's report would be complete. Always the last preaching day Joash Day is observed. $86.25 was paid in Sunday for pastor's salary. The Joash Box used.

The World Service assessments are paid in full since Rally Day program completed the four special days we observe in raising the World Service funds. Young People's Day, Easter, Children's Day and Rally Day are the four special days we set aside to raise these funds for World Service. We have paid $20.00 given from these programs. Also all Conference claims have been paid.

Our church has sent $56.00 to the Children's Home besides some offering that the individual classes sent that has not been added.

The officers of our Sunday school were elected the first Sunday. Mr. J. P. Waddell, superintendent; John D. McClimon, secretary; Miss Doris Poole, pianist; and Nick Smith, singing clerk. All classes elected teachers and officers and a number of new members added to most all classes. Most all the former officers of the church were re-elected Sunday. The church clerk, class leaders, trustees, stewards, ushers, and church paper reporters. We ask the prayers of all Christians for each officer and member of our church that all may cooperate and work harder than ever for the Lord and the upbuilding of our church.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society met and elected officers, Miss Lillian Compton, president and William Jones, superintendent.

The Junior C. E. Society elected Miss Kate Poole as president.

The Ladies' Aid Society met and elected Mrs. R. T. Bennette as their president and Mrs. Claude Brannon as secretary.

The Willing Worker Class met at the home of Mrs. Bee Cooper's October 3 for their class meeting. New officers were elected. Mrs. R. T. Bennette, Mrs. W. T. Jackson and Miss Murle Westmoreland were put in as leaders.

We were indeed glad to have Mr. Stout and son, also Mr. Pittman of Greenville to come and worship with us Sunday morning.

Sorry to know Miss Esther Compton is still ill at this writing.

Rev. T. M. Johnson was Sunday dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Poole and spent Sunday night with Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Compton.

We were indeed glad to have Mr. Perry Smith back since he has been away on account of an appendectomy.

MRS. JOHN D. McCLIMON.

Bethel Church, Randolph Charge, Rev. H. L. Isley, Pastor.—Our last Quarterly Conference met Sunday, October 8, at Bethany Church. A good number of the official members were present and unusually good reports given. All the churches on the charge have done well, financially this year. Bethel has had all claims paid for some time except few dollars on the pastor's salary, which we think will be paid before Conference meets.

All churches on the charge voted for the return of our pastor, and we're surely hoping he'll get back. I never heard a better report than he gave at Quarterly Conference. His only interest this year seems to be to the good of the church. And we feel that his wife is also greatly interested in his work. She seldom missed a Sunday at the church where his engagements are.

We are going to Conference with great wishes for their return.

MRS. C. P. ANDERSON, Reporter.

Concord, Ann Street Methodist Church, Rev. E. O. Peeler, Pastor.—A very beautiful service was held in our church Sunday morning. It being the first Sunday the Holy Communion was observed and we always feel that it is such a sweet sacred service. Sunday our pastor changed the program and before the Lord's Supper was administered he let the congregation have an old fashion testimony meeting and of course all Methodists enjoy a meeting like that. Then the doors of the church were opened but no one joined Sunday. Three of our little children with their parents came to be baptized. Little Dickey Ray Cline, Little Lora Ann and Conrad Whitley. We were happy to greet some visitors at this service. On next Sunday morning, October 8, we will have the report of the nominating committee and election of officers for the year, and in the afternoon the Fourth Quarterly Conference will meet. Our stewards think everything will be ready for our pastor to have a good report for conference. Our Ladies' Aid will meet tonight and the new officers will be elected at this meeting.

Mrs. S. C. Cass is improving after an operation. She is in the Presbyterian Hospital in Charlotte.

Miss Nita Blackwelder is improving. She can be up a little now.

Mrs. Lee Bost is very ill at this time. Mrs. Bost has been in a wheel chair for years but now she is confined to her bed.

Mrs. Earl Helderman has been real sick but is able to be up now.

Wayne Davis is confined to his home with scarlet fever.

Miss Elizabeth Fox continued the review of the mission book "Women and the Day" which was very much enjoyed. We hope to have the pleasure of meeting with Mrs. Reavis again.

Sunday, October 1 was Promotion Day for the young people of the Sunday school and Pay-Up Day for the church. We are grateful for the services of these faithful teachers who are training the young boys and girls for usefulness in the church, community and the world.

Mrs. J. L. Mundy presided over the business session at which time a contribution was voted for a scholarship fund for a seminary student. Miss Agnes Reese Harris gave a splendid report of the National Baraca and Philathea convention held in Richmond, Va.

The Philathea Class had the October meeting in the home of Mrs. Clyde L. Finch with Mrs. C. M. Hight and Mrs. Starkey assistant hostesses. All who attended report a most enjoyable evening.

Young People's Fellowship meetings are held each Sunday evening at the First Methodist church at 6 p. m.

We regret to note during September the death of Mrs. S. A. Greenway, the mothers of Mr. Garland Greenway, Dr. Rawls, an uncle of Mrs. J. L. Munday in Suffolk, Va., and Mrs. J. F. Coghill, niece of Mrs. E. C. Kittrell. We extend to these bereaved friends our heart-felt sympathy.

Miss Anna Tompkins has returned to her home in Columbia, S. C., after a visit to her mother, Mrs. J. R. Tompkins, and grandfather, G. B. Harris.

Rev. and Mrs. T. J. Whitehead had as their weekend guests recently Mrs. Whitehead's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Amick of Burlington.

Mrs. J. L. Joyce and little son, Johnnie, have returned to their home at Mount Olive after a visit to Mrs. Joyce's parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Powell.

Rev. Mr. Whitehead's Sunday morning subject was: "The Shepherd Psalm." The evening sermon was: "The Life and Work of Frances Elizabeth Willard."

Just about ten days until the Annual Conference and we are sincerely wishing that Rev. and Mrs. Whitehead may be returned to us.

Respectfully submitted,
ANNIE C. LASHLEY.

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Fourth Sunday evening before service the Christian Endeavor met.

Second Sunday morning Brother Broome read for his scripture St. Matthews 5:1-16. Text: "Ye are the light." Mrs. Willie Grey Mitchell and Miss Lillian Hawkins rendered us a beautiful duet, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Baldy Greene.

Officers for the coming year are as follows: Stewards, Curtis Porter, Clarence Hawkins, Tommie Hawkins, Virgia Hawkins, and Alice Mae Glasgow; Trustees: Zeb Hawkins, Roger Hawkins, Clifton Hawkins, Philip Hawkins and Jessie Pittard; Ushers: Hubert Hawkins and Willis Hawkins; Class Leaders: C. F. Hawkins and Edward Hawkins; Secretary-Treasurer: Paul Hawkins; Sunday school Superintendent: Miss Margaret Pittard; Assistant: Baldy Greene; Pianist: Mrs. Baldy Greene; Assistant: Grace Pittard; Church Reporter: Mrs. Claude Hawkins.

Christian Endeavor met Sunday evening at 7:30. We will meet every Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock except fourth evening, will meet before preaching service.

We were glad to have Misses Alice Mae Whiley and Mae Shearin from Weavers to worship with us Sunday and many more visitors.

Son of Mrs. C. M. Hawkins, Mr. Raymond Hawkins of Richmond, Va., was united in marriage to Miss Thelma Buster of Richmond, Sunday at 11:30 o'clock. We wish for them a long and happy life.

We sure missed Mrs. M. J. Morris Sunday from preaching service, and learning her reason for not being present brought sorrow to our hearts.

Mr. M. J. Morris is in the Roanoke Rapids Hospital very ill at present, also sorrow to learn Mr. Wilson Hawkins is in the hospital too. Mrs. F. A. Greene is gradually growing weaker; she has been ill since May 10. Glad to say Mr. Andrew Pittard is some better. We hope for them all a speedy recovery.

Second Sunday in September Mr. and Mrs. Broome were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Georgie Thompson. Last Sunday they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Baldy Greene.

Conference is almost at hand and much work to be done yet . But are hoping to reach the top. We hope to have Mr. Broome back. It seems everybody loves both Mr. and Mrs. Broome.

Worthville Church, Rev. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.—As I write this, my last report to the Methodist Protestant Herald, it brings a feeling of sadness over me. I have enjoyed reading the M. P. Herald and will greatly miss it.

Our pastor preached an interesting sermon yesterday using the 6th verse of the 14th chapter of St. John as his text, the subject being "The Way Home." The Lord's Supper was observed at this hour and a goodly number partook. As this was the last sermon for this year, the church officers were elected and installed: class leaders, Mr. F. E. Allred and Mrs. C. O. Byrd; trustees, C. F. Allred, W. L. Kirkman, J. A. Feree, N. E. Nelson, and Ralph Jennings; stewards, N. E. Nelson, McRoy Allred, Mrs. W. H. Trogdon, Marie Williamson, Lillian Ferree and Wendell Allred. Our Sunday school superintendent will be elected by the Sunday school soon.

Our church and Sunday school work has been moving along nicely; all our claims have been paid with the exception of the last month on pastor's salary, and we hope to get that in before conference. We appreciate the work that Mr. and Mrs. Spencer have done in our church, and we are expecting them to be returned another year.

Central Church, Asheboro.—The series of evangelistic services at the local church were concluded on Sunday evening, September 30. Dr. E. K. McLarty of Concord, was guest speaker at each service which was largely attended. Dr. McLarty was cordially received by the townspeople and the community is enriched by the minister's messages.

The Fourth Quarterly Conference convened Thursday evening with Dr. Taylor in the chair, and the announcement was that all claims for the year had been paid in full, which is two weeks earlier than usual.

Dr. Taylor is completing five years of devoted service at Central church and requests that he be assigned to another charge at the ensuing conference in Greensboro.

Excerpts from Dr. Taylor's yearly report on Thursday evening are listed. In the five years 162 members have been received into the church. Transfers were given 41, 11 members lost by death, and 10 were removed from the church roster, leaving the present membership at 503. The total amount raised during the five years is $36,431.

The parsonage debt has been paid and at present there is no debt on either the church or parsonage.

There are numerous expressions of appreciation expressed for the services of the Taylor family during their sojourn in the city.

Other reports at the conference were that 424 were enrolled in the Sunday school and that $1,091.50 was raised during the fiscal year. The treasurer's report, not including funds raised by the Auxiliary and the Sunday school, totaled $3,929.02.

W. L. Ward was elected delegate to the conference of the United Church to be held on October 18, and Mrs. J. S. Lewis was named alternate. The same persons are to serve as delegates to the Methodist Protestant Conference in Greensboro on October 18.

The monthly meeting of the Auxiliary was held Monday afternoon in the church social room, with Miss Lollie Jones, president, presiding.

On Sunday, October 8, the following babies were dedicated to God at an impressive baptismal service at 2:30 p. m.: Forest Eric Deaton, Mary Clyde Chisholm, Vivian Ann Stutts, Neil Hampton Henley, Sara Louise Lowdermilk, Thomas Stanley Redding, Arsula Ann Craven, children of Central church members, and Robert Dorsey Davis, Jr., only grandchild of Dr. and Mrs. S. W. Taylor, of High Point.

Mrs. W. G. Trexler and Mrs. J. D. Ross, Jr. were added by letter Sunday to the Central church roll. Mrs. Trexler comes from Salisbury and Mrs. Ross from Grace church, Greensboro.

Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard of High Point were visitors in Asheboro Friday.

Dr. Taylor presided at the Quarterly Conference at the Chapel Hill Methodist church in Davidson County Saturday afternoon, at the request of Dr. Pritchard, president of the N. C. Conference. Rev. W. M. Neese is pastor of the Chapel Hill church.

The Woman's Bible class of Central church, meeting Friday evening with Mrs. John Huneycutt, elected Mrs. R. D. Lowdermilk president. Other hostesses were Mrs. John Swaim and Mrs. J. S. Lewis. Teachers of the class are Mrs. S. W. Presnell, Mrs. C. F. Smith, Mrs. Swaim, Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Huneycutt.

The last services for the conference year will be Sunday, October 15, and the newly-elected officers will be installed at the morning worship service. The minister has selected as topics for discussion at the worship hour, "The Blessings of Responsibility" and "Put Your Best Into Your Christian Living."

Tom Houts has been employed for another year to serve as pastor's assistant and director of religious education. Houts will also direct the church music and the senior choir will soon select new vestments. Among the other officers are James Lowdermilk, church treasurer; L. F. Ross, general superintendent of the Sunday school; Carman Parks, scout leader; W. F. Redding, Jr., secretary-treasurer of the Sunday school; C. E. Bulla, superintendent of the adult and young people's department of the Sunday school; W. C. Hendrick, chairman of ushers; and Mrs. John Taylor will continue as agent for the church paper.

Mrs. W. R. Lowdermilk, of Greenville, S.C., was overnight guest Sunday, September 30, of Mrs. S. F. Lowdermilk on South Cox extension. The late Rev. W. R. Lowdermilk was a former pastor of the Asheboro Methodist (Protestant) church.

Dr. and Mrs. Taylor have recently completed a modern home on federal highway No. 64, four miles west of Asheboro, near the Charlotte Methodist church. (When the minister retires, the Charlotte community will have most desirable neighbors!)

Mr. and Mrs. Lester E. Rich and son, Van Elmer Rich, have recently moved into their new home on South Cox street.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Presnell are now living in their modern brick home on East Kivett street, and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Bulla are completing a brick home on highway 64 near the Charlotte church.

Rockingham Charge, R. L. Vickery, Pastor.—This report brings us close to the end of another conference year. It has been a very successful year in the history of our church. Forty-six new members have been added to the church. There has been a large number of professions also.

Our spring and fall revival meetings were a great success. The fall meeting which was held the last week of September was one of the best we've had.

The spiritual and financial condition of the Sunday school is very good. The average attendance is about 120. We elected the official members for 1940 last Sunday.

The Ladies' Aid society held a chicken supper last Friday night at the pastor's home. The ladies made around $13 on the supper. We wish to commend them for their fine work this year.

We held home-coming day at our church the first Sunday in October. There was a large attendance. There was a table filled with excellent food. I think everyone enjoyed themselves very much. We hope to have home-coming next year.

Let's all resolve to make the conference year 1940 one of the best yet. Remember our church when you pray.

Bess Chapel Church, Lincolnton-Bess Chapel Charge, Rev. W. L. Harkey, Pastor, October 9.—Sunday, October 8, was our last preaching service for this conference year. Our beloved and efficient pastor delivered to a large congregation another of his inspiring messages. We were also favored with a beautiful solo by Rev. Furman Wright, a young Methodist minister in our community. At the close of the sermon Communion service was observed.

We have been having a good Sunday school with 106 present last Sunday out of a total of 120 members.

Our Ladies' Auxiliary has been doing good work. We have helped to finance a great many needs in our church. We are expecting to complete our Sunday school rooms by the end of this year. Our monthly meetings are always enjoyable. The programs are especially interesting, the attendance good, and the refreshments delicious. This month we meet with Mrs. A. A. Beam and Mrs. Kenneth Beam at the home of Mrs. A. A. Beam.

We are glad to say that we have had a very good year. The Lord has blessed us materially and spiritually. Our revival services were held the second week in August, with Rev. Spencer from the Randleman charge as pulpit help. Many were spiritually revived and several converted. We enjoyed every one of Mr. Spencer's sermons; they were very uplifting and we will always remember his good work and pleasant visit with us. We are also indeed grateful for the kind services rendered by our own pastor this year. He is liked by all, and we hope that the unanimous vote from our church will bring him back to us next year.

We are happy to report that our pastor's salary and all our other financial pledges have been met in full.

We have several members that are sick at this time. They are missed and we pray that they will soon be back to worship with us, if it is the Lord's will.

Ann Street Methodist Church, Concord, Rev. E. O. Peeler, Pastor, October 9.—Our Ladies' Aid society met at the church last Monday night with a good attendance. The officers were elected for the next conference year. Mrs. Fred Sides will be our president again, and she really is a good one. We were all very happy when our treasurer reported that all bills were paid and we still have a small amount in the treasury. Our new officers for the church have been elected and will be installed at the morning service next Sunday. There were lots of changes made in the officers for next year, and we just pray that we will all cooperate so well that the new officers will be proud of their new jobs in the church.

Our fourth quarterly conference was held Sunday afternoon, and we are sorry to say, with a small attendance. We don't know why, but it seems hard to get a crowd together on Sunday afternoon even at the church. Our pastor had a very beautiful report; we just wish every member of the church could have heard it. Our Sunday school superintendent made a good report and our Ladies' Aid and Missionary Auxiliary report was real good. Our church treasurer made a good report, but we hope for it to be still better before our pastor goes to conference. Mrs. J. L. Sides will be our delegate and Mr. Tom Rabon is our alternate.

Our hearts were made sad when little C. D. Sides, Jr., was struck by a car and suffered bruises and a broken leg. But we are happy to hear that he is getting along fine now in the Cabarrus hospital.

Fairview Church, Anderson Charge, Dr. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.—On Thursday evening, October 5, 1939, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Nalley and Mrs. H. M. Phillips were host and hostesses to the members of the Ladies' Aid society, their husbands and several friends, at a fish supper at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nalley. Our pastor, Dr. T. M. Johnson, acted as master of ceremonies. The Nalley home, which is a very appropriate one for such an occasion like this, was beautifully decorated throughout with varied colored fall flowers, which made it a very pretty setting for this annual event.

At 7:30 o'clock plates consisting of fish, pickles, slaw, potato chips and bread with coffee were served to approximately 75 guests and it is needless to say that all present enjoyed this delightful repast.

When supper was finished, and after the singing of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," Dr. Johnson introduced the president of the society, Mrs. E. S. Pepper, who in her own manner thanked Mr. and Mrs. Nalley for their genial hospitality. Rev. Mr. Bell, pastor of the M. E. churches in the community, was introduced next and gave some very timely remarks on "Fellowship."

We were very fortunate to have with us on this occasion the presiding elder of the M. E. churches in the Anderson district, Rev. Leo Gillespie, who also gave us a short talk. His remarks were timely and well fitted and enjoyed by all present. Following this the group sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Gillespie.

Expressing the sentiment of all present, I will say that this was a very enjoyable affair and we take this means of expressing to our host and hostesses our sincere thanks for such a delightful time spent together.

Bethesda, North Davidson, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.—Our church is moving along nicely, although we haven't had a report in some time. We feel like we have had a good year. There are still greater things to do. We are indeed grateful for what has been accomplished. We have held all programs that our church requires. Our revival meeting was a great success wtih Rev. J. P. Pegg, one of our former pastors, as pulpit help. We were indeed glad to have him with us again.

Officers for the coming year have been elected and installed.

Our pastor, Rev. O. B. Williams, has been with us for every appointment this year. We have enjoyed having him and his wife with us and feel like a great deal has been accomplished. Although we are expecting him back and as Sunday was the last service for the conference year, a rising vote of thanks was given by the entire congregation. This was also a vote for their return.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is sponsoring a chicken pie supper Saturday night, October 21, at the home of Mrs. D. D. Brinkley.

Community Church, Thomasville, J. Clyde Auman, Pastor.—The churches in Thomasville have recently brought to a close the third annual Go-to-Church week with very satisfactory results. In fact, as far as Community church goes, the attendance was the largest that the church has experienced in the three years. Twenty-two churches, including the colored churches, cooperated. A part of the movement back to church was a religious census of the town. Our pastors are suspicious that by far the largest percentage of the people do not attend church anywhere.

Due to the Go-to-Church week services going into the first Sunday, our Rally Day services were not held until the second Sunday.

Mrs. G. H. Hobbs, Mrs. T. L. Einstein, and Miss Sybil Bost were the committee. They presented the "High Way and the Low Way," by Frank W. Stephenson. It was one of the best plays that has been presented at Community in recent years. Its message was very evident and I think had a deep impression on the audience.

On Wednesday night of last week we held our fourth quarterly conference. While the board of stewards reported a considerable amount of money to be raised before conference, the board expressed the hope that the total budget would be raised. The writer was asked to be returned for another year.

Thursday night of this week we are to have our annual church meeting, when the church officers for the new year are to be elected, and definite plans are to be made for the every-member canvass to take place next Sunday afternoon.

Mr. N. D. Clemons, a member of Community church, after a rather brief illness, died on September 4 after an operation at the High Point City Memorial hospital.

Mt. Pleasant Church, J. W. Braxton, Pastor.—At their fourth meeting, held at Mt. Pleasant church October 1, the quarterly conefrence voted unanimously for the return of the pastor for another year.

Officers for the coming year have been elected and were installed in an impressive service Sunday morning, October 1. Few changes were made in the list of the past year except that, in accordance with a recent church decision, a church treasurer was elected to take over the combined tasks of the former steward treasurer and trustee treasurer. Norman Alexander, former steward treasurer, was selected for this new work.

More than 25 members of the Cradle Roll, primary, junior, and intermediate departments of the Sunday school were promoted

Midway Church, Rev. Paul Hamilton, Pastor, October 8.—This marks a red letter week for our church. All church officials, class teachers and class officers have been elected and will be installed Sunday, October 15.

The progress of the church in the last year has been excellent, and I feel sure this will be great encouragement to the incoming officers. Here's hoping each member will strive more than ever to increase the membership roll and the activity of the church even more than that of the past.

The Ladies' class had their regular monthly meeting Wednesday night. New officials elected were: president, Miss Christine Bridges; vice-president, Miss Christine Suits; secretary, Mrs. George Orr, and treasurer, Mrs. Bill Hiatt. It is hoped that more of the women will attend the meetings in the future. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Daisy Hiatt, November 7 at 7:30.

It was with the greatest of interest that the many friends of Allan Pinnix learned of his very recent marriage. Mr. Pinnix, the second son of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Pinnix, was united in marriage with Miss Veronica Louise Somers, of Washington, D. C., in a simple but very impressive church ceremony Sunday, October 8. The minister officiating was Dr. John R. Edwards of the Union Methodist Episcopal church of Washington. The nuptial vows were spoken in the presence of only a few very close friends and relatives. Immediately after the ceremony the wedding party was entertained at a small reception given by the bride's mother, Mrs. Mary Somers, at her home, 4105 Wisconsin Ave. N. W.

Mrs. Pinnix is the daughter of Mrs. Mary Somers of Washington, and the late Lawrence Somers of Akron, Ohio. The bridegroom, a young member of our church, holds a position with the government in Washington. To the young couple will go our best wishes for a very happy, long married life.

Rev. Mr. Hamilton, our minister, was a Sunday night dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. York. Our pastor enjoys the meals he takes with his members immensely. He feels this is one direct way he can come in close contact with his members.

Davidson Charge, W. H. Neese, Pastor, October 10.—This perhaps is the last report I will ever write for the Methodist Protestant Herald, and before I make my report I want to say that for many years I have enjoyed reading this dear paper; it has meant much to me, and I shall miss it when it ceases to come into our home. But I hope the day will never come when my church paper (be it Methodist Protestant Herald, the Christian Advocate, or whatever name it may be called by) fails to come into our home.

Those who have made our church paper possible through all these years deserve much praise for their untiring labors.

Now for my final report of Lineberry Auxiliary for the year just closing.

On Saturday, October 7, at 2 p.m., the Lineberry Auxiliary met with Mrs. D. E. Lanier with all members present but two. The program was in charge of Mrs. W. H. Neese and was as follows: song, "Blessed Assurance," prayer by Mrs. W. H. Neese, solo by Miss Pollie Brown Wood, poem by Mrs. J. P. Elliott, meditation by Mesdames Van B. Wood, J. C. Taylor and Garvin Elliott, scripture readings by Mrs. Marshall Skeen and Mrs. Vernon Hall, solo by Mrs. W. C. Wood, prayer by Mrs. B. K. Taylor. The president, Miss Bruce Smith, had charge of the business session. The usual business was transacted. The Auxiliary voted to pay $5 on pastor's salary. The hostess, assisted by her daughter, Miss Bonnie Rea Lanier and Miss Pollie Brown Wood, served delicious refreshments. The November meeting will be with Mrs. Claud Elliott.

The Lineberry fall thank-offering service was observed Sunday night, October 8, at 7:30 p.m. The following program was rendered with the thank-offering secretary, Mrs. W. H. Neese, in charge: two songs by the choir; solo, "An Evening Prayer," by Miss Lorraine Metters; responsive readings by the congregation; solo, "Others," by Miss Pollie Brown Wood; reading, Mrs. Vernon Hall; song by the choir; a story, "Little Ann of Lost Gap," told very impressively by Miss Bruce Smith; solo, "Give of Your Best," by Mrs. W. C. Wood; remarks by the pastor; offering, solo by choir; closing prayer by Mrs. Van B. Wood.

The newly installed electric lights were in the church for the first time, and added much to the service. The parsonage family is also enjoying electric lights.

The Chapel Hill Auxiliary will hold its October meeting Saturday night, October 14, at 7:30 p.m. at the parsonage. At this time they will observe their fall thank-offering service.

The following are the last appointments for Davidson charge before conference: Chapel Hill Sunday at 11 a.m., Liberty at 2:30 p.m., and Lineberry at 7 p.m.

Level Cross, Randleman Charge, Rev. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.—Our revival meeting began September 3 and lasted through the 15. Rev. J. W. Groce of High Point being the help. Brother Groce gave us a series of very helpful sermons. While he preached to the sinners some, more of his time was spent with the reviving of church members. We believe many were revived and much good done. We were glad to have with us during the revival, in regular attendance, friends from Worthville, Mt. Lebanon and New Salem Methodist churches and also Center Friends. We welcomed their singing and personal work and feel that all were wonderfully blessed in the name of the Lord. Four new members were added to the church.

Our pastor has brought us two helpful sermons since the meeting. Officers for the coming year have been elected and installed. We are looking forward to a good year trusting that many have pledged themselves to tithe not only of their money but also their time and talent.

The Sunday school report shows an increase with a total attendance of 90. We know there is room for more and hope to report a larger attendance from time to time.

We will have one more appointment before Conference, Sunday afternoon, September 15. We trust Brother Spencer will be back with us.

"LIFE HAS TAUGHT ME"

By Bishop George A. Miller

In the give and take of experience I have learned—

1. To remember that my task is first of all God's work and that He is more interested in it than I am.
2. To keep silent about my own opinions and deal with facts and reasons rather than what "I think."
3. To hold steady under strain. Nothing is as bad as it looks.
4. To hear both sides before I decide major matters. Every man has something to teach me.
5. To leave important decisions until the following morning. God may take a hand if I hold off a little.
6. To treat every man as my equal. Those who feel inferior will respond with new values and my "betters" are also timid.
7. To believe that every man means to play fair. Better be imposed upon occasionally than suspicious all the time.
8. To give to my associates, not orders, but responsibilities with credit for results attained.
9. That no case is hopeless. Every failure deserves three trials under varying conditions. It may be a matter of finding his place.
10. Having done all things to decide, and having decided not to change without good reason.

* * *

Youth is not a time of life; it is a state of mind. It is not a matter of ripe cheeks, red lips and supple knees; it is a temper of the will, a quality of the imagination, a vigor; it is a freshness of the deep springs of life. Nobody grows old by merely living a number of years; people grow old only by deserting their ideals. Worry, doubt, self-distrust, fear and despair—these are the long, long years that bow the head and turn the growing spirit back to dust. You are as young as your self-confidence; as old as your fear; as young as your faith, as old as your doubt; as young as your hope; as old as your despair.—Church Visitor, Dallas, Wis.

5 Reasons Why You Should Use DEVOE'S 2-Coat System

1 Your paint money goes twice as far. New 2-Coat System outlasts paint jobs 2 to 1. . . . Nation-wide reports prove it!
2 Your house is whiter—colors truer. Ordinary paints will not produce such a dazzling white or such glorious tints.
3 Paint stays Fresh, Clean and Bright. Years after other paints become streaked, your Devoe painted home is still clean and fresh-looking.
4 Saves one Whole Coat. Two coats of Devoe House Paint do a better job than three coats of conventional paint ever did before.
5 Four Paint Evils avoided. New system defies checking, cracking, peeling. Devoe paint resists fading.

Valedictory

With this issue the Methodist Protestant Herald bids its farewell and bows itself from the the state of action. For forty-five years the M. P. Herald and its predecessor "Our Church Record" has made its weekly visits into the homes of members of the Methodist Protestant Church. The influence of these weekly visits upon these homes cannot be evaluated. Only those who know the state of our denomnational strength and activity in this conference prior to the publication of this conference organ and the present situation can really appreciate how wide, varied and deep has been that influence.

There is always a tinge of sadness in saying farewell to an old friend, and the friend departing may feel most deeply this sadness. The present editor having known the services rendered by this church paper since its beginning might say much in its favor, and because of this express with deep emotion his regrets for its suspension. But space would not permit him to do this properly. We believe the proper action is taken since in the Methodist Church no provision is made for adequate support of the Herald. In the successor paper, the North Carolina Christian Advocate, will please you and give you full and accurate accounts of the progress of our Church in the two conferences in this state. We believe the union of Methodism has made a way for greater progress in Kingdom service and that when we shall have become accustomed to the different technique of service and enter more largely into the fellowship of the workers in this united Church, we shall be happy in our new relation. We pray for the wisdom and grace to do this.

For the past three years the present editor has tried to edit this paper under most difficult circumstances; the first year he was President of the North Carolina Conference and editor, the second year, he was Director of the Fellowship Crusade and editor, the third year he was pastor of a Church and editor; it has been a severe tax upon his time and energy to carry on these important activities in our Church. We must say that we shall be greatly relieved to lay down this burden now, and we do it with the consciousness that we tried to give it the best service there was in us under the circumstances.

Today we say, the Methodist Protestant Herald is dead, long live the Herald. May it continue to speak from the archives in the Wrenn Memorial Library, and out of the memories of its readers long after these pages are worn dim by the passing of the years.

And so with these lines of St. Vincent Millay we say farewell:

"Upon this marble bust that is not I,
Lay the round, formal wreath that is not fame;
But in the forum of my silenced cry
Root ye the living tree whose sap is flame.
I, that was fierce and valiant, am no more—
Save as a dream that wanders wide and late,
Safe as a wind that rattles the stout door,
Troubling the ashes in the sheltered grate.
The stone will perish; I shall be twice dust.
Only my standard on a taken hill
Can cheat the mildew and the red-brown rust
And make immortal my adventurous will.
Even now the silk is tugging at the staff;
Take up the song—forget the epitaph."

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Conference Action

In this my last letter to the Herald it is difficult to know just where to begin and where to end. In the matter of appointments I am leaving that to the editor except to say that in the main they remain as they were made by our final session. The changes by the new conference are as follows: Dr. S. W. Taylor goes to the District Superintendency of the High Point District rather than to First Church at Winston-Salem. Rev. Robert Shaw goes to the Creston charge in the Elkin district instead of Mecklenburg. Rev. W. H. Neese was changed from Davidson (South) to Crabtree charge in the Waynesville district. Rev. Leroy Spencer, formerly of the M. E. South Church will serve Brown Summit and Shady Grove in connection with the former M. E. South church at Whitsett. As for my own appointment, it was largely of my own choosing. No criticism whatsoever can be directed against either Bishop Straughn, Bishop Purcell or any member of the cabinet. I was treated with every consideration but on account of my health I had to ask for some kind of work which would give me more rest and relaxation. In the appointment I received I feel that I will be in the midst of my friends who can bear with me for awhile until I can build back what I have lost in the strenuous work of the past year.

Some Boundary Changes

Either by our own conference or by the new conference a good many changes in boundaries were made, some of which I will mention. The two churches at Weaverville are merged and the churches on our Weaverville circuit as well as those on our former Democrat circuit are absorbed into the surrounding circuits. Pensacola station was put with the Burnsville charge. Burke's Chapel and Shiloh churches were detached from the Connelly Springs charge and were placed on other circuits near them. Shady Grove on what was our Connelly Springs circuit was made a station temporarily and Rev. Herman Yokely will continue to serve it. Greer's Chapel was detached from Shiloh charge and attached to Spencer-China Grove. Mt. Zion and Mt. Pleasant churches on our Mt. Zion charge were attached to the former M. E. South Randolph circuit which charge now becomes the Randolph-Mt. Vernon charge to distinguish it from our Randolph charge which becomes Randolph-Gray's Chapel. Cid church was placed with First Church at Denton. Porter and Pine Bluff stations were absorbed into our Albemarle (Main St.) charge. Mill Grove station becomes a part of a new charge known as Midland. The boundaries of our Friendship-Love's Grove charge, our Mecklenburg charge and our Mocksville charge were considerably changed but I do not have all of the facts before me and cannot speak with accuracy. These changes were made in order to make it easier for a pastor to render better service. The two churches at Cedar Falls are merged and in return for our loss at Cedar Falls, West Bend church just out of Asheboro was placed on our Richland charge. The two churches at Liberty are merged as was also done at Gibsonville. In our own conference Union Ridge church was detached from the Forsyth charge and attached to North Davidson. The new conference changed the name of our Davidson charge to South Davidson.

Some Good Gains

It was very gratifying to us all to know that in the matter of membership for the past year there was a gain of 623. Our conference raised for world service $7,426 more than for the previous year. The gain in special missionary offerings over the previous year was $2,806 while the gain in Sunday school enrollment amounted to 3,124. In view of the many adjustments which we faced it does seem that this is rather remarkable. It proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Methodist Protestant church was neither dead nor dying.

Another Conference to Attend

On November 8 it will be my duty to go to Fayetteville to help in organizing the new North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church which conference will cover the eastern half of the state. Our pastors assigned to charges within the present boundaries of the North Carolina conference together with the lay delegates will go to Fayetteville and will go through with the same procedure that others went through in the united conference at Greensboro. Let all pastors and all charges remember that the appointments made in our final conference at Greensboro are subject to change at Fayetteville. Some of our ministers and several of our lay delegates from the Western half of the state went home after our session at Grace church and could not be found at the United Session. Let no one so act at the time of the conference in Fayetteville.

Sorry The Herald Is Going

One of the most painful things to us all in the merging of the conference is to give up the Herald. For forty-five years it has been a weekly visitor in the home of some of us. Many of us read it as soon as we learned to read. It has been a great blessing to us all. And now as it soon will be merged with the Christian Advocate we say, Blessings be upon the memory of its founder, that great man, Dr. J. F. McCulloch and upon its present editor, Dr. Andrews, who has carried on so splendidly for the past three years. Dr. McCulloch never had adequate support for his fine services. The first year that its present editor had charge he did it as a part of the work as President of the conference. During the past year his compensation was meager in comparison with the work which has to be done yet he has been faithful to the end.

"So Long Until Tomorrow"

And now as we approach the end of our activities as a separate conference, let me thank every one who has shown kindness in any way or who has made the work easier. While the work of president this year has been a terrible strain on the physical man yet it has been rich in its opportunities. And so we say, Thank You and God Bless You.

J. E. Pritchard.

THE HILLS AHEAD

"The hills ahead look hard and steep and high,
And often we behold them with a sigh;
But as we near them level grows the road,
We find on every slope with every load
The climb is not so steep, the top so far,
The hills ahead look harder than they are."

We appeal to all pastors and leaders of churches which have not yet paid the subsidy allotted to that charge to please send it in at once. We are closing the year several hundred dollars in the red. Or if your church or charge has already paid its allotment for Herald subsidy and you can do it, send us your gift toward reducing the indebtedness. Brother J. D. Ross, Asheboro, wrote several letters at the suggestion of the Herald Committee, for which we thank him, and these have brought in several dollars. Any subscription sent to us now will be turned over to the Christian Advocate, but subsidy and gifts to the Herald on its debt may be applied on said indebtedness.

Many of our people have attended one or more session of the uniting conference here. It has been a wonderful conference. The unanimity of views and dispatch with which the business was disposed of is fine. Elsewhere we are publishing the list of appointments of the former Methodist Protestant pastors; we would be glad to publish the entire plan of appointments, but it would take too much of our space to do this.

Two new districts were set off, making eleven instead of nine presiding elder's districts and Rev. S. W. Taylor was made presiding elder or as we now say, District Superintendent of the High Point District.

The apportionment for World Service which was laid upon our North Carolina Conference for 1939 is to be the same laid upon these churches for 1940. It is to be raised and sent in to our Conference Treasurer Allen to be forwarded to Treasurer Staley for the expenses of the General Church. Our allotment for the expenses of the General Conference was put with the same item for the Methodist Church, as was also the allotment for High Point College.

"The History of the North Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church," by J. Elwood Carroll, is off the press and ready for distribution. If you cannot get a copy from your local pastor for fifty cents, order direct from the author. The price postpaid is sixty cents with order.

On the Sideline

Having been in the midst of conference activities for so many years it was a real pleasure to sit on the sidelines and watch the game. There are lots of things one sees with greater clarity watching from the sidelines than in the midst of play.

One thing most noticeable was the way the business of the conference was dispatched. Bishop Purcell is a very fine presiding officer, always considerate of others, but careful that the work of the conference go forward. Rarely was the report of a committee discussed; there appears to be a feeling that when a committee has assembled its data that it knows more about the details considered therein than a member from the floor. A very reasonable assumption. A "soap box artist" would have but little opportunity in this body to display his skill to harrangue the brethren. Quite a joy to some of us on the sideline.

In the election of delegates to the General and Jurisdictional conferences it seemed that we were back home; a large number who did not know for whom to vote picked a personal friend and held to him "like grim death," while the majority voters elected their man. The method of electing delegates to these conferences requires the lay delegates to elect the lay delegates, and the clerical to elect the clerical without nominations, it takes more time and "saves the face" sometimes, but does not present those desiring to elect their candidate from doing quite a bit of log rolling."

The absence of the conference roll call and the reading of the minutes of the previous day in the open session was quite noticeable to us. It saves considerable time which can be given to more important matters.

THANKS

I want to express in this very inadequate way my grateful thanks for the beautiful traveling bag the brethren—and perhaps some of the sisters—gave me, through Dr. Brown, on the day after our Conference closed. Because it came late and privately I had no way of saying thank you to those who had part in the gift. I may have reached a few in what I said at the united session on Saturday afternoon. If you did have any part in it, I do want to express my very deep appreciation for this parting gift. As long as I live, whenever I am called on to make a journey, it will be a constant reminder of your kindness.

C. W. Bates.

Two of our ministers, Brothers Bates and Pritchard, were elected delegates to the Jurisdictional conference which will meet very soon after the adjournment of the General Conference next April.

THE STORY OF THE 112TH SESSION OF THE N. C. CONFERENCE

This final session of the North Carolina Conference of the M. P. Church was held in Grace Methodist Protestant Church, Greensboro, October 18 and closing October 20.

At 10 a. m. President J. E. Pritchard called the conference to order, conducting a brief devotional service, after which the roll of the preachers and lay delegates was called; this was followed by calling of the roll of the honored dead. The name of Rev. George F. Milloway was transferred to this roll by a vote of the conference. Bishop Jas. H. Straughn was present throughout the conference and sat with the Stationing Committee, also acted as counsellor in all other affairs of the conference.

The conference sermon was preached by Rev. E. O. Peeler, of Ann Street Methodist Church, Concord; his subject, ''St. Paul's Central Theme,'' was based on the text, ''I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.''

Bishop Clare Purcell and his cabinet were then welcomed as visitors and were introduced to the conference. During their stay President Pritchard read his annual report which showed great activity both in planning for the merging of the conference and in carrying on the regular work of the annual conference. To give a few high lights, several churches and parsonages had been repaired and redecorated; four churches dedicated and the results of the Appreciation Year were gratifying. Bishops Straughn and Purcell each made appropriate remarks.

The afternoon session was opened by a brief song service conducted by Rev. E. Lester Ballard with Rev. W. M. Howard at the organ. Bishop Straughn then gave a report on Methodist Unification as he had witnessed it in the conferences already held under his supervision; stating that it was really surprising there had been so little friction in working out this tremendous problem.

Many officers of the conference were then re-elected. Mr. W. L. Ward was chosen to act as the laymember of the Stationing Committee acting with President Pritchard and Bishop Straughn. All committee members whose terms expired at this time and who in the judgment of the conference should continue were also re-elected.

The submission of the pastor's reports brought to an end the session of the first day. The roll call indicated a large attendance of pastors and delegates.

The evening session was a union meeting with the members of the other two conferences. At this time a most interesting address was made by Rev. J. E. Carroll, on the Methodist Protestant Church; Dr. S. B. Turrentine spoke on the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Dr. Parsons on the Methodist Episcopal Church. These addresses were of necessity brief. The history of the N. C. Annual Conference of the M. P. Church by Rev. J. E. Carroll was placed on sale for the first time earlier in the day. The book sells for fifty cents a copy and is of much interest to all former members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The devotional service Thursday morning was conducted by Bishop Straughn, who also conducted all the other devotional services during the conference. At this time he emphasized the purpose of the Church as being to reveal Jesus as the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, and to show that God is our Father. Dr. G. R. Brown was called to the chair and presided for the remainder of this session. Dr. G. I. Humphries transferred his membership from the Maryland Conference to the North Carolina Conference and was welcomed by a rising vote, expressing also appreciation of his services already rendered as President of High Point College.

J. Leo Pittard and Sulon Ferree were elected to elders orders and recommended for ordination and membership in the Methodist Church, to become effective after ordination in the united Church Sunday night.

Dr. A. G. Dixon made a fine report of his family of 120 members at the Children's Home and plead for the support of all former Methodist Protestants in North Carolina as the union of Methodism becomes effective.

His report was followed by a splendid report by President G. I. Humphries of High Point College, showing reduced indebtedness and increased student enrollment; he prophesied a bright future for the college. He asked for the continued appointment by this conference of Drs. P. E. Lindley and P. S. Kennett and Rev. N. M. Harrison to their present positions at High Point College. Dr. Humphreys then presented Dr. F. W. Stephenson, who after a brief valedictory to the conference, introduced Dr. W. F. Quillian, General Secretary of the Board of Education of the former M. E. Church, South. Dr. Quillian in a brief address spoke of the vital need for Christianity to become the heart of education, and appealed for the support of all Church-supported educational institutions.

The following ministers were given the superannuate relationship, D. R. Williams, L. S. Helms and T. M. Johnson. The tributes paid these men were full of feeling and of sincere appreciation of their services to the Kingdom.

Mrs. R. M. Aendrews, President of Woman's Work, reported on the various activities of this work; making an appeal for the continued support of the Thank Offering services, and urged the pastors and laymen to help towards securing one thousand volumes from North Carolina for Westminster Theological Seminary. She reported World Service disbursements for the past year of $7,536.82 and N. C. interests $3,456.02; making a total disbursement from November 1, 1938 to October 1, 1939 of $10,992.83. Receipts for World Service for past year 10% more than for the previous year, an 11% increase during past six month over the like period of previous year.

The Plyler brothers, editors of the N. C. Christian Advocate presented the conference with several copies of the Advocate and invited all members of the Conference to visit and inspect the Advocate building across the street. The Advocate is to be sent free to every pastor with the understanding that he be the agent for the paper on his pastoral charge, and the Advocate is to finish out all unexpired subscriptions to the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD.

Dr. W. P. King, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate was presented to the conference, and spoke of the Nashville Advocate in a most charming manner, he most likely will be sending several copies of his paper to new subscribers in this conference.

The Brotherhood of the M. E. Church, South, and later of the united Church was brought to the attention of the conference by Rev. H. G. Allen, the president of the organization. L. E. Mabry solicited members in this organization and was later made a member of the executive committee.

Dr. C. E. Forlines, president of Westminster Theological Seminary, was presented to the conference on Friday morning and stated that although he was required by a rule or law of the Uniting Conference to transfer his membership to the Maryland annual conference, he was still at heart a member of this conference. Later in the day he spoke on the work of the Seminary, asking that no document bearing on the history of the M. P. Church be destroyed; but that these be sent to the Seminary library. He also appealed for books for the library, especially for conference records, journals, Methodist Protestant Heralds, etc. Drs. P. E. Lindley and G. W. Hadaway were among the former Methodist Protestants appearing on evening union programs. Special committee appointed; to collaborate with like committees of the two former churches on plans for the distribution of the Superannuate funds, G. R. Brown, R. C. Stubbins, and J. D. Williams; the Ad Interim Committee, J. E. Pritchard, S. W. Taylor, R. M. Andrews, J. N. Wills, G. R. Brown, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, T. J. Whitehead, W. L. Ward, and F. R. Stout. This committee will act for the annual conference in closing up any or all unfinished business of the conference.

The churches of Greensboro proved themselves to be most gracious hostesses to the conference. Grace Church served most acceptable meals at very reasonable rates. We understand that Grace ladies gave up their booth at the Greensboro Fair where they usually serve meals and make several times more than the meals to the conference netted them, that they might accommodate the visitors. That was indeed a most commendable act.

Friday Night

This was the time when the three conferences were actually united. The meeting was held in West Market Church, which was packed, every seat taken long before the time for the meeting to begin; members of the conference, both clerical and lay were admitted by ticket. The ritual of the uniting service at Kansas City was the basis of the order of the service used here. The responses by the congregation were hearty and the Hallelujah Chorus was well sung by the church choir. Dr. C. W. Bates was chosen associate secretary and Dr. Pritchard assisted in the uniting service. There were present at this time 488 clerical and 393 lay members of the conference.

In forming new committees in the United Conference several of our members were placed on one or more committees; among them were P. E. Lindley, J. D. Williams, A. J. Koonce, J. E. Carroll, S. W. Taylor, R. M. Andrews, J. C. Auman, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, N. G. Bethea, Mrs. W. C. Hammer, J. W. Braxton, Mrs. A. H. Ragan, J. E. Pritchard, W. L. Ward, J. C. Madison, and C. W. Bates.

President Pritchard served with the Bishop and his district elders in making up the plan of appointments.

Along with the head of the Women's Work of the two other denominations, Mrs. R. M. Andrews spoke briefly of the work of our women in the former M. P. Conference.

Delegates Chosen to the General and Jurisdictional Conferences

Drs. Bates and Pritchard were elected delegates to the Jurisdictional conference and W. L. Ward was the lay delegate to this conference from the former M. P. Conference. The lay alternates are A. J. Koonce, J. Norman Wills and Mrs. R. M. Andrews; Dr. G. I. Humphreys is the clerical alternate.

Sunday

Promptly at 8:30 Sunday morning the organ prelude called the congregation to silence and the beautiful ritual of the Holy Communion was conducted by Bishop Purcell. Hundreds of people came down the aisles and knelt at the altar to receive the emblems of the broken body of our Lord. It was a solemn service and one which doubtless will be remembered by the participants all their lives.

Bishop Jas. H. Straughn was the preacher at 11 a. m. Not only was every seat taken in the auditorium and Sunday school annex but chairs were placed in every available space and scores of people stood throughout the service.

The memorial service was held in the afternoon. It was also largely attended. The memoir of Brother G. F. Milloway was read by his pastor, Rev. A. D. Shelton. At the night service J. Leo Pittard and Sulon G. Ferree were ordained to the order of elder.

Monday the conference began its final session at 9 a. m. Very many and most important acts were passed which our space prevents us from recording. One very unusual thing is the decision to hold the conference in the future between the Sundays; to begin on Tuesday and to close on Friday. We believe this a wise change. The pastors heard their appointments a few minutes after 12 noon and Bishop Purcell lead the congregation in singing the Doxology, Bishop Straughn pronounced the Apostolic benediction and the people joined him in repeating the Mizpeh benediction and the Western Conference of the Methodist Church was history.

Where Our Preachers Go

Lamb to be associate superintendent of the High Point Children's Home; all other pastors remain where they were.

There were several boundaries changed, in some cases, only the name was changed, while in others, churches were added to or taken from the group.

GROUP MINISTRY

The phrase "group ministry," coined by Superintendent A. H. Rapking of the Department of Town and Country Work is, we believe, destined for long mileage, for it seems to meet a real need.

Now that the stumps have been fairly well cleared out of the highway and the farmers have learned to travel in many directions and for different purposes, it is becoming clear that even the rural preacher can no longer live unto himself alone. He is, as a writer in "The Postor's Journal" says, not called so much to do solo flying as to serve as a member of a team.

Church planning for an entire territory is gradually taking the place of overemphasis upon individual neighborhoods, and in some cases ministerial appointments are being made with the group ministry idea in mind. Some district superintendents are undertaking to organize all their work on the group basis. In actual operation it means that several pastors, working together, will be able to supplement each other's efforts to the benefit of all concerned.

When a rural pastor glories in young people's work and is successful at it, why limit his beneficent help to the one church to which he is assigned when fifteen-cents worth of gasoline will carry him quickly to any one of a half dozen other churches where perhaps the young people's program is languishing because the pastors do not have quite the magic touch with the younger generation? Possibly this man who is so expert with youth is weak in finance, or in some other part of his program, and, in exchange for the energy and help which he gives to the young people's program, he will receive a more than equal return in the assistance which will come to him in other phases of his work.

There are those who are particularly effective in pastoral calling, in evangelism, in daily vacation school work, in music, in summer camp activities, in publicity, in the handling of motion pictures, and in other fields. The group ministry actually makes these specialized abilities available to the entire group of churches.

Then there are the activities and events which must, for their very success, be planned for a territory larger than the neighborhood. In some cases it has been demonstrated that more people will drive ten or fifteen miles to a suitable spot for a genuinely inspiring vesper service than will travel the few hundred feet necessary to attend a depleted Sunday evening gathering in their own church. Musical events, too, can be arranged more satisfactorily when the musical resources of an entire group of churches can be called into play. And summer camp work, 4-H club activities, scout programs, farm picnics, and other enterprises are more successful when a group of communities join in promoting them.

Nor should we overlook the stimulation of ideas and the encouragement of heart which comes from joint planning and the cooperation of mind with mind. The discouraged pastor can forget his discouragement because his brethren will actually help him carry his load of responsibility.

An alluring aspect of the group ministry arrangement is that it involves a minimum of organization. Instead it takes pastors and churches as they are and leads them out into fields of greater usefulness, without committing them to agreements and arrangements which would be hard to secure and which have sometimes proved to be dwarfing in the effect.

The group ministry plan is on its way. We lay no claim to any special prophetic instinct, but we are decidedly of the opinion that this idea has a great future.

RELIGION IN PRINT

By Paul Simpson McElroy

Democratic, freedom-loving Americans deplore the control of the press and the admittedly one-sided propaganda that prevails in the Fascist countries of the world today. We, in America, pride ourselves that no governmental "Ministry of Propaganda" censors our news or permits only a biased, one-sided report of events to be circulated. We rejoice that we have a full report of what is going on in the world, and not just a report of what a few politicians choose to let us know.

In our pride, we should not overlook the fact that the printed word, although literally true, is generally interpreted according to some underlying principle. For instance, if our information regarding labor conditions has come from a capitalistic-owned newspaper that favors the employers' point of view, we shall likely find ourselves opposed to labor's action. On the other hand, if we have been reading exclusively the labor journals that are written by labor leaders, we shall undoubtedly become sympathetic with labor.

That same subtle influence may largely govern our decisions or attitudes in all other major news issues. Therefore, it behooves us to make certain of the source of our information—unless we choose to become bigots and read only admittedly prejudiced news.

In even more subtle ways, the press often seeks to control public opinion. As one example of the way in which the news we read is colored or prejudiced by the controlling interest of stock-brokers, let me quote from a statement taken from the Congressional Record (February 9, 1917); it illustrates the extent to which the news we Americans feel is unadulterated may be printed under a system of propaganda as vicious as is that which we condemn in the dictators abroad. The statement, inserted in the Record by Representative Oscar Callaway under unanimous consent, reads:

> In March, 1915, the J. P. Morgan interests, the steel, shipbuilding, and powder interests, and their subsidiary > organizations, got together 12 men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the most influential newspapers in the United States and sufficient number of them to control generally the policy of the daily press of the United States.

>
> These 12 men worked the problem out by selecting 179 newspapers, and then began, by an elimination process, to retain only those necessary for the purpose of controlling the general policy of the daily press throughout the country. They found it was only necessary to purchase the control of 25 of the greatest papers. The 25 papers were agreed upon; emissaries were sent to purchase the policy, national and international, of these papers; an agreement was reached; the policy of the papers was bought, to be paid for by the month; an editor was furnished for each paper to properly supervise and edit information regarding the questions of preparedness, militarism, financial policies, and other things of national and international nature considered vital to the interests of the purchasers.
>
> This contract is in existence at the present time, and it accounts for the news columns of the daily press of the country being filled with all sorts of preparedness arguments and misrepresentations as to the present condition of the U. S. Army and Navy, and the possibility and probability of the United States being attacked by foreign foes.
>
> This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposition to the wishes of the interests served. . . . .

The purpose of quoting this has not been to condemn the press, but simply to point out that we must bear in mind in this country, as we read, that our news, too, may be subject to propaganda of the most insidious sort, written for the deliberate purpose of serving the private interests of a selfish group.

In the light of these conditions, it is highly desirable that all those who seek to gain a Christian view of current affairs should read a religious publication. Whatever one's tastes may be in regard to the news, one must concede that the religious presses of the country have as their objective: to present as unbiased and reliable news as possible, then to interpret those facts in the light of Christian standards. That service is virtually religion in print.

Surely in these days, whether one is a member of a church or not, it is not unreasonable to expect every open-minded, truth-seeking person to subscribe to at least one religious periodical—one publication that can be depended on to be free of partisan prejudices and interests!—Zion's Herald.

Do not worry, eat three square meals a day, say your prayers, be courteous to your creditors, keep your digestion good, steer clear of biliousness, exercise, go slow and go easy. Maybe there are other things that your special case requires to make you happy, but, my friend, these I reckon will give you a good lift.—Abraham Lincoln.

METHODIST PROTESTANT
CHILDREN'S HOME

The Children's Home Family 1939 As We Go Into Methodist Union

METHODIST PROTESTANT CHILDREN'S HOME

Superintendent's Report, October 19, 1939

Dear Fellow Workers:

Through the providence of God we have been able to complete the 29th year of service for dependent children in His name through the agency of the Children's Home. It has been another successful year, and we bring to you a reasonably good report.

The Children

We have 120 children, 60 boys and 60 girls, and we have had to turn down many more applicants than we have been able to take. The turn-over of our Home is only about six or eight per year, at the most, so we must study very closely the conditions and background of each individual applicant and then, according to our very best judgment, select the few from where the need is keenest. So many things have to enter into the considerations in selecting the few children we can take each year that it is not easy to decide between applicants. But all the judgment we have goes into the decisions.

The children for the most part have been well. At any rate there has been no serious illness. And in whatever physical ills there have been, the doctors, dentists, and hospital authorities have been exceedingly kind. And all doctors and dentists have rendered the needed service without charge.

High School Graduates and College Students

During our stay at the Children's Home 27 of our young people have graduated from the Jamestown High School, and three from college. We have nine now in college, one in training and one in a business school. There are seven in the present senior class at high school who have the prospect of graduating next May. High Point College gives them their tuition because they were reared in the Home. It costs each one about $125 per year to go to college, counting books and other fees. The boys for the most part work out their finances during the summer, and friends and relatives help them a bit. Friends and relatives help the girls, and we have undertaken to get for them the necessary help without taking from the current funds. We feel that one of the best pieces of work we are doing is in aiding these brighter and more ambitious youngsters to get a better training for life.

Other orphanages are doing the same thing for their high school graduates. We do not know their plans for financing them, but they cannot be more simple than ours.

The Hand of Death

On July 30 of this year one member of our board of trustees, Mr. G. J. Cherry of Charleston, S. C., was called home. We shall miss him in our counsels. Flowers were sent to the funeral, and a paper expressing our appreciation of him and our regrets at his going have been sent to his family.

School, Social and Religious Life

Every care is taken to give our children a normal life under wholesome environments with educational, social, and religious privileges, looking to the development of Christ-like character.

They attend the nearest public school, in which there are over 800 pupils, and thus have the same educational advantages as do the other children in Guilford county.

Girls in the Home over 16 years of age are permitted to receive callers, under proper conditions, just as are your daughters in your homes. Our own boys call, and so do boys from the outside. They also have their social contacts through both school and church.

We strive to make it a Christian home in every sense. The children go to the First Methodist church in High Point to Sunday school and to the morning worship. They hold their own C. E. meetings each Sunday evening, and are usually addressed by the Superintendent or some invited speaker. All of them who are old enough are members of the church. We believe that every child has a right to a healthy, happy life in a Christian home. Through institutions like the Children's Home the church is taking the little ones out of broken homes and endeavoring to make up to them what they had lost. No more beautiful work than that is being done for the Master on earth; that of taking His little ones out of the midst of poverty and distress and training them for Him.

Cost of Running the Home

Why estimate a work like this in dollars and cents? And yet our constituents have a right to expect us to be economical, so an effort is made to keep all expenses at a minimum. We buy at factory and wholesale prices whenever possible, and salaries are small. At present prices it costs about $220 per year to keep a child, and that covers all expenses, salaries, food, clothing, fuel, lights, school expenses—all.

Our budget for the next year is to be made up far more largely than ever of freewill offerings. How well the children are cared for, then, depends upon the liberality of God's faithful ones in making freewill offerings for the support of the Home. Ten cents per meal will feed a child, and 60 cents per day will keep a child. These freewill offerings are made by individuals, Sunday schools and in Thanksgiving and Christmas offerings.

Financing the Home for Another Year

A committee of 15, representing the three Methodist child-caring institutions in North Carolina, worked faithfully over the development of a plan for financing the three institutions, and in their judgment, brought forth the best plan that could be worked out for financing these homes during this first year in Methodist union.

We hope that our people will accept the plan in good faith, and that the Home and its children may not suffer in this transition period. Adjustments have to be made and it takes time to make them. It behooves each of us, and also all our people, to buckle on the armor, and do a bit better for the Children's Home during the next 12 months than we have been doing.

In some way the Home must be financed for one more year largely by us, and in the doing of it we will not have the Herald which has been our chief channel of communication with our people, and which has given the constant inspiration of the weekly reports. Of course we will use the N. C. Christian Advocate to the best possible advantage, as may be permitted us, but if we reach many of our former Methodist Protestant people in that way you pastors will have to get busy and get them to subscribe for the Advocate.

It is liberal and gracious on the part of the other two Methodist children's homes in North Carolina to be willing to underwrite this home to the extent of $6,000 for next year, if needed. This they are doing without introducing any new plans whereby more money would be raised. We had hoped that the committee of 15 would ask all the Methodists in North Carolina to make a freewill offering at Thanksgiving for orphanage work and this we believe would have taken care of the situation without taking from one Home to supply another.

Financing the Home for the next year is not going to be easy, but none of us are asking for easy jobs. Somehow we will do it, and in order to do it we must find a way to get the wholehearted cooperation of all our former supporters for the year. With our trust in God, and looking to you for a fine spirit of cooperation, the Home will be financed for the benefit of dependent children and to the glory of our God.

Looking to the Future

We are glad for our branch of Methodism to be able to carry into a United Methodism a Children's Home which is caring for from 110 to 120 children regularly, and we feel confident that the spirit which brought about a United Methodism will carry the Home on through the years to the glory of God and for the uplifting of His helpless little ones. So, paraphrasing and quoting another, "The future of the Children's Home is as bright as are the promises of God." Without doubt God led us to build it, and He has helped us to finance it without assessment upon anybody, except for the $2,000 which came to us annually through the World Service budget. All other gifts for the support of the Children's Home have been love gifts—gifts which people gave because they wanted to give.

Not only so, but for nearly 30 years it has been the rallying point of our conference. Its future is in the hands of our heavenly Father, and He will take care of it.

Helping Ourselves

We run a farm on which is produced all the vegtables, hay and grain possible. Also a dairy barn and poultry yards in which are produced all the milk and butter, and chickens and eggs, we use, except for a few chickens given us each fall by some of the country circuits. All our pork and bacon, and quite a bit of beef is produced on the place. Two men and the older boys do the work on the farm.

The home life is very much like that of a private family. The meals must be cooked, the dishes washed, the beds made, the rooms swept and dusted, the milking done and the butter churned, the laundry done, and all the other tasks performed such as those in any ordinary home. The children are divided into groups for this work under supervisors, and even the smallest children have some tasks to perform each day. Our large campus is also kept in order by the children.

This has been the most difficult year for farming we have had during our stay at the Home. The spring was dry, making it difficult to plant; the summer was wet, making it almost impossible to cultivate, so the Johnson grass almost got us. We have been renting quite a bit of land, and because of the recent death of Mr. Orville Williard, who has been exceedingly kind to us, and because of the changes that may come as a result, we cannot tell how much longer we will be able to rent that land. And whenever the time comes when our farming is limited to the acreage belonging to the Home, the yield of produce will be greatly decreased.

The yield from the farm this year was as follows: 3,983 lbs. of pork, 844 lbs. of beef, 320 chickens for our tables, 2,072 dozens of eggs, 17,517 gallons of milk, 223 bushels of Irish potatoes, 350 bushels of sweet potatoes, 65 bushels of cane seed, 125 truck loads of hay, 1,130 bunches of fodder, 50 tons of ensilage, 143 gallons of molasses. This was an estimate of $500 worth of vegetables from our gardens, and a cash item of $123.85 for petty sales, makes a total for the year, at most reasonable prices, of $8,773.45.

Livestock

We have about the usual lot of livestock on the farm, including 15 good cows, 22 hogs for killing, and 300 hens for laying.

Thanksgiving and Christmas

We are laying our plans for a large offering at Thanksgiving and Christmas. Mr. J. G. Rogers of Burlington is heading up the campaign this year, and we are sure his plans will be fine. We solicit the hearty coopera-

OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

REV. A. G. DIXON, Superintendent

OUR LAST MESSAGE THROUGH THE HERALD

We rejoice in Methodist Union, but all movements of this kind bring some sadness. One of the sad things just now is that this is the very last issue of the Methodist Protestant Herald. The Herald with its line of great editors has wrought well. We older ones will never forget the Herald.

We are thankful to the annual conference for giving us such splendid helpers in the persons of Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Lamb. They will move in shortly and will relieve us greatly. We welcome their coming.

For the Children's Home We Plead

1. Remember that we cannot publish the list of weekly contributions this year, so you will have to remember to send your regular contributions without this reminder. We will send receipts, and will try to work out some plan of reporting to you through your pastors and Sunday school superintendents.

2. Pray for the Home, its workers and its children, that God will lead His faithful ones to give the Home the best support it has ever had in any one year.

3. Make the most liberal response you have ever made to the Thanksgiving and Christmas appeal. That appeal will be made this year by Mr. J. G. Rogers of Burlington, and his committeemen throughout the conference. Mr. Rogers was elected by the trustees of the Home to lead in this campaign this year. His plans will be in your hands soon. The plans are good, but they will not work themselves. He is depending upon you, some one or ones in each local church to work the plans. You will please heed the request to send all Thanksgiving and Christmas offerings to Mr. Rogers, and all regular offerings to me.

4. Please get your church or Sunday school to set a monthly goal for the Children's Home and raise it regularly. If you have never set a monthly goal before, be sure to do it this time, and make it as large as possible. And if you set a goal last year, increase it this time unless it strained your forces to raise it last year. The very conditions call for your best efforts for the Children's Home this year. Don't forget us.

Harvest Home Offerings

You will soon be gathering your regular fall offerings of canned goods and farm produce for the Home. Please gather them into convenient places, and have your pastor notify us when the charge is ready and where to come for the produce. Your careful observance of this will save us time and expense. You will do it, I know. With your canned goods we hope to get grain or other farm produce of any kind, such as would be useful to you. Also clothing, new or used, for children from 5 to 18 years of age. And some chickens will be helpful if you can spare them.

Christmas

Our children, like yours, are already looking forward to Christmas. Your gifts to them personally, or to be distributed to them around the Christmas tree, will be happily received. Common sense, useful gifts bring to our children just as much joy as do others.

Wanted—A Farmer

Mr. J. A. Dixon, who has been our farmer here for some 15 years, plans to leave about the first of the year. Some one must be found to take his place.

We need a Christian man and woman to live in the boys' dormitory. The man to run the farm and manage the boys, and his wife to be matron in the dormitory and manage the boys. It must be a couple who are peculiarly fitted to work with boys, a man and a woman with a superabundance of patience, and with faith in God and faith in boys. A man and a woman who love boys, even the most homely boys, yes, even the bad boys. It is not an easy place to fill, and both the man and his wife must be adapted to just that kind of work, or they will fail miserably. We hope to secure the right persons. If you care to apply, please do not come to see us at first. Write us and tell us about yourselves, and give us references, and we can later arrange for a conference if one is needed. Pray that the right persons may be found.

Farewell and Hail

Farewell to the Herald and its weekly visits, and with its good cheer and sunshine as it came into our home. Hail to the North Carolina Christian Advocate, which is now our conference paper. It has already been coming and will continue to come, and we will soon learn to love it as we loved the Herald. God bless every one of you and give you a good year.

Faithfully yours in His blessed service,
A. G. DIXON, Superintendent.

TO SECRETARIES OF BENEVOLENCES

With the Thanksgiving season fast approaching, we appeal to you to begin at once with plans for a bountiful Thanksgiving offering for our Children's Home at High Point, N. C.

We are indeed grateful that conference returned Dr. and Mrs. Dixon to superintend the Home, for with these kind, loving Christians watching over the 120 boys and girls placed in their keeping, we know these children are getting the very best training for right living. It is a real Home; each boy and girl feels that Fatherly and Motherly love for each has his own place in their great big hearts.

It is an inspiration to visit this Home and observe that happy family; there are certain given duties of each child, even to the youngest member of the household.

As the duties of Dr. Dixon now require some assistance, the conference sent Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Lamb to be the assistant superintendents. They, too, are consecrated Christians and love young folk so they will fit in nobly with the Home management.

The Children's Home continues just as formerly for another year, so it is still our responsibility, and we, the "Methodist Protestants," are the only ones to support that Home now, just as if there was no union of Methodists.

It behooves us to rally our forces and do our best for those 60 boys and 60 girls in our care.

Please get your committee working at once to give out the envelopes and dime cards for the special offerings. Wherever possible, please have a Thanksgiving program for a large crowd to make their offering; but whatever is done, please ask every one to give one day's wage, as in the former years. There is so much for which to be thankful; countless blessings which are ours. Maybe we can prove our gratitude in our offerings to the Children's Home again this Thanksgiving.

"I will magnify him with thanksgiving." Ps. 69:30. May we, the Secretaries of Benevolences, be very much in earnest about keeping the needs of our Children's Home ever before our people.

We appreciate deeply your loyalty in the past, and know you will continue in the same fine spirit of service.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. J. M. STONE,
Secretary of Benevolences, N. C. Branch.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Seagrove, Seagrove-Love Joy Charge.—Our pastor, Rev. J. H. Trolinger, filled his regular appointment last Sunday at 11 a.m. This was the last appointment for this conference year. The official board was reelected. We are expecting conference to send Brother and Sister Trolinger back to us, for we feel their work among us has just begun. We think all claims will be paid in full by conference.

Our Sunday school is moving on at about the usual gait with good attendance.

The young people of the Christian Endeavor society enjoyed a social in the basement of our church Friday night. Refreshments were served by Mrs. L. A. King and Mrs. James Greene. Mrs. Noah Williams and Mrs. A. C. Harris had charge of the entertainment.

A business meeting was held and devotional conducted by our pastor.

Our Ladies' Auxiliary will meet Friday night at the home of Mrs. D. J. Johnson. A program is being prepared by Mrs. J. M. Greene, Mrs. S. G. Richardson, and Mrs. D. J. Johnson.

We are getting up a name quilt, also planning to sell Christmas cards to add some to our treasury.

I regret very much to think of this paper being discontinued, for it has been coming to our home a long time. My mother has one of the first copies printed. It contains an obituary of my baby brother. However, all things have to come to an end, and I hope all former Methodist Protestants will take the Advocate or whatever our church paper may be.

MRS. NOAH WILLIAMS.

Moriah, Rev. J. Leo Pittard, Pastor.—This is the last report from "Yours Truly," we are to have a new reporter next year. Miss Kate Kirkman is to serve in this capacity. I must say "the folks" in our church have cooperated with me readily in helping to have news every month for the Herald, for which I am most grateful.

We are going to miss the Herald. I have enjoyed it immensely and have read most copies from cover to cover, and I am grateful, too, for the Christian men and women that have made this paper available for me from childhood on through the years, and I am sure I speak for every member of Moriah also.

Our pastor gave us a most inspiring message on October 8, although he was pressed for time. His topic was "The Fear of the Lord."

We had the election of officers for the coming year on October 8, and I feel that each is capable of his or her office. They are as follows:

Trustees—Mr. Sample Glass, Mr. J. D. Underwood, Mr. C. C. Sharpe, Mr. C. E. Moser, Mr. J. L. Lewis, and Mr. A. V. Kirkman. Stewards—Mrs. W. Macon Moser, Mrs. Joe Doughton, Mr. S. A. Moser, Mr. Sample Glass, and Mr. J. D. Underwood. Church Treasurer—Mr. J. D. Underwood. Class Leaders—Mr. George Glenn, Mr. Branch Moser. Sunday School Superintendent, Mr. W. A. Sherrill; assistant, Mr. David Grey; secretary-treasurer, Miss Ruth Moser; associate, Mr. David Grey. Reporter—Miss Kate Kirkman. Pianist, Mrs. W. A. Sherrill; assistants, Miss Dee Moser, Miss Polly Underwood, and Mrs. H. L. Holton. Ushers—Mr. Jackie Moser and Mr. Roy Lee.

If you don't believe we have a live wire Ladies' Auxiliary you should have heard the report at the quarterly conference on October 8. The ladies have taken six elderly ladies at the Home for the Aged to play Pollyanna to, also an elderly minister, and are clothing a child at the Children's Home. They are not only paying their share to the mission board, but are doing a lot of mission work here at home. They gave a pageant, "The Lighted Highway," the first Sunday night in October. The rain poured, but it didn't dampen the spirit of these women. They really put over that pageant for their thank-offering program. They had much to be thankful for, so went the pageant (and don't we all, in this trying day of world turmoil).

Mrs. W. Macon Moser and Mrs. George Glenn were delegates to the missionary societies convention at the First Methodist church in Winston-Salem on October 10. I had the privilege of being a visitor and I'm sure they will have a very interesting report at the next auxiliary meeting.

The Senior Bible class met with Miss Ruth Moser on October 4 at 8 p.m. They elected new officers and quite a bit of business was transacted, after which Miss Moser served a delicious drink with cookies.

We are about through painting the Sunday school rooms. Being the teacher of the beginners for the past few years, it has long been a dream of mine and also of our pastor to have the beginners' room redecorated and made suitable for the children. The Presbyterian Church of the Covenant in Greensboro so generously donated two nice tables and our Senior Bible class bought 20 small chairs. Our beginners' room is going to be lovely to look at, and we are grateful indeed for these donations.

A little bird told me we should expect Mr. and Mrs. Pittard back next year. (They are Margaret and Leo to us.) But if we are not so fortunate we wish them the best in every way.

Our Ladies' Auxiliary had the pleasure of attending a reception at the Tabernacle hut on September 29 from 7:30 until 9:30 p.m., given by the Women's Auxiliary of Tabernacle church. We had a grand time, and we feel this was a lovely thing to do so that all Methodist women in this section could get better acquainted.

On October 1st at 11 o'clock we were very fortunate in having Mr. J. Norman Wills speak to us. This was the 50th anniversary of Mr. Wills' becoming the boy superintendent of our Sunday school. He brought us a most inspiring message. He told us how he became the superintendent, and something of its growth under his leadership. Truly, Mr. Wills to me is a living example of what a Christian should be. We just hope he can continue to come back every anniversary for many, many years. We salute you, Mr. Wills, for your years in the Master's service. May we be able to send out more boys just like you.

We are to have Dr. C. E. Forlines, president of Westminster Theological Seminary, to speak to us at 11 o'clock Sunday, October 22. We want everybody to come to hear him. We are sure this will be most interesting.

West Thomasville, O. C. Loy, Pastor.—We have not had a report for a long time, although our church has been very active. We celebrated go-to-church week beginning September 24. Our pastor did the preaching and brought some wonderful messages.

Our pastor filled his regular appointment Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, at which time the church officers were elected. After the business session our pastor preached a very inspiring sermon, his last one before conference. We hope that the conference sees fit to send him back. If not, may God's richest blessings go with him and his family.

Our Auxiliary has been doing some splendid work. At a recent meeting the Auxiliary was named the Addie Loy Circle, and Mrs. Loy was made a life member by the membership. Tuesday several members attended the branch meeting held at the First Methodist church, Winston-Salem. They reported an interesting meeting there.

The ladies are planning to hold their fall thank-offering service Sunday evening at 7:30. They plan to use "If I Be His Disciple." Also they plan to use "Little Ann of Lost Gap" and "The Old Rugged Cross" as was suggested at the branch meeting.

The fourth quarterly conference of State Street charge was held October 10 at 7:30. The reports were very good, but not as good as we would like for them to have been.

Our Christian Endeavor and Fellowship club meets every Sunday evening, and has very interesting programs and leaders. Several especially good speakers have been heard.

As this report comes out our pastors will be in conference. With all the Methodist churches meeting, much work will be undertaken. May God's richest blessings rest upon the conference and all it undertakes to do.

College Street, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—As the conference year has come to a close, we have many things to be thankful for, and there are lots of things that we would have liked to do that we didn't get done.

We are thankful that we paid our pastor's salary in full, paid the annual conference claims, the delegates' expense, and some other debts that were important. But we still know that there were some other things that we would like very much to have gotten through as we did these.

But there is one thought that lingers with us that somewhat saddens our hearts. This is the one fact of voting to discontinue our church and unite with the other Methodist church in town. This we hope of course is for the best, because with both churches in one we hope to be able to do more.

It has been decided, though, that we would have services on the first Sunday night in November as usual, and the Sunday school to continue until after conference is over.

The October Auxiliary meeting met at the parsonage with Mr. and Mrs. Broome. After the meeting was over we members were invited over to Mrs. Mat. Ramson's to a reception that was given by the Methodist circles to Miss Elnora Phillips, a recent bride. Miss Phillips (Mrs. Kerr) is the daughter of Rev. Mr. Phillips, pastor of the M. E. church in town.

The pajamas contest has proved to be very successful. Miss Annie Perkinson raised $6.27 on her behalf, Mrs. J. W. Warren about $5 or more, and Mrs. Gerda Morris $2.40, etc.

The Sunday school has sent another dollar to the Children's Home.

The called meeting was held on October 16 which was Monday night before conference on Wednesday. There was a large attendance and many wishes for our pastor to come back again. We are so much in hopes that conference will favor us by sending him back to be with us another year.

Friends will be glad to know that Mr. M. J. Morris is getting along very well; he is in Roanoke Rapids Hospital and has undergone a very serious operation. We wish for him a speedy recovery.

Davis Street Methodist Church, Burlington, Dr. Fred W. Paschal, Pastor.—Our church has recently closed a most wonderful revival meeting of 12 days. Our pastor did the preaching, bringing to us many inspiring messages. Rev. John Permar, pastor of the Friends church in Graham, had charge of the choir. At many of the services the altar was filled with new converts and rededications.

We were very happy to welcome into our church 23 new members, 17 on confession of faith, six by church letters. At the close of the morning service on Sunday, the 8th, there was a membership meeting at which time we heard report from the nominating committee. New officers and teachers for the church and Sunday school were elected as a whole, as read by committee. The following Sunday there was a brief installation service for the newly-elected officers.

We are glad to report that our church budget is paid in full for the year.

Church and Sunday school attendance has been fine, and all circles progressing nicely.

Miss Eva Wiseman is back with us, and at present is directing both the senior and young people's choirs.

Shiloh, Shiloh Charge, C. E. Ridge, Pastor.—This will be our last report to the M. P. Herald. However, we believe that whatever paper may be decided upon will be one that will help to keep the bit of personal touch among our people that we receive through church reports.

This report brings you the usual report that Shiloh church has again paid all claims and has asked for the return of our pastor. However, if it is not seen to be best for his return, we are hoping that whatever is done will be in accordance with God's will.

Our pastor preached on the subject, "The Lord's Highway," with text from Isaiah 35:8. As is usual, he preached a wonderful sermon with a deepening of the spiritual life. At the close of the service the treasurer made his annual report, telling of the amount each individual had contributed this conference year. Out of a membership of about 350, there were 30 who made no financial contribution.

In our Auxiliary the secretary of benevolences is asking for special work to be done for the Children's Home at High Point. We are glad to report that the Builders class of our Sunday school has agreed to take one room and furnish what is needed in the line of bedding, curtains, shades, etc. We appreciate this step very much and are anxious that others may realize the need of definite support and rally to the act of special effort and work.

The girls' intermediate class has also expressed the desire to buy something for the rooms of the girls their size and age—from 12 to 16 years of age. We can't do too much for the Children's Home. What are you willing to do for the 116 orphans there looking to you for support?

Since our last report we have lost two more members by death. We reported the death of Mr. Tilden Moseley who died October 1. On Tuesday morning, October 10, Mr. Jacob Pickett died at the age of 83 years. On Sunday, October 15, Mr. Charlie Moseley, brother of Mr. Tilden Moseley, died in the hospital following complications after an operation for ruptured appendix the day after his brother was buried. This just reminds us of the uncertainty of life and warns us of our need for preparedness not only to live but to die.

With this closing report we again wish for all churches and people the greatest degree of success in accomplishments for Kingdom's building and also asking God's blessings upon the conference which will have been held when you read this.

Fountain Place, Burlington, Rev. R. E. L. Moser, Pastor, Oct. 10.—Fountain Place held its annual revival the second week in September. Rev. D. I. Garner of Mebane helped and did some splendid preaching. The attendance was only fair, but those who attended heard helpful and heart-searching messages. On Sunday morning a decision service was held at the close of Sunday school and the meeting closed with the morning preaching service, at which time Linley Gibbs, Jr., and Sara Burton Nicholson joined the church.

The Auxiliary held its regular monthly meeting for October in the home of Mrs. A. V. Amick. In the absence of the president, due to illness, Mrs. J. W. Sharpe, vice-president, presided. At this meeting plans were discussed for a Harvest Festival to be held in November. The fall thank-offering will be held soon after conference. The Auxiliary is collecting used clothing for Pine Ridge and old Christmas cards for China. The program was made up of reports of Pine Ridge news found in the Missionary Record.

At a recent election of the Senior Christian Endeavor society officers, Mr. Ed York was made president. This organization has good attendance and the interest is increasing. The meeting hour has been changed from 6:30 p.m. to 5 o'clock for the winter months. The Junior Christian Endeavor society meets at the same hour. The attendance is good and the children enjoy leading their own programs. Following the program the superintendent tells a Bible story. Each story is one of a series which was begun some time ago. Beginning with the Creation story the group has progressed to the time of Jacob. It's the hope of the superintendent that the children will gain a clearer knowledge of the Bible from these connected stories. On Thursday of this week the Juniors are to have a social at the home of their superintendent, Mrs. A. V. Amick.

The work of the Sunday school goes on. A plan is now on foot to organize a new class for the Junior. This will give the boys and girls separate classes. In September a Sunday school picnic was held and all who attended enjoyed it.

The sympathy of the church goes out to our pastor, Rev. R. E. L. Moser, in the loss of his father.

We regret to report the continued illness of one of our most faithful members, Mr. R. G. Hornaday. Mr. and Mrs. Hornaday were such regular attendants that they are greatly missed.

The fourth quarterly conference was held last Sunday morning after the preaching service. This conference instructed the delegate to bring back our pastor if possible. It's been a pleasure to work with Mr. Moser for the last three years and we hope he can be with us again. Church and Sunday school officers were elected last Sunday and the installation service will be held next Sunday.

In closing, I want to express my appreciation of the Herald, which has so ably served the North Carolina Conference for so many years. May we all pray that the many problems facing the coming annual conference may be solved as God directs.

Denton-Canaan.—A few weeks ago at the Western Pastors' Federation, when at the roll call for pastors to report the standing of their charges, I reported that there was yet some deficit in the finances on my charge, but that I could be counted "all paid," for I was confident that every dollar would be forthcoming. To some this might have sounded like counting too far in advance. But not so. At an adjourned session of the fourth quarterly conference on Monday night of this week, every dollar for every claim was produced and it was found that there is a nice balance in the treasury to make payments on the beginning of another year. We have had a good year, possibly the best for a great number of years. Had good revivals, a good increase, and finances all paid. This is no reflection upon or comparison to former pastors and workers. Had it not been for the untiring efforts of other days, we could not have enjoyed the good things of this day.

We had a good day last Sunday at Denton. Took in two members, and other things were good in proportion. We were glad to have Brother and Mrs. J. G. Rogers of Burlington to worship with us. The Rogers family once was a part of this church and did good work while here. This pastor is happy to recall that he was once pastor to the Rogers family in Burlington. They were then among our most loyal members. Come again, dear Rogers friends.

This is possibly my last report to the dear old Herald. God bless you, Herald. You have done a great work. This great paper will forever be remembered in the minds of those of us who have for so long been reminded through these sacred columns of our wrongs and then of better things. Those who have carried on through this paper have done a great work. May the Lord be praised for their great usefulness.

Forever in love with the Herald and all Methodist Protestant interests. But may we go into the new church with happy hearts and with courage determined to fit into our place and do even a greater work for our God and His Kingdom.

GEO. L. CURRY.

Rehoboth, Creswell Charge. — Some time since I made a report, owing to my brother's sickness and death. I was in Charleston, S. C. until October 1, when I returned home. I will miss his letters, will miss his visits, but such is life, God's will, not mine be done. Brother Wagoner prepared a very nice obituary from the facts sent him, but it had no ending, and was wondering why, one reading could not tell who wrote it, Sunday we were all from services were at Brother C. V. White, he said he did not know why it was not all published. He, as pastor, had a few more lines and his name. I hope my Herald will be sent to my home address, as before. I received some extra copies at Charleston, but have not received any paper in two weeks. I read my brother's paper all summer, but mine were all at home. This mistake can be corrected, I hope soon to have my paper here. I just can't do without my church paper.

Mrs. Cherry and I were glad to have a call from Brother and Sister Dixon while they were in Charleston. I hope to look at their faces, it is a peep in the past. God spare them many years.

Brother Wagoner preached his last sermon at Rehoboth Sunday in the M. P. Church. I do hope he can return to us, everyone likes him. We had a good congregation and an excellent service.

Mrs. L. L. Everett, one of our old members, could not be with us. She is too feeble. Brother C. V. White was present, communion services were observed. We hope to be able to attend services at Creswell Sunday. Very sorry I was not here to hear Dr. Forlines. Those who attended from Rehoboth greatly enjoyed it.

Lindsey Street, Reidsville.—At the close of our first year together as pastor and people, we are happy to report progress. Not all has been accomplished that the most interested and active of the members would like to have seen done, but the progress which has been made is encouraging.

One of the most promising phases of the church life is the presence and interest of so large a proportion of young people. Following the organization of them into a church choir by Mrs. George R. Brown and Mrs. M. T. Smith prior to last Annual Conference, this group has been meeting regularly in rehearsals and singing during the morning and evening services. Mrs. J. H. Allen has served as our faithful pianist. Besides being in the Sunday school, these promising young people are organized in a Christian Endeavor Society, over which Mrs. Nellie Best has recently consented to assume supervision. The adult membership is justly proud of this great asset.

Financially, the church has done exceedingly well. The Appreciation Year quota of $500 was raised, despite the adverse undercurrent in some quarters that it could not be done. This set local and Annual Conference finances back considerably, as it did in other churches, but the stewards and indomitable treasurer, Mr. Charles J. Roberts, have been working faithfully to "clean the slate" of all claims and indebtedness before Conference convenes. And they usually do what they set out to do.

As we see it, we have been fortunate in that the death angel has visited our ranks only once, but that was loss enough to equal several members of much less interest. Mrs. Sallie Kernodle had been a devout and faithful member of the church for many years, in fact, since its beginning. Though in later years she was confined to her home, her interest did not flag nor her loyalty waver. Another loss sustained was in the translation of one, who, though not a member in name, was more faithful than a number of others, whose names occupy space in the church register. We refer to Mrs. J. D. McCollum. Her work, however, is continued in the faithfulness and devotion of her daughters, Lola and Effie, and her son, Luther, in whom is revealed the likeness of the sainted mother.

It has been our happy privilege to receive into church fellowship sixteen new members, half of whom came by confession of faith in Christ. These ranged in age from mature adults to a boy of ten. The First Quarterly Conference set as a goal twelve, but this was exceeded by four.

Church officials for the next Conference year have been elected, among whom are Dr. J. S. Moore, succeeding himself as Sunday school superintendent, and Miss Lola McCollum, succeeding Mr. Charles J. Roberts as church treasurer. Mr. D. L. Carroll was elected delegate to conference with Mr. E. L. Somers, alternate. Because of a serious accident in his wood-working shop, Brother Carroll could not serve, and business affairs prevented Brother Somers from serving, hence the Fourth Quarterly Conference elected Mrs. Bertha McCollum as a capable substitute.

So much more could be written, but space will not permit. We have spent one of the happiest years of our ministry among these good people, and if it is the will of the Lord and of the Stationing Committee, we shall return for another year.

E. LESTER BALLARD, Pastor.

Midway Church, Paul Hamilton, Pastor.— As this church year draws to a close I feel that we have more than been blessed by the Lord. To start us right we were given a splendid and able minister. Throughout the year Mr. Hamilton has delivered excellent, soul-stirring sermons. He helped us so much to see just where we stood and what we needed. To be more explicit he revived us and put us to work. We certainly would enjoy his return, but if it be otherwise our deepest wishes and most sincere prayers go with him wherever he may be sent.

The reaction of the members toward their financial duties is something to be proud. Our church is very small, but the spirit of it is large. We not only attained the required amount toward our church budget, but we passed the mark by a few dollar. Our preacher's salary was paid in full several days ago. But let us not be satisfied with our progress to the point that we pause, but work much harder next year.

We are indeed pleased over the purchase of a bulletin board and a church register. Both items will add greatly to the interest of the church.

The Woman's Auxiliary is scheduled to meet at the home of Mrs. Morgan Tuesday afternoon, October 17. Mrs. Ball will preside at this time.

Union Chapel Church, Mocksville Charge, Rev. K. G. Holt, Pastor.—Rev. Mr. Holt filled his regular appointment at Union Chapel the second Sunday night. This was Mr. Holt's last sermon to us for this year but we are looking forward to having him with us another year.

Officers of our church were elected the fourth Sunday for the next year. Some of the officers are as follows: Superintendent, Mr. W. B. Bailey; Class leader, Mr. R. L. Baker; Stewart, Mr. W. G. Boger, Mr. N. A. Boger, Mr. O. T. Boger, Mr. C. L. Beaver, Miss Lois O'Neil, Miss Ruby Boger, Mr. Clay Allen; Church reporter, Miss Ruth Boger; Secretary, Miss Vada Grey Boger; Care of Sacrement, Mrs. N. A. Boger. The church trustees and all other officers were elected but the reporter is unable to give definitely who filled these offices.

We are now enjoying electric lights at Union Chapel. The young people plan to organize some kind of an organization in order to burn some of this power.

Hawkins Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, D. D. Broome, Pastor.—We have not been in the practice of reporting this often. But this is our last opportunity to say anything in regard to our M. P. Herald, a paper some of us esteem highly.

We are indeed glad to learn that our pastor, D. D. Broome, is back with us. Glad to have him and his family in Sunday school Sunday with us. The small children sang a song. Mrs. Baldy Greene, the pianist, told them she would have them to sing each Sunday.

Sunday evening before preaching our Christian Endeavor met. Miss Margaret Pittard had charge of the program. Mr. Willis Hawkins has charge of it the first Sunday afternoon.

It was Rev. and Mrs. D. D. Broome joined our church instead of D. A. Broome, and Liberty, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, Oct. 24.—We are glad to welcome Dr. Brown as our pastor. We regret to lose Mr. Aubert Smith and we shall always remember his faithfulness. His good sermons, his kindly manner, and all his sincerity.

Circle No. 1 of the Woman's Auxiliary met with Mrs. Wade Hardin for the October meeting. The president, Mrs. J. E. Cox, presided. Mrs. Clarence Highfill was program leader. Those taking part on the program were: Mesdames Mamie Smith, R. W. Ward, J. E. Cox, Wade Hardin, F. A. Shepard, Mrs. B. J. Gregson, and Miss Bertine Shepard. "China Institutions" was the subject, which was very interesting.

Mrs. Hardin's home was lovely with gladioli. Pollyanna gifts were exchanged. A delicious salad course was served. Mrs. F. A. Shepard will entertain the Circle at the November meeting.

Now we must say farewell to our Methodist Protestant Herald. My father and mother have been subscribers for about 35 years or more. It has been a great blessing to us. Now they are sending love through this last issue to all our former pastors and all other ministers and friends. It is sad to say good bye. May the Lord guide and direct.

Weavers Chapel Church, Littleton Charge, Rev. D. D. Broome, Pastor.—Since our last report, our pastor has filled his regular appointments. Sunday, October 15, was our last preaching service for this conference year. Our pastor delivered to a large congregation a helpful and inspiring message. We were very glad to have a number of visitors. Hope they will come again real soon.

We regret to report the death of Mrs. Tom Wood, who was a member of our church. Mrs. Wood was a faithful member until she was disable to attend church. She will be greatly missed in both church and Ladies' Auxiliary. The Ladies' Auxiliary gave a beautiful wreath of flowers. Mrs. Wood is survived by her husband, Mr. Tom Wood, and seven children: Mrs. Joe Smith, Mrs. Tom Harris, Herman, Joe, Van, Wilbur, and J. L. Wood. Interment was in Calvary Cemetery. The family has our deepest sympathy.

The last Quarterly Conference was held at Littleton Church, October 16. A good number of members from each church on the charge were present. The Littleton Church reported that their pastor's salary and all claims were paid in full. We are sorry our church was behind with the finances but we are looking forward to a more prosperous year.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is very active. Our October meeting was with Mrs. Jack Ellis. Seventeen members and several visitors were present. Our monthly meetings are always enjoyable. The program especially interesting, good attendance and delicious refreshments. The society voted to pay $10 on the pastor's salary. In November we will meet with Mrs. Lena Walker.

We feel that Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Broome have been a blessing to the church as a whole during the past year. We trust they will be with us for another year.

Nervous, Weak, Ankles Swollen?

Much nervousness is caused by an excess of acid and poisons due to non-organic and non-systemic Kidney and Bladder disorders which may also cause Getting Up Nights, Burning Passages, Swollen Joints, Backache, Circles Under Eyes, Excess Acidity, Leg Pains and Dizziness. In many such cases the diuretic action of the Doctor's prescription Cystex helps the Kidneys clean out Excess Acids. This plus the palliative work of Cystex may easily make you feel like a new person in just a few days. Try Cystex under the guarantee of money back unless completely satisfied. Cystex costs only 3c a dose at druggists and the guarantee protects you.

CALOMEL NIGHT NOW A PLEASURE

The old time calomel was the doctor's favorite remedy for biliousness or so-called "Torpid Liver," so prevalent in hot weather, but it had some serious drawbacks from the standpoint of the patient. The nauseating and sickening after-effects and the necessity to follow it with a dose of Epsom salts made many of us hate to take it. Now you can really enjoy your calomel, for Calotabs make calomel-taking a pleasure. They give you the combined effects of calomel and salts, helping Nature to expel the sour, stagnant bile and washing it out of the system.

One or two Calotabs at bedtime with a glass of water or sweet milk,—that's all. Next morning your system feels clean and refreshed, your head is clear, your spirit bright, and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you wish and go about your work or pleasure.

Genuine Calotabs are sold only in checkerboard (black and white) packages bearing the trade mark "Calotabs." Refuse imitations. Family package only twenty-five cents; trial package ten cents, at your dealer's. (Adv.)

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Mrs. Dehilah Williams Ray

Mrs. Dehilah Williams Ray, wife of Mr. John Ray, Hillsboro, N. C., passed away suddenly September 29, 1939 at 7:30 p. m. She was subject to the attack, but her passing was a shock to her loved ones and friend. She was the oldest member in membership of Union Grove, Orange Charge, loved and was loyal to her church. She was of jovial disposition and kind-hearted and was dearly loved by ones who knew her. A devoted wife and mother. Besides her invalid husband, she leaves four sons, Messrs. Arthur, Winston-Salem; Cliff, Hillsboro; Clyde, Durham, and Clarence Ray, Elon College; two daughters, Mrs. Brown Gordan and Mrs. Flora Thompson, Hillsboro; two brothers, Rev. J. D. Williams, High Point, and Mr. C. R. Williams, Canboro, N. C., and a large number of nephews, nieces, and friends to mourn her passing.

"And though we cannot clasp her hand,
    Nor look upon her face,
Nor listen to her voice again,
    Nor watch her ways of grace,
Still we can keep her memory bright,
    And walk the way she trod,
And know she waits until we come
    Up to the house of God.
Let us be thankful through our tears
    That she was ours so long,
And try to lift our tones of grief
    To accord with her heaven song."

A FRIEND.

Andy L. Plunkett

Though a little late I wish to express appreciation of such a life and character as that of Brother Andy L. Plunkett, of the Moriah community near Greensboro. Such a character as his enriches the life of any who come in contact with him. Quiet, seemingly easy-going, yet going always in the direction of right, living much, talking less yet enough to be understood and to make an impression, kind, courteous, hospitable.

My first acquaintance, my older brother and I spent a night in the home soon after he and his no-less hospitable wife were married, directed there by our mother, who knew we would be welcome. The free and easy hospitability induced in the minds of departing guests a thought of pleasantness, which thought lingers even until now as a pleasing memory.

During my pastorate in Greensboro Brother Plunkett gave testimony to the cause of temperance by stating that when the liquor saloons were closed in that city there was a noticable difference in the conduct of people, some people, traveling the highway by his home four miles out, though he personally did not approve of the method used in putting the saloons out—substituting the dispensary for the saloons.

Years later as pastor of Moriah church I had opportunity for a more mature acquaintance and a closer friendship. He was of that class of perons we sometimes compliment by saying, "He was the same every time you saw him,"—a man of firmness, of conviction, of stability. He was loyal—loyal to the church and to the cause for which the church stands, loyal to his friends, loyal to his home.

While my heart goes out in sympathy to the sons and daughters, I congratulate them on having had such a father to guide them in getting a right start in life.

Robert F. Wyatt

Eighty-one years, almost eighty-two, is a long time to live in the world. Such was the life-span of Robert F. Wyatt, a member of Fairview Church, near Easley, S. C. Seventy-one years of time he was a member of the church, a steward for 40 years, secretary of the Quarterly Conference for 30 or 35 years, trustee for a number of years.

To attend Quarterly Conference thirty miles away, often walked three miles to the railway station, in company with Harrison A. Foster who had walked four miles from his home to join Bother Wyatt, yet three miles to go.

He loved his church, worked overtime in winter weather assembling materials for the present structure (since remodeled and added to), continuing so far into the crop-growing time that he almost failed to make a crop one summer. "His church was his hobby," said one.

He contributed liberally of his purse and his presence to the Sunday school and church. In recent years he could hear very little of what was being said, but from the habit of years the worship was real to him and he entered into the spirit of it. His last Sunday but one on earth he wanted to go to Sunday school. The doctor advised not, and he was reconciled. A few weeks before his death he requested the Sunday school that for his funeral the school should asemble as usual and conduct worship as for the opening. That was done, the superintendent presiding. The writer, assisted by Rev. Francis Cunningham, who married a niece of the deceased, conducted the funeral. To associate with such a Christian is to have one's own character enriched, his interest quickened, his faith strengthened, his loyalty intensified.

Survivors: four sisters, four sons, six daughters, forty-six grandchildren, twenty-seven great grandchildren. To those I wish to extend sympathy, and also congratulations for having one so true in life leadership.

tion of all our people in making this a success, and thus getting a good start in financing the Home for the year. This will call for your immediate attention when you return to your charges after conference. The dime cards and envelopes such as we used last year are now ready to be sent out.

Note From Our Board Meeting

At the anual meeting of our board of trustees, held on October 12, the board on motion recognized the fact that the presiding Bishop of the Western North Carolina Conference and the District Superintendent of the Greensboro District are ex-officio members of our board of trustees, and the pastor of Wesley Memorial church, High Point, was elected an honorary member of the board. Dr. S. W. Sharpe, of Misenheimer, N. C., was elected a member of the board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. G. J. Cherry.

Financial Statement

Every year, save one, we have had to report to conference a deficit in current expenses. Some years it is more and some less. This year it is less, by half, than last year, being $1,864 as of October 1. We confidently expect the Thanksgiving offering to balance our budget by January 1, 1940. And by your help under the blessings of the Lord we hope to go through the coming year with a balanced budget. Our cash income for the year was $20,691.69.

Respectfully submitted,
A. G. DIXON, Supt.
